As a Gospel preacher in many lands, Mr. Guinness showed remarkable gifts. A luminous expositor of Scripture truth, terse and epigrammatic in style, winning in manner, and with an impressive delivery, he was wonderfully used of God in soul-winning. The earnest attention and sympathy of believers were aroused, and invitations to undertake evangelistic missions came from many parts of the world.

The demands of foreign missions, however, were paramount. The East London Missionary Institute, originally commenced by Dr. and Mrs. Grattan Guinness in an old house on Stepney Green—and afterwards removed to Harley House, Bow, in the spacious grounds of which Harley College was built—urgently demanded his services; owing largely to the failure in health of his devoted mother.

After passing through a medical training at the London Hospital, the subject of our sketch became associated with his father as co-director. Evangelistic and social agencies sprang up round the Institute at home, while the way was also made clear for initiating

OPERATIONS IN THE FOREIGN FIELD.

By Dr. Guinness' burning words of appeal, widespread interest was aroused in missionary enterprise, and hundreds of students sought and found admission to the Institute, and, two years later, to Harley House. There were "open doors" in all directions. "Send us your men; they are just the sort we need," was the sense of applications from all parts of the world.

In 1887, Mr. (now Dr.) Harry Guinness was married to Miss Annie Reed, daughter of the large-hearted Henry Reed, of Launceston, Tasmania, and Tunbridge Wells. The ceremony took place in Mr. Charrington's great Assembly Hall, Mile End, E., in the presence of a vast audience. An interesting address was given on this happy occasion by Rev. Archibald G. Brown, who, speaking to the bridegroom, voiced the congratulations of the church at the East London Tabernacle: "From seeing you a lad in the congregation, we have lived to see you a welcome preacher on our platform. There are those here this afternoon to whom God has made you His power—those who shall hereafter be your crown. Many, too poor to give a wedding present, yet give the choicest offering of a loving prayer. Yes, we all rejoice with you." A true helpmeet to her husband, Mrs. Harry Guinness has brought acumen and sound judgment to bear upon administrative duties and missionary problems.

Visits to the mission field added practical experience to spiritual enthusiasm, and ripened the young co-director for the work, as it extended rapidly. The origin and progress of the mission, founded in 1889 for the evangelization of the Balolo people of the Upper Congo, constitutes a fascinating story. The country is, however, as large as the German Empire, and the thirty-six missionaries now at work are all too inadequate a force. The latest development is the splendid stern-wheel steamer Livingstone, at present to be seen on the Thames, but shortly to be despatched to the Congo. In 1897 came the effort to reach the South American peoples, work being commenced in Peru and Argentina. The latest field is at Behar in the Bengal Presidency of India.

THE REGIONS BEYOND MISSIONARY UNION, into which the East London Institute has grown, with its three honorary directors, Rev. Dr. Grattan Guinness, Dr. Harry Guinness, and Rev. F. B. Meyer, has now about sixty missionaries on the permanent staff, while it must be remembered that Harley College accepts and trains men and women for many societies. The R.B.M.U. is an interdenominational work of faith and love. About 100 students reside in the four training centres, and on an average one every week passes out into missionary service. On leaving, students have gone abroad in connection with some thirty different organizations; nearly 100 are connected with the China Inland Mission, and twenty or thirty with the North Africa Mission. With but few exceptions, the entire expense of training has been borne by Harley College, so that, in addition to the responsibilities of direction and oversight, there have been, and are, heavy financial burdens to bear.

From a Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, 55, Baker Street, London, W.

The system of training which "Dr. Harry" has helped to create is a comprehensive one, embracing, in addition to the regular educational courses, practical experience in home mission work at Berger Hall, E., a centre of beneficent influence among the poor of East London, as well as instruction in the medical mission and dispensary work. For the women students, too, there is a nurses' home and maternity mission. The country branch at Cliff College, in the Peak of Derbyshire, is also a vigorous centre of evangelistic effort.

No sketch of Dr. Harry Guinness would be complete without a reference to his earnest efforts in behalf of young men and the Y.M.C.A. The remarkable mission at Canning Town in the autumn of last year, in which a was ingathered, was typical of many others; and at most of his missions a conspicuous feature has almost invariably been a crowded meeting for men only, at which with delicacy, and yet with power, the topic of social purity has been helpfully dealt with.

RICH HARVEST OF SOULS

It was with deep concern that the large circle of friends and supporters of Harley College and its work heard, in December last, that Dr. Guinness had contracted typhoid fever, while engaged in an evangelistic campaign at Limerick. How anxiously the course of the disease was watched, and how earnestly prayer was made in behalf of the esteemed patient, our readers are aware. Dr. Guinness is now, with Mrs. Guinness, on his way to Tasmania, in the hope that the rest and change of the voyage may bring about a complete restoration to health—a consummation which is devoutly wished for by all who have at heart the interests of the missionary cause.

From Dr. Baedeker.

I HAD a happy and fruitful week in Stockholm, with daily meetings for prayer, Scripture readings, and Gospel preaching, chiefly in Flora Church. I then went to Orebro, where also my five days were equally occupied in various localities with large and eager audiences. Proceeding to Christiania, I was warmly greeted by a large number of ministers and workers; I found my days were also fully mapped out from Friday till Thursday. The Gospel services in various churches have been largely attended, by audiences who have exercised great patience in listening to my words as translated from English.

Two large prisons invited me to give addresses to their inmates, the chief officer and also the chaplain being very earnest Christians. I found it a real joy to strengthen their hands, and to encourage them. Many of the leading ministers of the Gospel urge me to promise them a longer visit next year, and I may perhaps have Norway on my programme for another evangelizing visit, if it please God to yet keep and sustain my life. I am booked for Göteborg, Jönköping, Sköfde, where my days will be very full; and on May 21 I hope to return to Stockholm, and thence by steamboat to Finland and St. Petersburg, and other places in Russia, where I hope to visit prisons and do whatever my hand findeth to do anywhere. Possibly I may return to England in time for the Mildmay Conference. F. W. Baedeker.

Christiania, May 6.

Pioneering in Arabia.—Friends interested in Arabia may be glad to know that I have just returned from a pioneer journey into that land from the North, reaching as far as the Jowf. I visited eight places, and distributed and sold a large number of Arabic Scriptures. I suffered much from thirst, robbers, and the ignorant fanaticism of the Arabs. But the journey was encouraging, and if the Lord will, I hope to go over the ground again, further on towards the end of the summer. I shall be glad to hear from and answer any questions to those interested in missions to Arabs and Arabia.—A. Forder, of Christian and Missionary Alliance, Jerusalem.

The May Meetings.

The Day of Rest.

In connection with the attitude of our Government and its departments towards the Sunday question, attention may well be called to warnings expressed during the last two years by the Lord's Day Observance Society as to the consequences of national Sabbath-breaking. The gains in money and in "pleasure" which chiefly prompt the evil to-day, as in bygone times, seem but small compared even with the cost, in treasure and sorrow, of eighteen months of a still unended war.

The seventieth report of the Lord's Day Observance Society was presented by the secretary, Rev. Dr. Peake, at the annual meeting held in St. James' Restaurant, on Tuesday morning last week. The outlook into a new century and a new reign may well prompt fresh thankfulness that there exists such an agency, rich in knowledge and experience, ready to the hands of those who desire to retain, in undiminished force and usefulness, the national inheritance of Sabbath consecration and rest. Total receipts for the year were £1,524, with an expenditure of £1,292 upon varied and numerous forms of against desecration of the Lord's Day. Increased disposition on the part of cyclists to devote Sunday to country excursions has led the Society to issue a special leaflet.

WORK AND PROTEST

The Dean of Norwich, who presided at the meeting, lamented the unhappy trend of public opinion, and the growing tendency to devote that Day, which is the Lord's, to a ceaseless round of exercise and amusement. The results of such a course must be nationally deteriorative; and, from the force of example, the boys and girls who are in our Sunday-schools to-day are not likely to be in our churches in ten years' time. With the present mania for curtailment of service, the clergy cannot do God's work properly. If the masses are allowed to speak for themselves, they do not want concerts on the Sunday, but such a demand really comes from the upper classes. The duty of exercising personal influence for a healthier tone of public opinion in regard to observance of the Day of Rest lies not only upon the clergy and ministers, but upon every member of Christ's Church.

The one basis of our appeal in this matter, said Prebendary Barlow, must be and God's claim must, in the nature of things, be good for man. He quoted the saying of a friend, that the bicycle has killed male teachers as far as the Sunday-school is concerned. Pressure should be brought to bear upon directors and shareholders of railways to discourage Sunday traffic. At Llandudno, not a single L.N.W. train goes out or comes into the station upon the Lord's Day.

DIVINE AUTHORITY;

Mr. J. A. Campbell, M.P., thought it was time for the West End to set a better example to the East End upon the Sabbath question; and among subsequent speakers, Sir Mark Stewart, M.P., expressed, on behalf of the meeting, gratitude to God for the usefulness of the Society, and its growing membership, in view of official sanction and popular tendency to widespread disregard of Divine claims.

Royal Marines' Home, Deal.—This institution was commenced about eight years since by a lady of private means, who, however, found it necessary to go abroad on the ground of health. She continues to guarantee a yearly sum of £50 towards the £100 required to maintain the work. Miss H. C. Daniel writes to the effect that the Home is conducted on evangelical lines, and that blessing has been given. "Many letters from the lads or their parents testify to the influence for good exerted over them. Miss Daniel seeks the interest and sympathy of Christian friends in making the Home known. Her address is 1, Gladstone Road, Deal.

Church Missions in Ireland.

On Tuesday of last week the fifty-second anniversary of the Irish Church Missions was celebrated at Exeter Hall. From the report submitted by Rev. N. F. Duncan (clerical secretary), it appeared that the staff of Scripture readers now numbers eighty-nine, with sixteen Bible-women, the total number of agents, including teachers, being 243. Special attention is paid to visiting in Dublin, Belfast, Cork, Limerick, Galway, Waterford, Dundalk, and Drogheda; 3,500 visits a month being paid in Dublin alone.

The chief work of the itinerants has been that of holding magic lantern missions in the South and West, visiting ninety-two places, in which 273 meetings have been held. These have been attended by a carefully estimated total of 9,575 Roman Catholics and 13,423 Protestants. The meetings have been greatly appreciated by the Roman Catholics, who have exercised their liberty to a very gratifying extent, although the availed to keep many away from the meetings.

POWER OF PRIESTLY DENUNCIATIONS

In visiting forty-three fairs, and in some special colportage work, the itinerants sold no fewer than 5,903 books, a large proportion being copies or portions of God's Word, and from the book shops were sold 20,329 publications. The colporteurs of the affiliated Irish Church Colportage Society have sold 5,644 books. In addition, the Society has printed 300,000 mission leaflets and tracts, which have been freely and widely distributed. Attending the seventeen Dublin Mission schools are 974 children. In the Connemara and West Galway schools the number of children is 408. Dr. Long, the Society's medical missionary in Limerick, has been hindered by opposition, but has courageously held on his way, and he reports 3,313 attendances at the dispensary.

Grossly untrue and offensive references to the Society have appeared in the Romanist papers. An attempt to mulct the Society in penalties for alleged infringement of the health Acts, in the erection of a movable wooden hall in the Dublin district, was defeated, as also an attempt by the Cork Corporation to secure official sanction to a hostile bye-law. The income of the year amounted to £16,015 0s. 2d., being an increase of £2,864 15s. 5d., but this is owing to legacies.

The Chairman (Rev. Prebendary Barlow) said the Society desired that the people of Ireland should have the Scriptures, and should be able to see whether or not the system in which they had been brought up was or was not according to these.

An interesting account of a recent visit to Ireland was given by Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, who testified to the thoroughness of the work, and spoke highly of the agents. Education was having its effect, and was allied to Protestantism and to truth, not to Romanism. Wherever there was education the people would, sooner or later, become independent of the priest.

Rev. Philip B. Johnson, M.A. (superintendent of the Dublin Mission), and Mr. W. Bates (itinerant evangelist) each gave an interesting and encouraging account of the Society's operations.

Hastings Friends' Mission.—The Friends' Mission which has been carried on for over fourteen years at Halton, Hastings, has all along suffered from inadequate accommodation. No better hall being available, a freehold property has been secured with space for the erection of a hall to accommodate 150 people, and rooms for classes and other purposes. An appeal has been issued for a fund of £500 to £600 (treasurer, Samuel Beck, 29, Mount Pleasant Road, Hastings), for building purposes. The Lewes and Chichester Monthly Meeting has passed a minute—"We feel that a good work is being done at Halton, and enlarged premises needed. We encourage Hastings Friends to raise money and build suitable premises.

On the Streets.

For over forty years, the Midnight Meeting Movement has maintained the Christ-like work of succouring the tempted and seeking the lost. Some details of what has been accomplished, under God, in grappling with the evils attendant upon the vice that parades our streets, were mentioned by Mr. T. Nixon, a member of the committee, at the annual meeting held in the Council Room of Exeter Hall last Thursday afternoon.

London is not only a producer but a great receiver of the fallen, who will not remain in small towns and villages where they are known by everybody in the place; hence every effort to reclaim the lost in London should be well supported by all British Christians, in addition to any local efforts. Through combined efforts well-organized and aggressive work has been actively maintained in provincial cities and country districts; and, in the latter, valuable co-operation has been given by the Salvation Army.

PREVENTIVE EFFORTS

are made as a powerful adjunct to rescue work. In August last Mr. C. W. McCree, the secretary, travelled many miles, marking out new ground for aggressive work, and meeting with experiences which made great demands upon his patience and hopefulness. The work includes a Night Mission, and letters specially written for their benefit, are presented to men associated with the fallen women.

Apart from the unexpected receipt of a cheque for £100 from an anonymous donor, there would have been a deficit on the general fund. But, while the work is quite free from debt, there is increased necessity for regular contributions in order to carry it on.

Mr. Hornibrook (Homes of Hope) occupied the chair, in the unexpected absence of Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, and remarked that the aim of the Midnight Meeting Movement embraces spiritual benefit as well as moral reformation.

Praising God for a large measure of success with the operations of the Society, Rev. F. S. Webster said that the work exemplifies the power of the Gospel through which the most abandoned of his creatures. The speaker described respectable-looking flats in his own parish as most convenient places for fashionable sin; and pointed out that the legal necessity for warning before prosecution, practically neutralizes the law.

GOD CAN MAKE ANEW

Rev. F. B. Meyer instanced practical proof of his contention that the existing law suffices for the suppression of brothels, provided that sound evidence is laid before local authorities. In two years 200 such houses had been closed in Lambeth, through action taken in connection with his church. This, however, was only after pressure through a large meeting of Christian voters. It is useless dealing with the fruits of the evil unless we also seek its roots; and here we touch the question of starvation wages owing to public demand for cheapness. Women's ministry is the most suitable to reclaim her fallen sisters; and brightness, as well as labour, is a necessity in rescue Homes.

City Workwomen.—The nineteenth annual report of the Woodford Wells Convalescent Home for City Young Workwomen tells of a useful and much-needed service rendered to young women and girls engaged in business in the city. Among the 5,000 visitors who have used the Home since its opening, almost every trade is represented. A week at this resting-place, with substantial food and freedom from the monotony of the daily round, has often prevented a serious breakdown in health. It has been a joy to the matron to notice the gradual brightening of the eye and the return of colour to the pinched, white face, as a result of the pure air and happy surroundings. The secretary is Miss Mary Reynolds, Invercloy, Woodford Wells, Essex.

A Hopeful Generation.

THIS opening year of a new century finds the Juvenile Temperance Movement more widely extended and more thoroughly organized than at any previous period of its history. According to the most recent returns, there were in the United Kingdom 28,894 Bands of Hope and other Juvenile Temperance Societies; and the gross membership of these societies was 3,536,000.

On Wednesday of last week the United Kingdom Band of Hope Union held its forty-sixth anniversary meeting in Exeter Hall. There was a Breakfast Meeting, followed by Conference; and at the latter brief addresses were given by Dr. W. J. Collins, who presided, and by other medical men, upon the subject of

"ALCOHOL AND CHILDHOOD."

In a letter from Sir Thomas Barlow, M.D., mention was made of an infant of eleven months who died from gin-drinker's liver through alcohol given by the mother. The afternoon was devoted to discussion of special means for retaining new members brought in by the recruiting crusade.

A large audience assembled for the evening meeting in the Great Hall, and the Report, presented in summary form by the secretary, was most encouraging. The parent union, by means of its agents, with the help of honorary lecturers, has extended its influence to every part of the kingdom. In London the work has been well sustained; and temperance effort is fostered in the colonies and in foreign countries by correspondence, personal interviews, sale of publications, and other means. Considerable time, effort, and expenditure has been devoted to the Bill prohibiting the Sale of Drink to Children; and the large number of petitions in its favour, together with the majority of 318 by which the second reading was carried, is cause for great satisfaction. But the Bill has still before it many critical stages ere it can become law; and the Union will in its favour by every legitimate means. The income for the year's work, in its varied and numerous branches, amounted to £4,391, a balance remaining in hand.

CONTINUE AND FOSTER THE AGITATION

In his usual genial manner, Sir George Williams, President of the Union, and Chairman for the evening, indulged in the pleasant vision of a time when, according to the present rate of progress in this organization, drink will be banished from the land. Her late Majesty Queen Victoria took a very real interest in the movement; and the King has declared that it tends to make the whole nation healthy, vigorous and temperate. Sir George declared that, as their friend and upholder, he would be "game" to the end.

An anthem was then sung by a choir of about 400 senior members of

LONDON BANDS OF HOPE,

under the baton of Mr. Herbert West, with Mr. A. J. Hawkins at the organ; and subsequently there was plenty of song between the numerous speeches. Rev. F. L. Wiseman (Birmingham) spoke of growing public favour towards the true patriotism that prays and works for a sober and righteous nation. Canon Hicks (Manchester) urged that the children are our most valuable national asset; and Rev. Pedr Williams (Lower Clapton) showed that the cause of the child is the cause of the future, with promise of a generation superior to temptation.

Cambridge Barnwell Mission.—Additional efforts are being made by the Theatre Royal Barnwell Mission of Cambridge to reach the non-attendants at places of worship by holding lantern services. The results so far have been encouraging, and the new feature bids fair to accomplish its object. The congregations have been large and the gatherings of an impressive character. The general work of the Mission has been carried on, with the hearty co-operation of Christians, amid many tokens of Divine blessing. The services of friends who have contributed to the success of the movement are cordially acknowledged in the twenty-second annual report. The superintendent is Mr. W. K. Yawser.

Scotsmen in London.

AT the fourteenth annual meeting of the Caledonian Christian Club, held recently at 24, Guilford Street, Russell Square, Major A. K. Murray (chairman) said he took a personal interest in the work because of the influence brought to bear upon so many young lives entrusted to their care by anxious parents and pastors at a critical time in their history; and he was glad to be able to testify that amid agencies for the benefit of young people flocking to London, the Club held a unique position of its own with its ever open door to the stranger and lonely Scot.

The report showed that some 200 young men and over thirty young women passed through the Club in course of the year, of whom 128 became residents for longer or shorter periods, while the others were guided to safe and suitable lodgings, and had freely the use of the Club rooms and oft partook of its hospitality while in quest of situations. The labour bureau, in co-operation with the Polytechnic and the Y.M.C.A.'s, had done much in securing appointments.

The financial statement, made by Mr. H. L. Millar, showed that at the close of the year friends had rallied, and once for all cleared off the final balance of debt, £150. The total expenditure amounted in all to £994, and the income from board and residence to £605, leaving £389 to be made up by subscriptions and donations.

The Bible League.

INCREASING in intensity and power for mischief, the destructive work of the so-called Higher Criticism goes on apace. Calls of service in connection with the Bible League increase year by year, revealing the fact that there are many among the rank and file of the Christian Church who are awakening to a widespread danger, and desiring whatever help can be given in resisting the specious teachings of unsanctified and irreverent scholarship.

Confident hope in God, and determination to exercise vigilance in the interests of his truth, were marked features of the annual meetings held on Tuesday of last week. In the afternoon, Mr. W. H. Seagram, president, was in the chair at Exeter Hall. That was matter of thanksgiving by Pastor Archibald Brown; and he prayed for wider submission to the teaching of the Holy Spirit, in recognition of the fact that intellectual ability and educational advantage do not suffice for comprehension of the things of God. The strong exhortations of 2 Tim. iv. were read by Mr. John McCall.

"GOD HATH SPOKEN"

Reviewing the work of the past year, Mr. A. H. Carter, secretary, told of fifty-two meetings held, and eighty-nine new members added to the register. A series of lectures to Sunday-school teachers had aroused considerable interest, and were blessed to the strengthening of faith in the authority and accuracy of the inspired Word of God. Successful conferences had been held in various places, and there has been a good demand for literature issued by and circulated through the League. Receipts were £396, expenditure £345, and the need of enlarged income is felt in order that the good work may be carried on with greater ease and efficiency. The necessity for prayerful interest is keenly felt, and new members will be heartily welcomed.

After a few words from the Chairman, Prebendary Webb-Peploe exposed the fallacy favoured by men who profess to see only Bibliolatry in the reverent study of God's Word. Regarding words as only the medium, who works in the Word, and makes it the very revelation of God Himself. Blatant and blasphemous attack upon this position has given place to more subtle opposition under the guise of refinement and research; but we must despise the ridiculous criticism that "assigns one verse of fifteen words to seventeen fountain heads of authority"! The Prebendary's address was followed with deep interest by his hearers, and was a closely reasoned and convincing examination of the way in which the utterances of Christ confirm Old Testament Scripture and claim Divine authority for the Saviour's own teaching. There are 1,904 Old Testament affirmations that passages to follow them are the very words of God.

WE WORSHIP THE LIVING SPIRIT,

Pastor Hugh D. Brown (Dublin) spoke, and, in the evening, gave another address at a meeting in the East London Tabernacle.

The Railway Mission.

THE annual meeting of the Railway Mission, held on Friday last at Exeter Hall was marked by characteristic heartiness and vigour.

Mr. R. Nixon, the secretary, gave a cheering account of the operations of the year. Fourteen new branches have been formed; a new hall to accommodate 400 people was opened at Preston, and the hall which has been used for the work at Basingstoke has been purchased. The following extract from a report of one of the branches will serve to illustrate the fervency which actuates the missioners and the men: "The work at this place began by a driver witnessing so brightly for Christ that a young fireman was induced to come to the Mission, where he became converted. He in his turn brought a mate, who also yielded to God, and the next Sunday appeared with another friend, who likewise crossed the line." These witnessed in such a way that several others have come to put their trust in Jesus Christ, among them a young fireman, the of eight, who seems like being as out-and-out for the Lord as he once was for the devil. His one anxiety is for the salvation of the other seven. The Lord has also arrested a young fellow, the captain of a football team, who was so devoted to the game that he could talk and think of nothing else. On meeting some of his companions soon after his conversion they asked him "when he was going to play for them again?" He replied, "I've joined a new club. I belong to Jesus Christ. Would you like to see the rules?" So saying, he drew his marked Testament from his pocket, and held it up to them; but they did not linger to hear more. This was about four months ago, and he is now witnessing more brightly than ever.

LEADER OF A DRINKING, GAMBLING GANG

The Scottish representative of the organization reports seven new branches, several of which have already proved fruitful, and there has been much to encourage. Miss Gillett, the devoted superintendent of the mission in Japan, sends news of Gospel and temperance work carried on with blessing among the men and their families. Of India, Mr. Thomas Pollock says that the work has been carried on chiefly on the East Indian Railway system, which is the premier one of the country. Railway men have no Sabbath because India has no Sabbath. The time table is compiled on the basis of

SEVEN WORKING DAYS PER WEEK.

Railway stations in India usually consist of a few houses in the open plain, where the people are cut off from the society of others, and their tendency is to drift away from spiritual things. Amid such conditions the work has been prosecuted with much success. The Gospel has been preached, and meetings held for prayer and Bible study.

The war in South Africa has hindered operations in that country, but it is expected that work will shortly be resumed in an enlarged sphere, as the Transvaal lines, on which the Mission coach was not allowed to run, will in future be under British management.

A forcible address in support of the work was given by Mr. S. Gurney Sheppard, who presided, and stirring appeals of an evangelistic character were made by Rev. W. R. Mowll and Mr. Leonard Weaver, while Gospel solos were sung by Madame Annie Ryall with her accustomed clearness and charm.

The Gospel for the Jews.

IT is gratifying to learn that, despite the difficulties which are inseparable from all Christian missions to Israel, Jews are becoming more generally amenable to the power and influence of New Testament teaching. Evidence of this was furnished by facts and figures cited at the annual meeting of the British Society for the Propagation of the Gospel among the Jews, held at Exeter Hall on Thursday.

Sir Matthew Dodsworth presided, and spoke cordially, and from experience, of the extensive influence of the Society. In Leeds he had witnessed the need for such efforts. It is no unusual occurrence for a Jew to land at Hull knowing only one word of English—Leeds—which he constantly repeats until he finds himself at that city among his friends, where a strong Christian community is growing among Jews. He urged the necessity for Christians investigating God's plan concerning Israel, in order that his will may be done and his purpose accomplished.

In the course of a brief statement regarding the Society's operations during the year, the secretary, Rev. Isaac Levinson, voiced the thanks of the committee for all the generous support which has been accorded, and, above all, their devout gratitude to God for the many tokens of Divine blessing. He then reviewed the work of the Society on the Continent. Two of its agents are witnessing for Christ in Russia, and through their influence have formed themselves into reading circles for the study of Scripture, chiefly the New Testament. In Germany and France also considerable advance in the Society's evangelistic work has been made. The efforts of the workers at home have been abundantly blessed, and in every centre there have arisen noble witnesses for the Gospel from among the ranks of Hebrews. The debt on the Homes for Aged Hebrew Christians, happily, has been removed, and a legacy invested on its behalf yields a sum of £50 per annum. The Million Penny Fund is being revived, to be devoted to the training of young men for medical missionary work, the support of missionaries' widows, and the proposed Wingate-M'Cheyne Memorial. This memorial is a forward movement in the West-end of London. Already the Society's agents are at work in this locality, but in order that their efforts may be consolidated and extended, suitable premises are needed as a centre. The Council and Committee have resolved to erect a mission house, designating the building, "The Wingate-M'Cheyne Memorial," to perpetuate the memory of in missionary enterprise, Rev. William Wingate and Rev. Robert Murray M'Cheyne. Part of the house is to be used as a residence for the missionary, and the remainder for the general work of the mission. The Society has long felt the need of a home for young converts, many of whom are foreigners, and require educational assistance. The Mission House will meet this need, as well as form a centre for classes for Jews, and meetings of Christians for prayer and Bible readings.

NUMBERS OF YOUNG MEN

TWO HONOURED PIONEERS

Rev. G. S. Barrett, D.D., denounced the numerous arguments which are often advanced against missions to Jews, and gave several reasons why such agencies demand the consideration of Christians. (1) The Jews are the standing miracle of all history. They are the only nation without country, home, king, and political constituency that has never become merged in the nations of the earth. (2) The Jew is a man, as much as the Gentile. He has the same spiritual needs, the same broken heart to be comforted, the same dim way across life to be lighted, and travels to the same eternity. (3) The Gentile world and the Church of Christ have a large debt still owing to the Jew. No nation has been so shamefully treated by Christian people.

A stirring and thoughtful address by Rev. W. Perkins followed. Speaking as a secretary of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, he recognised the need for such endeavours as those of the British Jews' Society. One of the parrot cries of to-day is—Why not leave the heathen to himself? And the same cry is often raised respecting Israel. When the great issues between Jew and Gentile are comprehended the duty of Christians is obvious.

Rev. W. T. Gidney, secretary of the London Jews' Society, expressed the warm sympathy felt by that organization for the work of the British Society. He recalled the names of many leading spirits in the early days of both societies, which, having so goodly a heritage, can look back with joy upon the achievements of the past, and to the future with confidence that the hand of God will still guide the efforts of his servants in bringing his ancient people to accept Christ as their promised Messiah.

Country Gospelling.

SPIRITUAL need in many rural districts seems to grow greater; and letters are continually received by the Country Towns' Mission, testifying to the lack of faithful Gospel teaching. The Society works in our villages and country towns on the same lines as the London City Mission in the metropolis, its efforts being of a distinctly missionary character. There are now forty-nine missionaries connected with the Society; and a number of stations throughout the country, where work was begun by the Missions, are now self-supporting and independent.

Mr. F. A. Bevan presided at the annual meeting in the Council Chamber of Exeter Hall last Friday evening. Mr. George H. Mawer, secretary, reported that the work of the Society had been well maintained through another year. While there was no extension of permanent work, missionaries have been sent temporarily to several places where there is EXCEPTIONAL NEED.

This has been accomplished through the generous help of a lady who, for a second time, sent a sum of money to be expended in this way. It is often difficult to spare a man from regular work for this purpose; and it would be advantageous to have the services of two or three additional missionaries set apart for this temporary visitation, say, for periods of from two to six months.

Workhouses and infirmaries in various towns are regularly visited; and the missionary at Redruth reports a spiritual awakening as the result. Another worker in Essex writes of good times with a number of van people in his neighbourhood; 2,000 fruit pickers in Kent heard God's message of peace last summer. Visitation of the sick is another feature of the work. In supplying a great spiritual lack, the Mission commends itself to the generous consideration of God's people. The income was £2,957, and the expenditure £2,742, leaving £215 to be carried forward.

The Chairman urged the great importance and necessity of a work such as this, especially in view of the revealed by census figures just announced. It is on thoroughly Evangelical and undenominational lines; the latter being an important point of pioneer work. The Gospel which these missionaries preach is the only thing that lays hold of the human heart. A new home, so much needed in many cases, is useless without a clean heart; and the life-giving Word of God finds readiest entrance through individual dealing.

INCREASE OF POPULATION

Missionaries working respectively near Cheltenham, in Northampton, and in Twyford (Berks), recounted their interesting and heart-stirring daily experiences in patient and devoted labours for the salvation and uplifting of the sinful, ignorant, degraded, and neglected.

In outspoken fashion, Pastor H. E. Stone (St. John's Wood) mentioned three words somewhat out of vogue of late. More Christian people should be aware of the good done by a mission that works with firm belief in conversion and strong conviction as to Divine truth, thus calling for whole-hearted consecration of means for its support.

Church Zenana Missions.

THE year's work of the Church of England Zenana Missionary Society has been one of steady progress in many ways, and the annual meeting, held at Exeter Hall on May 3, was full of interest.

This year the Society attains its majority. During its existence workers have multiplied out of proportion to the advance in means available for their support. A total of sixty-one missionaries and assistants in 1880 has grown to 343 in 1900, of whom 109 are in local connection. Instead of ninety-six native Biblewomen, teachers, and helpers in our first year, there are 800 now on the roll. A regrettable fact is the serious falling-off in the number of candidates.

After hearty words of encouragement from Bishop Ingham, who presided, Miss Codrington (who escaped, badly wounded, from the Fuh-kien massacre), said that when she returned to Fuh-kien in 1897, she found everything ripe for harvest. It seemed as if the time before the massacre had been the sowing-time, and that after it the reaping. There are 100 girls in the boarding-schools, and the forty-six day schools are well attended. The spiritual standard is very much higher than before among native Christians. There are forty infants in the "Bird's Nest," and the leper work is in full swing. Miss Codrington mentioned a native Biblewoman who three years ago joined the class, and walks six miles to it and six miles back every time.

Operations in the Punjab and Scinde were described by Miss Dawson, who said that an interesting feature in the schools is the number of Jewesses—fifty out of 120 in one school. One of the best children in the school is the daughter of the Chief Rabbi, whose wife is also a learner. Many a little Jewish maiden knows that the Messiah has come, and trusts Him as her Saviour. A very pleasant part of the work is following up the married scholars, visiting the little brides of nine or ten.

Rev. J. Stone (of the Telugu Mission), who followed, has had an experience of twenty-five years. When he first went out, Mrs. Fox and Mrs. Clayton had schools for girls, and that was all that was done. Last year 800 girls—or more—came up to receive prizes, representing all castes and classes. Mr. Stone spoke with enthusiasm of the good done by the High-Caste Women's Homes, and read an extract from an Indian paper explaining the need for it and praising the institution. At Ellore there are six schools attended by 400 children.

Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society.

THE annual meeting of this Society was held on May 6 at the Mansion House, Mr. Justice Bruce presiding over a large audience.

Mr. J. E. Hazelton, the secretary, presented the annual report, which recalled the fact that the Society began ninety-four years ago with three pensioners. There are now 1,535 pensioners, as compared with 1,493 last year, and they receive an annual pension expenditure of £11,300. The three qualifications are Christian character, poverty, and old age. Nearly half the pensioners live in London, and about 86 per cent. of them are women. Twenty are over ninety years of age, 299 are between eighty and ninety, while 839 are between seventy and eighty.

At the Society's four homes in Hornsey, Camberwell, Stamford Hill, and Brighton, 176 of the pensioners are accommodated, and visitors to the institutions will receive a hearty welcome. The High Court having approved of a scheme for the administration of the late Mr. J. T. Morton's bequest, three distributions have been made, amounting to £4,902, or about £3 5s. to every qualified pensioner.

The Chairman, in the course of a sympathetic address, said that the Society had stood the test of time, and is doing a noble work, which deserves the encouragement of Christian people. The Dean of Norwich, Mr. M. H. Hodder, and Mr. Frank Bevan also took part in the proceedings.

Protestant Reformation Society.

THERE was a crowded gathering in the Parlour of Exeter Hall, on the occasion of the seventy-fourth anniversary of the Protestant Reformation Society. The proceedings opened with the reading of Psa. xlvi. by Rev. J. B. Barraclough, vicar of St. Thomas's, South Lambeth; and prayer was offered by Rev. L. Price, rector of Pakefield, Suffolk.

Instead of a speech, Mr. W. J. Fraser, Chairman of the executive committee, made reference to a picture on the front page of last Saturday's Illustrated London News, representing the enthronement of the new Bishop of London, as a sample of the latest Ritualistic development. Mr. W. A. Limbrick, secretary, referred to some 120 letters of apology for absence, including one from Rev. Canon Christopher, strongly urging multiplication of the Society's faithful missionaries.

The importance of providing such agents for Cambridge, as well as the one now working in Oxford, and was pointed out by Mr. Walter Walsh, author of "Secret History of the Oxford Movement," who was himself one of the first missionaries of the Society, working in Oxford from 1875-80. Humanly speaking, if this Society had not sent him to Oxford, his "Secret History" would never have seen the light; and while he was there he had the pleasure of seeing a vigorous branch of the Church Association established. The political aims of the Papacy call for unceasing vigilance of this and kindred societies; and the attack of Rome upon the King's Declaration should be carefully watched. Rome seeks to gain her ends by getting a little concession here and a little there; and intense interest is felt throughout the country as to the issue of her latest move in this direction. The Ritualistic conspiracy also requires watching; but, while the errors of Ritualism are denounced, there seems to be but little effort made for the CONVERSION OF WRONG-DOERS.

FOR EVERY CATHEDRAL CITY,

That is a point which is worthy of more attention. In conclusion, the speaker warmly commended this Society to increased support on account of the excellent work it is doing.

Mr. C. Gardner, a missionary working for the Society in the neighbourhood of Tunbridge Wells and Mayfield, described the district as dotted over with monasteries, convents, and orphanages. A plodding testimony has been maintained not merely in the shape of controversy, but with the object of putting something positive into the minds of the people, and there are evidences of some fruit in counteraction of prevalent evil.

Another agent, Mr. Herbert Wolstenholme, has worked in Weston-super-Mare twenty years; and his enthusiastic account of varied and numerous activities from one week end to the other, included an early Sunday morning Bible-class of 106 workingmen, and evangelistic tours for twelve miles round, by a cycle band.

Mr. J. Flanagan, another missionary of the Society, maintains a bold Protestant stand amid the degradation and superstition of his wide field of work in the South of London.

Self-Help Emigration Society.—Since the inauguration of this Society sixteen years ago, 6,234 have emigrated under its auspices to Canada, South Africa, Australasia, and the United States of America. To all comers information is given gratis. The character of applicants is investigated, and the Society declines to help those who are unlikely to become good colonists. Introductions are given to persons who, though able to pay their own expenses, are glad to avail themselves of the Society's guidance and advice. Over 100 correspondents inform the committee in London what class of emigrants they can receive. Applications for assistance are far more numerous than the Society can meet, and it thus follows that were its income increased, its usefulness and scope would also be extended. Copies of the annual report and other information may be obtained from the hon. secretary, Mr. E. Wilson Gates, Memorial Hall Buildings, Farringdon Street, E.C.

The Missions to Seamen.

THE annual meeting of the Missions to Seamen was held in St. James' Hall on May 2, Admiral Sir N. Bowden-Smith, late Commander-in-Chief at the Nore, presiding.

The annual report states that the receipts for the year 1900 were £48,835, the largest amount ever received. Yet the income was so small for the demands upon it that £2,000 had to be taken out of the working reserve fund to meet the year's liabilities, and large reductions in the number of chaplains and readers, ministering to the crews of H.M. transports and other vessels, had to be made.

A fleet of seventy small steamers, sailing vessels, and small boats are continually employed in boarding ships; and 102 special seamen's churches and institutes are in free use by seamen of many creeds and nationalities; 11,500 services and readings were held afloat last year and 22,000 ashore, while 4,264 sailors and fishermen took the total abstinence pledge.

To keep pace with the improved habits, tastes, and requirements of seafaring men, several of the buildings in use by them have had to be enlarged, embellished, and more attractively furnished; and separate rooms, tastefully arranged, provided for officers and for apprentices. Instruction to seagoing men in First Aid to the Injured is, of course, a practical help, and over a thousand seamen have qualified for ambulance examinations and certificates in the "Missions to Seamen" Institutes.

Among those who spoke in advocacy of the claims of the Society were Sir T. Fowell Buxton and Sir R. U. Penrose-Fitzgerald.

The Women and the Drink.

AROUND of meetings, early and late, in connection with the anniversary of the Women's Total Abstinence Union, made Thursday a busy day for the officials and members of that widely-useful organization. Earnestness and enthusiasm were manifest in all the gatherings; and fresh impetus to the important work of the Union is likely to result from the proceedings.

The day opened with an hour's prayer at the Friends' Meeting House, St. Martin's Lane, followed by morning Conference, at which Mr. John Hilton and Mr. Joseph Malins spoke upon methods of dealing with the drink traffic.

In the afternoon Lady Elizabeth Biddulph presided. A paper by Miss Wright, of Mansfield, entitled "Side-lights on the Drinking Habits of Women," stated that at five public-houses in N.W. London, 240 children, mostly well-dressed, entered between one and two o'clock on Sunday; while fifty-six children, apparently under ten years, and many little ones of three or four years, went to fetch beer between 7 and 8 p.m.

The public meeting was held in the evening at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, with the Hon. Mrs. Eliot Yorke in the chair. Music, vocal and instrumental, varied the proceedings. On behalf of the executive committee, Miss M. E. Docwra reported made by the Union, and acknowledged the goodness of God in giving a large measure of success with members' and public conferences, deputations, issue of publications, meetings for women in official positions, influence exerted upon nurses, teachers, and deaconesses, and a vast amount of well-organized work.

STEADY PROGRESS

Sympathetic reference to the death of our late beloved Queen was coupled with the earnest hope that the powerful influence of the Crown may be exercised for the diminution of temptations to evil, protection of the young, and rescue of the people from the sin and sorrow caused by intemperance.

Thirty-two new federated societies have been formed during the past year, making a total of 334, including thirty-five junior and other dependent branches; and all these have worked hard on behalf of the children's charter. Receipts for the year were £1,063, and expenditure £1,393, necessitating the withdrawal of £340 from the funds on deposit, in order to meet current expenses.

In her address, the President said that although their ideals and aspirations were not yet realized, there is cause to be thankful for the activities of so many devoted women in the great fight against favoured by popular prejudice and vested interests. Intelligent apprehension of temperance truth must go hand in hand with enthusiasm. The educationalist and the missionary must go forth side by side.

A FORMIDABLE FOE

Miss Gray, F.R.C.S.I., advocated three lines of prevention with regard to intemperance among women—education, occupation, and responsibility. Other addresses were given by Rev. D. L. Ritchie, Miss Pollock, and Mr. T. P. Whittaker, M.P., the latter declaring that responsibility for the Children's Bill now rests with the Government, and if they refuse to carry the measure through, the reason will be found simply in their fear of the publican's vote.

Youth v. Drink.

LAST June the Young Abstainers' Union attained its majority, and numerous plans were formed for celebrating this stage of its history. As the result of special efforts twenty-five new branches were formed, making 118 in all, including some in South Africa. The membership now totals over 8,000.

Much interest was taken by members generally in the "Children's Bill," and, as the result of one united effort at Glasgow, 4,730 signatures were secured to a petition in favour of this very necessary reform. Other local activities included flowers lovingly supplied to a Home for aged men and women, garments made for the poor, parcels of work sent to the London Temperance Hospital, and personal service in temperance advocacy. The year has been one of progress, but of usefulness lies before the organization.

A LARGER SPHERE

Leaving the Band of Hope movement to its own special work, the Union exerts a most important and beneficial Christian influence in safeguarding from the drink curse young people whose parents are of good social standing. The "At Homes" and other gatherings promoted by the Union are very bright and attractive; and the work is eminently worthy of extended financial support.

The annual meetings of the Union were held last Friday at Exeter Hall. An earnest spirit prevailed at the afternoon prayer meeting, and Rev. F. S. Webster gave a helpful address. It was concerned with the two Scriptures: "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God;" and "Whatsoever ye do, in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." There is, said Mr. Webster, to be no independent Free State within the empire of the Crucified, but each province of our being must yield its revenue of praise to Him. An emphatic denial was given to the objections that this ideal is impossible of attainment, and that it would make life monotonous and dull. The claims of Christ upon young lives, and his power to satisfy and deliver are

SUPREME REALITIES.

All who have taken a decided stand for God against the drinking customs of the day, and who seek to bring saving influence to bear upon others, should do this "in the name of the Lord Jesus."

At the evening meeting, the president, Mr. T. F. Victor Buxton, spoke words of welcome. Addresses by Rev. J. W. Jones and Miss Orme were varied by piano, violin, 'cello, and vocal music, with an interval for refreshments and conversation. An interesting feature of the programme was the presentation by Lady Agnes Anderson of nine medals, won in a competition for the introduction of the largest number of new members.

(Reports of other May Meetings are held over this week.)

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

 I want to interest my elder "Young People" every week in what Mr. Meyer writes on the Christian Endeavour Topic. Parents will also find the S.S. Lesson Notes suggestive and helpful for Sunday talks with their young folk. (See next page.)

How Misfortune became Good Fortune.

The cup was found in Benjamin's sack.—Gen. xliv. 12.

FROM a great palace in Egypt, very early one morning, there issued eleven men with a line of asses laden with sacks of corn. They visited Egypt from a far-off land, because a mighty famine had stricken many countries as well as Egypt, and having secured corn from stores laid up by the Egyptian Governor, they were now starting on their homeward journey. They had gone only a short distance from the city, with its great buildings and busy markets, in the clear, hot sunlight, when they were hailed by a running messenger from the ruler's palace. They stopped, and waited for his approach. When the swift runner came up, he said that they had stolen a precious cup which belonged to the chief ruler, whose splendid house they had just left, and who had treated them as guests rather than traders.

With indignation the men denied the charge, and protested against the accusation; and so sure were they of their innocence, that they said: "If the cup be found in any man's sack, let him die, and we also will be bondsmen of my lord."

Search was made; all were ready to prove the mistake of the charge. The sacks were opened, one after another, till ten had been examined, and the cup was not found. Then came the last sack, which belonged to the youngest of the brothers; and to the grief and surprise of all the rest, alas! the cup was discovered. Could anything seem worse for the party than for the cup to be found in Benjamin's sack?

In fear and shame all the brothers went back to the city, and the palace, feeling that a great misfortune had befallen them. All their joy was turned into mourning. The facts looked very black: circumstantial evidence confirmed the worst suspicions. They felt they could never prove their innocence. So that morning of brightness, full of hope, was suddenly turned into a noon of gloom and sadness.

On reaching the palace, an old sin committed against their lost brother years before, and their old father, came back to the minds of the travellers, and they fell down before the ruler, and said: "God hath found out the iniquity of thy servants." As the memory of their past sin revived, the eldest brother, Judah, made a noble appeal for the youngest, Benjamin, to be spared and sent home, while he offered to remain as bondsman in his place.

Then it was that the heart of the ruler was touched, and he bade all the attendants leave the room while he confessed himself to be their absent brother, Joseph.

Thus the time of trouble was changed to joy, and the day of calamity became one of blessing.

How often is the cup of misfortune found in some one's sack, and people say—what bad luck is this! It is hard to be wrongly judged, and blamed for things we have never done.

The cup is still found whenever we are falsely accused, or any unexpected disaster overtakes us for sins we have not committed. Sometimes we may have to suffer for a little while, but we shall find that the truth will come out, and what seemed an accident or mistake will become by-and-by a blessing and a comfort.

When we are misunderstood, or wrongly judged, our character is being tested, and we do well to think over what things we have done amiss, for which we have never been taken to task. We should be humble and patient until the truth is made manifest. If we trust in the Lord, in due time we shall find the mystery cleared up. There are no accidents in Providence. Our misfortune will often become our good fortune; and God will transform our troubles into joys, because "all things work together for good to them that love God."

J. Johnson.

Sale.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Teignmouth, to May 22; Mr. H. Hutchinson, Ipswich, May 16; Battisford, May 17. Mr. J. Spiers, Dunoon, to May 17; Hamilton, May 31-June 16; Mr. J. S. Tyler, Birmingham and neighbourhood, to May 22. Mr. H. Hankinson, Birmingham, May 20; Rettendon, Battles Bridge, Essex, May 22. Mr. R. T. Archibald, Bridge of Allan, to May 20; Aberdeen, May 21-30; Edinburgh, May 31-June 17; Messrs. Hewlett and Ingram, with Caravan, North Holmwood, Surrey. Mr. E. Clark, with Caravan, Stagsden, near Bedford; Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with Caravan, in Suffolk.

Scripture Union Anniversary Meeting.—Y.M.C.A., Lecture Hall, Birmingham, May 20 (7 p.m.).

Do the Right, Boys.

Have courage, boys, to do the right!
Be bold, be brave, be strong!
By doing right we get the might
To overcome the wrong.
'Tis only those who evil do
That show a coward fear,
So let your lives be good and true,
And keep your conscience clear.

Have courage, boys, to do the right,
Like heroes of renown;
For only those who win the fight
Can hope to wear the crown.
Let manliness your standard be,
Nor heed the scoff and jeer;
Seek after truth and purity,
And holy, filial fear.

Have courage, boys; go on and win;
Walk in the good old way,
Strive day by day to conquer sin,
And ever watch and pray;
Success will come; still persevere,
And keep the prize in sight;
Help from on high your heart will cheer
While fighting for the right.

From the Stockwell Reciter.

"The Christian" Bible Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 278).

Find the following. The initials of each answer read downwards will form the alphabet.

A. One of God's friends (James ii.).
B. An apostle (Mark iii.).
C. What we should be to all (1 Pet. iii.).
D. A great intercessor (Ezek. xiv.).
E. One who never died (Heb. xi.).
F. A governor who delayed thinking of salvation (Acts xxiv.).
G. Some who desired to see Jesus (John xii.).
H. That without which no man shall see God (Heb. xii.).
I. What we must keep ourselves from (1 John v.).
J. The ancient name of Jerusalem (1 Chron. xi.).
K. A people concerning whom David lied (1 Sam. xxvii.).
L. What Agur desired removed far from him (Prov. xxx.).
M. When this man died, the flood came (Gen. v.).
N. A mighty man (Gen. x.).
O. A profitable servant (Philem.).
P. The murderer of one of Israel's kings (2 Kings xv.).
Q. What the everlasting fire shall not be (Mark ix.).
R. What the Lord signified unto John (Rev. i.).
S. A man who hated the Jews (Neh. ii.).
T. What Nehemiah was called (Ezra ii.).
U. How far the Lord can save (Heb. vii.).
V. How we can do through God (Psa. lx.).
W. To whom the Gospel invitation is given (Rev. xxii.).
X. The kind of sacrifice offered by Abel (Heb. xi.).
Y. Something brought from Egypt (1 Kings x.).
Z. Judah's last King (2 Chron. xxxvi.).

[Children under ten find any 7; under thirteen any 14; under seventeen any 20.]

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (277).

Bible Clock.

I. Mercy (Psa. xxxi. 7).
II. Have mercy! (Psa. xxxi. 9).
III. Goodness and mercy (Psa. xxiii. 6).
IV. Mercy rejoiceth against judgment (James ii. 13).
V. Mercy shall compass him about (Psa. xxxii. 10).
VI. I have trusted in thy mercy (Psa. xiii. 5).
VII. Have mercy upon me, and answer me (Psa. xxvii. 7).
VIII. Let thy mercy, O Lord, be upon us (Psa. xxxiii. 22).
IX. Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy (Matt. v. 7).
X. All the paths of the Lord are mercy and truth (Psa. xxv. 10).
XI. He shall have judgment without mercy, that hath showed no mercy (James ii. 13).
XII. Hear, O Lord, and have mercy upon me; be Thou my helper (Psa. xxx. 10).

No. 277—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Irene Ashdown*, Miriam and Olive Allam, Douglas Anderson-Berry, R. and Ernest Aldwinckle, John Allan, Ethel Alford*.

B—Ella Berryman, Hilda and Ileene Barstow, Eunice Baber, Margaret Batting, Robert Bailey, Mabel Bartlett, Gwendolen and Ethel Bailey, Mabel Barstow, Mabel Baker, Dorothy Brooks, Herbert Braddon, Gordon Bligh, Stanley Burgess, Evelyn Barstow, Marion Boyle, Emily Bridgewater, Cyril Baddeley, Robert Bushby, Reginald Bristow, Clarence Bass, Violette Birney, Alison and Monica Bailey.

C—Mabel Candlin, Rosalind Clarke, Mabel Campe, George Cross, Angel Colenso, Ethel Cumbers*, Gladys Clark, Hannah Chapman, Hilda Cook, Gussie Clarke, Kittie Cope*, Sophie Cohen, Lydia Cleary, Ida, May and Willie Cullen, Ruth Collis, Josephine Cheal, Ida* and Mabel* Cole.

D—Ethel Dancy*, Polognia Daws*, Grace*, Catherine and Emily Dempster, Tom Dunn*, Dorothy Daintree*, Nellie* and W. Dowsett, Stanley Drew, Violet and Katherine Donaldson-Selby.

F—Percy Fitch, Kitty Fausset, Vincent, Olive and Mabel Fleet, Harry Flashman.

G—Margaret Gorrie, David Gardiner, Thomas Gilbert, Mary Glass, Winnie Gardner, Evelyn* and Grace* Gulston, Dorothy, Cicely and Gladys Gibson, Grace Goldsmith, Kate Green, George Goodall.

H—Mary, Elizabeth and Hilda Hooper, Sydney Hanford*, Annie Horstcraft, Beatrice Hastings*, Harry Hodgkinson*, Willie Hooper, Dorothy Havergal-Shaw*, Nellie Hatchett, Ince, Dorothy* and Ruth* Hunt, Kathleen Heckford, Hetty Hill, Dorothy* and Elsie* Hanson.

I—Daisy Iredell, Nellie Irving.

J—Hilda, Winifred* and Louie* Jeffery, Amelia Jacobson, Betty Jacobs, Gertrude and Emily Jones, Alfred Johnson.

K—Lionel Kepple*, Annie Kingsford*, Hannah Knapp, Max and Eva Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky, Margaret Kinnaird.

L—Mary* and Sidney* Law, Mary Lynn, Constance Long, Gladys Lee, Georgina Lichtenstein, John Leigh, Beatrice Le Mesurier*, Mary Lamb.

M—Charlie and Dorothy McMullin, Winnie, Ivy and Frank Maunder, Aldie and Edith Margetts, Amy Munday, Fanny Messenger, Dorothy Morgan, Godfrey and Alec Miller, Alan and Nora Marshall, Winifred* and Doris Martin, Mabel Morris*, Geoffrey Mollie, Sidney, John and Philip Martin, Nellie, Grace and Arthur* Morice, Tom McGlone.

N—Emily Norris, Eleanor and Valerie Noel, Blanche Norcock*, Gerald and Hilda Nicholls, Lyddy, Daisy and Nellie Nicholas, Edith Nash*.

O—Constance Osborne.

P—Leonard, Walter and Katie* Picknell, Leslie Partridge, Ethel* and Kathleen* Pasley, Evelyn Primrose-Pechey, Dora Phillimore, Maggie Pibel, Lizzie and William Porter.

Q—F. Quance.

R—Kate Rosenbloom, Marion Richards*, Hilda and Alice Reid, Winifred Runting, Aileen and Marjorie Roberts, Rose Ritchie, Gwennie Ravenhill, Edward, Marjorie and Madeleine Rainey.

S—David and Stanley Soltau, Mildred Singleton, Hilda, Edgar and Constance Schaeffer, Amy Simmons, Betty Stocks*, Esther Simmons, Dollie Salt*, Frances Stileman*, Reginald Skinner, Margery Smart, M. and G.* Spurgeon, Christine Soans*, Whately Smith.

T—Carleton Tuffnell, Archibald Thorn, Frank Tomkins, Marion Tarry, Dudley Toye*.

V—Ethel Vinnicombe, William Vince.

W—Sydney Wisdom, Bertram Webb, M. White, Dorothy White, Evelyn Wilkinson, Phillis Wright, Ruth Warren, Dorothy Woodforde*, Winnie and Gertrude* Williams, Sydney and Wilfred Watson, Kathleen and Charles Wingrave, Allan*, Mabel and Theo. Wallis, Annie* and Sarah Wood, Florry Wilde, Helen Whitney*, Stephen Wilson, Fanny Wheeler Agatha Ward.

No. 276—Correct Answers (second list) received from:—

A—Grace Ambler, Ella and Olive d'Arenberg.

B—Gladys Bartlett, Evelyn Butlin, Marion Boyle, Mary*, Helen and Susette* Beck, E. Buckingham, Dorothy Benson, Nellie Bayford*, Louise Betts*, Leonard Browne*, Violette Birney, Ada Bratt*, Ella Berryman*, Lucienne Brabandes, Ernestine Buhl*, Frances Burnett*, Beatrice Brouard, Louis Berthé, Gordon*, Harold* and Dorothy* Berry, Maude Bunn, James Barker, Aline Bazett*, Lilian, Avory, Frank and Teresa Blackie, Aleen Byres-Leake, Massy and Conyers Baker, James Bryant*.

C—Hilda Cook*, Gussie Clark, Annie and E.* Cole, Dorothy Cooper, Cicely Craven, John*, Henry and David* Colville, Hannah Chapman, Alice Craig*, Alice Cady, Alfred Cocking, Mabel Campe, George Crawford, Jessie Carter*, Stanley Chappell, Beryl and Gladys Calvert, Duncan* and Hyde* Campbell, George Cary.

D—Vera Dickinson, Harold and Gladys Davis, Hilda, Elizabeth, George and Constance Drayson, Allison Devonshire, Ethel and Mai Davidson, Marjory Dyke*, Marie Denizot, Elsie Dennis, May Darroll*.

F—Muriel Foster, Ethel Fowler, Kitty Fausset, Louise Filhol, Jeanne Faucon, Frank and Charles Freegard, Aileen and F. Figgis, Hyacinth FitzSimons, Percy Fitch, Phylis Fry, Mabel and Eva Fletcher, Laura Finch, Gwendolen and Eirene Fennell.

G—Dorothy Green, Aimée Guilbert, Hilda and Ivy Godfrey, James and Edith* Grieve, Colin, Margery and George Graham-Brown, Isabel and Elsie* Goudge, Hilda von Griesheim, Winnie and Dorothy* Grove, Henry Goulding, David Gardiner, Stuart, Dorothy and Jack Gray.

H—John C.* and James Henderson, Theodora Hill, Ella Hake, Violet Holford*, Winifred, Edith* and Henry Harvey, Julyan, Francie*, Florence* and Norman Hoyte, Georgette Hoffman, May and A. Handasyde, Sydney Hanford, Hetty Hill, Clarice Herivel.

I—Isabel, Mary and Ami Inglis, Daisy Iredell*.

J—Winifred*, Hilda* and Louie* Jeffery, David Jameson.

K—Cecilia, Dorothy*, Grace and Philippa* Kerr, Susie Keen*, Isa Kay*.

L—G. Larwill, John Leigh*.

M—Margaret McDougall, William and Isabella* Morrice, Jessie and Charlie Morrison, Maisie Mackenzie*, Ellen* and John* MacMurray, Harvey Moore, Dorothy, Leonard and Winnie Mace, Victoria Maxwell*, Marjorie Martin, Charlotte Millar*, Arthur MacLeod-Johnson*, Dora Muir*, Mary*, Daniel, Dorothy* and Margaret* Morris, Olive* and Louis* Mewburn.

O—Maude and Eva Oakes.

P—Laura Percy, Kathleen Polhill-Turner, Jessie* and Willie* Palmer, William Porter, Isabel Perks, Lucy and Mabel Pelham-Burn, Gladys* and Isabel* Phipps, Christine Pearson, Olive Pine-Coffin.

R—Alice Ricketts*, Sydney Robertson, E. and May Rodgers, Maggie Reid, Elmina, Jessie and Cicely Roe, Maggie Russell, Hope Robinson, Olive Robinson*.

S—Mary de Spiganovics*, Raymond, Augustus and William Simpkin, Flora Smith*, Poppie Stidolph, David Seth*, Ellen and Lily Scriven, Evelyn* and Violet* Shaw, Glanvill Smith, Kathleen Shepherd*, Whately Smith, Florence, Ellen, Effie and John Simpson, Germaine Schumann, Rose Smith*, Lydia Shirley, C. and Violet Salvesen, Stanley W. Smith* Frankie Sellwood*, Hugh* and Agnes* Shields.

T—Charlie and Flossie* Thomson, Marjorie and Evelyn Tracey, Willie Thomas*, Reginald Thresh*, Winifred Trotter.

U—Eva Usher*.

W—Arthur, Violet and Louisa Walker, Lance and James Wahab, Annie and Sarah Wood, Florence Wilde, Pringle* Nellie* and Rachel* Wilson, Edward and Edith Wheeler, Sarah, Georgina, Rachel* and James Wilson, Sydney Wisdom, Charles and Kathleen Wingrave, Bertie Walls, Ruth Warren.

Y—Robert Young.

FOREIGN LIST.

No. 271—Henry Lückhoff, Nelly Mostert (S. Africa). No. 273—Eric St. George (Canada). No. 275—Katie*, Nettie*, Will and Ina Thomson (Bulgaria), Phyllis Boyd (Malta).

Personal.

I am glad to have received so many letters expressive of delight and satisfaction from the successful Prize and Certificate winners. I cannot answer all personally, there are so many.

Many thanks for lovely flowers received during the past week.

Gwendolen Bailey.—I am glad to welcome you as a new "Searcher," and pleased to hear that you find the study interesting.

Margaret Gray, Betty Stocks.—I wish you every success in your examinations.

Marion Boyle.—I was sorry to hear of your accident, but hope that by this time you have quite recovered.

May Rodgers.—You have missed twice, Nos. 273 and 274.

Uncle Tom.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending May 25.

Sun.	May 19	Eph.	v. 17-33	Thurs.	May 23	Lam.	iii. 40-58
Mon.,	„ 20	„	vi. 1-12	Fri.,	„ 24	Acts	i. 1-14
Tues.,	„ 21	„	vi. 13-24	Sat.,	„ 25	„	i. 15-26
Wed.,	„ 22	Lam.	iii. 22-39

Mr. W. J. Taylor, of Hanley Christian Mission, is organizing an effort to give "a day in the country" to the poor children of the district, including those connected with the Mission, and also the many little ones who, on account of their destitute and ragged condition, refrain from attendance at any Sunday school. Mr. Taylor's address is 5, Grafton Street, Hanley.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, May 19.

A Nameless Girl Heroine (2 Kings v. 1-4).

THIS little maid had been stolen away from the land of Israel. We can fancy the mounted soldiers visiting the northern village where her parents lived. She was perhaps playing in the meadow, gathering flowers, or carrying the frugal meal to her father at work among his vines. Suddenly a handful of strange men, speaking in a tongue which she doesn't understand, sweep down on her; one leaps from his horse, catches her up, and in spite of her struggles and cries, she is carried off, to be classed with others, who were perhaps as young as herself, and taken into the slave market at Damascus. How she would tremble in every limb! How she would weep herself to sleep every night! How she would long for her mother and home! How she would wonder what would become of her next.

But all through that dreadful time she seems to have clung to the thought of God, in which she had been so carefully instructed. Evidently her parents were good people, who had taught her about God, and all the wonderful things that He had done for Israel. She knew well all our Bible stories about Abraham, and Jacob, and Joseph, and Moses, and David, but she never thought for a moment that her story would get into the Bible too, and would shine like a star for ever and ever.

This young Hebrew girl specially knew all about Elisha. Perhaps her home had been somewhere near his, and she had often seen him. She may have known the boy whom Elisha had so marvellously raised up and given back to life. All the wonderful stories of the prophet that we have were known to her, and many more beside. Sometimes she dreamed of him, and thought that he was standing near her with his streaming hair and his kind, gentle manner, which made him less formidable than Elijah had been. Some people might have turned sulky and cross when they found themselves carried away from their happy home; or might have left off the religion of early days. But the little maid did not. She knew that God was with her, and it was probably in answer to her prayers that she fell into good hands, and had nothing harder to do than wait on the wife of one of the great soldiers of the land, who had everything he needed, except health.

She did not do her daily work because she was obliged, and because she might have been punished; but she began from the first to take a genuine interest in her master and mistress. She was not glad to see that they were suffering; but her own suffering made her quick to see the sorrows of others, and to sympathize with them. Nothing makes us so quick to detect suffering as our own suffering. She could not bear to think of Naaman suffering as he was doing, even though he was a captain of the people who had done her such grievous wrong. She loved her enemies, blessed those that injured her, returned good for evil, and set herself to relieve them, so far as was in her power.

It seemed as though she entered into God's purpose in her life, realized that He had allowed her to be taken captive, knew that there must be a good reason, and set herself to do the little bit of work that there was to be done. She was like a flower transplanted suddenly into a new spot, which is not so cosy as the one it has left, but it sets itself to look as sweet, and shed as fragrant a scent as possible.

"Wherever in the world I am,
In whatsoe'er estate,
I have a fellowship of hearts
To keep and cultivate;
And a work of lowly love to do
For Him on whom I wait."

So she was the means of linking her master with the prophet, and this made her happy all the rest of her life; even though she never got her liberty again. But I must always hope that when Naaman came back well, he set her free and sent her home.

F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

News comes from Brazil that the C.E. Movement is taking hold there. One of the two or three societies already in existence has just had the Model Constitution and the Topics for 1901 translated into Portuguese, and printed, together with the pledge on a separate card, and is providing 750 copies of each in order to distribute them among all the Protestant churches of Brazil, of which there are about 100.

* * *

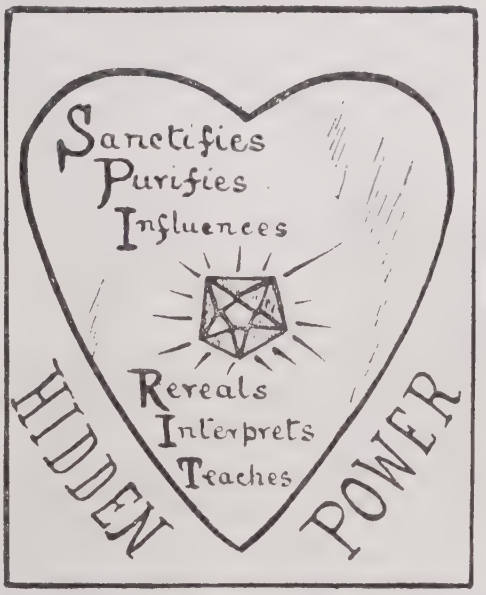
At a meeting of delegates from the Praise Committees of the Societies in the North London Union, it was decided to form a permanent choir of 100 or more voices to assist at mission and other services, and the development of musical talent in C.E. circles. Mr. M. L. Carter, conductor of the London Convention and other choirs, has been elected president, and has consented to become its conductor.

International S.S. Lesson.

May 26, 1901.

The Holy Spirit Given (Acts ii. 1-11).

Golden Text: "When He, the Spirit of Truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth." (John xvi. 13.)



Key to Blackboard Plan.—The Hidden Power of the Holy Spirit in the Christian's heart is like a precious jewel. He is Christ's gift. He reflects Christ's light, He changes the heart from darkness to brightness, He makes the Christian useful, as a diamond is useful for boring hard rocks, &c. He is worth having.

Symbols of the Holy Spirit.

Wind: Invisible, mysterious, mighty.

Fire: Warms cold hearts, purifies, cleanses, burns up all the dross.

Oil: Keeps the light burning (study lamps, in the tabernacle, on the candlestick, &c.).

Dew: Comes gently and quietly, and refreshes the soul.

Dove: Speaks to us of peace.

Water: The rock was smitten, and the water gushed out. Christ was smitten, and we have the gift of the Holy Spirit.

Tongue: As in our lesson to-day, and the tongues of the disciples were changed, and they became brave and bold in speaking for Christ.

The Work of the Holy Spirit.

To convince men of sin; to guide, teach, abide with the Christian; to subdue the will and bring the heart into captivity to Christ. To teach men how to pray, how to praise, how to bring forth fruit to the glory of God.

"It filled all the house" (2). So must the Christian let the Holy Spirit fill all the "house," that is "himself"; every corner must be given over to this filling, for only thus can we be used.

Result of the Filling by the Holy Spirit.

It attracts people to Christ. It makes people ask questions (7 and 8). It causes some to mock (13). Others are touched (37).

The Christian filled to-day finds just the same results amongst his fellow-beings.

(4) They spoke with other tongues. They were changed men. Brave where they had been cowards, bold where they had been fearful, full of joy and confidence, glad to suffer "for his sake." They were not afraid to let others know whose they were and whom they served.

A new life thrills through them, they are overflowing with the good news and tell it out, adding over and over again, "We are witnesses."

The silent Christian is not filled; if he were, he could not but speak.

The command is, "Be ye filled;" and until we are let us pray that God will give us this most precious gift (see Luke xi. 13; Acts xix. 2).

The Holy Spirit.

S anctifies the heart.
P urifies from dross.
I nfluences for God.
R eveals the things of Christ.
I nterprets God's Word.
T eaches all things.

Rev. Joseph Stonehouse Memorial Fund. —During the past fortnight upwards of £900 has been received towards the above Fund. To efficiently help the widow and children of Mr. Stonehouse further generous help is needed. Communications may be sent to Ambrose D. Spong, 19, Ventnor Villas, Hove, Sussex.

Y.W.C.A. Convalescent Work.

OUR Convalescent and holiday work has been continued as usual during the past year, and we have been encouraged by receiving many grateful testimonies to its usefulness. It is, indeed, a joy to note the wonderful improvement brought about by even the brief respite from work and worry which is permitted to the tired workers of our great city.

A lady who devotes much time and care to some young laundry girls in West London, encouraging them to save up for an annual holiday at a farmhouse amongst the Surrey hills, tell us:—"I always go with the girls, and cannot speak too highly of their conduct now—so different from the old wild days. It is quite a pleasure to be with them."

We are frequently asked to help those in dire need of assistance—girls who, after being laid aside by severe illness, are still too weak to resume their occupations. These we provide for a season with kind motherly care, nourishing food, and bracing sea air.

Alice B. Butler.

13, Onslow Square, S.W.

The Leysian Mission.

FOR fourteen years the workers of the Leysian Mission have been labouring in a back street, hampered at every turn by the narrowness of their accommodation. Extension of premises is now inevitable. At the dismal, stuffy, and almost invisible premises in Whitecross Street, where the Mission was born, a remarkable work has been maintained; while, at the Errol Street Hall, a gradual and constant growth in the agencies has been experienced. Scores of men and women have been rescued from drunkenness and degradation, and many of them are now happy-hearted and prosperous people. Children from awful slums have grown up under the influence of the Sunday schools, have passed through the Boys' Brigade and Girls' Parlour, and are now starting life under conditions their parents never knew. The leaders of the Mission have reason to regard effort among the young as the most fruitful of all activities. The worker is dealing with material which is still impressionable, and which therefore responds the more readily. The most permanent results of the Mission are to be found among the young, for while scores of older people have been arrested in their sin, hundreds of children have been rescued in their innocence, and brought under Christian influence. In view of this fact one of the first considerations in the planning of the proposed new buildings will be providing for the Sunday school. Under present arrangements, the school of 500 has to be conducted in the hall at Errol Street, which only seats 500 adults.

The Mission Band and other agencies are maintained essentially by men and women who started in the Sunday school. A pathetic phase of the Mission's operations is the medical branch. On Tuesday and Friday afternoons the Lower Hall is filled with patients, who, while waiting their turn with the doctors, listen to a sympathetic address, and join in prayer and praise. The people are intensely grateful, and rarely does investigation show that patients have asked for charity in this way when they might have paid for a doctor. Too often it is found that the suffering is the result of starvation. In such cases the Sisters are informed, and relief is given. During the year about 1,600 new patients have passed through the Medical Mission.

THE NEW SCHEME.

To meet the growing needs of the Mission a site has been acquired in City Road, near to Errol Street, where it is proposed to erect extensive buildings. The frontage on the street is to be given up to revenue-producing property—shops and offices—which it is estimated will command a return of over £1,000 per annum. Behind these will be spacious rooms for Boys' Brigade, Girls' Parlour, Workmen's Club, Gymnasium, &c., with a small hall, holding more than the present "Large Hall." On the first floor will be a hall to seat 2,000, and twenty-five class-rooms for the Sunday school. On the third and fourth floors there will be the rooms of Moulton House, to accommodate forty, instead of sixteen as at present. Another wing will be the quarters for the six or eight Sisters. The rooms for a Leysian Settlement will accommodate twenty "Old Boys," who will doubtless swell the company of mission workers. On the roof there will be a "preaching garden," which will be invaluable for outdoor services in the summer months.

Particulars of any branch of the Leysian Mission, and copies of the interesting annual report, may be obtained from the hon. sec., Mr. W. P. Taylor, 149-51, Highbury New Park, N.

Obituary.

MR. JOHN ALLEN.

THERE entered into rest, on May 6, Mr. John Allen, of Bournemouth, for twenty-five years a member, and for a long period a deacon, of the Baptist Church at Abbey Road, St. John's Wood. The church was much indebted to his influence and generosity. A true friend of his pastor (Rev. W. Stott), and a zealous worker, Mr. Allen was unflinching in his testimony to the power of the Gospel. Of later years spent in Bournemouth he was, as health would permit, active in the Lord's service, enjoying much the ministry of his pastor (Rev. G. D. Hooper). At the funeral the service in the chapel was conducted by Rev. W. Stott, that at the graveside by Pastor H. E. Stone. H.

MR. C. D. DOUBLE.

The highly-esteemed head of the Harvey Street Mission, Hoxton, E., Mr. Charles D. Double, died on the 8th inst. At an early age the deceased was an ardent volunteer in Christian service. His gifts as a speaker obtained for him a position in the City Mission staff. His first sphere was in the East End of London, and thereafter he laboured at Chelmsford with marked acceptance. In 1875 Mr. Double was appointed missionary in Hoxton Presbyterian Mission, and there he laboured with great devotion and striking success for a quarter of a century. When Mr. Double undertook the work, the Mission was at a very low ebb, but by the faithful exercise of his exceptional gifts as as organizer and public speaker the communion roll reached 200 members, and the place became a veritable beehive of religious industry. In addition to his duties in Hoxton, he took an active part in educational and philanthropic work in the city. The hundreds of people who gathered around his grave at his funeral on Saturday last manifested the high esteem in which he has been held by rich and poor.

DR. E. B. UNDERHILL.

With deep regret we announce the death of Dr. E. B. Underhill, the hon. secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society, who died at his residence in Hampstead on Saturday last. For more than half a century he had been a prominent member of the Baptist denomination. He was born in Oxford in 1813; and on his marriage became the son-in-law of Mr. S. Collingwood, printer to the University. His official connection with the Baptist Missionary Society dated back to 1849, when he accepted the secretaryship, a position which he held for twenty-seven years. On his retirement he consented to act as hon. secretary. In 1854 he went to India, spending two years and a-half in inspecting the mission stations. The knowledge he thus personally gained was not only of service to his own Society, but was also useful to the Government. His evidence before the Committee of the House of Commons then sitting, on the affairs of India, was deemed of special value. Soon after his return, he paid a visit to the West Indies, which was followed by a publication, entitled, "The Exposition of Abuses in Jamaica," a pamphlet which made considerable stir. Ten years later he proceeded as a deputation to Cameroons on the West Coast of Africa. Dr. Underhill was a voluminous contributor to missionary literature, and rightly regarded as an authority on the various problems arising in connection with the missionary enterprise. In 1873 he was elected to the presidency of the Baptist Union. He took a deep interest in the work of the Bible Translation Society, of which he long acted as treasurer. He was also treasurer of Regent's Park College.

THE LATE PASTOR FRITZ FLIEDNER.

In a recent issue we recorded, with deep sorrow, the death of Pastor Fliedner. We recur to the matter in order to remark that in a large measure he inherited the gifts and powers of his worthy father, Pastor Fliedner, of Kaiserswerth, and these he consecrated unstintedly to Gospel work in Spain for the long period of thirty-two years. Pastor Fliedner's activities embraced a wide area, for in addition to his special labours on behalf of the education of youth, he was closely associated with church work in connection with one of the four Protestant congregations in Madrid. Mainly through his energies the property consecrated to the use of church and schools, in a very poor street called Calatrava, was secured as far back as 1873, and there, for lack of an organized hospital, many sick ones of the various congregations have been kindly nursed, and not a few have breathed their last, protected from the cruelties and insults that, alas! are still meted out to Protestants in the hospitals where the so-called "sisters of mercy" reign supreme.

The orphanage and schools, which are also housed in their own properties at the Escorial, noted for its monastery, are a standing testimony to our departed friend's kindly interest in the poor and needy. It is a noteworthy fact that part of the buildings secured to this work was actually inhabited by the infamous King Philip II. In 1897, a still more important development was reached in the opening of a magnificent structure in the northern district of the city, destined to the education and preparation of male teachers and workers. There is no need now to dilate upon the opposition that had to be encountered in connection with this great undertaking; suffice it to say that every influence was used to prevent its construction. The issue of two periodicals, the Revista Cristiana and the Amigo de la Infancia, besides the direction of two book shops, must be added to the already long list of operations.

In all his labours, Pastor Fliedner has been ably and devotedly seconded by his wife, daughter of the late Rev. John Brown, of Haddington, who survives him, as do also nine of his children, some of whom have of late years come to their parents' aid in carrying on departments of the work. It is to be hoped these may receive the needed wisdom and grace to complete what has been commenced by so much toil, and at so great a sacrifice. The widespread sorrow evinced at his obsequies, and the evident affection and esteem in which he was held, are the best proofs that Pastor Fliedner had found his way into Spanish hearts in an exceptional degree.

CORRECTION.—We regret that, through an error, in an obituary notice published in our issue of May 2, the name of Miss Mary R. Ashley (Crouch End) appeared as Miss Ashton.

Welcome Home, Canning Town.—The muster of the "Christian Lifeboat Crew," held on May 7 at the above institution, was a time of spiritual refreshing. Miss Child gave Isa. xxxii. 2 as the text for the month.

Y.W.C.A.—The "Princess House" Home for business young women is now available for the reception of residents at the new premises, 4, Egerton Mansions, Brompton Road, S.W., where Bible classes are also held at 3.30 p.m. on Sundays and 8.30 p.m. on Thursdays.

Jews and Sobriety.—The Bishop of London recently bore remarkable testimony to the thriftiness and sobriety of the Jews, and to their endeavour to live honestly in the midst of terribly antagonistic surroundings. Dr. Ingram stated that a policeman asserted that during his entire period of service he had never seen a Jew drunk, and, from his own experience in the East End, the Bishop added that many of them were an example to Christians. If the Jew has done so much for himself under such circumstances, surely we ought to do still more for him.

The Children's Bill.—Earnest attention is asked by the Children's Protection League (secretary, Rev. Frederick Hastings, Chelsea, S.W.), to the dangerous nature of the suggestion that parents who send children to public-houses should incur a penalty as well as the publicans who serve them. It is obviously out of the question to create a system of placing children in the witness-box to testify against parents. The suggestion is made that every minister and Sunday-school superintendent should at once propose, in some gathering of church or school, a resolution asking "that the Child Messenger Bill now before Parliament be passed this session, and without alteration." Ample encouragement to make this further effort will be found in the present position of the Bill, to which it has been materially helped by the nearly 1,400 petitions already sent in by corporate bodies.

About Books.

THE LIVING LORD.

TO the instructed Christian the message of Easter is as spiritually stimulating as it is divinely glorious. The late Dr. Dale, in a memorable passage, given in his "Life," wrote: "I never go into the pulpit on Easter morning without being thrilled by the remembrance that all Western Christendom is exulting and triumphing in the Resurrection of our Lord. In the presence of the Cross and the open Sepulchre, all the differences which separate those who are conscious of having been redeemed through Christ, are forgotten." That a like thrill has been experienced again and again by Rev. T. A. Gurney is evident from his book, The Living Lord and the Opened Grave.

In a course of studies, seventeen in number, we have here a noble celebration of the victory and the glory of the Risen Lord. We cordially endorse the words of Professor Moule in his brief preface: "The work will repay careful perusal by its very frequent suggestive and illuminating expositions of the eternal and for ever new story of the Resurrection; above all, because it concentrates the student's attention all along upon Him 'who liveth and was dead, and behold, He is alive for ever more.'"

The book is practical as well as doctrinal. The Scriptures are opened, and the light of Christian thought and experience is thrown upon the written Word. The pages show wide reading; they are rich in suggestion; and an impressive eloquence attends their teaching. A brief extract will illustrate the treatment. Writing on the secret of joy through a Risen Saviour, Mr. Gurney says:—

> Justification freely by his death—that is the message of the Cross. Sanctification by his overcoming life—that is the revelation of the opened sepulchre. The wounds of Christ held out to me as the securities of my present peace with God; the glorified Being of Christ unfolded to me that I may become a partaker of the Divine Nature. The death in Christ to an old nature, nailed there with Him; the life in Christ which follows through my faith in the operation of God who raised Him from the dead. The stern reality of the sepulchre, with its solitude and gloom; the bright reality of the Easter morning, with its promise of the life eternal.
>
> Christ crucified, the Root out of a dry ground, without majesty that we should look on Him, without beauty that we should desire Him (Isa. liii. 2, R.V. marg.). Christ risen, beholding the "seed" of his Passion (Isa. liii. 10), dividing the portion with the great and sharing the spoil with the strong. Christ crucified, "the Lamb slain before the foundation of the world;" Christ risen, "the Lamb before the throne as it had been slain." Christ crucified: the One Ground of Peace, the One Refuge for the lost. Christ risen—the One Secret of Holiness, the One Principle of a living Hope (1 Pet. i. 3). "Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord."

To the sad and sorrowing, the tempted and tried, the weak and weary, these pages have a message of hope and comfort, of encouragement and strength. The book is in praise of Him who is worthy of all praise; and those who study it will thank God for the pages and their author, but most of all for the glorious theme that has occupied his mind, and caused his heart to overflow with such goodly matter.

Hidden Wells of Comfort, by Rev. Louis Arthur Banks, D.D. (4s. 6d. C. H. Kelly), is a volume of varied attractions. It contains fifty-two sermons, founded on striking texts, and rich in illustrative material. Dr. Banks is one of the foremost preachers in America. He has sent forth many books during recent years, but none more purposeful than this. Every discourse is instinct with life and power.

Sermon Seed: Fifty-two Studies for Sermons, by Rev. Robert Tuck, B.A. (6s. Nisbet). These are not sermons, either complete or in outline; but rather suggestive materials out of which earnest men may construct discourses according to their own requirements. The studies are from the hand of one who has for many years been engaged in furnishing help to preachers and teachers; and they will assuredly prove of service to hard-pressed workers. Each study opens with "Germ Thoughts," which are followed by Scripture references and exegetical notes. Then come excerpts from comment tators and other expositors, also illustrative points· With references to published sermons on the text, and "Suggestions for Working out the Sermon," the author leaves the preacher, and certainly not before putting him in possession of much that is useful. The volume represents a good deal of research in its way. Sometimes the thoroughly Evangelical preacher will diverge from the course indicated, and often he will find it needful to supply the note of clearness and the definite Gospel teaching. All the same, to many the book will be as welcome as a small library of sermonic literature.

* THE LIVING LORD AND THE OPENED GRAVE. By Rev. Thomas A. Gurney, M.A., LL.B., rector of Swanage. With preface by Rev. Handley C. G. Moule, D.D., Norrisian professor of Divinity, Cambridge. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

OUR readers' attention will be arrested by two communications on the Coronation Oath given on page 31. It is imperatively demanded of us that we transmit to the generation following the liberties which we have received from their fathers and ours, and that this be done with the least possible bitterness of feeling and offensiveness of tone. The extreme harshness of the Jesuits' oath must not evoke a like evil spirit in ourselves, but it ought to make us aware of the virulence of their hatred, and the unscrupulousness of the war which they persistently wage against Evangelical truth and liberty of conscience.

It must certainly be insisted on that nothing less effectual shall be substituted for that which has existed for over 200 years. There is great reason in the contention that "Cardinal Vaughan, in his circular letter to the churches in his dioceses, assumes that the exceptional phraseology was the result of an 'anachronism.' But the fact is that, in the days when the Oath was framed, the people of our land knew to their cost what Rome really was; and were, therefore, not at all likely to labour under any such delusion. But, on the contrary, having seen Rome in her true colours, and being alive to the dreadful fact that the plainest and most solemn language could be entirely nullified by some 'mental reservation,' or the promise or hope of 'absolution,' they exercised the greatest possible care in drawing up that Declaration in 1688; nor would they for one moment have listened to the cry of 'indecent violence' raised by our present statesmen, knowing as they did that no milder terms would meet the case."

We gladly give prominent announcement of a lecture to be delivered to-morrow, in memory of our friend of many years, the late Rev. Charles A. Fox. The announcement takes the following form:—

A Lecture entitled, "Charles A. Fox," "Friend, Poet, and Spiritual Master," will be delivered by Rev. Herbert J. R. Marston, M.A., in the Grosvenor Hall, Buckingham Palace Road, on Friday afternoon, May 24. Rev. Professor Handley Moule, D.D., will take the chair at four o'clock precisely. Proceeds to be given to the Church Missionary Society, Eaton Chapel Auxiliary. Tickets of admission, 1s., 2s. 6d., and 5s., may be obtained at the Grosvenor Library, Chapel Street, Belgrave Square; also from Mrs. Marston, 22, Chapel Street; Miss Nugent, 29, Eaton Terrace; Mr. William Goldsmith, 21, Montpelier Square, Knightsbridge; and Miss Townsend, Eaton Chapel.

We trust that the spiritual wisdom of Mr. Fox's beautiful poems may thus be imparted to many who have not hitherto been acquainted with them, and that they may be added to many a Christian library.

As the figures of the recent census are more carefully tabulated and analysed, certain results begin to show which are, on the whole, highly encouraging, especially as regards the housing problem, which has lately become so accentuated in the public mind. All over the country the movement of the population tends to decentralization. Our slums have begun to empty—blessed omen!—and the "outer" ring of suburbs relieves the terrible pressure of the "inner" ring of the city. This movement will, we may be sure, become very much more pronounced before the next census comes round. New means of travel, fresh facilities for the working classes to live away from their work without undue loss of time and money, and an increasing love for the country, may create a quiet but beneficent revolution. There is, however, much educative work to be done in order to bring all this about.

At their annual meeting last week the members of the Trade were quite sanguine that the Child Messenger Bill would not pass, and they are determined, as one speaker said, to "block it in every possible way." The benevolent chairman declared that "the Trade had always deprecated the serving of very young children, but there was a vast difference between very young children and children sixteen years of age." True, and sixteen years of age is even more dangerous than eight years for a susceptible child to be thrown in the way of the liquor traffic. Despite the honeyed words of the publicans, we are under no illusion as to the real state of the case. It is war, and war to the knife, between two antagonistic forces. We must, at all hazards, protect our youth from a cruel and unscrupulous foe. If we do not conquer beer, it is going to conquer us. The Church is not yet fully alive to this.

We always watch the proceedings of the Licenced Victuallers' Society with peculiar interest, principally because of the psychological problem which some of the speeches raise. We invariably notice that somebody deplores the spread of drunkenness, and speaks of the drunkard as "the publican's worst enemy." This sort of speech, coming from such a quarter, is exceedingly difficult to understand. How many publicans, we should like to know, would strike from their list of customers any men or women known to be drunkards? Or have publicans lost the sense of discernment between sober and drunken folk?

Lord Salisbury's cynical attitude towards Temperance Reform, as evidenced in his speech in the House of Lords, has roused deep resentment and opposition among all those of his supporters who are reformers first and politicians afterwards. If the views he expressed were accepted by the country generally, we should soon come to a disastrous end as a nation. The policy of laissez faire becomes, when applied to the drink traffic, a practical free trade in one of the most dangerous incentives to vice, disease, and crime. Lord Peel's temperance speech the other day stands out in refreshing contrast, representing, as it did, the vast aims and soberest sentiment of the reforming party. His plea for the oppressed and over-worked barmaids—a large class who have received small consideration from anyone as yet—added a fresh argument to the armoury of the temperance advocate.

We wish we could take as rosy a view of working men's clubs as Lord Peel did at the B.W.T.A. annual meeting last week. The examples quoted by his lordship of one or two clubs where the sums of 1s. 6d. and 1s. 2d. were the limits permitted to be expended in drink, are not, unfortunately, common cases, and therefore cannot form the basis of a sound calculation. It is very pleasing to know that such clubs as these exist: they are as heaven to hell compared to some clubs. But the reports of many a chief constable contain distinct reference to the ordinary club as a greater source of evil than the public-house. In fact, many clubs are neither more nor less than public-houses with unlimited licences. These places, the existence of which is a public scandal, are, under the high-sounding name of "club," men-traps of a most vicious kind. It is one of the weak places of our administrative system that so little care is exercised in the permission of these places. Many a heartbroken wife knows that the drinking club has been the cause of her husband's ruin. Things are certainly better than they used to be in this direction, but there is yet far and away too much licence allowed.

The accounts to hand of the recent commercial excitement and ruin caused in America by the unsettled state of the stock market read like stories from Bedlam. The mania of Mammon-worship is the worst of all forms of madness. Fortunes made by speculation, and lost in half-an-hour; investors who found next morning that all their "unloadings" of the previous day might have been spared if they had not given way to the mad panic of a moment; stocks sold and bought at the rate of half-a-million an hour; brokers fainting on the floor through the tension of over-work and anxiety—these are mere incidents of the whirlpool of disturbance through which Wall Street, New York, has been recently passing. All this is bad for those who took part in it; bad for the nation; bad for the world. The gambling mania, whether in horses or games of chance, or stocks and shares, is a sure way to personal and collective ruin.

The auspicious way in which the Australian Commonwealth has been inaugurated by the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York has made a deep impression on the world generally, and has forged a new link of affection between those distant colonies and the home-land. One of the Duke's most successful efforts was an excellent speech delivered with much warmth and earnestness to a party of schoolboys. It is gratifying to hear that a fitting sense of the solemnity of the occasion has seemed to pervade the public mind. There has been in all the festivities an absence of vulgar ostentatious display. The spirit of the poor and the rich has been worthy of a great historic occasion.

A noble book might be written on, "What Great Men Owe to their Wives." In such a work a place would have to be found for an important contribution from the "Love Letters of Prince Bismarck," which were written to his wife. This extract sheds a strange but beautiful light on the inner life of that extraordinary man:

I married you in order to love you in God, and according to the need of my heart; and in order to have in the midst of the strange world a place for my heart, which all the world's bleak winds cannot chill, and where I may find the warmth of the home-fire, to which I eagerly betake myself when it is stormy and cold without.

A better description of what marriage ought to be, and sometimes is, could not have been written. If all homes fulfilled that programme, the world would soon be a better place; the ambitions and struggles of men would be hallowed by a higher spirit; there would gradually be less cruelty and inhumanity; lower aims would be replaced by a worthier and less selfish ideal of life; and the world would be a better place to live in for all.

In the situation created by the excommunication of Count Tolstoi by the Holy Synod of the Greek Church, a sharp distinction must be drawn between the theological and political aspects of the case. As an act bearing heavily on the lot of an evidently sincere man who has a very wide following in many countries, it was a foolish instance of persecution, and calculated to do the Church more damage ultimately than the victim. Sympathy with the victim of persecution, however, need not imply any sympathy with his opinions, and if the representations of Tolstoi's followers are reliable, he has travelled far from faith in the Christian verities of the New Testament, though with its most exalted ethical teachings he is in hearty sympathy. Tolstoi's theological opinions might have been left to themselves without any official ban. There is no surer way of becoming a propagandist of opposite opinions than to denounce and excommunicate those that hold them.

May an "infallible" Pope nominate his successor? This is the question which is being hotly debated now in Vatican circles. Hitherto the Council of Cardinals has elected the occupant of the Papal See as soon as vacated, while the Pope nominates the cardinals. The Jesuits, who now completely dominate the Vatican, need not trouble very much which method is followed, as their influence is sure to settle the question in the long run. The tendency has been nominally for a long time to make the Pope's ipse dixit the final authority in all matters relating to faith and conduct; in reality, he is but the representative of the party in power, and his infallibility is therefore theirs.

The attempt by Professor J. S. Mackenzie to establish a basis for "Morality without Theological Sanctions," as given in an article in the Agnostic Annual, cannot be said to be very successful. The question at issue is, "If and when belief in the supernatural departs, whence are we to look for the sources of motive-power in conduct?"—and Agnostics generally show an entire inability to deal with this point. Mere talk about "political and social sanctions" as being enough, will not go far; for when we examine what these sanctions are, we find them ultimately traceable to the action of individuals infusing the community with moral ideas; and these individuals are always in the last resort religious people. There are indeed but few militant Agnostics who have not themselves received the moral impulse of which they talk so glibly from pious parents and the religious environment of their youth. What Agnosticism can do for humanity we shall not know till the Christian faith has ceased to be a part of the very atmosphere of society and the State, and that is not likely to be the case, Agnostics notwithstanding.

A recent writer has addressed a word of solemn warning to those who allow themselves to be careless in regard to the details of the daily life, and the message is one that is worth remembering:—

> We cast ourselves down from some spiritual height, and trust that angels will bear us up. But we must climb up very slowly, step by step, with bleeding feet. There is no ethical miracle. Cause and effect, effect and cause—no moment of our history ineffective, no link missed! By dint of judicious selection and forgetfulness our memories may make a fair show. We reap nothing that we have not sown; but all we sow we reap, and there is no germ sterile in the great harvest of the soul. The generous and the sordid thought, the aspiration after the ideal and the brute longing, the momentary resistance of evil and the momentary acquiescence in it—they are of time, yet timeless, and they bear a timeless fruit.

A correspondent, writing to a contemporary apropos of an invitation to a country-town minister to London, complains of the prevalent custom on the part of big churches of disturbing ministers who are doing good work, by untimely calls in the second and third years of their settlement. He does not object to calls to ministers to whom, as well as to the churches, more frequent removals would be profitable. What he objects to is the absence of ordinary courtesy, let alone a spirit of Christian charity, on the part of the churches who tender these invitations. The strength of any denomination consists not in the strength of the centre only, but in the strength of the whole, and there is no more fatal policy than trying to weaken the outposts for the sake of the centre. This is a consideration which, in reverse, applies to London, where the centre is being weakened for the benefit of the suburban outposts—a policy equally fatal to the general welfare of the churches as a whole.

Referring to the subject of Adult Sunday Schools, a correspondent assures us that in the districts of which he has experience there is no difficulty in getting men to attend, the only lack felt being that of teachers. It is true that numbers of Christians have drifted out of touch with the ordinary Sunday school, from various causes, which may generally be traced to want of the special training requisite or of natural fitness for that special department of service. At the same time, it is equally true that not a few who, so far as specific Christian effort is concerned, appear to "stand all the day idle," are in a constant state of concern regarding this very matter. To these the advice may be most welcome:

> Let them turn into an adult school, and they will find men ready to learn; or, rather, let them call on men, agree to meet them for the purpose of mutual help, and they will find them respond.

There has just been published in Paris a volume of letters written by the late Père Didon, in which, quite by the way, he shows what an intolerable yoke large-hearted men in the Roman Church have to carry. Père Didon was one of the most accomplished preachers in France, and it is quite clear to all who can read between the lines of his works that he was an Evangelical Protestant at heart. Somehow, his courage failed when it came to the point of surrender, and although he was sent into exile for his courageous opposition to certain Roman dicta, he returned again to public life in that system—but a broken man. These letters reveal a little of the revolt which was ever in his heart. He makes short work of some of the "Saints," and he protests against "the miserable caricature" of the Saviour which prevails in his Church. It will always be a mystery why he did not come clean out of his bondage. Didon's case is by no means exceptional. The present movement among French priests reveals how widely spread is the revolt against Rome's tyranny. Do we sufficiently realize the difficulties with which they have to contend in boldly breaking with Rome? And do we remember them in prayer as often as we might?

Opinion on Public Morality.

By "A MINISTER OF THE GOSPEL."

"And then shall be revealed the lawless one, whom the Lord Jesus shall slay with the breath of his mouth, and bring to nought by the manifestation of his coming" (2 Thess. ii. 8).

AN influential meeting, under the auspices of the London Council for the Promotion of Public Morality, was held in Westminster Town Hall on Tuesday evening last week. The Lord Bishop of London presided, supported by the Earl of Stamford, Lord Kinnaird, the Right Hon. H. H. Asquith, M.P., Sir Edward Clarke, K.C., Bishop Barry, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Southwark, Dr. Adler (Chief Rabbi), Archdeacon Wilberforce, Canon Scott Holland, Rev. A. B. Sharpe (representing Cardinal Vaughan), Mr. Henry J. Wilson, M.P., Dr. Schofield, Dr. Mary Scharlieb, Mr. Claude Montefiore, Mr. Percy Bunting, and others.

It was not a great meeting, and the principal speeches were disappointing; yet it marked a significant advance of the cause of public morality. Thirty years ago, Mrs. Josephine Butler had to pass through "crowded lines of scoundrel faces and clenched fists," disguised in an old shawl, on her way to public meetings on morals. But on this occasion, Sir E. Clarke, Mr. Asquith, the Chairman, and other speakers, were able to address a company of ladies and gentlemen, accompanied, in some cases, by their sons and daughters, who listened to a careful discussion of these moral questions, and who righteously cheered the public denunciation of public wrongs.

This two-fold advance is in the right direction. The moral education of society has been sadly neglected. A false and hurtful sentiment, cloaked as modesty, has practically shielded vice from

THE LIGHT OF PUBLICITY.

Now the evil thing, which has grown in the darkness, is revealing itself. It is filling up the measure of its iniquity.

"The public," said the Bishop of London, "must be aroused to stop the open parade of vice in our streets." "The law must be enforced," Mr. Asquith declared, "but this class of law depends more than any other for its effective enforcement on the standard of public sentiment. An attempt to enforce such laws without a backing from public opinion will produce a worse state of things than now exists."

The common theme of the speakers was, "Arouse a strong moral public opinion." Prince Albert once said, "Public opinion is the powerful lever which in these days moves people for good or evil, and to public opinion we must therefore appeal if we would achieve any lasting and beneficial results." This evil impudently flaunts its wares before our faces in the streets, photographs itself on the eyes of our children, glares at us from hoardings, in shop windows, in pictures which exhale the steam of moral poison—living on the prurient curiosity of men for shameful trash, dancing in automatic machines to the tune of the money of ill-controlled boys, soiling the innocent pleasures of life, and sending down its cancerous roots into the fibre of our national character in dramas which run to the verge of indecency.

The new Bishop of London, taking up the work of this Council, not as a perfunctory act of grace to the memory of his predecessor, but from deep conviction that the public condemnation of this sin is necessary for its destruction, may do much to awaken the people of London to a sense of their responsibility; and the example of the two learned advocates should infuse courage into other public men to support the cause of purity.

Mr. Percy Bunting, echoing Mazzini, declared for the equal responsibility before the law of all the parties to acts of vice. "If you punish the accomplice, leaving the sinner untouched, you destroy, by arousing the sense of injustice, every beneficial result of punishment." That is a wholesome and just claim which every honest man should support. But we must not exaggerate the value of the adhesion of this one and another to the cause, for it demands whole-hearted disciples who love purity because they love Christ, and who seek to save the lost, since He died for their salvation.

If we do not read with strong bias the signs of the times, the hour has come for another soul-stirring outcry against the public evil. Every Christian should prepare himself for the conflict. He should at once commit himself against an intolerable state of things. It is time to speak, wisely and well, as Christians to our own children. It is time to voice again the great demand from platform and press, to cleanse the streets of London, rescue the perishing, remove the public incitements to evil, and let the purifying winds of God rage through the haunts of sin.

If the Council of Public Morality will follow up this advance step with the audacity born of a consuming love for the souls of men, women, and children, never narrowing the issue to one of mere legal right or wrong, striking with caution to avoid any revulsion of popular feeling to the side of the moral murderer, but breaking up with a strong right hand all organized traffic in vice, it will compel success. We are firmly persuaded that the time is at hand when there ought to be an outburst of bracing moral public opinion on public morality.

The Holy Spirit.

Luke xi. 13.

We are dim of sight and evil,
Yet how truly have we proved,
Nothing useless, nothing dangerous,
Would we give to our beloved.

Neither will our Heavenly Father,
When we crave we scarce know what,
Give mere stones to hungry children,
Or a death-curse in the pot.

Nay! So lavish is this Giver,
Giving to the uttermost,
All good things in one He grants us,
Dower of the Holy Ghost.

And in Him, the blest Indweller,
We have gained a gracious Host;
Finest wheat and sweetest honey
He provides—the Holy Ghost.

WINIFRED A. IVERSON.

For the Indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

Lord, let thy kingdom reign within my heart,
Cast out each darling sin,
Establish peace within,
Bid every evil, unkind thought depart.

For when Thou reignest, Thou must reign alone.
Thy Kingdom ruleth all,
Let other kingdoms fall,
Then come, Lord Jesus—make my heart thy throne.

Loyal and faithful may I ever be,
This is my first desire;
Then let me never tire
Of doing thy will each day more perfectly—

Of taking up my cross from day to day,
Until at length I reach
That home where perfect peace
For ever reigns, and sorrows pass away.

E. A. F.

A Treasured Book.—When John Bunyan, imprisoned in Bedford Gaol, wrote his immortal Pilgrim's Progress, he assuredly had no idea that his "little book," as he termed it, would be printed and reprinted through the centuries, and continue to reach the hearts and minds of men. A copy of the first edition has lately been sold by auction for £1,475.

The Epistle of James.

By Rev. T. A. GURNEY, M.A., LL.B., Swanage.

I.—The Bulwark of a Falling People.

"JAMES, a bond-servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ" (i. 1). That is all we know of himself from the writer's own pen. But, by comparison with the rest of the New Testament, we know more. There is a "James, the Lord's brother," mentioned in Gal. i. 19, who is evidently the same as the James spoken of in Acts as president of the Church at Jerusalem (Cf. Gal. i. 19; Acts xii. 7; Gal. ii. 1-10; Acts xxi. 18). A comparison of this Epistle with his utterances and actions elsewhere, makes it certain that he was the same person. He, who describes himself as the bond-servant, was really also the brother of Jesus Christ. There are three theories of that brotherhood; but two of them are concessions to a prejudice which most English minds cannot feel, and the last, the Helvidian view, has no reason against it and much evidence in its favour—that James was the younger brother of our Lord by both Joseph and Mary.

We know nothing of his conversion. But from 1 Cor. xv. 7, we learn that our Lord appeared to him after his resurrection. A beautiful story in the apocryphal Gospel to the Hebrews tells how James had vowed, when he had drunk of the Lord's cup, that he would neither eat nor drink till he had seen the risen Lord. And it adds that the Lord appeared to him on the resurrection day (which scarcely corresponds with 1 Cor. xv. 7), saying, "Bring hither a table and set bread upon it." Then He took the bread and blessed and brake it, giving it to his brother with the words, "My brother, eat thy bread now, for the Son of Man is risen from among those that sleep."

Probably his enlightenment to his brother's Divine being was gradual, and the resurrection came as the CROWN AND CONFIRMATION OF HIS FAITH.

It would not dawn upon him all at once that the brother with whom he had sat in the synagogue school, or played on the hills as the shadows lengthened across the Plain of Esdraelon below, or worked in the carpenter's shop, was "the Lord of glory." When the great truth was really borne home, it made no break in his spiritual history. It came rather as the fulfilment of his highest hopes as an Israelite than as a disappointment. He remained a Hebrew of the Hebrews to the last, attending the temple services and keeping its feasts and fasts; kneeling unrefused, tradition says, because of his personal holiness, in the holy place; wearing, though this also is traditional, the golden plate upon his brow which the high priest wore with its inscription "Holiness to the Lord"; a Nazarite to his life's end, "whiter than snow"; "the just one," so regarded by the populace because of his strict fulfilment of the law; "the bulwark of the people," by his steadfast warnings against the nearing doom; the ideal to a falling Church and nation of the inspiration and truth to which they had become untrue.

The tenderness of God is nowhere more manifest than in the aspect of this last witness before the final judgment. The last message to Israel is in the language rather of the Old Testament than of the New, thus gathering up into itself all the endeared associations of their sacred past. James scarcely stirred out of Jerusalem. The love of the Law, the Prophets, the Temple, and the City; the holy patriotism of a true Jew; the spirit of the bright Galilean home, and of the Sermon on the Mount: the lifelong influence of pure Jewish training; the warm echoes of the words of Christ; the glory and awe of a personal revelation of Christ Risen—all shine forth in Israel's last witness. If anything could have saved the guilty nation, it would have been that saintly and consistent protest against their corruption.

The voice was raised unheeded and the doom fell. The last prophet of Israel was rejected. Those who had "denied the Holy and the Just One" resented the strong shadow which such a life cast across their daily greed and vices. That coming of Christ for which James looked was not delayed long. His martyrdom is declared by Eusebius to have been the climax of the nation's guilt; and then, he adds, immediately Vespasian besieged the city. Substantially, this is true. The cruel murder of James the Just, hurled from the battlement of the temple and stoned, whilst sympathizers cried in shame to his murderers, "The Just is praying for you," was the last drop in the Jews' cup of iniquity. The nation fell, and ultimately was driven forth an outcast into strange lands. The Holy City and the Temple perished. The Holy Land was trampled underfoot by heathen hordes.

Again the storm-clouds lour above a closing age. The sense of judgment, unseen, near at hand, terrible, hangs over the nations. "Men's hearts fail them for fear of those things which are coming upon the earth." "It is the last time."

THE SAME SPIRITUAL FEATURES are manifest:—a widespread religiousness from which the living power is gone; a faith fonder of controversy than of quiet and peaceable fruit; a Church for the most part unconscious of the solemn moment with its tremendous opportunity; a world filled with the same glaring contrasts and social miseries—the measure of the failure of the Church to be true to its own ideals. This Epistle in the very faults which it condemns is a first century picture of our own day. Dividedness of heart (i. 6, 8), braggart boast of wealth (i. 8, 9), weak-willed acquiescence in sin, shifting responsibility upon God (i. 13), casual hearing without doing (i. 23-4), strifeful ecclesiasticism (i. 26), respect of persons for gain (ii. 1-9), faith without works (ii. 14-26), talk without restraint (iii. 1-12), zeal without grace (iii. 14, 16), greed of money for pleasure's sake (iv. 1-4), self-confident views of life (iv. 6-17), self-regardful pampering of the body (v. 1-5), impatience of reproof (v. 6, 7)—they are the very sins of

SO-CALLED CHRISTIAN SOCIETY TO-DAY.

It is in such teaching as James gives us that we can find the remedy. On the eve once again of the end of an age, we need the voice of practical counsel denouncing sin in view of the realized nearness of Christ, bringing us no new doctrine, but insisting on faithfulness to that which we already know, reminding us of the simple but ever-neglected truths, viewing all things in an atmosphere of intense moral clearness, calling us to practical repentance, warning of the short-lived opportunity, convincing by personal saintliness of character. Such a teacher was James. In him you behold Christianity in its great simple principles of endurance, prayerfulness, obedience, charity, faith, self-restraint, wisdom, repentance, humility. Only such things can stay the judgment that is near. Therefore the reverence of after ages set up where James was stoned the inscription upon a pillar:—"He hath been a true witness both to Jews and Greeks that Jesus is the Christ." Such a witness is still needed to-day.

*The Ministry of the Spirit.

By PASTOR STOCKMAYER.

LET me speak to you plainly and simply about this solemn subject which has been brought before us—the Holy Ghost. It was in the year 1874 that I came to England for the first time from Switzerland, having lived there, I may say, for many years in uninterrupted fellowship with God. If ever a shadow crossed my spiritual life, even for a moment, it was immediately, through deep repentance, removed. I was pastor of a little church in the mountains of French Switzerland when I first heard at one of our Synods of the mighty revivals which were taking place in America and in England through Mr. Moody, and it touched my heart so deeply that I said, "We also shall have these revivals in our land." On returning from the Synod, a brother pastor said to me, "I have papers about those meetings," and I read them—THE CHRISTIAN, and papers by Pearsall Smith. Then I was enabled to cross the Channel, and attend the meetings held at Oxford in 1874, of the Holy Ghost. I remember waiting before the Lord, perhaps for two hours, to receive this experience, when the Lord gave me, not what I sought, not what I had expected, but suddenly, during the meetings, like an opening in my horizon, there broke in upon me a God-given apprehension, a Divine understanding I might say, of what it meant to simply trust; and I went down upon my knees, and could only say I was satisfied, for now I could go away from Oxford with full trust in my God. Then it became my central object to trust the Lord in every act and every moment of my life. I took things into my own hands, but He is kind and patient when He sees those who wish to follow Him to the uttermost.

HOPING TO RECEIVE THE BAPTISM

Moments came in which I took up again the old expectation of a baptism of the Holy Ghost; but now nearly twenty-seven years have passed since the Oxford meetings, and the more I read my New Testament, the more clearly it stands before me that, if I am to please the Holy Ghost, and if I am to be strengthened in the inner man, I must obey the Holy Ghost in all his ways of working, and know Him in that central point of his Divine office, by letting Him

FILL MY HORIZON WITH CHRIST.

If there is in the Holy Trinity one Person more than another to whom the words in Isa. xlv. 15 may be applied, "Verily, Thou art a God that hidest Thyself," it is the Holy Spirit. He has a way of carrying on his work in us as from a distance, and it is not for us to break through his ways of working; it is holy workmanship in the deepest depths of our being, and this holy work is disturbed, dishonoured, when I turn my eyes away from the glory of Christ and the glory of the Father. It is Divine work He is doing, as He leads from step to step; and He works also in a peculiar way when Christians, members of the body of Christ, meet together at the feet of Jesus, forgetting former conceptions about the Holy Ghost and about Church life. It is a special education He is giving, teaching that most holy truth—that Christ has only one Body, and each newly converted person becomes a member of this Body of Christ—one Body, one Spirit. In so far as you can forget your individual part, the Holy Ghost can unfold before you the glory of Christ's Body, one member living for another, without distinction. Whether another member sees alike with me or not, that makes no difference. I honour him as the creation of the Holy Ghost, a fellow-member of the Body of Christ. Oh! when children of God meet together on this ground, the Spirit is present, as He never can be when you are on your face crying for the Holy Ghost.

But, brethren, notice the purpose of the Ministry of the Spirit—it is that we may learn to please the Father and the Son. It is blessed to hear those wonderful words in the Bible that it is that wheresoever there is faith, there God is pleased (Heb. xi. 5, 6). Wherever God finds us trusting, looking to Him, and not at what is going on in us, He smiles and is pleased. Long before Oxford I never could have doubted the forgiveness of my sins, but from that time I began to see more clearly that through whatsoever depths the Lord might lead, there was nothing in our lives which lacked conformity to Christ from which the Holy Ghost could not cleanse and heal us.

POSSIBLE TO PLEASE GOD THROUGH FAITH,

Behind pardon and remission is the loosing power of the blood, and we cannot fail to see this when reading Rev. i. 5. Speaking of Jesus Christ, John writes, "Unto Him that loved us and washed us (A.V.)—(loosed us—R.V.) from our sins by his blood." We cannot say absolutely whether it is "wash" or "loose." The difference in the Greek is small, but even in these things there is providence in our Bible. Washed and loosed, made free, true inward repentance, a new wall between us and our sinful past. True repentance never produces washing without loosing, and a washing which would not involve new loosing, leading to an abiding in Christ, would not be what Scripture says it is.

Brethren, let me say it freely in the presence of God—the blood of Christ washes from an evil conscience, and brings poor, sinful human beings to the glorious possibility—no mere human emotion—of LIVING ONLY TO PLEASE GOD.

And so, even through sorrow for sin, sorrow underlined by the Holy Ghost, I seek no escape, but looking to Him even through sorrow, there comes more and more clearly the testimony of the Holy Ghost that we are pleasing to Him. He does not bring us back under law, but writes with his own pen one fact upon our heart, one occupation from morning until evening—that of pleasing God.

Brethren, this is Holy Ghost work. The Lord did not ask his disciples, when He went to Heaven, to pray for, but to wait for, the Holy Ghost. They did receive his baptism. Later, when the house shook, they were not engaged with the question of the baptism of the Holy Ghost, but with the glory of Christ. They prayed that God would give them boldness to speak his word, while He stretched forth his hand to heal, doing wonders by the name of the Holy Child Jesus; and it was while they were thus engaged that they were filled with the Holy Ghost (Acts iv. 31). When Stephen stood before the judgment seat, he was not taken up with the working of the Holy Ghost, but with the glory of Christ. He was—like so many of the dear missionaries recently in China—taken up with the need of honouring his Lord; and so he was borne over everything, and carried through with such heavenly light and comfort that even his face shone with Divine glory. He saw not the Holy Ghost, but Christ. He was engaged with Christ.

I shall never forget the first meeting at Oxford in 1874. Asa Mahan spoke. He presented Father, Son, and Holy Ghost in their mutual aspect. He said: Each face in the Godhead is turned towards the other; the face of the Father looks at the Son, and, thus looking, we are seen through Him. Then, when the Son came to earth, He spake not of Himself, but of the Father. Looking back, He saw the Father; looking forward, the Holy Ghost. He turned the attention of the disciples, when He was taking leave of them, to the Spirit, who would testify of Him. And so the Spirit came to convict of sin. What sin? The sin of unbelief. And yet how many Christians speak lightly of their unbelief! That is the very thing the Holy Ghost came to convict the world of—unbelief. And He did so at Pentecost. He then showed through the lips of Peter to those amazed thousands what they had done in crucifying Jesus; and as they saw Him lifted up, they were broken down. The Holy Ghost had convicted them.

Oh, how many wait and cry for the baptism of the Holy Ghost, and the Holy Ghost has to convict them of their sin of UNBELIEF IN CHRIST!

To believe is to trust, to trust is to believe, and what would the heathen say, what would the Chinese Christians say, if they heard that the Christians who sent them missionaries had to cry for faith and the Holy Ghost? The Holy Ghost convicts of unbelief in order that our whole heart may trust in Jesus, and it is one of the symptoms of decay in the Christian Church that it needs so much agony as I had, until I came to a life of uninterrupted trust in Christ. Oh, the privilege now to be enabled to please God!

Let us look at Rom. xiv. 17: "The Kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness, and peace, and joy, in the Holy Ghost." Now, what is it which characterizes peace and joy in the Holy Ghost? "For he that in these things serveth Christ is well pleasing unto God, and approved of men" (v. 18). Whatever is wrought by the Holy Ghost in us has Christ for its object, and he who herein—i.e., in the righteousness, peace, and joy—serveth Christ, is well pleasing unto God.

Then, in chap. xv. 2: "Let each one of us please his neighbour for that which is good unto edifying. For Christ also but, as it is written, The reproaches of them that reproached Thee, fell on Me" (vv. 2-3). To be well pleasing unto God, and to edify one another, is not to be taken up with our experience of righteousness and peace and joy—that is corruption. The moment you see something in yourself, it is no more the Holy-Ghost-given peace in which you rejoice, but self; but when I serve only Christ, then am I well pleasing unto God, and the Holy Spirit gets more room, even world without end.

PLEASED NOT HIMSELF;

"Christ pleased not Himself." From the first awaking to his Divine call, to his last cry on Calvary, He never thought what it might cost, whether it brought joy or sorrow. He had only one joy—to please the Father; and He did so, through the Eternal Spirit, offering Himself upon the cross. And likewise, we are enabled to become men of God: learning not to care about personal happiness and human satisfaction, but to live only for God. This was the life of Christ, and He lived thus, in order that you and I might follow Him. It is not true satisfaction in which one pleases himself. We are put here for God, for Christ, and the smile of the Father is all that a child needs as a testimony that he is pleasing unto Him. Oh, the smile of God, and of knowing Christ no longer after the flesh, and to be enabled to go further, and step out into the depths of the written Word!

* An address at a recent Conference in London. Not revised by the speaker.

The Book of Genesis.

By Rev. JOHN URQUHART.

1.—ITS PLAN.

No book has ever been so clearly stamped with plan and purpose as this, which stands at the beginning of our Bibles. Stepping clearly out from dim traditions and from vague and misty fancies, and with a method magnificent in its perfectness and simplicity, it tells us of the origin of all things. We pass out with the writer to witness the advent of the material universe and of our earthly abode—the stage on which will soon be set the shifting scenes of man's eventful story.

We are witnesses of the series of great creative acts by which the heavens are spread over us, and by which the earth assumes consistency, stability, and arrangement, and is filled with life and fulness and beauty. Then man appears. A place is prepared for him—a royal house—a holy place—where the earth's king and priest may dwell with God. Man falls, and Paradise is lost with its rest and Divine fellowship. As the ages roll on, the horror deepens. Pollutions increase. Wrongs grow gigantic and innumerable. Then judgment falls, and the Flood sweeps over the sin-stained earth. One house alone is preserved. It becomes the cradle of the new humanity. Darkness falls again. But now a seed is to be preserved. Abraham is called out and becomes the father of the chosen race, and now the story of the book becomes their story.

There is plan there, which is evident to everyone; and it is a plan which well befits this, the first of the books which are to tell the story of the earth's redemption. But the marvels of this book do not end there. Everyone is struck with the evidence of arrangement in the planetary system, or in the parts which make up the frame of some animal. When we enter, however, upon a closer study of either, we find ourselves on the threshold of fresh and more wonderful revelations. And so fares it with us when we leave behind us our first impressions of the Book of Genesis and scan its pages. There is one phrase which is frequently repeated, and which occurs only once or twice outside the book. It is, "the generations of." Now this is a phrase upon which a great deal depends; for between the various sections. It is the heading, so to say, of the various natural chapters into which the book was divided by its author. We have

IT FORMS THE DIVIDING LINE

1. An Introduction—the story of the Creation (i.—ii. 3).
2. The generations of the heavens and the earth (ii. 4—iv. 26).
3. The book of the generations of Adam (v.—vi. 8).
4. The generations of Noah (vi. 9—ix. 29).
5. The generations of the sons of Noah (x. 1—xi. 9).
6. The generations of Shem (xi. 10-26).
7. The generations of Terah (xi. 27—xxv. 11).
8. The generations of Ishmael (xxv. 12-18).
9. The generations of Isaac (xxv. 19—xxxv. 29).
10. The generations of Esau (xxxvi. 1—xxxvii. 1).
11. The generations of Jacob (xxxvii. 2—l. 26).

A word may fitly be said here as to the meaning of this term "generations." The Hebrew word, Toledoth, is derived from yalad, to beget. Toledoth accordingly means "things begotten." It always refers, therefore, not to what produces, but not to what goes before, but to what comes after. Upon this fact, unimportant though it may seem to be, there hangs a good deal. The reader may have heard something of "the two accounts of the creation," which the critics profess to have discovered in the two opening chapters of Genesis. The first of these so-called "two accounts" is made to end with the first half of the fourth verse of chapter ii.—"these are the generations of the heavens and the earth;" and Toledoth, "the generations" of the heavens and of the earth, is made to refer to what has gone before, and to denote the origin of the material universe. Now this is a sense which the word never has. The reader can easily convince himself of this by consulting the places where the word occurs. "The generations of Jacob" are not the story of his origin; they comprise, on the contrary, his descendants' history. And so is it in every other case. Toledoth signifies, not origin, but outcome; and the critics have blundered upon the very threshold of their labours. "The generations of the heavens and of the earth" are not the story of their origin, but of the transactions of which they were to be the scene—of the things, that is to say, which followed their creation. They do not sum up, therefore, what goes before, but are the heading of the new chapter which, after telling us something not before narrated about man's creation and the preparation of his dwelling-place, goes on to narrate his fall, his expulsion from Paradise, and the desolation and horrors wrought by crime.

TO WHAT IS PRODUCED,

There are some remarkable features in the book which I must reserve for a second and final paper. Let me now ask the reader to note once more how thoroughly marvellous this plan is which is revealed in the sectional arrangement of the book. In each advance after the first

THERE IS A SELECTION.

In "The book of the generations of Adam," Seth is chosen. Cain still lived. Abel may have left posterity behind him. Adam had other sons; for we read (v. 4) that, after Seth's birth, "he begat sons and daughters." Why were none of these taken to be the medium through whom Adam's memory was to be perpetuated, and the expectations of his heart fulfilled? Why was Seth and no other selected? When we remember the hope that was planted by God in the heart of man's doom, we reach the answer. Had any other been selected, a wrong choice would have been made. Noah, the head of the new race, was of the posterity of Seth. Every other line

TERMINATED AT THE FLOOD.

In Noah, that is in the line of Seth, alone did Adam's life flow on, and in that line alone was Christ to appear.

The principle on which the selection proceeds, becomes more apparent as we read on. After "the generations of the sons of Noah," the fathers of the new humanity, have been dealt with, and when we have been made to mark the localities in which their posterity settle, Shem is taken, and the story of Genesis proceeds along his line, and not that of either Ham or Japheth. Why is this? Is the hope of Genesis really the expectation of the Christ? Was the lamp of the Gospel hope actually lighted so early? The answer will grow plainer as we proceed. The next selection that is made is that of Terah, and "the generations of Terah" are really the story of one of his sons, and of one only. They are the story of Abraham. The great bulk of our race has been left behind, but the story that has left them for a time remembers them still. It is the story of their hope and of their salvation. In Abraham the first stone is laid of the Kingdom of Heaven upon the earth.

To this line of hope the story decisively clings. Ishmael is set aside, and Isaac is chosen. The story that began as the story of man becomes the story of him. A similar selection is made of Jacob. Esau is set aside, and on through the fortunes of his weaker, despised, exiled, and temporarily-disinherited, brother, the tale of Genesis runs. Did any good for our race lie on that pathway, followed thus with clear choice and steadfast resolution? Has anything since happened that tells of that which the eye then rested on, which cheered the heart and directed the steps of him who told the story of Genesis and planned the book? We think immediately of Bethlehem, of Gethsemane, and of Calvary; of the opened sepulchre in the garden; of Pentecost, and the streams of salvation that have visited every land, and that are making glad our own. But who saw these things then? Who was able to discern them even in the days of the Babylonian exile, when this book is held by some to have been written? But He who planned this book saw them, and saw them clearly. The book carries us steadily on towards the Gospel light. And there we have, not in one prediction only, but in the very structure and substance of the book, the testimony that it is from God.

Home Missionary Circle News.

SINCE the formation of the Home Missionary Circle, as reported in our issue of April 4, we learn that the Circle is being enlarged by the addition of members, that branches are being organized, and that the sphere of usefulness is being extended.

From Baddesley, Rev. J. F. Houghton writes: "We have just closed another week's Mission, and again have to rejoice over souls converted to God. In order to utilize more effectually the additional strength thus given to our forces, we have formed a branch of the Home Missionary Circle. The number of members at the present is twenty-eight. The 'Circle' promises to be one of the most useful of all our agencies for the extension of God's kingdom. Open-air services are to be conducted weekly by its members during the summer months, and several cottage meetings have been already held. The 'magazine' of the 'Circle' is to be The Christian. We are hoping to form another branch in connection with our sister church at Polesworth."

A "HOME-MISSIONARY CIRCLE" METHOD, ADOPTED BY ONE OF THE SECRETARIES.

"Yes, you may speak for ten minutes between the drama and the farce, if you'll let the show alone."

At Polesworth, during a recent Mission, the evangelist, in casting about for means by which to get to close quarters with "outsiders," sought out the proprietor of a travelling theatre, and pleaded to be allowed "to speak about the things of God" to his "house," time not to exceed ten minutes. The above was the proprietor's answer.

Christians of the various denominations agreed to spend the time fixed upon in prayer at their homes—that the Lord would pour out his Spirit. When the moment arrived for the evangelist's visit, instead of speaking "between the drama and the farce," the curtain was finally rung down on the latter (God's own ruling, so that after the Gospel message the people might disperse to think calmly over what was said), and then the evangelist was ushered before the footlights, and it was announced that he would speak for fifteen minutes.

The hallowed memories of that meeting will remain for all time with that evangelist! There was a full "house," and, amid a silence that was intense, he "declared the whole counsel of God." The preacher had delivered the Word of God under many varying conditions, but had never before seen it received in this wise—the people simply drank it! In very pointed and forceful words, the sinner's condition and the love of God in giving his Son to be the Saviour were described, and immediate decision urged. On the following Sabbath night, some who heard the Word at the play-house were in the House of God.

Surely this method is worth "passing on"? "Sow beside all waters." Let us meet the devil on his own ground. Where ordinary methods fail, we must employ extraordinary. No plea this for unedifying extravagance. "But can the Gospel save in a theatre?" The Gospel can save on the very threshold of hell! Tact and common-sense will secure many a hearing for God's Word in similar places of amusement. Let us then be determined to get to close quarters with the unsaved. "Long range" methods have proved ineffective. "Bayonet work" is what is needed in the Holy War to-day! May the command resound—"Charge!" Would not the Gospel message stand a better opportunity of success if the messengers were a little more regularly to "shake the dust off their feet" and pass onward? Let Home Missionary Circle preachers and members take the hint!

We very heartily commend this effort to unite home missionary enterprise on so definite a plan and so sure a basis as the Circle provides for its members. Particulars regarding the Circle may be had from Mr. A. E. Sims, "Hope" Gospel Mission, Upper Stamshaw, Northsea, Hants.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, May 26. Matthew xvi.

HOW susceptible our Lord was to all the influences around Him. Nature was as a book from the pages of which He was always reading, as here, when He points to the glow of evening on the western hills.

Here also is a specimen of the Master's table-talk as He speaks familiarly to his disciples, and compares the influence of the Pharisees and Sadducees to the leaven. The former paragraph sets forth his outward bearing, and the latter his inner comment and lesson.

But the absorbing interest of this chapter is in the incident which took place at Cæsarea Philippi, from which we may date the second part of our Lord's public career, when the enthusiasm which had greeted his first appearance began to abate, and the shadows of his approaching death gathered around Him. It was needful that his Apostles should be prepared for this. But first, He will test them to bring out into prominence the great conclusion to which He was aware they had been brought.

God often gives us some fresh revelation of Himself when we are on the eve of a great trial. Flesh and blood does not reveal it, but the Father which is in heaven. From Peter's lips came the great confession, and our Lord, in accepting it, clearly drew the distinction between his Apostle (Petros, a rock or stone) and his affirmation (which was Petra, a rock-bed), which would serve as the foundation of that Church, which was yet to be reared upon it. To Him, and afterwards to us all, the keys were given (Acts ii. 38; x. 48). But Peter was not prepared for the sacrifice, through which alone our Lord could build his Church; and pleaded that He should spare Himself, echoing unconsciously the very advice which Satan was always whispering in his ear. None had ever realized, before the Lord Jesus announced it, that it is only those who forget their own interests, and cease from them for the sake of others, who pass into the true blessedness.

MONDAY, May 27. Matthew xvii.

At the close of the last chapter the Apostles were gladdened with the promise of the coming Kingdom. The words referred to the Transfiguration of our Lord. This differed from the shining of Moses' face. With him the light was from without, and faded; with the Lord the light shone from within; the Shekinah that shone in his spirit illuminated the tabernacle of his body, as it was allowed to manifest itself. Surely He might have stepped back into heaven by the open door, through which the representatives of the Law and the Prophets had come; but He turned his back on the joy that was set before Him, and set his face to endure the cross, that He might become, not the Pattern only, but the Redeemer of men.

What a contrast between the scene on Hermon's slopes, where the glory of Jesus was brighter than the glistening snows above Him, and below where the demoniac child writhed in the grasp of Satan! Raffaelle does well to class these two incidents in one cartoon, because we are taught that the duty of the Church is not to build tabernacles on the Mount of Vision, though celestial intercourse invites, but to take her way into the haunts of crime and misery, and cope with the power of Satan. But this can only be done successfully when faith is in full exercise, because faith is the channel through which the Divine power passes. Its quantity is of less importance than its quality. It may be minute as a mustard seed, but, like it, it must contain the principle of life.

But as you live and work for Jesus, He makes Himself responsible for all you need. Not two shekels, but one, is found in the fish's mouth. One coin for Christ and Peter. He is always saying to us, "That take, and give for Me and thee."

TUESDAY, May 28. Matthew xviii.

Such were the hopes awakened by the Transfiguration and the following miracles, that the disciples were led to speculate upon their relative position in the Kingdom. So Jesus took a little child for his text, and preached a sermon on humility. The front rank in the Kingdom is only given to those who have ceased to seek it as an object in itself, caring only for the good of others.

How constantly the Master speaks of the little ones. He says that we must turn to become like them; that to cause them to stumble will involve terrible penalties; that they are not to be despised; that each has an angel of the Father's presence-chamber appointed to his charge; that to seek and save one He is prepared, as the shepherd, to traverse the mountains; that it is not the Father's will for one to perish. How infinitely tender and humble was his love for them! Oh, for love so lowly to burn in our own hearts, until the pride and vanity of our nature are consumed. Better to suffer amputation than be proud, or cause others to stumble.

Words cannot express the inestimable value of the following paragraph (15-20). We are taught that it is not enough for us to acknowledge our wrong against a brother, but that, if he has wronged us, we are to seek him out, since he has wronged himself more than us. Thus, we are to try to gain him for ourselves and God. Here, first, we see the power of the assembly, which is called out of the world, to meet in the name of Jesus. It is invested with special functions, because Jesus is in the midst of the twos and threes, who are gathered in his name. Where there is agreement (sympathy) among such, we may be sure that the Spirit of Christ is present; and where He is teaching us, we are in touch and harmony with the deeper thoughts of God. Beware lest, by your want of love, you undo the work of Jesus, and contract yourself out of the results of his death (21-35).

WEDNESDAY, May 29. Matthew xix.

We have here a record of the final return of our Lord from Galilee to Jerusalem. Some of the parables recorded by Luke belong to it, and some of the incidents of John vii.-xi.; marriage, childhood, youth, and the temptations of wealth, are touched on with illuminating words.

Marriage. There must be no divorce, because God made the one man for the one woman, unless the one act be committed which severs the nuptial tie. Then only is the bond broken by which husband and wife are one. There must be no compulsory celibacy. Some can live the single life, others cannot. Each must work out his own possibilities, and none may judge another.

Childhood. It would appear that the fathers brought the little ones. They had a truer perception of the heart of Jesus than the disciples. All through the ages men have supposed that strength, wisdom, and wealth have the greatest attractions for our Lord, whereas it is precisely the reverse. Of such is his Kingdom.

Youth. With all its fervour and impetuosity, youth is very beautiful to the Lord Jesus. Here youth was combined with station, high-standing, and wealth. It is not necessary that all should sell their goods, and give away the proceeds. It is even harder to retain and administer them for God. But it was necessary for Jesus to prove to this young man that he was not living that life of love which alone can fulfil the law, and secure the highest and most perfect blessedness of which we are capable. It was a severe test, but necessary.

Wealth. Money is not an unmixed good. It brings with it heavy temptations. It is easier to bear poverty than wealth—easier to be a saint when life is hard than when prosperity scatters her lavish gifts. But what compensations there will be hereafter (Acts iii. 21)!

THURSDAY, May 30. Matthew xx.

This chapter should follow directly on the previous one, the closing words of which are the text of the opening parable. The different hours of the day may stand for the number of years, which are meted out to men. Some die in their early prime, some in maturer life, and some in old age; but each receives the same blessed grace of God. The blessing of salvation is common to all. Or there may be a reference to different ages of Church history. Those hired in the first hour may be the early Christians, those in the next the martyrs, those at midday the Reformers. But it will be enough for each to have served the Master's purpose, and to receive the same reward. Our hereafter does not depend on the amount of our service, but on the gift of God's grace.

For the third time, our Lord foreshadows his death. In xvi. 21, He foretold his rejection and death; in xvii. 20, his death and resurrection; now He declares the method of his death, with the clear prevision of his resurrection.

Nothing could daunt the mother and her sons. So much they loved Him, so eagerly they desired to be near Him, that they were willing to face shame, sorrow, and pain. No cup was too bitter, no lot was too hard, if only they might be with Him. The places right and left of the throne will not be given to talent, genius, or wealth, but to those who have surrendered, suffered, and served the most.

FRIDAY, May 31. Matthew xxi.

On the first day of Passion week a gleam of light fell athwart the Master's path. It was a lowly triumph. The humble ass was escorted by poor men, by Galilean pilgrims, and by children, who excited the proud and haughty criticism of the metropolis. Oh, that a similar procession may enter thy heart and mine. "Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors, and the King of Glory shall come in."

With irresistible might the Lord drives forth the buyers and sellers from the Temple. This was according to the ancient prediction. He sat as a refiner and purifier of silver, to purify the sons of Levi. And whenever He enters the heart, He performs a similar work. He drives out bestial forms of sin, and mere traffickers, that the whole nature—spirit, soul, and body—may be surrendered to God. But when this purging is complete, sweet clear voices ring out their hosannas.

From the blasted fig tree learn the doom of the unfruitful soul, and from the remark of our Lord about faith learn the mighty power which is within the reach of faith. All things are possible to him that believeth. And what is faith but open-handedness, which receives from the full hand of God. From the parable of the two sons let us be warned lest under fair words, which promise obedience, we hide hard hearts. From the parable of the vineyard-keepers let us learn that the Gentile has been called into possession of the heritage only for such time as the Jew remains in disobedience and disbelief (Rom. xi.).

SATURDAY, June 1. Matthew xxii.

What a day was this of untiring consecutive work! It seems to have begun with xxi. 23, and continued on to xxiv. What wonder that our Saviour's strength was prematurely exhausted, and that his nature succumbed so soon to the anguish of the cross. It was his own marriage feast that He here described—his marriage with his Church, or Jehovah's with the chosen people. Messenger after messenger was sent to bid the guests, but to no purpose. Let us see to it that we are not called in vain; and that we are clothed in the spotless robe of our Saviour's righteousness, in which alone we can stand the searching light of Eternity.

What a marvellous cycle of interviews this was between Christ and his interlocutors. First the Herodians, then Sadducees, finally the Pharisees were answered and silenced. What inimitable wisdom there was in the replies! And how cleverly, in each case, the Lord turned the battle to the gate, and slew them with their own weapons! We are not surprised that his foes dared not take the field against Him again.

For ourselves we may ask, whether we are rendering God's things to God with as much assiduity as we render Cæsar's to Cæsar; whether we realize the presence of the living God in our daily experience; and whether we are living that life of perfect love towards God and man, which is the fulfilment of the law (Rom. xiii. 8-10).

"The Christian" Special Supplement.

GUILDFORD CONVENTION

IN THE COUNTY & BOROUGH HALL.

JUNE 3 to 7, 1901.

SPEAKERS.

The Rt. Rev. The Bishop of Mombasa. Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence. Pastor Fuller Gooch. Rev. W. Houghton. Rev. J. J. Luce. Rev. Evan Hopkins. Rev. J. Gregory Mantle. Rev. E. W. Moore.

PRESIDENT: REV. F. PAYNTER, M.A., STOKE HILL

HON. SEC.: COL. SAGE, PEWLEY HILL.

For Hospitality (for not less than three days) for Clergy Ministers, and Missionaries, apply to REV. F. PAYNTER.

SCOTTISH NATIONAL CHRISTIAN CONVENTION,

BRIDGE OF ALLAN, JUNE 10 14, 1901.

SPEAKERS:—

Revs. HENRY MONTGOMERY, F. B. MEYER, G. B. WATT, WM. MUIR, JOHN BRASH, JOHN SMITH, D.D., C. G. MOORE, Dr. T. H. WHITE; Mrs. J. PENN LEWIS, Misses ELDER, CUMMING, and FERGUSON.

Sacred Songs and Solos

And Standard Hymns.

Compiled and Sung by IRA D. SANKEY.

The Popular PENNY Hymn Book

For Meetings in Churches, Mission Halls, Tents, Open-Air; Conventions and other Gatherings.

A Selection of 750 Pieces, a Marvel in PAPER—PRINTING—PRICE.

SPECIMEN COPY, with full particulars and specimens of Types of all Editions (Music and Words), post-free for 2d. in Stamps, from the Publishers,

MORGAN AND SCOTT,

Office of "THE CHRISTIAN,"

12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

Bradshaw Church of England Mission;

BOLTON.

President: THOMAS HARDCASTLE, Esq., J.P.

A

CONVENTION FOR THE DEEPENING OF SPIRITUAL LIFE,

May 25th—June 4th inclusive,

IN LARGE TENT.

SPEAKERS:—The Revs. C. MUSGRAVE BROWN, H. W. BAINBRIDGE, W. H. FINNEY, J. SILVESTER, R. H. TALBOT, F. PEACOCK, J. GRANGE BENNETT, J. WHITTLE, and others.

Meetings daily 3 and 7.30 p.m.

Particulars from Mr. Leyshon.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

Funds are needed to carry on the work of the Society.

Just now we are urgently wanting £50 for Purchase of Bibles, to issue to Sailors who are too poor to buy them.

F. PENFOLD, R.N., Secretary,
31, New Bridge Street, E.C.

THE ORPHAN WORKING SCHOOL,

Haverstock Hill and Hornsey. Founded 1753.

PATRON - - - - - HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
PRESIDENT - H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE, K.G.
TREASURER - HORACE B. MARSHALL, Esq., J.P., D.L.

Maintains and Educates 500 Fatherless Children, varying in age from infancy to 14 years. An undenominational institution supported by voluntary contributions.

Help for the "Fatherless and the Widow in their affliction" is urgently needed. Contributions will be thankfully received by the Secretary, ALEXANDER GRANT. At the office, 73, Cheapside, London, E.C.

DISTRICT VISITORS, OPEN-AIR PREACHERS TRACT DISTRIBUTORS, and CHRISTIAN WORKERS generally should send to Messrs. MORGAN and SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., for their Lists of TRACTS, BOOKS, HYMN SHEETS, LEAFLETS, etc.

LONDON TENT CAMPAIGN,

WHIT-MONDAY, May 27th, 1901.

3 and 6.30,

UNITED RALLY

OF

CONVERTS AND FRIENDS.

Subject—"Present Opportunities: How to meet them?"

GREAT TENT,

WEST HAM LANE, STRATFORD.

LEONARD WEAVER and others will address the Meeting.

TEA PROVIDED, 6d. EACH. ALL WELCOME.

Offices of Campaign: ST. PAUL'S BUILDINGS, PATERNOSTER ROW.

For Localising.

The Herald of Mercy.

Ministers, Superintendents, and Secretaries of Churches, Missions, Christian Endeavour, and other Societies, should send for specimen copy and full particulars of THE HERALD OF MERCY, which can be cheaply and effectively localised. It is an Illustrated Evangelistic Monthly, containing Eight Quarto Pages, and published at One Halfpenny. Write to Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C., for all particulars as to Localising.

THE EVANGELISTIC HYMN BOOK

1d. 2

Compiled from "Sacred Songs and Solos," for SPECIAL MISSIONS,

OPEN-AIR SERVICES,

And Other Occasions.

Price per 100, 3/- net. (3/5 post free.)

IT CONTAINS

157 SPECIALLY SELECTED HYMNS AND CHORUSES,

WHICH HAVE PROVED THEIR EFFICIENCY IN GOSPEL EFFORT.

An Evangelist says it is "Just what is wanted."

London: MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

Gospel Hymns and Sacred Songs

COMPILED AND SUNG BY

IRA D. SANKEY.

211 Pieces. Words and Music, Old Notation.

Giraffe Covers	1s. 0d.
Limp Cloth	1s. 6d.
Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges .	2s. 0d.

Words Only.

Giraffe Covers, 1d. Printed Cloth, 2d.

Mr. Sankey, in the Preface, says:—

"In response to many requests for a small collection of Gospel Hymns and Sacred Songs, both New and Old, we present the following. Trusting that this new volume may prove an acceptable addition to the service of Christian praise, we send it forth on its mission of joy and gladness."

London: MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller or Musicseller.

Shall They Go?

MY wife and I have received so many letters with kind enquiries and messages of sympathy in respect to her illness and my own eye-suffering, that we take this opportunity of expressing our deep gratitude to all who have shown us such true Christian friendship.

I am glad to be able to report that my wife's health has steadily continued to improve, and I have much less pain in my eyes, and my sight is much clearer.

I cannot tell you what a boon this period of rest has been to us. Words fail me to describe what Q-U-I-E-T spells to us.

Our "old boys" in Canada have sent as their New Year's Surprise Gift for 1901, towards the support of "The Old Home," no less than £236 1s. 4d., every cent given out of their own hard-earned saving. — naking a total of

£2,480 VOLUNTARILY CONTRIBUTED

by these poor lads, rescued from the gutter and the gaol, during the last thirteen years.

Further, let me add, 116 of them have already sent back the £10 we laid out on their emigration, "to help another poor fellow out."

These striking facts prove indisputably

(I.) How well these lads get on in Canada.

(II.) How gratefully they appreciate their good start in life.

(III.) How sincere is their affection for "The Old Home on the corner."

The despatch of this year's party has been unavoidably delayed through anxiety as to Mrs. Fegan's health and my absence from home, and if a party is to be sent at all this year, and the departure fixed for a date within the next few weeks.

PREPARATIONS MUST BE COMMENCED AT ONCE,

In each of our Homes there is every spring an outbreak of "Canadian fever"—boys flushed with expectancy that they may be amongst the favoured draft, and have a chance to emulate the industry and enterprise which have made us all so proud of "our sons across the sea." It is raging fiercely just now.

I wish I could describe to you how bravely some of these lads have struggled to conquer bad habits and win the good character which would qualify them for the next hiving-off. Many of them have nobly earned this coveted start in life. The question is—or must all, or any, of them be disappointed? If many of them are to continue in well-doing we must put the wide, blue Atlantic between them and old associations.

SHALL THEY GO?—

We need £1,500 (A) to cover this outlay for providing ocean passages, outfits, &c., and (B) to meet the cost of that close supervision on the other side year after year, which is so necessary for the welfare of the boys, and for the honour of the Lord's work under our care.

This Emigration Fund is quite an extra item outside of our ordinary expenses, and only to send out as many boys as are provided for beforehand in the next two or three weeks.

I AM STRICTLY PLEDGED

To start this Fund a few friends have generously contributed the following amounts:—

	£	s.		£	s.
Lady R.	51	0	Miss M.	10	0
Mrs. M.	50	0	P.J.E.	10	0
Mrs. H.	30	0	The Misses T...	10	0
Miss W.	20	0	Mrs. L.	10	0
F.A.H.	20	0	Miss W.	10	0
Mrs. F.	10	10	J.P.	10	0
Mrs. S.	10	0	Capt. C.	10	0
Mrs. R.	10	0	Miss J.	8	10
A.O.N.	10	0	A.D.	7	7
A.N.B.	10	0	Mrs. B.	5	0
Mrs. H.	10	0	Mrs. C.	5	0
Mrs. D.	10	0	G.B.H.	5	0
Miss A.	10	0	Lieut.-Col. P...	5	0

Will you help us to give these dear boys a comfortable send-off to the homes already awaiting them in the Far West.

Every gift, however small, will be especially valued just now, beyond its intrinsic value, as a token of encouraging God-speed.

NOTES.

(I.) The economy of Juvenile Emigration, as compared with the maintenance of boys year by year in a Home or Orphanage is striking.

Extract from "A Plea for our Street Arabs" (by J. W. C. Fegan, 60pp. 2½d., post free).

ITS STRIKING ECONOMY—£17 INSTEAD OF £90.

> "Again, the economy is well worthy of notice. Let us take the case of a street-arab of eight years of age brought to our Homes. It would probably be five or six years before we could put him out in a self-supporting position in this country. He would cost us about £15 per annum during this period—say £90. Now, by means of our juvenile emigration work, the same boy (if fairly well disposed) is provided for by means of about six months' training in habits of obedience, cleanliness, &c. (about £7), and by being placed in a Canadian farmhouse (about £10) where he has thrifty, industrious training, capital schooling, and plenty of the best food, and a spirit of self-reliance inculcated into him by the precept and example of all around —with the prospect of his own homestead by and by."

Several friends have contributed the cost of a boy's emigration IN MEMORIAM of some loved one—sometimes asking us to choose a boy who bears the ever-dear name—John, Charles, Henry, &c.

(II.) Nothing will, I am sure, give our "old boys" in Canada greater joy than to know that their grateful offerings have encouraged the friends of our Homes to continue and even increase their support of our Emigration Work.

If any gifts are accompanied with a few kind words of approbation to the "old boys," it will give me great pleasure to pass these approving and encouraging messages on to them in a special letter.

(III.) Woollen scarves, warm socks, shirts, &c., to fit boys from 10 to 16, will be most useful and acceptable.

(IV.) Will any friends give the boys a nice, strong Bible each which they may always treasure as the Chart given them when they were launched on the sea of life from their Old Home?

(V.) We will deeply value an interest in the prayers of the Lord's people in their own closets and at prayer meetings, &c., that God's richest blessing may rest upon this party—(i.) that they all may be "children of God," (ii.) that they may have a safe, happy voyage, (iii.) that they may each be sent to a God-provided home on the other side, (iv.) that they may have grace to "live not unto themselves, but unto Him who died for them and rose again."

IN CONCLUSION.

It is important that friends interested in the work of juvenile emigration should not be under any false impression as to the Act passed by the Ontario Legislature in 1897.

Legislation was very necessary, not only in the interests of the colony, but in the interests of the societies engaged in this work, the employers who receive children into their families, and last, but not least, the children themselves.

The Act in question is a most humane and reasonable one, conceived in a thoroughly friendly spirit to all accredited societies, and applied in the most considerate manner by the representatives of the Provincial Government, both on this side and the other side of the Atlantic.

It stipulates that only societies authorized by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council shall engage in this responsible work, that each society shall have a permanent home on the other side, and that no children mentally or physically afflicted so as to become a burden to the colony, or of habitual criminal habits, shall be immigrated, that the society is constituted the legal guardian of all such children up to eighteen years of age, that all children shall be visited at least once a year, that in case a child is returned to the society for gross dishonest or immoral conduct the next employer shall be made aware of the fact, that no one shall be allowed to entice a child away from the situation in which the society has placed it, &c.

The fact is the Act strengthens our hands greatly, and gives us what we never had before —a legal locus standi. It has stamped out much promiscuous "dumping down" of children quite unsuitable for immigration, and stopped some cruel trafficking in young flesh and blood which were bringing great disgrace upon the useful work of accredited and organized juvenile emigration.

J. W. C. Fegan

The Boys' Home, 95, Southwark Street, London, S.E., May 20, 1901.

Cheques and Postal Orders may be crossed "London and South Western Bank, a/c Mr. Fegan's Homes."

Lives Saved: Souls Won.

IT was a terrible experience. Oh, Christian friends, when you read in the newspapers about troubles, and the lives of the missionaries being in danger, it sounds ordinary enough, but you cannot imagine, you cannot begin to imagine, what it really means to face such experiences. I never had the least idea before that day of what an awful thing it is to die—to die a violent death at the hands of an angry mob. But when we stood face to face with those thousands of people, expecting every moment to be the last, we came to understand in some measure the heart of Christ, when He cried, "Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from Me."

Our lives were saved as by a miracle; and not only our lives were saved, thank God! Notice how the Lord used this whole affair for his own glory, and the advancement of his kingdom. Mr. Tseng and Mr. Wang, as soon as they heard of the riot, came together into the midst of that great raging mob of people to see what they could do to help us. All the Christians tried their best to protect us; but Mr. Wang was not a Christian, and came simply as an outsider, one of the leading gentry of the city, to see what he could do for our help. He came right up to where we were standing, and where we expected every moment to be struck down.

"I hope, sir, that you will stay beside us until help comes."

DR. HOWARD TAYLOR.

"I intend to stay here," was his reply. "I will not leave you." His presence saved our lives, for he stayed beside us, and in some measure restrained the violence of the mob, until the mandarin came and everyone fled before him. But the work was done! Far too courteous to speak to us unaddressed, Mr. Wang had been keenly watching all that scene. He saw the perfect calmness in which we were kept. He saw that we were able to take joyfully the spoiling of our goods, and that no anger or desire for revenge had any place in our hearts. He saw that all we asked from the mandarin was that he would treat the prisoners with leniency. And then he saw the marvellous flood of joy that filled our hearts when we realized that we had been counted worthy to suffer for Jesus' sake. Watching all this, the proud Confucian scholar had found something that utterly brokehim down. This was the means chosen of God to bring that strong man to Himself, humbled like a little child.

There is nothing too hard for the Lord. He can bring blessing, wonderful spiritual blessing, out of the most terrible experiences. Let us ask the Lord to save soul-winners—men and women of strong character, even from among the persecutors, who shall become saviours of others also. He is well able to do so. This is no time for discouragement, but for advance.*

Such heart-thrilling incidents as the above in the experience of our missionaries, and such wonderful interpositions of Divine providence and of the bestowal of Divine grace, are to be found in the new edition, just published, of "In the Far East," by Mrs. Howard Taylor (née Geraldine Guinness). In addition to bringing the record of events up to date, during the seven years since the marriage of Dr. Howard Taylor and Miss Geraldine Guinness, this edition presents many other attractions. Most of the illustrations, which are of an excellent character, are new and realistic, being taken from recent photographs. The map included in the volume is one of the best extant; indeed, it may be said to be the standard map of missionary operations in the vast million-peopled empire.

In view of the widespread interest which now centres in China and its unknown future, every Christian anxious to see the spread of the Gospel in that land should study this book, so as to be able to take an intelligent and prayerful interest in the labours of those devoted servants of the Lord, who willingly offer their service, and indeed their lives, to extend the kingdom of the Redeemer on earth. A perusal of this charmingly-written volume cannot fail to inspire the soul with deeper love to Christ and more ardent missionary zeal.

* From In the Far East.—Letters from Geraldine Guinness (now Mrs. Howard Taylor) in China. Third edition, eighteenth thousand, enlarged and freshly illustrated (3s. 6d. Morgan & Scott).

American Mission, Salonica.

WHILE visiting the city of Salonica many of the bluejackets of the Mediterranean Squadron were brought into contact with the workers of the American Mission. Since the fleet left for Malta and other places they have not forgotten the kind sympathy and Christian influence of Dr. and Mrs. House. Letters have passed between the ships and the Mission, and the bonds of Christian fellowship have become stronger as time has gone by. In returning thanks for the ministry of the workers at Salonica, the men send tidings of a cheering nature concerning the consistent and devoted lives of Christian soldiers, and their influence for the good of others. One of these wrote:—"A few weeks ago we obtained permission for a meeting on the upper deck, and had about 300 present. We are urging our lads to be men of prayer. We always remember our first prayer meeting in Salonica, in the cemetery out by the barracks. The work at Malta really took shape in the entry to your late residence. On the third anniversary, 287 had professed conversion. They are now scattered all over the world, trying to lift up the standard of the Cross."

Waldensian Church Missions.

BY the death of King Humbert the missions in Italy of the Waldensian Church lost a conscientious supporter. Since he is no more, many have prayed that the mantle of the father may fall on the shoulders of the son. An era of reaction and clericalism has set in, and is increasingly developing itself in Italy, and it would appear that the constant struggle with the intractableness of the Papacy has had but little effect upon the majority of the country's politicians. On the other hand, the zeal and activity of the members of the Waldensian Church have borne abundant fruit in the enlightenment of young and old to the fallacious teaching of Rome.

Notwithstanding difficulties and obstacles of every character, from all the stations of the Mission a story of progress may be told. During the year, in the mission field there have been 696 admissions to church membership, leaving in the Bible classes 800 catechumens, between the ages of sixteen and eighty.

Concerning the work in Rome, the annual report says:—

"WE HAVE OPENED A NEW HALL for evangelization in the Via Cavour, where meetings were held throughout the winter and well on into the spring. Many who, probably would not have ventured into our church in the Via Nazionale, entered fearlessly into this unpretentious hall and listened with sustained attention to the explanation of the simplest Bible doctrines. God only knows how much may have remained in the hearts of the hundreds who passed through the place."

MRS. HOWARD TAYLOR.

From Florence, Naples, Verona, and other centres, comes striking testimony that God has not neglected his flock in Italy. Examples are frequently supplied of the faith, zeal, and devotion of those who have passed from error to the fulness of Gospel truth, and have given themselves enthusiastically to the work. The secretary of the Central Committee is Lieut.-Colonel M. Frobisher, 118, Pall Mall, S.W.

Zenana Bible and Medical Mission.—A memorial to the late Mr. W. T. Paton, a warm friend to the Society, has been set up in the form of a Widows' Industrial Home connected with an orphanage, where girls left destitute through the late famine are received and educated, at Munmar, in the Bombay Presidency. A large number of inmates have been already received, and on New Year's Day 111 baptisms took place. The Society looks on this new effort with the greatest hope.

Among Congo Cannibals.

[The following interesting letter is from Bongandanga, a remote missionary outpost on the Upper Congo (over 1,000 miles from the coast). The writer, Mr. Ruskin, of the Congo Balolo Mission, and his fellow workers are doing a good work. A native church is growing up, with schools and native preachers, and the prospects are encouraging.]

WE have again had an opportunity of taking an itinerating trip into the interior. Mrs. Ruskin and I went by canoe up the Bolumbo river, the mouth of which comes out into the Lofoli, about one day's journey above Bongandanga. Nothing of interest happened en route. The traders were very kind to us, and did all they could to help us in every possible way.

After five days' paddling, we arrived at Eala on Saturday evening, January 26. Here we found one of the traders, who had just finished buying rubber. After he had given our paddlers some plantains, &c., and had told the people of Eala that we would visit their towns on the morrow, he bade us good-bye, and returned to the Abir factory at Dikila. We then made arrangements for the night. All our clothing, bedding, medicines, cooking utensils, &c., were carried up into a small hut built by the Abir for buying rubber, and although it was not very substantial or draught-proof, we managed to make ourselves fairly comfortable. At the evening service which was held by the river, we told the young men to gather the people together from their towns, as we intended to visit them. On the Sunday morning we accordingly set out, taking a few of our paddlers with us. It took us quite an hour to reach the place by the circuitous road by which we went. All the time we were nearing the town we heard them in order to inform the inhabitants of our approach; and more than once we felt compelled to inquire how much farther we had to go. The answer always was Nk'esi—"not far." Eventually we reached our destination, and were requested to sit down on a fallen tree; no houses were to be seen, for the people were not living in their towns, but were scattered about the forest. As no white woman had ever been seen in that part of the country before, Mrs. Ruskin was at once a curiosity and a novelty. One or two of the rubber men had seen her undo her hair at the riverside house the night before, and on returning to town had told the story of the white woman's hair. This news was received as a made-up story by the majority; so that as soon as we got into the town Mrs. Ruskin was requested to take her hair down to prove the statements which had been made. Great was the consternation when it became clear that the news was true. The exhibition had to be repeated several times for the benefit of different parties. As Mrs. Ruskin was rearranging her hair, one of the chiefs said to me, "Ah! white man, we men (meaning all men) are nothing in comparison to women for beauty; the fact is we have no beauty, for the women have it all." Another man sitting by, joined in, "Oh," said he, "why waste your words on such a subject, seeing that we men are like a dead stick for beauty, and the women have it all!"

BEATING THEIR DRUMS,

By this time a great crowd had gathered, and I rose and called for order. I told the company that we had not come there to amuse them, but with a message of salvation, news of Jesus who died for men; but I found that it was useless to go on. I proceeded to question them, and found from their answers that they had never before heard of the name of Yesu (Jesus), and knew nothing whatever of God or the Holy Spirit. This was

AN AWFUL REVELATION TO ME.

I requested the people to remain still while I asked the Lord to open their blind eyes, and enlighten their dark hearts. After prayer, I began to teach them the same as a Sunday school class of infants. I told them of creation, the fall, and the wonderful gift of God and love of Jesus in redeeming us, also of the gift of the Holy Ghost. The story of Jesus' love was much commented upon; with these people might is right, to forgive a man who has wronged you is a sign of weakness, and only brute force is respected. After a trial or two, they were able before we left to repeat the name "Yesu, Yesu;" and we trust that they will not only remember the name, but soon learn of Him, become personally acquainted with Him, and find in Him a Saviour, Friend, and Keeper. We were much pained as we were repeatedly requested to explain who Jesus was. We thought, "Ah, if our dear friends in the homeland only knew the need, and were truly awakened to their responsibility, would they not take more interest in our war—would they not deny themselves more than they have done, would they not send in more money in order that reinforcements might be sent out where there is such a terrible need?

Oh the intense darkness which reigns in this region of which I write! It seems indescribable; we know not how to speak so as to convey any idea of it to those who have not, as we have, seen with our eyes. And how we long that the glorious light of the Gospel may shine over all this district!

As we were sitting in the house at Eala, and again as we came down stream, we could hear the drums beating in of Loka and Likuti on the south side of the river, and Bosinga on the north. It was told us, apparently with no sense of shame, or wish to hide the horrible facts, that, at any rate in the two first-named towns, the habit of cannibalism is so strong in the people, that when a man dies in one district of the town the drums are beaten, calling the people to come from other districts to buy the corpse for food.

THE CANNIBAL TOWNS

We spoke to one of the Abir agents of this, and he said in reply: "Only the other day I released a man who had been here as a prisoner for some palaver, and sent him off to his town. A few days later I had occasion to make inquiries about the same man, and one of my workmen said: 'The people in your town over there killed him and feasted on his body.'"

Sholapur Schools and Orphanages.

THE combination of plague and famine resulted in a wide extension of the work which is being carried on at Sholapur, under the direction of Dr. P. B. Keskar. In the Christian Orphanage for boys there are over 130 children between the ages of three months and fourteen years. A school for those able to study has been commenced, in which the four teachers are endeavouring to give the orphans a rudimentary knowledge of Marathi, and pass them on to higher school education, or industrial training. The number at present in the Christian Orphanage for girls is seventy-five. These are under the care of a matron and two female teachers. Both boys and girls have made gratifying progress in their education, and several have given themselves to Christ, and have joined the Church. The Widows' and Destitute Women's Home has fifty inmates. The majority of them are hard-working and bear excellent characters, and many have become true followers of Christ. The asylum, which was opened for lepers, has thirty inmates—eight Christians, four Mohammedans, and eighteen Hindus.

The schools for boys and girls at Wadar Wada have been examined by the Government inspectors, who have given gratifying reports of the instruction imparted. It is, however, in the dispensary that Dr. Keskar chiefly labours. Some idea of the medical work may be gained from the statistics, which show that the patients last year numbered 9,474; and in addition to the labour involved, 210 visits were paid to sufferers in their homes. The effects of the famine have also been felt in this branch of the work, and one instance, among others, cited in the annual report of the superintendent, speaks for itself: "A girl, twelve or thirteen years old, was brought to my house for sale. I refused to buy her, but when her brother-in-law was not willing to let me have her free of charge, I took the girl under my arm, and told the man to go away. The girl was quite a skeleton, but to-day she is strong and fat, and no one would think that she is a famine orphan."

Devotion to Heathenism.

BY REV. W. REMFRY HUNT.

WHILE recently itinerating in the Ch'u Cheo district of Anhuei province, it was my privilege to witness an instance of remarkable devotion to heathenism. He was a Buddhist devotee. Travel-stained, footsore, and weary, this would-be hermit priest, of more than fifty summers, was travelling alone on a mission to Tai Shan, a high sacred mountain, a thousand li away, in the province of Shantung. One of the strangest things about this odd, rugged pilgrim was his patriarchal and dignified bearing. He might have passed for an incarnation of the Hindoo Shakyamuni Gautama, was well marked with the insignia of his fraternity, and on his stolid, yellow face could be read the expression of far-away hope and almost heroism.

In his hand he carried a little wooden table about the size of a man's hand. On it was fastened a small incense-holder and burner. Round his neck, and flowing beneath his loosely-folded gown, were some beads and seals of other religious significance. On, on, on, he went, one, two, three, four, five, six measured paces; and then a prostration in a very reverential manner. This was repeated all along the high road, the monotony of such penance being occasionally varied by lighting up a small bunch of incense, and uttering longer and louder prayers.

Being interested in this deluded pilgrimage, I asked the prematurely aged priest a few questions. He was polite, but reticent. Gaining his confidence, however, by referring to the fact that his religion, like mine, was not native to China, we realized an affinity which won him over to conversation. He thereupon informed me that his devotion to the task of travelling at the rate of six paces and a prostration, and the fact of continuing this performance through sunshine and rain, cold and heat, from sunrise to sunset, until the sacred mountain was reached in "the province of the eastern hills," would as well as high rank in the priesthood, and finally ensure for him a place in the shining ranks of the immortals.

SECURE FOR HIM MUCH MERIT,

Speaking with him on the delusions of heathenism and the hopelessness of man without God, he became peculiarly responsive. The idea of a Mediator (middle man) between God and man in the fact of reconciliation, seemed to interest him in a special sense, especially as the work and character of Christ was unfolded to him; yet he clung with tenacious pride to the rites, symbols, and traditions of the fathers.

As the light seemed at intervals to dawn on his clouded mind, my hopes were raised that he might "turn again and believe;" but he had set his face towards the sacred mountain, where the fathers worshipped, and to that purpose with a persistency and determination which would put to shame much of our nominal Christian endeavour, this heathen devotee pressed forward, allured by the fantastic will-o'-the-wisp lights of pagan creation.

Such instances afford sidelights on the other and more real side of the venerable, established, and defiant philosophies of these ancient eastlands. The real citadel to be won is the soul, with its sympathy, which is the vital spark of divinity in every human being. This is what needs to be touched by the gracious influences of the Divine Spirit.

National Thrift Society.—One of the most recent and satisfactory developments in the operations of this Society is the holding of brief, bright meetings, termed "thrift chats," which are held among the employés in ironworks, factories, shipbuilding yards, &c., in manufacturing districts. These have been held under the auspices of the masters, who are unanimous in endorsing the efforts made to deal effectively with the combined evils of improvidence and intemperance. The work of the Society is not confined to the metropolis, but is organized throughout the British Isles. Additional support is urgently needed. Communications may be sent to Mr. J. H. Wiseman, 28, Bodney Road, Hackney Downs, London, N.E.

Visiting in Zaragoza.

WRITING in the April number of Gleanings from Spain, Miss Harriet Partridge says: "Here in Zaragoza we have had good opportunities of visiting among the unconverted, and there seems to be a willingness to listen. From the villages around we get invitations to go and tell them the Gospel. Our Spanish helpers are much encouraged by the way they are received when visiting in their own villages. One lady told me the other day that her nephew bought a Bible and hymn-book from her, and took them to his village. On leaving his employers he asked for his books, but was told they had been given to the priest. He replied, 'If you have I shall go to him for them.' On reaching the house he asked the priest for his books. He confessed, 'I have burnt them.' 'Well,' said the young man, 'I demand the money.' The priest afterwards brought the Bible to him and gave him the money to pay for the hymn-book and tracts."

From Teruel Miss S. Sharpless writes: "We have been much encouraged by seeing larger numbers attending the meetings, and among them many new faces, some who have never heard the Gospel before. Although there is so much darkness in this country, we praise God for so many who have turned from idols to serve the living God. In one of the villages we came across a man who some time back had bought a Bible, and we believe the light has entered his soul. Night after night, when his work is done, he sits until late, reading it with deep interest. We had a small meeting there in the afternoon, for which the landlord gave him notice to leave. 'Then,' said his wife, 'let us have a prayer meeting, and ask the Lord to give us another house.'"

Friends who desire to have fellowship in the sending forth of Spaniards with the Gospel to their own countrymen may communicate with Mr. Edmund Ives, 55, St. John's Villas, Upper Holloway, N.

The Italian Military Church.

ALL who are interested in the Italian Evangelical Military Church will rejoice to learn of its continued prosperity. Mrs. Capellini and Rev. Giuseppe Cervi, to whom the evangelistic and pastoral services have been confided, are seeking the further extension and consolidation of the work. Signor Cervi is a minister of the Wesleyan Methodist Church in Italy, and has a worthy record of zealous and devoted labour. He has also had experience as a soldier, having served in the Italian Army. His Church has conceded him altogether to the Soldiers' Mission till such time as Signor Alfredo Capellini, who is at present studying in the Waldensian Theological College, Florence, shall be called to take his lamented father's place.

Mrs. Capellini's energies are chiefly devoted to the evening classes for non-commissioned officers. The classes for the most part are attended by subalterns, who are the pick and flower of the army. But the chief feature is the attendance of commissioned officers, whose presence is a testimony to of the gatherings. In doing so, they have had to break through the strong prejudice that has lately been felt by the military authorities against any attempt on the part of civilians to get into contact with the soldiers. Their support has also been a protection to the work itself in days of fear and trial, counteracting at the headquarters of the regiments the violent attacks with which the clerical journals have assailed the Protestant propaganda. Officers and subalterns have given expression to a lively gratitude for the spiritual benefit derived from the Bible studies, and many in great agitation of spirit have inquired the way of holiness. Since assuming the pastorate, Signor Cervi has admitted numbers of new members to the church fellowship. Communications from friends in England may be addressed to Miss Anna M. Stoddart, 35, Antrim Mansions, England's Lane, London, N.W.

THE ELEVATING INFLUENCE

Soldiers in the Himalayas.—A Soldiers' Home having been started at Dalhousie in the Himalayas last year for the 1,600 men of various regiments in the depôt there, the ladies who conduct the Home, Miss Tylor and Miss Pogson, would be extremely grateful to any readers of THE CHRISTIAN who would send papers and magazines suitable for soldiers. It is intended to open the Home again this season from May till October, when the men return to the plains. Address, Miss Tylor, West View Cottage, Dalhousie, India.

Self-Supporting Missions.

THE question of self-support in the foreign mission field—not only among workers from Christian lands, but much more among the native churches—is a very important one, involving, as it does, almost the very possibility of carrying the Gospel to the remotest parts of the earth. The aim of every missionary organization is to make the churches it founds self-supporting and self-propagating; and it is satisfactory to note that success in this respect is by no means so rare as critical outsiders would have us believe. In the current issue of the Assembly Herald, of the Presbyterian Church in the United States, a writer on their Laos (Siam) Mission says:

Ten years ago if a native Christian wanted medicine, as a rule he begged it from his "nourishing father," the medical missionary. If he wanted a part of the Bible he begged, and often received it for nothing, from the "father teacher." He brought his children to school, and permitted the Mission to educate, feed, and sometimes clothe them from funds contributed by the home church. But, thanks be to God, that father and child stage is passed. Now, the medical work, the press, the schools, the churches, are practically self-supporting—asking little or no aid from the home church, and all evangelists are paid from funds raised on the field.

In this way the spread of the Kingdom of God is not only in proportion to the growing efforts of the home Churches, but is in an increasing ratio not explainable by human arithmetic.

Young Men and Missions.

AS bearing on the problem of interesting and employing the young life in the churches, Rev. D. Burford Hooke writes:

"A Young Men's branch has been formed of the Colonial Missionary Society—open not only to young men connected with Congregational, but all Evangelical Free Churches.

"The members will, practically, carry on their own branch, and in various ways will be engaged in practical Christian service. The result will, I trust, be twofold, young men who go out to the colonies, whether as ministers or laymen, will be better prepared for service. And there is no auxiliary more valuable to the missionary than the earnest layman who testifies by his life to the reality and power of the Gospel. The other result will be a deepened spiritual life. They who read and think about Christian work, whatever the sphere, will soon begin to pray for it, and will not be satisfied until Christ is satisfied. Thus the young men's monthly meetings will do much to deepen the spiritual life of the members, and special gatherings will be held at which this object will be prayerfully sought.

"Any young men who would like to know more of this effort should correspond with Mr. Frank Nichol, the Assistant Secretary, 22, Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, London, E.C."

Literature for South America.

MR. R. L. HODGE, who has been assisting Mr. Torre, at Buenos Ayres, in the printing of Gospel literature, has found the demand for tracts and papers from all parts of the country growing quickly beyond the ability of the press to satisfy. He is now in this country, seeking means for putting the work on an entirely new and more adequate basis. Three missionary printers will be required, and men are already prepared to go on missionary terms. With these no outside help will be necessary. A sum of £500 is required for press and accessories, with outfit and passage of printers. After a time it is believed the press would become at least partially self-supporting, but probably £400 would be needed for the first year's working, £300 for the second, and £200 for the third.

"We must print leaflets and tracts," says a convert from Rome, now a Methodist pastor, "by hundreds of thousands, and give them away gratis. The difficulty is to publish quantities sufficient to meet the demand. The free distribution of literature suited to the moral, spiritual, and intellectual condition of the people, in an amount proportionate to the need, is one of the most pressing calls from South America."

American Notes.

AT Binghamton, N.Y., a man named M. A. Miller, who had been a very prominent agnostic for a long time, on his deathbed renounced all that he had been professing, and made Rev. S. Dunham (for whom he had sent) promise that at his grave he would make a bonfire of all the copies of Ingersoll's works that he had. This the minister promised to do, and in the cemetery a pile of wood was put in order, and oil provided to saturate the heap. At the last moment, however, a friend of the family seized the books, and carried them off in a carriage, thus thwarting the dying wish of their owner.

For the first time in many years, Kansas City, Missouri, had a "dry" Sunday, all the 443 saloons being closed, in obedience to an order issued by the police commissioners on Friday. Only three liquor men tried "side-door" work, but they speedily came to grief. The Police Board has announced its intention to make this kind of Sunday a permanent feature. This action is the result of a visit of Mrs. Nation to the city three weeks ago. She went into one of the saloons, and was forcibly ejected. The remarks that she had begun inside the place she continued on the sidewalk, with the natural result that she attracted a congregation. She was then taken to the city gaol, and fined 500 dols. for "blocking the streets." Sermons in all the churches, mass meetings, and resolutions followed, till life became a burden to the Police Board. The agitators demanded the enforcement of the law. The Board could see no other way out, and so it issued the order.

Bishop Newnham, of the diocese of Moosonee, 1,000 miles north of Winnipeg, reached Toronto last week, after a journey of 1,500 miles, made on snowshoes, the trip having occupied about four months. The episcopal palace is a log house, 15 feet by 20, which the Bishop and his party of Indians left before Christmas. They travelled at the rate of between twenty and twenty-five miles a day, and did not hear of the death of Queen Victoria till they reached the outskirts of the province of Ontario.

The senate of the State of Arkansas has just passed, by fourteen to one, a bill making it unlawful for any person to drink any intoxicating liquor as a beverage, without having previously obtained a licence as a dram-drinker. The licence fee is fixed at 5dols. a year, and the penalty attached to violations of the law is 15dols. fine, or imprisonment for thirty days. One of the strongest arguments advanced in favour of the measure is that its enactment and enforcement would compel almost every man in Arkansas to contribute to the public revenue.

Acting under instructions from Washington, D.C., Marshal Woodworth and his deputies have commenced war on the Oriental slavery so long practised in Chinatown, San Francisco. Eighteen slave girls were rescued by force, and placed in charge of different missions. The Marshal's deputies broke down doors and forced barred windows in liberating the girls they sought.

A despatch from Hiawatha, Kansas, a town of 5,000 inhabitants, says that some months ago a religious revival took place, in which 600 people were converted. Since that time no dances have been held, and the police judge has had only three trials in as many months. There is not a place in the town where liquors are kept for sale. Druggist Smith, who had been selling whisky and beer contrary to law for twenty years, was one of the first to be converted in the revival. He fixed an hour when he would publicly destroy all the liquors in his store. Several barrels of whisky, half a dozen cases of beer, and other vessels containing liquors were emptied into the gutters, after which their owner led a service of prayer and song.

ROGER MARTIN.

New York, May 7.

Scandinavian Sailors in London.

THE year 1900 was by far the busiest period in the history of the Scandinavian Sailors' Temperance Home, which is situated near the West India Dock Station, Poplar. Over 1,000 men more than in any previous year were entered on the books, and had it not been for the heavy unavoidable losses, the balance-sheet would have shown a much better result. It is gratifying to learn that the institution may be regarded as self-supporting. Important defects in the arrangements of the institution are the lack of accommodation for ships' officers, and the want of a larger café. To remedy this, a site adjoining the Home was purchased, and plans for the building are now being completed. The cost of the project is estimated to be £5,000, and the subscription list, which was headed by Her Majesty the Queen of Sweden and Norway, represents a sum of £1,200. The hon. managers are Mr. and Mrs. Welin.

The London Tent Campaign.

"PRAY ye the Lord of the harvest that He thrust forth labourers into his harvest." Who has not been stirred by this heart-searching appeal of our Divine Lord, and had brought home to his soul the picture here portrayed? The whitened harvest with the grain ready to fall to the ground and be wasted for ever, and all because the labourers are few! The urgency of the need should bring all the earnestness which eternal issues involve, as we contemplate this scene, and hear our Lord's command. It is because something of the Spirit of our Lord has taken hold of his servants that they look with yearning desire upon the masses of the great Metropolis, who are perishing for the lack of the Bread of Life.

The time has come for another

FORWARD MOVEMENT WITH THE GOSPEL

to reach the unreached. The workers go forward confident that He who has been so manifestly with them in past seasons will not fail them in this also. The need is not diminishing, but rather increasing. Tens of thousands in every district, who never darken the doors of an ordinary church or chapel, are drifting on in indifference to eternal ruin. It is to reach these, more especially, that the London Tent Campaign Committee are carrying on their efforts.

While the need is appalling, there are on every hand many things to encourage in this blessed work of love. Never, perhaps, have God's own people been more united in their faith and desire for blessing. The Simultaneous Mission has, we think, had much to do in bringing this about; and the tents, providing as they do neutral ground, the Christian forces rally unitedly to the fray. There is also, undoubtedly, a noteworthy spirit of expectancy, and the very atmosphere seems charged with hope that God is about to in great abundance among all classes of the people. Moreover, there is a willingness to attend tent services; this has been demonstrated in the past three summer seasons; people who cannot be reached by ordinary methods flock by hundreds and thousands to these services. It may be difficult in a word to say why the ordinary church efforts fail, but the facts are alas! patent to everyone; and even if the churches were filled to overflowing, still the great majority remain unreached.

POUR OUT HIS BLESSING

At Dartford, where a large tent seating 2,000 people has just been placed, may be found conditions that are typical. With a population of 20,000 people, they have sixty-eight drinking places, with accommodation in all the churches, chapels, and mission halls only for some 2,000. One of the pastors, in thanksgiving to God, expressed the joy and delight that thrilled the workers' hearts as they beheld in one tent service more than enough to fill all the religious places in the town.

Not only do the people attend, but many of the helpers are finding the people as a whole more than they have ever known; and they praise God. The old, old story, told out in simplicity and faith, has lost none of its ancient power. It is a glorious sight to see many of all classes weeping their way to the Saviour's feet. There is no doubt, too, that the work is having much encouragement through the wondrous transformations wrought in the lives of many in districts now being visited for the second time. The corduroy, or the rags and the neck scarf, have given place to respectability, and the beaming faces and marks of appreciation are such a witness for the Gospel that they become living and present examples of the power of Christ to save.

WILLING TO RECEIVE THE WORD

The story of the tent work is one of remarkable development, and a brief reference to its origin will be of interest to many of our readers. It is less than three years ago that erected a huge American canvas tabernacle in a field in North London. Its strange appearance, the peculiarity of the bolted, interlaced woodwork by which it was supported, attracted the attention of the curious, and gave rise to much speculation. It was to the population of the adjacent districts a singular problem; so that, in spite of the pessimistic views which were freely expressed, the opening services attracted a vast attendance. The spiritual outcome was remarkable; from among the poorer artizan class, by whom the meetings were chiefly attended, many souls were won. The news regarding the reclamation of rough characters—drunkards, gamblers, Sabbath-breakers—spread far and wide, and soon the tent became a place of popular resort for the masses, and proved on Sunday nights all too small for those who desired to obtain admission.

MR. LEONARD WEAVER

The lateness of the season did not allow of a prolonged continuation of the effort, but its fruit has been seen in the which have been carried on with so much blessing each succeeding year. At the outset the recommendations of the ministers and Christian friends at Tottenham who had seen the work, proved of great service in arousing the interest of the Lord's people. The ministers signed a recommendation in the following terms:

LARGE AND IMPORTANT CAMPAIGNS

We can bear our testimony to wonders wrought in the name of Jesus, through Mr. Weaver's instrumentality during the four months' continuous special services in the great American Tent; and we feel assured that, withorganized effort, and much united prayer, the power of the Lord will also be graciously manifested in your district, to the salvation of many precious blood-bought souls.

The work spread to various parts of London, and the difficulty has been, as the years have passed, how to supply the many demands which met the committee on every hand. There has been a general rallying in each of the districts of helpers connected with

MANY BRANCHES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

The responsibilities of the local committees are manifold, but the efforts put forth have been wonderfully fruitful. The Sunday evening services have been harvest times. At one tent, for example, to use the words of one who looked very earnestly into the work, "over 1,000 professed conversion, including a band of some fifty or sixty intelligent young fellows who may become a mighty power for good in the neighbourhood."

In this connection it will be well to quote a sample report of one of the campaigns, written by one of the chief workers, who took an active part throughout :—

DISTRICTS VISITED IN CONNECTION WITH THE CAMPAIGN, 1898-1900.

I have great pleasure in recording the mighty power and working of the Holy Spirit in the great tent fixed in Hammersmith. It was opened under rather unfavourable circumstances, having no choir, stewards, or support from any church. However, the Lord opened up the way for us, and, two days afterwards we started, having sent an invitation to all the churches, chapels, mission halls, &c., we formed a small committee and went ahead. We had sixty-five meetings for adults, including five for men only. One was much struck by the willingness of the unconverted to come forward for salvation. Not a meeting was held without results.

We had some remarkable cases. On the second Sunday a man was converted through an address of Mr. Weaver's. This convert had a godly wife and family, and by their consistent life and their prayer for him he became so miserable and wretched that he ran away from home in California. He arrived in London, went in for all sorts of sin, and was so reduced that he was obliged to sleep for several weeks in the public parks. The Lord graciously dealt with him, and brought him to the tent, where he was converted. Next day he wrote home to his wife, telling her how God had answered her prayers. He told us, too, that as soon as he had saved sufficient money and "spruced himself up," he was going back to California. Another was a man who had served at least ten years' imprisonment. Another interesting case was the son of a clergyman, who was reduced to sleeping at a common lodging house. He sought the Saviour, and his father wrote, saying he would provide for him, and receive him back home if he would remain steady.

The Campaign has also rendered excellent service in combating the drink traffic. In many instances, men have entered the tents the worse for drink, and have been so impressed that they have been brought to the Lord, if not on that occasion at any rate in a subsequent meeting. The processions, headed by brass bands, through some of

THE LOWEST OF LONDON SLUMS

will be within the memory of many readers. On these occasions some extraordinary sights were witnessed. The public-houses were emptied, scores of poor slaves of the drinking habit marching with the procession, and following on to the meeting in the tent. The deplorable condition of these unhappy men and women formed a striking object-lesson, and the Christian ministers and other workers who assembled to show their sympathy and give their assistance, were deeply affected at the sad spectacle. It is cheering to know that many of those who were gathered in, in this unconventional fashion, forsook their evil ways. In many instances, the pledge was signed, but, better still, a large number sought the help of God to live a better and nobler life.

The tent work serves a most useful purpose as an auxiliary to the churches, and the highly satisfactory testimonials which have been received from local ministers and influential Christian bodies show that the work is sound and thorough. For example, the friends at Tooting wrote :

It gives us great pleasure to bear witness to the good work accomplished by the Tent Mission in Tooting. The district being a scattered one, and the population difficult to reach, we were somewhat doubtful as to the prospect of filling so large a structure ; but our fears were soon put at rest, and the tent was well filled every Sunday, and some hundreds gathered to hear the Gospel every week-night.

The preaching was with power, and with all demonstration of the Spirit, and many declared themselves on the Lord's side. Mr. Weaver came among us as a stranger, but he leaves us as a brother beloved in the Lord who will be followed in his labours with our sympathies and prayers. We cannot close this letter without expressing our acknowledgments to Mr. Chas. Inglis and others who so nobly assisted, and whose addresses were owned of God in bringing many to decision.

This letter was signed by the ministers of the Presbyterian, Baptist, Congregational, and Primitive Methodist Churches. A well-known Christian worker in South London, who kindly acted as honorary local secretary for the work at Peckham, and who is also connected with a society, the South London Christian Union, which has on its council members of all the Free Churches, wrote :—

During the ten weeks in which tent services were held in the Peckham district, some hundreds of persons professed conversion through faithful preaching of the Word, and a stimulus was given to Christian work generally. In some instances, whole families were brought under the power of the Gospel, and are now in church fellowship. Backsliders were restored, while many who were once the slaves of sin and Satan are to-day rejoicing in the glorious liberty of the Gospel of Christ. A great work was accomplished. Christ's Kingdom was extended. To Him be all glory !

In each part of London the general effect was the same. In the East End, at Ilford, encouraging work was carried on, and the Governor of Dr. Barnardo's Girls' Village Homes, wrote :—

We have good reason to be thankful for the results among our girls. A large number of them attended the services, and very many were impressed from time to time. There was also a very welcome stirring up and strengthening of spiritual life among many whom we had reason to look upon already as Christian girls. You will be pleased to know of one permanent outcome of the tent services, namely, a weekly prayer meeting, started and maintained ever since by Christian girls themselves, which continues vigorous, and is the means of much helpfulness among us.

MR. LEONARD WEAVER.

From a Photograph by Messrs. Heaton Bros., 257, Lavender Hill, S.W.

Two business gentlemen who acted as treasurer and secretary respectively of the local committee at last year's campaign at Clapham Road, write :—

We have pleasure in stating that the work here was a great success, so many of the Lord's people being encouraged and stimulated, with a great deepening of spiritual life, in addition to many souls converted to God—all of which is bearing much fruit, and will have lasting effects upon the district.

The meetings for men only are a notable feature of the Campaign. On some occasions no fewer than 1,000 men have come together on Sunday morning, a fact which church and chapel goers will readily appreciate. For the who loiter about the London streets, waiting for the public-houses to open, a religious service would seem to have few attractions, but the effects have been seen in changed lives and homes, especially among individuals of the lower artizan, or even the costermonger class.

LISTLESS, HELPLESS-LOOKING MEN

The work embraces also carefully organized operations among children and young people. The Saturday afternoons in many tents have been utilized for meetings conducted by missioners who have evinced special suitability for children's work. Without any undue attempt to secure a large record of numbers seeking the Lord, religious instruction has been given, and in simple, but interesting fashion, have been taught to love the Lord. Pathetic instances have transpired in which the seed sown in these young hearts has brought forth good and abundant fruit in the subsequent conversion of their parents.

MANY OF THE LITTLE ONES

The outlook for the Campaign which is just commencing is rich with promise. The re-erection of the tents has already caused the many friends of the work to look about them and secure sites. Local committees have been formed, and districts to be visited are :—

Place	Opens.	Closes.
Dartford (Westgate Est.)	May 11	June 9
Stratford (W. Ham Lane)	,, 18	,, 16
Fulham (Lillie Road)	,, 23	,, 23
Kilburn (Willesden Lne)	June 1	,, 30
Brixton	,, 1	,, 30
Woolwich (Common)	,, 15	July 14
Forest Gate	,, 22	,, 21
Shepherd's Bush	,, 29	,, 28
Edmonton (nr. Town Hall)	soon as possible
Notting Hill	July 6	Aug. 4
Tooting	soon as possible
Greenwich	July 20	,, 18

Committees are also forming in the following places: Deptford, Islington, Harlesden, Peckham, Chiswick, Canning Town, Clapton, Clapham Junction, Clapham, Crouch End, Walthamstow, and Leyton.

It is God's method to reach the world through the Church. We have no right to expect that God will save only through the indoor preaching of the Gospel ; church work never has been confined to bricks and mortar, for the history of this country, and of others also, shows that the great revivals have come through God's people going outside and preaching the Word in the highways and byways. There is no doubt the work is always more permanent, as in the case of the tent work, when carried on in conjunction with God's people, and such as desire the salvation of the people.

CONVENTIONALITIES AND SYSTEMS,

The responsibility resting on the pastors of churches and all London Christians is very great, and we earnestly appeal to all leaders to unite cordially in this great effort to reach the unreached masses. The work is undenominational, or interdenominational ; no district is entered without earnest solicitation of the fellowship and co-operation of God's people. The names of the converts are passed on to the churches or mission halls where they wish to attend.

It will readily be understood that so important an undertaking, although carried on with care and economy, under the supervision of a committee of well-known gentlemen, necessitates a considerable outlay. It is hoped, however, that sufficient support will be forthcoming from those who are interested in Gospel work among the masses, not only to defray the expenses already incurred, but to warrant an extension of the Campaign to many other needy parts of the Metropolis from which calls have been received. We shall be glad to be a medium by which our readers can aid financially this important work, and hope to report the meetings week by week. The offices of the Campaign are at St. Paul's Buildings, 28-30, Paternoster Row, E.C.

The May Meetings.

Woman's Noble Warfare.

VARIOUS public gatherings were held last week in connection with the twenty-fifth annual council of the British Women's Temperance Association. On the Sunday, women speakers addressed meetings at centres in the four quarters of the Metropolis. Rev. Mark Guy Pearse and others took part in proceedings of a devotional character at Westminster Town Hall, occupying the Monday morning and afternoon. In the evening of that day, Queen's Hall was densely crowded, both on platform and in auditorium, for the great public meeting. Organ solos were played by Mr. Herbert L. Cooke; and vocal music by the Temperance Choral Society and combined choir under Mr. Frederick Williams, had a large place in the programme. Lady Henry Somerset presided, and reviewed the stirring history of the temperance movement, asking why, after 185 years of toil and testimony, comparatively little progress had been made. The reason is that, while the nation has slept, in the moral, financial, and political conscience of this people. Those who charge temperance reformers with exaggerating the evils of drink should read the book entitled, "Drink and Cruelty to Children," with a preface by the Archbishop of Canterbury, which is the outcome of evidence laid before a small committee in Manchester. Lord Salisbury has said that it is not wise to limit the age at which children may be sent to public-houses; but if, as his lordship contends, it is the elder children who are contaminated, surely such places are the last in the world to which younger children should be sent. The estimate of local officials connected with the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, is that at least 50 per cent. of the 374,428 cases with which that Society has dealt are due to drink. We are coolly told that suffering must always exist. But unrecorded cry aloud to God; and unless that cry be heeded it will condemn this great nation. The Christian Church has not taken a sufficiently prominent place in this warfare; and but little advance will be made until temperance reform becomes a religious movement of our day. Credit is due to Lord Peel for having the courage to adopt a constructive policy against this enormous evil.

AN ENEMY HAS SOWN TARES

CRIMES AGAINST CHILDREN

The vast audience rose and cheered Lord Peel as he began his address. He trusted that the hesitating tone of the minority report would not adversely affect the Children's Bill in its perilous passage through the remaining stages of Parliamentary procedure. Three children of tender years were found lying drunk in a house, with an intoxicated publican. It was said that the case was covered by existing law; but, under the Bill, poor children would not be permitted to encounter such temptations. The practice of not serving children under sixteen years had been and the chief-constable testified that no sort of complaint had come from the working-classes. There is urgent need to shorten the hours of slavery by publicans' employés, to reform the licensing authority by elected additions, and to keep licensing within the legitimate demand, with compensation, upon a reasonable basis, paid by the trade.

TRIED IN LIVERPOOL,

Archdeacon Wilberforce declared that, as the colossal intemperance of England impoverishes the people, increases taxation, and limits the producing power of the nation, it is everyone's responsibility. It bars from access to the kingdom of heaven the immortal souls of men. The real trouble is not in the "intemperate advocacy of temperance," but in the immoderation of the moderate drinker. The hour is full of optimism for the movement. First, woman has arrived upon the field, and has come to stay. Then there is the extraordinary interest taken, up and down the country, in the Children's Bill; and no single measure is of more vital importance to the progress of the nation. Finally, "best of all, God is with us."

Presbyterian Missions.

FOLLOWING the meetings of Synod already reported, the annual gathering in connection with the Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church of England, was held in the Queen's Hall, on Tuesday evening of last week. The opening devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. Hugh Falconer (minister-elect of Notting Hill congregation) and Rev. Dr. Joseph Parker.

Warm greetings from friends of the work in Scotland were brought by Rev. Principal Rainy, who presided. In the course of a notable address, he dealt with the subject of the reasonableness of Foreign Missions. "What shall we say of the missionaries who go to nations with old civilizations, that had built up their thinking, their manners, their laws, their institutions, ages before we were civilized, and before we had come into the comity of working and thinking nations? What shall we say of those who go to men who have their own philosophies, their own creeds, and their own maxims, tested by generations and centuries—not the best certainly, and yet such as men have been able to live and to organize their social systems by? Is it reasonable for us, who are strangers, to go to these men and women, and say, 'Renounce your own past and come into the inheritance of our past?'" Is it reasonable for us to go to them, representing novelty, innovation, and change, and is it likely to attract or repel them? Is it a fit thing that we should carry to them a message that will set them at odds?

"I answer—Yes, it is reasonable. If, first of all, Christ has become everything to ourselves, if we have accepted Him as our Master and Lord, if He is to us the object of affection dearer than we can give to any mere creature—then we may go among the Gentiles preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ; but on any other terms I do not think it is reasonable to expect them to listen to us. The best and truest Christians are apt to be infected with the spirit that suggests, 'Of course, we are the people that are in the right, and, of course, we have the right views, and the right civilization, and the right everything else; and among other things that we may take a little interest in, we may try to give a little of our benefits and attainments to these poor people in China and in India.'

THAT SPIRIT WILL NOT DO

for real mission work; the spirit that will prevail must be under a sense of the extraordinariness and wonderfulness of the work done when the kingdom of God takes possession of a man."

Speaking with twenty-two years of experience, Rev. D. McIver (Wu-king-fu, Hakkaland) dealt with the real causes of recent and present troubles in China, of which the pride of the Manchu race was an important one. Dealing with the outlook for the future, he said the missionaries hoped that the Emperor would be restored; and that, surrounded by wise counsellors, he might go on with the work of reform which he had planned and set on foot some years ago.

An accident having prevented the attendance of Mrs. Hunter (Manchuria), Miss Furley told, in graphic words, the story of the wonderful progress of the Gospel in Uganda; and was followed by Rev. W. T. A. Barber (Leys School, formerly of Wuchang), who described some of the difficulties encountered by a Chinaman who wishes to follow Christ, and the manner of men they were who, by scores of thousands, have overcome these. Speaking of the work in India, Rev. Canon Ball (C.M.S. College, Islington) pleaded for a strengthening of the staff; and Rev. Thomas Currie, as convener of the Jewish Mission, asked for increased support.

Door to Door Evangelizing.

AT the meetings a few days ago of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Colportage Association the appearance and statements of the men themselves constituted an eloquent testimony to the value of the work that is being done. The meeting of members and subscribers, which took place in the afternoon, was followed in the evening by the public gathering.

The report submitted by the secretary (Mr. Stephen Wigney) showed that in the fifty-two districts occupied by the men the sales for 1900 comprised 111,042 books (including 4,331 Bibles and 4,661 Testaments) and 409,986 periodicals and other publications; while 53,069 tracts were distributed, 250,350 visits paid, and 6,024 services held. It is cause for special satisfaction that in the course of the twelve months at least were opened in connection with special centres of usefulness in which some of the colporteurs labour. The characteristic feature of the messages from the districts was one of blessing all round, men and women being born again by means of the Word read and heard.

THREE NEW MISSION CHAPELS

Speaking from the chair, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon thanked the colporteurs very heartily for the help they had given in the rebuilding of the Tabernacle; and, while emphasizing a deficiency of £53 16s. 1d., thanked God for what had been accomplished by means of the organization in different parts of the country.

Touching reference was made to the loss sustained through the death of Mr. Henry Wood, by Mr. John Marnham who had taken Mr. Wood's place as a vice-president. Among other testimonies from personal knowledge, he described the work of one colporteur in a Hertfordshire village, conducting services, visiting the homes, and winning souls for the Master; and deplored the fact that such agencies cannot be extended to other

PARISHES WHERE THEY ARE MUCH NEEDED.

Bright, hearty greetings followed from a number of the colporteurs, accompanied by thanksgivings for the way in which they had been upheld by God in trying circumstances. They also told with gratitude of the readiness with which persons acquainted with their work sent contributions to a fund now being raised to provide small retiring allowances. One story in every mouth was of the way in which they are turned to in times of distress or sorrow, and of the goodness of the Lord in honouring his Word at such times.

A Talk with a Mother is the title of a booklet dealing with a neglected subject. Domestic comfort and the higher interests of life are very largely sacrificed to sensual gratification. Those who sympathize with exhausted mothers struggling with large families will do well to "take up the parable" of the writer. In the form of a dialogue we have here truths that should appeal to thoughtful men as well as women; in fact, there is reason to fear that on the subject dealt with "the men are to blame." District visitors and others will find this booklet suggestive of a course of instruction which should materially affect the home happiness and general well-being of the working-classes. (6d. per doz.; quantities at reduced rate. Dorrington Bros., Bear Alley, Farringdon Street, E.C.)

"Friendless and Fallen."

THE progress made during the past year by the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution, and told forth with force and pathos at the annual meeting at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday of last week, is full of encouragement to those interested in the vigorous operations of the organization, in the interests of the "Friendless and Fallen."

Mr. W. J. Taylor, who so perseveringly directs the various Homes and Refuges, said that it is recognised by the Committee that the Gospel is the chief lever by which these young women and girls are to be successfully raised, and every suitable means to that end are adopted. The Homes are conducted on and the cumulative experience of both the past and the present shows that God's blessing has very largely rested upon the efforts made to save the souls, as well as the bodies, of those who have been admitted.

THE "CHRISTIAN FAMILY" PRINCIPLE,

Mr. Taylor gave some touching instances of fruitful work, both rescue and preventive. L. B. was a most respectable-looking young woman, and on account of her educational advantages she might have done well in life. She was only seventeen years of age when led astray by a man holding a good position. For five years they were together, and then he heartlessly left her. When she sought admission, her earnestness of desire to live a different life was very marked, and in the Home her conduct was equally good. She has now been in the situation provided for her for nearly a year, and regularly corresponds with the matron, who says she is giving daily proof of her sincerity and Christian character. Another case, G. E., was admitted nearly five years ago. She had been led astray and had a little one to support. The lady through whom she was received seems to have had a very poor opinion of the young woman, and it certainly appeared that to give her the benefit of a course of instruction and discipline was the only likely means of helping her effectually. She was placed in service in 1897, and is now in her second situation. Her mistress reports that she is a thoroughly good girl, and is a church member. B. E. was when admitted to the Home. She behaved well, and learned all she could of laundry work, for which she seemed to have had a special aptitude. She was placed out in a cottage laundry, and remained two years, only leaving to take a better situation. She has been nearly four years in this second place, and is looking forward to opening a small laundry of her own at no very distant date.

ON THE VERGE OF RUIN

Some of the cases, as Mr. Taylor pointed out, are of a difficult and trying character, but with these also blessing has been given. For example, P. D. was a very troublesome girl, but after a time was placed in service. She did not get on, and begged the matron to give her "another chance," promising that she would earnestly try to succeed. She was helped again, and has done well. Again, H. M. was a self-willed and difficult girl to deal with, and the matron almost despaired of her; but she is now in service, and has written to say that she can never regret going into the Home, because of what she learned there, while her mistress also writes that she is "willing and obliging." Mr. Taylor added encouraging reports of the "Open-All-Night" Refuge and the Young Women's Training Home, and concluded with an appeal for an increased measure of public support.

Speaking from the chair, Mr. Frank Bevan, after reviewing the operations, passed on to consider the vast mass of moral evil still to be dealt with, and pointed out that the only true foundation for success is spiritual effort to reclaim the individual sinner. Proceeding, Mr. Bevan described the admirable effects of Christian influence in training and discipline upon the inmates of the Homes.

A stirring address followed from Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe, who expressed regret that the public take up an attitude of unconcern regarding Christian work for the reclamation of fallen women, and quoted Longfellow's translation of Friedrich von Logan:—

Man-like it is to fall into sin,
Fiend-like it is to dwell therein,
Christ-like it is for sin to grieve,
God-like it is all sin to leave.

In a striking appeal on behalf of the vast army of fallen women on the streets of London, the speaker urged that Christian people should not ignore or avoid the evil, but, on the other hand, devote themselves

TO ITS REMOVAL.

Proceeding, Mr. Webb-Peploe gave a powerful description of a "midnight supper" for women held in the West End of London, the guests being gathered in from the streets by bands of workers. Although some heartrending scenes were witnessed, the outcome of the gathering was that a number of women were rescued from a life of degradation. Mr. R. C. Morgan and other speakers followed with sympathetic addresses.

London Coalies "At Home."

IT was good to be among the happy fellows who assembled in Mildmay Conference Hall one evening last week, for the anniversary of the Mission to Coalies and Carmen. The attendance was said to be the largest known since the first of these yearly gatherings took place eleven years ago. Tea was provided for the men and their wives; indeed children, and even babies, were to be seen as the numerous company trooped into the spacious Hall from the rooms underneath, bearing treasured presents of flowers and Scripture cards, and eager to hear the brief and earnest addresses that were subsequently given by supporters of the work, missionaries, and converted "mates."

The coalies' own choir led the singing, which, like the hand-shakes as friend met friend, was of the heartiest order. Warm-hearted expressions of interest in the highest welfare of the men, and manly personal testimonies to evidently met with full appreciation on the part of the audience.

THE POWER OF DIVINE GRACE,

This year, the President, Mr. W. R. Rickett, was able to take the chair, to the delight of those present. He acknowledged kind messages received and prayers offered in the time of his affliction through the death of his wife, announced that the desire for a sixth missionary is now met in the appointment of Mr. Heard to the dock district, and pressed home the questions, Do you love Jesus? Are you seeking to walk in his footsteps?

Apart from the chairman's speech, it may be said that Mrs. Rickett was a true friend of the Mission, and when inviting Christian coalies and their wives to her Hampstead residence she made these humble workers feel how real was the interest both she and her husband took in their spiritual and temporal welfare.

Colonel Morton's cheery words of welcome were mingled with some "straight talk" as to the claims of the Saviour and the useful influence that godly coalies may exercise.

"YOU KNOW ME,"

said Mr. Johnson, one of the coalies of the North district; and his earnest recommendation of Christ's service was most impressive.

Mr. Fred Tite, coal merchant and treasurer of the Mission, voiced thanks to friends and helpers at Mildmay, and mentioned that £1,000 given by the chairman had been invested for the benefit of the Mission. Working expenses had been kept within income, to which the men themselves contribute; but there is plenty of scope for extending the good work.

Some of the missionaries, local superintendents, and coalies' deputations gave Gospel exhortation, personal testimony, warnings against drink and "bookies," and there was an abundance of joyous sacred song.

The work done by the missionaries includes visitation of the sick; and the benevolent fund has been of great service in cases of distress. Distribution of tracts specially written to suit the men has been owned and blessed of God.

Mr. Charrington's Anniversary.

ON Wednesday evening last week the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, presented a festive appearance. The occasion was the thirty-first anniversary of the Tower Hamlets Mission, and friends from far and near gathered to rejoice with the workers in another year's successful service in uplifting Christ to thousands of souls. The history of the Assembly Hall, with its extensive operations, is well-known in Christian circles, and its founder—Mr. F. N. Charrington—is held in loving esteem as one who has done much for the poor, degraded, and forsaken.

It was inspiring to witness the ardent enthusiasm and delight with which the proceedings were entered into by the enormous crowd who filled nearly every part of the vast building. The reception of the members by Mr. Charrington was followed by opportunity for social intercourse around the well-laden tables arranged in the area. The succeeding gathering, presided over by Mr. F. A. Bevan, was remarkable for the

SPIRIT OF HAPPY FELLOWSHIP

which was manifest throughout. In offering prayer, Rev. John T. Vine petitioned that God's blessing might abundantly be seen in the continued prosperity of the work which is carried on in his name at the Assembly Hall. Mr. E. H. Kerwin tendered the hearty congratulations of the church to the superintendent on attaining the thirty-first anniversary of the work, and spoke of the widespread influence of the Mission. Many who are witnessing for the truth at home and abroad owe their first aspiration for the higher life to which they have now risen to the simple Gospel services at which the message of God's servants found its way to their hearts.

An ovation of extraordinary warmth was accorded Mr. Charrington, whose futile efforts to speak only occasioned more vigorous cheering. When at length quietness was restored, the speaker passed in review the numerous phases of the Tower Hamlets Mission. Not only were they celebrating the anniversary, but were entering upon their summer campaign of open-air services. The tent was already erected, by which many would be reached who otherwise might not hear the Gospel. Speaking of the past year, Mr. Charrington found many causes which called for gratitude, and afforded encouragement. The present membership numbers 1,550, who are in active fellowship, 128 applicants having been received during the year. Five hundred have passed through the inquiry rooms. For the great Hall has been opened nightly, evangelistic services being held consecutively for 9,143 nights. The Sunday school is the largest in the metropolis, with over 2,000 scholars and 100 teachers. Every night also a service for young people is held in the Children's Hall, besides a Band of Hope and other agencies. Over 1,000 temperance pledges have been taken in the course of the year, and at the Coffee Palace, which is self-supporting, everything is done for the comfort and refreshment of those who have given up the drink.

A QUARTER OF A CENTURY

The Chairman, in a sympathetic address, traced the commencement of the Mission to one soul being touched with the love of God and filled with love for men. However numerous the agencies may be for the social benefit of the masses, the primary object of winning men from sin to righteousness must never be overlooked.

Rev. Marcus Rainsford addressed some words of brotherly counsel and encouragement to the workers, whom he exhorted to seek close communion with Christ. By living near to the Master his followers became like Him—sympathetic, kind, merciful, noble, and great.

Mr. W. H. Seagram appealed to the workers for full consecration, and to "walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his Kingdom and glory." With tenderness and expression Miss Grace Day Winter sang, "When I survey the wondrous cross," and a few closing words were spoken by Mr. Thos. Richardson and Mr. George Nokes.

Help for Brazil.

EXPERIENCE has proved that it is far more difficult to secure the support of Christians for work among white people than black, the idea too often prevailing that the heathen are necessarily coloured races. The fact remains that there are millions akin to us in blood and civilization, though not in tongue, who are living in as dark superstition and wickedness as any natives of Africa, India, or the islands of the Southern Seas. This is especially true of the South American continent, and at the annual meeting of the Brazil Mission, held at Exeter Hall on Tuesday of last week, the needs of this crying constituency of heathenism were forcefully emphasized. Speaking from the chair, Dr. J. L. Maxwell deplored the apathy displayed by Christians towards missions in lands dominated by Romanism. True it is that some of the methods adopted by Roman Catholics are legitimate; but it is but of principles. If Roman Catholics were bringing Christ to the hearts of men, there would not be the need for Protestants to evangelize in lands under the yoke of Rome. The Church of Christ must realize more fully its obligations in respect to sending the Gospel to these countries.

NOT A QUESTION OF METHODS,

Just on the eve of leaving to rejoin her husband in Pernambuco, Mrs. C. W. Kingston made a touching appeal on behalf of the misguided and ignorant Portuguese of Brazil. The need for more teachers is urgent. Encouragements and difficulties on the field were related by Rev. J. Fanstone. He spoke of the effects of Romanism, unfettered for 300 or 400 years, upon the life of the poor Brazilians. The result is that their ungodliness is in proportion to their religiousness. In his long experience he had never known a soul brought to Christ through the agency of Rome. Many refused to become Christians because of the severe morality which the taking of this step involves, and the persecution which invariably follows. On the other hand, the devotion of native Christians is remarkable. The greater the persecution, the greater the faithfulness of those who have been led to believe, and even if every missionary were removed the work would not be crushed. The speaker pleaded for to be sent out. Although the Mission has ten workers in the field, and several on furlough, the income has not yet reached £1,000.

MORE LABOURERS

Mr. H. Maxwell Wright, who has repeatedly made evangelistic visits to Brazil, drew a comparison between Roman Catholicism at home and abroad. He had never known a man to be excommunicated because of sin; but no sooner does he confess Christ than he is expelled from the community. The speaker related interesting reminiscences of his labours in Pernambuco; how doors are opening on every hand for the entrance of the Word of God, which has been for so long withheld from the people.

A sympathetic address was given by Bishop Hartzell; and Dr. E. Sargood Fry, of Edinburgh, spoke of the need for stimulating interest in the endeavours of those who are representing the Mission, and are standing for the truth in the midst of error and superstition.

Armenian Destitute Boys. — Founded by Professor and Madame Thoumaïan, the Armenian Home for Destitute Boys at Chigwell, Essex, fulfils a noble and useful function. The promoters aim at relieving the oppressed Armenian people by helping their young and destitute children, and saving them from the corrupt atmosphere—material, political, intellectual, and religious—with which Turkish influence has blighted the East for centuries. Seventeen boys are connected with the Home. Some are learning trades, others are being educated and trained. The day school studies are supplemented by Armenian lessons in the Home, special attention being given to their training in religious knowledge. It is hoped that the greater number of the lads will ultimately have an opportunity of returning to their own country, and that their education in England, while not Anglicizing them, will enable them to become faithful Christians and worthy citizens.

672

Female Orphan Home.

THE annual meeting of the Female Orphan Home, Hampton, was held a few days ago, on the premises, and proved a happy conjunction of the formal and the spontaneous. Mr. R. C. Morgan presided over a large roomful of happy children and earnest supporters of the work.

The Chairman's address was upon the privilege and responsibility upon all Christians to work among the children, and especially those so pathetically placed as destitute orphans. The speaker's text was the living group at his side, and he made reference to the beloved founders of the Home.

Subsequently Mr. Alfred Lafone, of Hanworth Park, took the chair, and after a pleasant little programme of action songs and musical drill by the girls of the Home, and a capital address to them by Mr. William George, on "Circles and Oblongs in God's Economy," the annual report was read by the Secretary. It was of a distinctly encouraging character, and showed that all the departments of work have been fully maintained, and concluded with an earnest desire for a fuller use of the Home, such as might be with a moderate increase of the funds. Mr. Lafone strongly urged that efforts should be made, beginning with those present, to obtain additional support, so that the thirty empty beds in the Home might be occupied. The state of the institution was the subject of hearty commendation by all the speakers, and those present were asked to extend an invitation to others to "come and see."

Sons of the Sea.

BOYS from the Shaftesbury training ship formed a guard of honour along the spacious approach to the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House, where the British and Foreign Sailors' Society held its annual meeting on Monday last week, by invitation of the Lord Mayor. The magnificent hall was filled by a numerous company; and for half an hour before the meeting the clear, ringing voices of other Shaftesbury lads were heard in tuneful solo and chorus.

Prayer was offered by Rev. Baldwin Brindley; and a brief review of many-sided and extensive work was given by the secretary, Rev. Edward W. Matthews. He started with to God for the Society's great past of eighty-three years' useful labours among seamen, ashore and afloat, all over the world. Cardiff is to have a Sailors' Rest, Lowestoft and Yarmouth have new Bethels; and on the continents of Africa, America, and Australia, a great impetus has been given to work among sailors. Income last year from all sources, including the general fund, sums locally raised and expended, clearing off five new buildings, with balance brought forward, was £34,404. His Majesty King Edward has just become an annual subscriber to the funds of the Society.

A NOTE OF PRAISE

The Lord Mayor, who presided, expressed the great pleasure felt by the Lady Mayoress and himself at seeing so many present in the interests of a Society which is the oldest of its kind. Every week it secures the preaching of the Gospel at 101 ports, with occasional services at others. His Lordship also announced that on July 11, the Duke of Fife, vice-patron of the Society, and Lord-Lieutenant of the county of London, will lay the stone of of the Society, the Passmore Edwards Sailors' Palace, towards the cost of which the gentleman whose name it bears has promised £6,000. The Lord Mayor himself will also lay a memorial-stone, thus linking the city with greater London in this memorable national undertaking. Seeing that a fund of some £10,000 will be required for endowment and equipment, his lordship earnestly commended the enterprise to the sympathy and support of all who are interested in the physical, moral, and spiritual welfare of seamen.

THE NEW HEADQUARTERS

Earnest words were spoken by Rev. E. J. Kennedy (Bournemouth) concerning the large opportunity which the Society offers to the Christian public, and the responsibility that follows. Rev. A. Jeffrey (Stratford) testified that splendid work is done for body and soul, among fishermen on the east coast, through the new Bethel at Yarmouth. In an eloquent address, spoke of the Society as an inter-denominational and world-unifying force, representing the spirit, life, and purpose of Christ. After other speeches, the Lady Mayoress received donations towards endowment of "Jack's Palace," and names of new annual subscribers. On behalf of the Ladies' Guild, Rev. Dr. Gritton presented to her ladyship a copy of "Sixty Years Among the Sailors," with autograph of the Duchess of Connaught.

BISHOP HARTZELL

"Go and Sin No More."

THE constraining power of love to Christ has originated many a work of mercy, and the regenerative force of the Gospel is abundantly proved in the operations of such organizations as the London Female Guardian Society, which has completed ninety-four years of fruitful labour for the reclamation of erring women. Lord Kinnaird, president of the Society, took the chair at the annual meeting held in the Parlour of Exeter Hall on the afternoon of Tuesday week. The secretary, Mr. W. Edwin Page, said that 161 young women were benefited during last year, and of the ninety-two who left, forty were satisfactorily provided for—that is to say, after receiving industrial training for eighteen months, they were or placed in comfortable situations. Of the more or less unsatisfactory cases to be expected in such work, some were passed to other institutions, a few were dismissed for improper behaviour, and others left voluntarily, no attempt being made to detain any against their will. The total of those aided would be greatly increased if a return were made of those who take shelter in the Probational Home, and leave before passing the ladies' committee. King Edward has become patron in succession to our late beloved Queen Victoria. While receipts from subscriptions and donations improved, the year was one of unusual financial anxiety, owing to increased cost of commodities and materials, decreased industrial income, and the absence of legacies. There was an adverse balance on current account.

RESTORED TO FRIENDS

Lord Kinnaird said that the necessarily quiet and unobtrusive nature of the work prevents the amount of public support that is deserved. Cases coming from a wide area should strongly appeal to Christian people all over the country who believe in rescue effort. The Society affords to the poor women not merely in name, but in reality; and that the inmates appreciate what is done on their behalf is shown by some of them giving back their money prizes for the benefit of the funds. During the long life of the institution, 10,924 women have come under its influence, and knowledge of what the Society is doing should ensure our fervent prayer and earnest support. Rev. Canon McCormick, Rector of St. James', Piccadilly, urged the necessity for such specialised work as this, and spoke of the training, tact, and heavenly wisdom needed for what is, in some respects, a thankless task. He had frequently looked out upon Piccadilly, especially on wet nights, and pitied the misery of the poor, weary creatures whose resort it is. Reclaimed women are sometimes to their fallen sisters. One such wrote to the lady superintendent, "I often see poor young girls in St. James' Park, and give them a trifle to help them reach your Probational Home."

A CHRISTIAN HOME,

A CHANNEL OF BLESSING

Other speakers were Rev. W. S. Caldecott (Cape Town), who witnessed a fruitful work of grace in the institution; and Mr. D. Marshall Lang, who read a spontaneous message of thanks from the inmates for the loving and continuous care bestowed upon them.

(May Meetings continued on page 27.)

TOO MUCH LONDON.

I VERILY believe that my knowledge of London is in a fair way of becoming "extensive and peculiar." At any rate, I am brought frequently, I may say, constantly, into contact with what has been called "the seamy side" of London life; and let me assure you at once that "the seamy side" is very seamy indeed.

The moral disease is bad, the social problems are puzzling, and the need for facing the numerous difficulties, and dealing with them, is urgent. Heaven be thanked the philanthropic world is not asleep. A large number of agencies are doing noble work amongst London's millions, and well in the front rank of such agencies we may place the St. Giles's Christian Mission, with the operations of which I have been familiar for many years.

Now I do not place the Mission in the front rank upon my own authority, or merely upon the strength of my own opinion. Those in the habit of attending the Annual Mansion House Meetings held on behalf of the Mission, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, must have been impressed by the warm praise which the highest officials connected with the administration of justice repeatedly and increasingly confer upon the work. On the 15th of June last year I attended the meeting and heard the Lord Mayor, Sir C. E. Howard Vincent, K.C.M.G., M.P., Mr. A. de Rutzen (Metropolitan Police Magistrate), Mr. R. D. M. Littler, C.B., Q.C. (Chairman of the Middlesex Quarter Sessions), Mr. Ruggles Brise (Chairman of the Prison Commissioners), Mr. Montague Crackanthorpe, Q.C., D.C.L., and Alderman and Sheriff Sir W. P. Treloar. They all spoke most highly of the work and the workers. To a very large extent it was the 'Prison' Branch of the Mission which was referred to, and with this Branch I had long been familiar. Mr. Wheatley, however, made some reference to the Holiday Homes for Children and Adults, and the Convalescent Home at Maldon, in Essex. It was only a sentence or two, but it set me thinking, for I was longing for my own holidays, and "fellow feeling makes us wondrous kind."

After the meeting I waited behind for a few words with the Superintendent, as I wished for more details about this new Branch at Maldon. "Can you meet me to-morrow morning at a quarter to nine at Liverpool Street Railway Station?" said he; "I shall be able to show you something of the work then. You could go down to Maldon with me." Now I was tired enough of London's hurry, pressure, and turmoil, to welcome the suggestion heartily. Anything for a breath of fresh air, and for country sights, sounds, and breadth of landscape.

A LONDON SCENE.

In my humble opinion Liverpool Street Railway Station, at half-past eight in the morning, is about as confusing a spot as can be found in the Metropolis. Train after train disgorges its load of workers, then rushes back for more; the hurrying, careworn, eager mass of humanity jostles and pushes its way to the "daily round and common task." Everybody seems to be coming to London, everybody seems most anxious to get to work; and not a few look quite tired before they begin—evidently a holiday would do them good.

While my thoughts are running in these, and similar, directions, I see Mr. Wheatley approaching, and in his train come two female workers and nine children—five girls and four boys. As the little ones are to be my fellow-passengers, I examine them with interest. Taking, as is right, the ladies first, I find that the youngest is five years old, and the eldest is thirteen. This latter is a person of some importance—she is in business; the poor child is a machinist, I find, and her mother is a widow. She has a bit of a colour, but that is excitement, I should say; and she has a bit of a cough, and that, I should say, is consumption; however, I may be wrong. She has been medically examined as to her fitness to become an inmate of the Holiday Home, and the doctor, with a species of grim humour, says she is suffering from "Too much London." I wonder if this is another name for consumption; I fear it is in this case, at any rate.

At 8.55 we start—Mr. Wheatley, the children, and I (the workers go back to their district visitation). To most of us the journey is one we have not taken before—to all of us, indeed, except the Superintendent and one of the boys. He, it appears, was at Maldon the summer before. The knowledge that boy had was stupendous and awful. At first he maintained a strict silence, and let his small companions display their ignorance to the full and unchecked, as they guessed, and guessed wrongly, what the Homes were like, and what they would do when they got there. But as we neared Brentwood he could bear it no longer. "You know nothing at all about it," said he. But he knew! Why, he was a veritable encyclopædia of knowledge. He knew that we all had to change at Witham for the Maldon train; he knew how far the Home was from the station, and the way to go; he knew that the children have meat dinners every day, and milk—lots of milk; he knew the place where people went fishing and caught lots of fish—much bigger than "tiddlers"; he knew the field where they play cricket, and the old pony that took 'em out for rides; he knew Freddy (this seemed to make him quieter for a moment—at any rate he spoke lower and slower), the boy that has been queer so long—not in bed, you know, but all shaky with "Sunvipersis dance"; he knew the Sunday-school the children go to on Sundays; he knew the Matron; and he knew the cook—most sensible boy to make a point of knowing the cook.

I listened as he talked—

"And still my wonder grew How one small head should carry all he knew."

I only hope that, through the generosity of the charitable, and the agency of this beneficent Mission, his knowledge may become the knowledge of hundreds of little ones this year, who will have no holiday at all, and no change from their unhealthy surrounding, if it is not provided for them at Maldon.

We changed at Witham, as the boy said, and before the day was gone I saw for myself much of what he had referred to. There were the children at play, and the children at meals, the children romping, and shouting, and running, gaining health and chasing away disease with every breath they drew. And I saw Freddy, who could neither run nor play—yet he did not seem miserable, but to have a quiet sort of happiness; the reflection, perhaps, of the boisterous joy around him.

After dinner, the Matron, Mr. Wheatley, and I were together, watching the progress of a cricket match. What "impossible" bowling some of it was, what catches missed; but, notwithstanding all, what keen enjoyment.

Here and there in the field, on chairs or on the grass, were adults. "Our Convalescent Home people," said the Matron. "Struggling, hard-working mothers and fathers, slaving from year's end to year's end to make both ends meet." "Yes," said Mr. Wheatley, "we know where to find them. You see we have not worked amongst the very poor of London for forty years without coming into contact with most deserving people, who must have a summer holiday if they are to maintain their unequal combat with hard work and poverty during the coming winter." "But you don't mean to say you give these adults a holiday," said I, "and not make them pay anything?" "But that is just what I do mean to say," said the Superintendent, "as regards some of them at any rate." "But," I ventured to urge, "is that not likely to 'pauperize' them?" "Most decidedly not," said he. "Remember, we KNOW the people. We have lived amongst them for years; we have witnessed their struggles to feed and clothe their children and to keep a roof over their heads. No! No! We are not pauperizing them, we are helping them. In some cases in the very 'nick of time,' too. If we had hesitated they would have needed no one's help much longer, so near were they to death's door. Then they earn nothing while they are on holiday; and a man who has to keep a wife and children on a pound a week in London is not in a position to save much. Quite a little sermon, is it not?" said Mr. Wheatley, breaking off with a smile; "but it is a subject upon which I feel rather warmly. These humble toilers, of whose struggles and miseries the world knows but little or nothing, are by no means being pauperized by a little timely practical help and kindly sympathy.

"I am glad," he continued, "that so many people agree with me. Several friends pay for our little 'waifs and strays' to go down to their own places in the country for the day. These tiny 'street arabs' enjoy it immensely."

"Let me see," said I. "You have over a thousand children in your Sunday-schools and attending your children's services; they don't all come down here for a fortnight's holiday, do they?"

"No; but for those we don't send here we have a day's outing. We shall be going to Pinner this year; and, beside our children, we shall take the inmates of our Boys' Homes and of the Women's Home. We shall want about fifty brakes for the party."

"This place, Mr. Wheatley, is full now, of course, in the summer; but what about the winter months—whom have you here then?"

"About forty little ones; chiefly those whose parents are in prison for long terms, and who were in danger of becoming criminals in their turn until we rescued them from their surroundings." X.

Contributions, which are much needed, will be gratefully received, if sent to the treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard Street, E.C., to Messrs. Barclay and Co. (the Mission's bankers), at 54, Lombard Street, E.C., or to Mr. William Wheatley, 4, Ampton Street, Regent Square, London, W.C.

Some Special Offers

The Crisis in the Established Church.

THESE WORKS ON ROMANISM

should be widely read and distributed at the present time, when the attention of the people needs to be awakened and KEPT AWAKE to the insidious encroachments of Romanism within the State Church.

SPECIAL OFFER OF A PARCEL OF

Volumes and Pamphlets on Romanism

as follows (see Conditions below):—

CONTENTS OF PARCEL:

1 Copy	FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS. With Twelve Full Page Illustrations and Steel Frontispiece, Handsome Cloth Bevelled Boards, Gilt side and back ...	10/6
1 Copy	THE CATACOMBS AT ROME. An Exposure of the Corruptions of Romanism. Derived from the Sepulchral Remains of the Early Christians. By BENJAMIN SCOTT, F.R.A.S. Over 70 Illustrations. Cloth Boards	2/6
2 Copies	THE VEIL LIFTED. The Romance and Reality of Convent Life. By ELIZA RICHARDSON. Cloth Boards...	3/-
1 Copy	PERSONAL EXPERIENCE OF ROMAN CATHOLICISM. Incidents of Convent Life. By ELIZA RICHARDSON. Cloth Boards	1/6
42 Copies	THE CONFESSIONAL. A Personal Narrative	3/6
47 Copies		Value 21/-

FOR NINE SHILLINGS (CARRIAGE PAID).

The above Parcel, together with some Copies of THE CHRISTIAN (current number), will be sent Carriage Paid, to any reader in the United Kingdom who forwards Postal Orders for 9s. (11s. 3d. from Readers abroad) and who will undertake to hand the Copies of THE CHRISTIAN to friends not acquainted with the paper, in the hope that they may become regular subscribers.

Application, with remittance, should be addressed to the Publishers:
MORGAN and SCOTT, Office of "The Christian," 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

A SPECIAL OFFER, at GREATLY REDUCED PRICES

FOR GRATUITOUS DISTRIBUTION,
OF
Morgan and Scott's Illustrated Edition of

The Pilgrim's Progress.

96 pages. Imperial 8vo. size.

In Tinted Covers, Published at 6d. Offered for 3/- per Dozen Net. Carriage Paid.

Leatherette Binding, with Handsomely Gilt Side, Published at 1/6. Offered for 7/6 per Dozen Net, Carriage Paid.

Not less than One Dozen of either Style supplied at these rates.

100 Copies of the 6d. Edition for 20/- Net. Carriage extra. Sample Copy 3d., or Post Free, 4½d.

40 Copies of the 1/6 Edition for 20/- Net. Carriage extra. Sample Copy, 9d., or Post Free, 11½d.

LONDON: MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

Special Offer of Tracts.

15/- worth for 10/-

A Parcel containing 3,000 TRACTS (about 232 Varieties, as set out below) will be sent for 10/- NET (Carriage extra). The Contents of this Parcel if purchased in separate packets would be 15/-.

		Varieties
200	WEAVER'S LEAFLETS	64
500	HERALD OF MERCY TRACTS	64
200	THE SCRIPTURE SAITH	16
500	PICTURES OF LIFE	8
200	WORDS FOR WAYFARERS	16
200	PLAIN QUESTIONS	16
200	BUNYAN LEAFLETS	16
250	LAMPS FOR LITTLE FEET	16
750	LITTLE TRACTS FOR LITTLE READERS ...	16
3,000	TRACTS.	232

THESE TRACTS ARE ALSO SOLD SEPARATELY.

LONDON: MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

Books for Children and Young People.

Messrs. MORGAN and SCOTT'S SPECIAL OFFER

Of 15 Volumes (Value 21/-) for 10/- has met with a very considerable response, especially from S.S. Superintendents and Teachers, and others engaged in Christian Work among the Young.

THE FOLLOWING TESTIMONIAL

came from a Purchaser in Ireland, who wrote:—

"I have the pleasure of acknowledging the receipt of the very valuable parcel of Children's Books, including many of Mr. Hammond's world-famed books. I consider the parcel a great bargain—One pound's worth of Books for 10s., carriage paid. Mr. Hammond's books are perfect gems. I wish parents would buy them for their children; every minister ought to read his book on the 'Conversion of Children.'"

Two copies of this book are now included in the Parcel, the full contents of which are as follows:—

2 Vols.	THE CONVERSION OF CHILDREN. By Rev. E. PAYSON HAMMOND. With Portrait	5/-
1 Vol.	THE BETTER LIFE, AND HOW TO FIND IT. By Rev. E. PAYSON HAMMOND. With Illustrations	2/6
2 Vols.	JESUS THE LAMB OF GOD. By Rev. E. PAYSON HAMMOND. With Illustrations	5/-
1 Vol.	ROGER'S TRAVELS. The Journey of Two Boys in Foreign Lands. By Rev. E. PAYSON HAMMOND. With Illustrations	1/-
1 Vol.	JESUS' LAMBS. Stories for Children, teaching the Little Ones how to find Jesus. By Rev. E. PAYSON HAMMOND	1/-
1 Vol.	PERCIVAL'S PICTURE GALLERY. By A.L.O.E. With Frontispiece. Printed in carmine and black	2/-
1 Vol.	JOE WITLESS. A Book for Boys and Girls	1/6
6 Vols.	"NETTIE'S MISSION" LIBRARY. Consisting of the following SIX VOLUMES, enclosed in a neat case:—NETTIE'S MISSION, LITTLE MARGERY, MARGERY'S HOME, MAGGIE RILEY, ROSY CONROY, NED DOLAN	3/-
15 Vols.		Value 21/-

SENT CARRIAGE PAID FOR TEN SHILLINGS

to any reader in the United Kingdom who forwards us Postal Orders for that amount and will undertake to hand the copies of THE CHRISTIAN, which are enclosed in the Parcel, to friends not acquainted with the paper, in the hope that they may become regular subscribers.

Readers in foreign countries, included in the Postal Union, can secure the same advantage on forwarding a Money Order for Eleven Shillings and Ninepence.

Application, with remittance, should be addressed to the Publishers:
MORGAN and SCOTT, Office of "The Christian," 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

Messrs. MORGAN and SCOTT'S

Special Offer of Biblical Works.

A selection of Books which will prove helpful to PREACHERS and TEACHERS, and all BIBLE STUDENTS.

The Parcel of Five Volumes, value 12/6, can be obtained for 6/- on conditions printed below.

CONTENTS OF PARCEL.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE. Popular Edition	3/6
SEARCHING THE SCRIPTURES. By Dr. J. ANDERSON	2/6
THE BIBLE REMEMBRANCER. Handbook to the Old and New Testament	2/6
THE BIBLE INTERPRETER. An Illustrated Dictionary of the Scriptures	1/6
CHRIST LIFTED UP. By Rev. R. GILCHRIST	2/6

The above Works to the value of 12/6 will be sent (Carriage paid) for Six Shillings, together with some copies of THE CHRISTIAN, to any reader resident within the United Kingdom, who forwards remittance, and will undertake to hand the copies of THE CHRISTIAN to friends not already acquainted with the paper, in the hope that they may become regular subscribers.

Readers in foreign countries included in the Postal Union can secure the same advantage on forwarding a Money Order for 8s.

Application, with remittance, should be addressed to the Publishers:
MORGAN and SCOTT, Office of "The Christian," 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

The May Meetings.

(Continued from page 24.)

Protestant Women.

A DEEP sense of the peril to which our country is exposed from the ever-growing encroachments of Romanism and Ritualism, led to the formation, ten years ago, of the Women's Protestant Union. It was felt that, as the spread of sacerdotal error in the past has been largely due to the influence of woman, it is the duty and privilege of Christian women to seek to counteract the evil by personal, prayerful, and united Protestant effort, more especially in their own immediate social circles.

Last week the Union held a very successful three days' conference in Exeter Hall, attendance and interest being well maintained throughout. At a united prayer meeting on Wednesday afternoon, Madame Leite-Rozas spoke concerning the Church's attitude

IN PERILOUS TIMES.

To this meeting succeeded a conversazione, during which Mr. W. Bates, of Dublin, described some of his encouraging experiences as an itinerating evangelist in connection with the Irish Church Missions to Roman Catholics.

Mr. T. A. Denny, who took the chair at the evening meeting, said that if England is taking on Popery, other nations the world over are putting it off. We cannot live in peace beside the Romish system, for its crafty attacks meet us on every hand. Rev. Dr. Hanson showed that rest of mind and heart is to be found not in the submission to the authority of Popes and councils, hopelessly divided, but in Christ's words which, like Himself, are the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.

Personal recollections of a visit to the busy and useful Protestant Mission at Figueras, Spain, were given by Mrs. R. C. Morgan, herself a convert from Romanism; and Pastor C. Cremer, secretary of the Société Evangélique de France, gave interesting in the department of Corrèze.

GLIMPSES OF GOSPEL WORK

At the three meetings on Thursday morning, afternoon, and evening, the speakers included Mr. Herbert Wolstenholme (Protestant Reformation Society) Miss Ellen Pash (Korea), Rev. Jas. Fanstone (Brazil), Mrs. Arbuthnot (president of the Union), Mrs. Lewis, Ph.D., LL.D., Rev. Dr. Wright, Col. Sandys, M.P., Rev. H. Lindsay Young (Portsea), Mrs. Cavalier (returned from Australia), and Lieut.-Col. Martin Frobisher, secretary of the Waldensian Church Missions. The addresses of the day covered Protestant work among English Roman Catholics and the young at home and in Korea, the evil results of Romanism in Brazil, imitation of Eastern Church ritual, means to counteract Ritualism, the anti-Christian character of Romish teaching, Protestantism in the colonies, and the work of Waldensian Missions in Italy.

All the meetings of conference were held in the Lower Exeter Hall. It was discovered that Thursday afternoon was the time for the monthly prayer meeting of the Protestant Reformation Society; and additional interest was given to the occasion by an arrangement that both organizations should hold a joint meeting.

On Thursday evening, the chairman, Colonel Sandys, made sympathetic reference to the news, just received, of the decease of Mrs. Smyly, of Dublin, and of Mr. Guinness, formerly secretary of the Protestant Alliance.

At the meeting on Friday morning, Miss Barbour, working in Connemara, described the oppressive as practised in Ireland; and the degradation attendant upon Romanism in the River Plate Republics was the subject of some revelations by Mr. R. L. Hodge, of Argentina.

EFFECTS OF ROMAN DOCTRINE

Mr. Walter Walsh spoke upon the Romish agitation against the King's Declaration, as a gigantic scheme to destroy Protestant liberty of speech. The Declaration is not intended as an insult, but as a necessary safeguard of our civil and religious liberties; for history has fully proved that no Romish sovereign can be trusted. It should be maintained even in the interests of Roman Catholics themselves; seeing that, in Protestant England, they are blessed above their fellows in any other nation.

Speaking in the afternoon upon new developments of the Union, Mrs. Augustus Spencer, vice-president, mentioned a scheme for the formation of a Young Protestants' Union, to embrace all societies and all denominations. Since the formation of W.P.U., the number of members, associates (men), boys, girls, and "Ready Bands" enrolled up to May 1 totals 16,599; and there are 156 branches of the Union.

In the evening, Rev. Canon O'Connor delivered an able address upon the subject of the principles, methods, and results of Evangelicalism; and Mr. Robert Stark, of Peru, testified concerning the disastrous influence of Romanism in the land of the Incas. At each meeting of the Conference, either Miss Ada Rose or Madame Annie Ryall pleasantly varied the proceedings with sacred song.

Warehousemen and Foreign Missions.

THE third annual meeting of the Warehousemen and Drapers' Foreign Missionary Society was held on May 10 at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate Street, E.C. Mr. T. B. Miller presided, and Mr. Couldridge (assistant sec.) read the annual report. The young men of the city warehouses were urged to press forward, and throw themselves more heartily into the work. Meetings have been held from time to time during the year, at which many interesting addresses have been given by workers from the foreign field. The Society is supporting Mr. John H. Harris (late with Messrs. Cook, Son, and Co.), who has but recently returned from the Congo, and Mr. Walter P. Hares (late with Messrs. I. and R. Morley), who is being trained for the C.M.S. Both these gentlemen were present, and delivered sympathetic addresses, Mr. Harris giving a telling description of his experiences on the Congo, and of the terrible darkness of the heathen. The meeting was a bright and encouraging one, and should prove a stimulus to the work.

Working Men's Mission.

RIGHTLY named is this Mission, for its operations are in the midst of a teeming working-class population near to the notorious "New Cut," south of the Thames. Successful also, for it has been maintained twenty-four years; and at the recent anniversary, the report showed that during the past year 300 open-air and 600 indoor meetings have been held, as well as forty-six mothers' meetings and a weekly children's service. Sunday schools with 686 scholars, Bands of Hope, senior Bible classes, sewing class, slate and goose clubs and other departments of labour, for God and humanity, indicate how earnest and zealous are the superintendents, Messrs. T. and J. Young, and their helpers.

Mr. T. A. Denny, president, who occupied the chair, spoke encouragingly of the work already done, and urged the importance of keeping the Word of God in the front, its true position.

Mr. F. A. Bevan, treasurer, reminded working men of the great interest taken in all that concerns their well-being, even by the King upon the throne. The Mission benefited them through its various agencies, both physically and socially, yet the chief aim was to promote their improvement in higher and spiritual things.

Mr. Musa Bhai, an Indian evangelist, sang some native choruses, discoursed on the superiority of Christianity over other systems of religion, and advocated the claims of the gospel of Christ upon his hearers.

Mr. T. C. Young told of the financial position, which revealed a deficit of £37, while £300 further is needed for the summer work. Towards a new building £350 are in hand, with a promise (if the building is opened free of debt) of £1,000.

For Body and Soul.

FRIENDS and workers of the London Medical Mission met together on Wednesday week at the headquarters in Short's Gardens, St. Giles', for prayer, praise, and conference touching the good work. Mr. W. H. Seagram presided, and opened with a note of grateful thanksgiving to God for sustaining the workers and owning their efforts in the alleviation of suffering and the salvation of souls. Many had been savingly influenced by personal dealing and by the Gospel preached in that room. Some of the poor are leaving the neighbourhood of St. Giles'; but many of the ailing ones, who eagerly seek treatment at the Lambeth branch, are crowded out owing to the limitations of temporary and very inconvenient premises. Attempts to find better accommodation have, so far, failed.

Every year

OVER 35,000 CASES

are attended to at the dispensaries; more than 7,000 visits are paid by physicians to sick people in their own humble homes; and the number of visits paid by nurses exceeds 8,000. At each place there is a fully qualified medical man who devotes his whole time to the work, a qualified dispenser, and a lady superintendent with a band of nurses and assistants, besides voluntary helpers. Lady workers here get training that fits them for missionary labour abroad.

Some details of the growth and present needs of the Mission were given by the medical superintendent, Dr. Henry Soltau. While some spots once St. Giles' slums are now occupied by large buildings, there is still much overcrowding. Since the work was begun thirty years ago, 143,213 patients have passed through the hands of doctors and nurses. These patients have all heard the Gospel, and many of them have been as well as in manner of life. The Mission has influenced Roman Catholics, infidels, the careless and indifferent—men, women, and children who would never enter a place of worship.

CHANGED IN HEART

In the Convalescent Home at Folkestone, about 240 of the poor find that restful quiet and loving care which is beyond their reach in London; and there is a Holiday Home where poor children are received for a fortnight in the summer. The expenses of the work have been larger than the ordinary receipts, so that there was necessity to draw upon a legacy that came to hand about a year ago; and increased help is needed for maintenance and extension of the work.

Dr. Leopold Hill, a missionary from China, who once worked in this Mission, said that we must go into to know the real conditions of life in this city. If we obey the call "Go out quickly," the Holy Ghost will exercise through us the gentle compulsion which brings men to Christ. An earnest wish was expressed by Miss Wardrop, lady superintendent at Lambeth, that friends would come and see the difficulties under which the loved work is carried on. Dr. Owen, physician at that branch, told how those shut out cry through the letter-box "Do let us in," and begged his hearers to "spread the news everywhere that Lambeth wants a new building."

THE BY-WAYS OF LONDON,

Jews in Hackney.—The annual meeting for prayer and praise in connection with the Christian Chief Corner Stone Mission to Jews, took place a few days ago at Hackney Y.M.C.A. Rev. W. Johnston, B.A., presided, and spoke in sympathetic terms of missions to Israel, and advanced numerous reasons why such agencies claim the practical sympathy of Christians. Addresses were given by Rev. S. J. Deutschberger and Mr. H. Ehrlich; and the secretary, Mr. J. S. Davidson, enumerated many causes for thankfulness to God for the tokens of Divine blessing upon the Mission during the year. Meetings have regularly conducted, at which Jews have assembled in large numbers, and many for the first time have listened to the Gospel. The Scriptures in Yiddish have been widely distributed, with encouraging results. The poor have been assisted, and admission to hospitals has been gained for the sick.

Evangelical Alliance.

QUITE a festive appearance was upon the Lower Exeter Hall on Monday afternoon, when members and friends of the Evangelical Alliance assembled for their annual conversazione. Among those present were Lord Radstock, Viscount Bangor, Colonel Douglas-Jones, Colonel de Cetto, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., Mr. Eugene Stock (C.M.S.), Rev. Dr. Murray Mitchell, Messrs. W. H. Seagram, D. Wellby, and R. C. Morgan, Bishop Miraglia, and Pastor de Silva, of Lisbon.

After a hymn, Rev. Dr. GRITTON offered prayer. Gen. SIR WM. STIRLING, Governor of the Tower, presided, and reviewed the objects of the Alliance, as regards the promotion of the Week of Prayer, the maintenance of throughout the world, the relief of persecuted Christians of all nationalities, manifestation of the unity of all believers, and upholding of the faith.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY

Mr. D. WELLBY, Hon. Treasurer, referred to the lamented death of his predecessor in office, the late Mr. John Paton. While the year's finance shows a favourable balance, demands upon the Alliance are ever growing in all parts of the world.

As a member of Council, Lord KINNAIRD heartily welcomed friends who had come from a distance and from the Continent, to unite in a note of thanksgiving and praise to God for what He has done through the Alliance. The King of Portugal had readily acted upon Alliance representations concerning religious persecution in Lisbon and elsewhere. While this is a further confirmation of the need for the Alliance, it may stimulate hope in regard to religious liberty for Russia.

Rev. Dr. GEO. HANSON spoke of his strong and deepening conviction that Christian union is a most practical question. It touches the absence in our home sphere of the comity which prevails in foreign mission fields, so preventing overlap and waste of energy. The more we know of the Gospel, the more we see that is not in any visible Church, but in Christ, the Head of the Church and of all the Churches. All who are united with the Head are united with one another; and this is a spiritual experience. The only schism that the Bible recognises is separation from Christ. Let us, then, frankly recognise our oneness already in Christ. We do not need to wait for the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace; we possess it. If we let Christ increase, all our distinctions will decrease to vanishing point. Let us magnify Christ, not the Church, sacraments, and the like.

THE CENTRE OF UNITY

Strong testimony was borne by Pastor ANET, of Brussels, to the value of the Alliance in view of the difficulties of native Protestants in Romish countries.

It was announced that Bishop Miraglia, of Piacenza, North Italy, had signed the Alliance basis, and associated himself with definite Gospel work. In the course of the meeting Mrs. Hanson sang "Abide with Me." Provision was made at the close for an hour's friendly intercourse, and a large number of new members were enrolled.

"Go-Ahead Japanese Students."—The article in our last under this title was written by Rev. John B. Brandram some months ago, and we regret to learn that Mr. Brandram has since died. The words "the late" should, therefore, have preceded his name.

Licensing Laws' Information Bureau.—While every effort is being made to secure additional legislation for the regulation of licensing, there is good reason to believe that practices already illegal are permitted to continue in different parts of the country through ignorance of the provisions of existing statutes. The Bureau (Secretary, Charles L. Rothera, 46, Bridlesmith Gate, Nottingham) is prepared to give advice and assistance to persons or societies seeking to secure the effective administration of the licensing laws in their own localities, and, where it is deemed expedient, to aid in carrying to the higher court cases which, in the opinion of the council, involve important questions affecting licensing administration.

676

Befriending the Stranger.

AT the annual meeting of the Benevolent or Strangers' Friend Society, held at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A., on Thursday, and presided over by Mr. Edmund Ives, there was a large and sympathetic attendance. Many thrilling stories were related, showing the varied and effectual help rendered by the 160 voluntary Christian men and women visitors, who devote many hours every week throughout the year visiting the sick and necessitous in their homes, and carrying to them a Gospel message, as well as bestowing the Society's gifts—which they frequently personally supplement. The report states that the Society has no difficulty in securing voluntary helpers, its only great hindrance being the want of sufficient funds to extend operations.

Of such a work it cannot be said that, though of value in one age, it ceases to be of value in another, through the changing needs of the people, seeing that the necessities of the class to whom the Society ministers are as pressing in one age as in another, and the poor being always with us, their claim for kindly consideration will, without doubt, remain till the end of time. Such a service can, therefore, never become useless, though it may be made more useful by the generous charity of those whom God has intrusted with some of this world's wealth. Offshoots of this venerable parent of philanthropic agencies are to be found to-day well rooted and flourishing in many of the cities and towns of the Empire, and in places beyond.

For the Sake of the Friendless.

AMONG the numerous worthy agencies—religious and philanthropic — which centre in the Salvation Army, possibly few are carried on with greater success than the branch which is known as the Women's Social Work. To advance its claims a breakfast was arranged on Tuesday morning at Exeter Hall. It was spiritually stimulating to mingle with the workers from all parts of the Metropolis, eager to recount the blessings which have been realized in their endeavours to fathom the lowest depths of vice into which young women have fallen.

Lord RADSTOCK, who presided, warmly commended the numerous phases of the Army's ministry, and gave a helpful word to the workers, whom he exhorted to whole-hearted surrender to the will of God; their task was a lowly one and called for humiliation and self-denial. Confidence in the Almighty to save to the uttermost must be exercised, remembering that we can never exhaust the resources of God, and in proportion as we learn to die daily to self we shall comprehend more of the Infinite.

A few words were spoken by Sir WILLIAM WEDDERBURN appreciative of the social work.

Mrs. BRAMWELL BOOTH moved many to tears by a touching address. In fervent and pathetic words she recalled several cases in which the officers of the Army had been used of God in reclaiming and restoring fallen sisters. Many signs of progress had marked the year, and in acknowledging "the hand of God has been upon us," the speaker expressed the feelings of one and all. With regard to the future, Mrs. Booth was highly optimistic. An immense decrease in the number of despairing and hopeless souls is evidenced, and a mark is being made on the masses. The midnight work in the West-end of London gives every cause for gratitude and encouragement. Over 3,000 night-hours have been spent by the officers on the streets, while it is impossible to estimate the results of the rescues which have been effected, and the numbers who have been brought under the influence of Christian love and compassion.

Dr. HANSON followed with sympathetic and hearty remarks, recalling the days of his early ministry in Ireland, and the influence exercised upon his life by the devotion of two of the Army officers. Mr. R. C. MORGAN spoke of the work which is being maintained by Mr. and Mrs. Booth-Clibborn in Holland.

R.T.S. Missionary Breakfast.

THE annual missionary breakfast of the Religious Tract Society, held on Tuesday last at the Cannon Street Hotel, was, as usual, a highly interesting function, at which the fruitful effects of the world-wide utilization of literature in making known the Gospel were instructively set forth. Professor HANDLEY C. G. MOULE presided over a numerous and enthusiastic company of friends and supporters of the Society.

After a few introductory words from Dr. L. BORRETT WHITE, the Chairman spoke in cordial terms of the work of the R.T.S., labouring for all that is good and pure in Christian literature at home, and, literally in scores of languages, exercising a beneficial effect on the peoples abroad. Striking a personal note, Dr. Moule recalled that he had read the publications of the Society as long as he could remember. The Society has shown itself always open to development. Its publications of one generation are by no means identical in style with those of another, but with adaptability of method there has been no change in the central principle of its work. The R.T.S. is the meeting place for hearts and souls of all denominations who love the Master and the Gospel message.

The next speaker was Rev. JOHN BATCHELOR (C.M.S.), missionary to the Ainus of Japan, who gave a vivid description of Sunday-school work, in which the pictures and tracts of the Society prove exceedingly useful. Mr. Batchelor related some touching incidents showing how, as the outcome of tract reading, many have been led to seek Christ.

Rev. THOMAS LEWIS (Baptist Missionary Society), speaking for the missions on the Congo, said that if Africa is to be brought to Christ, it must be through the instrumentality of the natives, whom it is necessary to supply with good literature. Telling how a Baptist chapel had been erected at San Salvador on the ruins of a Romanist mission, Mr. Lewis spoke hopefully of the outlook for Protestant effort, and showed how supplies of books and tracts from the R.T.S. are helping the onward march of missionary enterprise.

Voicing the views of the French Evangelical Churches, Pastor SAILLENS, of Paris, recalled the zest and enthusiasm with which tract distribution was pursued at the International Exhibition, and of the good effects of this work and of the Christian literature depôt, three-fourths of the stock for which was supplied by the R.T.S. Good effects, too, have resulted from giving tracts to Romanist "pilgrims," as they have gathered in the railway stations at Paris en route for the south.

India's representative was Miss FALLON, of the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, who described the miserable life of Indian women.

The financial position was stated by Rev. RICHARD LOVETT, who pointed out that the expenditure on missionary literature for the past year was £20,000, and the receipts between £13,000 and £14,000.

Rev. Dr. W. G. LAWES (L.M.S.), who has been forty-one years in the mission field in Polynesia and New Guinea, testified to the value of New Testament portions, which have been read with avidity by the natives. The Testament is almost their only book, and they have attained to a remarkable knowledge of its contents. In the financial burden of printing and preparation the Tract Society has given timely help.

Rev. C. H. STILEMAN (C.M.S.), of Julfa, Persia, who followed, drew lessons from his own experiences with the villagers of the district in which he labours, showing the necessity for putting into their hands simple books dealing with historical and doctrinal questions and meeting the contentions put forward in defence of Mohammedanism.

The last speaker, Rev. H. S. CONWAY (China Inland Mission), who, during the recent troubles succeeded in escaping with his wife and child from the rioters at Shi-k'i-tien, Honan province, spoke heartily as to the value of tracts in evangelistic and educational operations. The meeting concluded with a brief word of praise and exhortation from Dr. Moule.

Home Missions.

Irish Evangelization Society.

EACH year gives the work of evangelistic missions throughout Ireland a more important and established position. From the Report for 1900, issued by this Society, it appears that 2,094 Gospel meetings have been held in 123 different places, showing an advance on the preceding year's work of 183 meetings and twelve places visited. These meetings were held in four movable wooden halls taken on tour, and in a tent, or in barns, schoolhouses, churches, &c., where available.

In Listowel, a mission held nine years ago bears fruit to-day in a Y.M.C.A. hall and a band of faithful Gospel workers. For two months a large number, including from fifty to 100 Roman Catholic men and boys, have nightly heard the story of grace. After the service nearly all stayed to practise hymns and choruses, and Roman Catholics may be heard singing when at their daily calling :—

For God so loved the world.
Tell it again. Tell it again, &c.

At a village in Sligo the priests were most intolerant, denouncing the Evangelists at mass, and using the local press to prejudice the people. At first it was "a reign of terror," but God blessed his own Word to many souls.

A mother, anxiously seeking the Saviour, sat up till 2 o'clock, when, having found Him, she retired to rest, only, in the excess of her joy, an hour later to request her daughter to arise and sing. One convert writes that the first time he went to the Mission he was about half-drunk, but, thank God, was convicted of sin that very time! He now intends to pay 13s. a quarter to the I. E. Society, the amount formerly spent on tobacco, and begs for another visit of the evangelist to try and reach the chums he had when serving the devil. Yet another: "The Lord has used me wonderfully since my conversion last year. Three of us are conducting prayer meetings in the country round about."

A large Bible-class has been started at Castlewellan to carry on the work of grace. "Myself and twenty-four friends all received great blessing at the meetings," says the writer.

At Clough the people showed their gratitude not only by contributing funds, but also to convey the hall to Dromore, a long distance and no railway, free of charge. Such a procession of carts caused quite a surprise in the district.

BY PROVIDING THIRTY CARTS

An attendance of one person marked the opening of the mission at Moate, but in a few days thirty Roman Catholics and fifteen Protestants were listening to the Gospel of free grace.

"We have seen wonders at Markethill," writes one. "Four young men of the working class are holding meetings in two schoolhouses about two miles away. They are both crowded, and it would surprise you to hear them speak and pray. A young fellow brought out through one of our Omagh Missions is now joint secretary for open-air work in connection with the Y.M.C.A., Belfast."

The foregoing are some of the visible results of the sowing of the incorruptible seed by earnest evangelists even in parched ground and in stony places. In ways like these, by the gracious influences of the Holy Spirit, it bears fruit to God's glory.

That such genuine work should be hampered and restricted for want of means needs only to be mentioned to be remedied. The committee are calling upon the Lord to lay the claims of his work in this direction upon the hearts of his stewards. The hon. sec. is Mr. James Barton, of Dundalk.

Thames Church Mission.

THE Society has ministered for fifty-seven years to the spiritual necessities of the vast fluctuating population on the Thames, consisting of sailors, watermen, bargemen, &c. Services are held on board emigrant, passenger ships, colliers, and every description of vessel; also in the five mission and reading-rooms, which are open to seamen and others in the various docks, East Greenwich, Erith, Leigh, Tilbury, &c. A clergyman and sixteen laymen constitute the staff. The field of labour extends from Richmond to the Nore Light Ship—a stretch of seventy-six miles.

Incidents of the most encouraging character are constantly coming under the notice of the staff, which prove the value of this work. One of those engaged in it writes :—

Only a short time past I fell in with a bargeman, who said, "Well, old friend, I remember the time over twenty years; we went up Bow Creek as far as the iron bridge, and I said to my skipper (as I was only mate then), I believe we are out of the reach of them 'Thames Church Ferrets' this time! But before we had been moored a couple of hours, bless me, if you did not put in an appearance; and I remember you said that you had come up there bringing a family Bible for one of our bargemen, and that you meant visiting all the craft you could while you were up there. You showed me the family Bible, and I liked the look of it so well that I gave you the order to get me one. I can tell you that indeed in our home—not the book itself, but the blessing of God with the book!"

THAT BOOK HAS BEEN A 'TREASURE'

Another writes :—I boarded a vessel, and conducted a service in the fo'c'sle. I was much pleased with the attention the sailors gave. One of the men said: "The greatest number of us know the Lord. We have a good captain, and an excellent second officer. See them before you go ashore." I made my way aft, and on knocking at the cabin door a fine young fellow said, "Come in." He added, "You do not know me. About thirteen years ago I had a situation in a shop in Westminster. I mixed with some very bad boys, who induced me to rob my master's till. I was sent to prison for two months. My mother attended a Bible class, conducted by Mr. ——. She asked him if he would do anything for her boy. At his request you undertook to do it. I went with you to a little office in the Commercial Docks. You offered up prayer and gave me a Bible, in which you carefully marked several texts. You urged me to look at them from time to time, and then led the way on board a vessel, and induced the captain to take me as a cabin boy.

"I ran away from this ship in France and joined another, on which I remained for three months. The captain, who was a drunkard, ran the ship ashore; he and another man were drowned. Three of us were saved by jumping overboard and swimming to the land. The only thing I saved was a little bag my mother had made me. The two sailors parted from me, and I was left on the rocks. I opened my bag, and the first thing I saw was my Bible and the texts you had marked, 'Call upon Me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify Me.'

"Believe me, such a peculiar feeling came over me that I dropped on my knees and begged of the Almighty God that He would in his mercy teach me what to do. I was led to go to a farm, where I worked for some time. I then came down to the seaside and joined a vessel under the command of a Christian man, who taught me navigation. He was the means of deepening the religious principles in my mind, and now you see what I am. God in his mercy has made me a blessing. He has not only blessed my labours in his service in the ports I have been in abroad, but to-day I have no less than seven in the foc's'le, through my humble instrumentality, who are, like myself, believers in the Lord Jesus Christ."

The Open-Air Mission.

IN a letter on the work of the Open-Air Mission, Professor Moule, of Cambridge, says :—

"Founded by that true Christian man, John Macgregor ('Rob Roy'), it has now been carried on with persistent devotedness and energy for forty-eight years. Latterly, it has extended and developed its work with the vigour of a young institution, and additional funds are much needed. £3,000 are required for the operations of this season.

"Who is not aware that vast multitudes of English people never enter any place of worship, never open the Bible, never kneel in prayer? In face of all the developed efforts of regular Christian organizations, the state of things complained of by our fathers a century and three-quarters ago is with us still as regards masses and multitudes of our people; it is as if, for them, Christianity scarcely existed.

"The Open-Air Mission is doing a wisely planned and devoted work in view of this awful phenomenon. Its evangelists, chosen for their spiritual reality and their practical capacity, and trained for the specialities of their enterprise, visit racecourses, fairs, military encampments, hop gardens, and, in short, all accessible places of resort where the eternal truth of Christ for sinners may be proclaimed by living messengers and witnesses. The troop-ships for South Africa have been visited, with the cordial approval of the authorities.

"Never was there so great a need of the work of the Mission, a work carried on in full fidelity to its first traditions of pure, simple, living Gospel truth."

The Witch's Curse.

THE record of a year's work, that of 1900, in the Undenominational Christian Mission and Ragged Schools, Pontymoile, South Wales, is given by the superintendent, Mr. Thomas M. Wintle, in an attractive booklet, entitled THE WITCH'S CURSE. Graphically written, as indeed are other stirring tales from Welsh life by the same author, the pages illustrate the character of the soul-winning work done by the various agencies in operation.

It is well worth sending for a copy of the report to read the story of the conversion, at the eleventh hour, of the poor woman who was a victim to the curse of the Witch of Caerleon. Full of fear and superstitious forebodings, having sought in vain to get the spell of the witch removed by "Mother Marsh," of local notoriety (herself under conviction of sin through hearing the Gospel warning), she sends for the evangelist, who rejoices to point the trembling sinner to the Lamb of God, the Saviour of mankind. At length the power of the devil and the fear of death yield to the all-conquering power of Jesus' love, and the redeemed soul is set at liberty rejoicing in a new-found freedom. Sad despair gives place to a bright smile of confidence and joy, and soon the triumphant spirit passes into the kingdom of eternal bliss.

Equally interesting and more wonderful is the record of "Mother Marsh," who, though the daughter of Christian parents, like Ahab, sold herself to work wickedness in the sight of the Lord. Her knowledge of the Bible was prostituted to sorcery and deception. But God, through his servants in their open-air work, reaches and stops her in her wild career.

From five mission centres helpers go forth to testify, to exhort, and to warn the ungodly, while the rescue of girls from a life of shame, and preventive work in the case of younger ones, police court and temperance work, ragged schools, and social classes go to make up the circle and scope of the enterprise.

Mr. Wintle will gladly correspond with any desiring fellowship in this effort.

Troops at Lydd.—In response to the appeal made by Mr. F. E. Wootton for the erection of a new Soldiers' Home to take the place of the present incommodious building, a gentleman has offered £5 if it is opened this summer. Friends anxious to further this object should communicate with Mr. Wootton, North View, Lydd, Kent. Gifts of marked Testaments also will be much appreciated.

Mrs. Spurgeon's Book Fund.

OVER a quarter of a century has elapsed since the Book Fund was initiated, and during this period over 223,000 volumes have been distributed among many thousands of poor ministers of all denominations. The latest issue of "The Book Fund and its Work" (Passmore & Alabaster) contains many touching echoes of want relieved, homes and hearts cheered by timely gifts of literature, clothing, &c. The following is one of the hundreds of similar communications from grateful recipients :—

Dear Mrs. Spurgeon,—When I returned from one of my village stations last night, after visiting in the afternoon and preaching in the evening, I found that the carrier had brought the box, and my family were rejoicing over the abundance of its contents. One hardly knows what to say concerning your exceeding kindness. We shall all pray most earnestly that you may be restored to health and strength, and that your valuable life may be spared for many years to come. You can scarcely realize the joy which such gifts as yours bring into the home of a poor minister. The fitting on of the clothes, and the feeling that, at least for some time to come we shall not lack apparel, can hardly be imagined where it has not been experienced, but it is a wonderful relief to us.

One who was aided through the "Auxiliary" fund wrote in acknowledgment :—

My heart is full of joy, and overflows with thanks for your kind gift of books. They seem to be full of Christ, and therefore are precious. I have often longed to possess these volumes, and now the Master has led you to send them. Truly He knows the needs of his servants, and takes care that they are supplied. Some time ago the Lord led me to speak from the words, "There go the ships." I had been reading Mr. Spurgeon's sermon on this text, and felt constrained to preach from it; and truly it was a message from the Lord, for three souls were saved at the service, and have been following Jesus ever since. Thus we see how God is blessing the words spoken and written by him who is now with the King.

Sailors and Troops at Portsmouth.

UNDER the direction of Mr. Thomas Hogben the work among bluejackets and ex-service men and their families, which has its centre in the Welcome Mission at Portsmouth, gives many indications of widening usefulness. From the thirteenth annual report we learn that the reading-room still proves attractive to the men, and the workers have had the joy of helping Christians to a fuller experience of the riches of Christ, as well as of leading lost ones to the Saviour.

Seven years ago, one Sunday evening, a working man entered during one of the mission services; he was under the influence of drink, but the Gospel of God's love reached his heart. He was sobered, and the Saviour received him. Since that, the love for drink and sin has left him, and he has put right the wrongs of his old life. Some time after his conversion, he saved money and paid off old debts. Then he remembered that to obtain drink, when in the service of the devil, he stole a sum of money. He saw there was only one course for a follower of Jesus Christ. He must confess to the man he had robbed; but that was a serious business; it might mean imprisonment, and, being a pensioner, conviction would mean the loss of his pension. He sought help from God, and at the risk of ALL THIS, he made restitution. He has for seven years lived in the sunshine of God's love.

Recently a young man sailed for South Africa. Last Christmas he was a degraded, miserable young soldier in the K. R. Rifles. At a meeting in the "Welcome Mission," he saw his condition, ruined by sin. He was a wreck. A few days afterwards he realized that Christ had poured out his life to atone for his sins, and that He was living to make him a new man. He believed, and was saved. What difference did that make? His misery ended! He faced his back life, in which he had fraudulently enlisted, having deserted the Royal Navy, and done other wrongs. He confessed, surrendered, and bore his punishment in prison, being sustained by the smile of God. He is now proving "them that honour Me, I will honour."

In the numerous branches steady and persistent progress has been made. Open-air gatherings and dockyard meetings have proved the means of reaching labourers and others.

The Public-house Band from time to time visits the bars, distributing tracts and inviting men and women to the house of God. The Girls' Parlour has been a refuge from the streets for numbers of girls who have no comfortable home, and stand so much in need of protection. The annual report will be gladly supplied by Mr. Hogben, Edinburgh Road, Portsmouth.

Barbican Mission to the Jews.

THE new premises of the Barbican Mission to the Jews (the Gordon Calthrop Memorial) were formally opened on Monday last. They constitute a handsome and imposing block of buildings, and are eminently suitable to serve the purpose for which they are designed. In the basement are a capacious kitchen, baths, and some dormitories; the ground floor contains a large study, a cloak room, and the large room for meetings, which is elegant and comfortable. Above are large reading rooms, which are to be open to all Jews, and other offices; while the highest floor is devoted to committee rooms and additional dormitories.

Situate on the Whitechapel Road, that great artery of cosmopolitan traffic, and in the midst of the area which contains far more Jews than any other district of its size in the country, the new erection should prove a helpful undertaking, and give stimulus and encouragement to the energetic body of workers connected with the Mission.

The dedication meeting, held in the large hall during the afternoon, was attended by a large number of friends and supporters, under the presidency of Prebendary H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE, who called upon the secretary, Prediger C. T. LIPSHYTZ, to give an account of the rise and progress of the Mission, which he did, recording the various particularly at Finsbury Square and in Whitechapel. Many obstacles had to be overcome ere the present site was secured and the buildings erected, but the Lord removed them all. The sole object of the Mission is, of course, to testify to Israel of the true Messiah.

DEVELOPMENTS OF THE WORK,

Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE followed, pointing out the important uplift which has come to the Jewish race of late years. The removal of political disabilities has meant the entry of many Jews into public life, and the recurrence of Jewish names in the roll of those killed and wounded during the war in South Africa may be taken as one indication of their gratitude and of the readiness with which they respond to kindness and consideration. Summing up the debts, particularly on theological and sanitary matters, which we owe to the Jewish people, and showing our responsibilities for their spiritual, moral, and physical welfare, the speaker showed how eagerly we ought to see that the needs of the Jew are met.

In the absence of Lord Northampton, who had intended to be present, Mrs. WEBB-PEPLOE, in a few impressive words, formally declared the building open to the glory of God, and in memory of his servant, the late Prebendary Gordon Calthrop.

The next speaker was Rev. T. GEORGE, vicar of St. George's, Hornsey Rise, who, in the course of a sympathetic address, dwelt on the wonderful future which awaits the once down-trodden Jews, in the realization of the Divine purpose concerning them. Mr. George urged that with this thought in mind we shall speed the work of Jewish evangelization.

The rector of Spitalfields, Rev. W. H. DAVIES, who has 15,000 Jews in his parish, spoke with penetration on the necessity for giving the Jews distinctly to understand the FOUNDATIONS OF CHRISTIAN BELIEF.

Proceeding, the speaker warmly contended for more tolerance on the part of Jewish authorities towards those members of their race who think right, from time to time, to attend a Christian service, and who are at present the subject of keen persecution.

Some closing words on the grandeur of Israel's history came from Rev. H. B. MACARTNEY, who also met the objection of those who have regretted the existence of some thirteen missions in the Whitechapel district. The Jews are a shy and difficult people, needing individual dealing, and so far from thirteen missions being too many there is room for thirteen more.

Subsequently the visitors met in the reading-room for tea, and inspected the building. An evening meeting was held, which formed an appropriate conclusion to a day of blessing.

Scottish Labour Colony.

AN interesting account of the foundation and progress of the Scottish Labour Colony has been contributed to Good Words by Mr. J. Albinson. A number of well-known Glasgow citizens who had taken a keen interest in different experiments for dealing effectively with the problem of the unemployed, after long and careful inquiry into the working of "colonies" on the Continent, set on foot the organization under which the farm of Mid Locharwoods (near Ruthwell, Dumfriesshire) was purchased in 1897. The farm consists of 150 acres of arable land, forty of reclaimed moss, and about 300 of unreclaimed moss-land, and the produce is chiefly consumed on the premises. The fuel supply is, as a measure of economy, mainly derived from the peat lying ready to hand.

Men are tested before leaving the city as to willingness and suitability at wood-chopping and other similar work in the industrial shelter of the Charity Organization Society. During the four years nearly 200 men have been approved and sent down to the farm, with the result that in the majority of cases they have returned to respectable and permanent situations. Others have been restored to their friends, and a few have done good service with the forces in South Africa.

It is pointed out that while the Government is prepared to pay 10s. a week for the maintenance of cases under the Inebriates' Act, two men can be maintained on the Colony for that sum. The rather scanty income is the only barrier in the way of extension. Of the purchase price (£6,250) £4,000 still remains on mortgage, a considerable sum is required before the farm can be considered satisfactorily stocked, with at least £600 a year for upkeep—"for it can never, in the nature of the case, be self-supporting."

Work for a large number of men could be found in reclaiming the remainder of the moss-land, if only the very limited accommodation were increased; and this again could be cheaply done by workmen found among the inmates.

Scottish Notes.

AT a meeting of ministers held at Lochee last week, it was agreed that, profiting by the experience gained during the recent Combined Christian Movement in Dundee, joint open-air meetings should be begun on Sabbath afternoons.

The number of tracts issued during twelve months by the Scottish Monthly Visitor Society was 5,084,428, making the aggregate 243,004,406. The average monthly circulation for 1900 was 423,702, being almost identical with the figures for 1899; but there was really an increase of nearly 1,000 on the average monthly distribution, as smaller numbers were sent out as specimens.

The anniversary meetings in connection with the Dunoon College Union, held last week, opened with a conference and discussion on "Is a union of the Evangelical denominations of Scotland possible?" the chairman being Professor Sexton, F.I.C., F.S.C. (Glasgow). In the afternoon Principal MacGregor presided, and an interesting address was delivered to the students by Rev. Dr. Whyte (Edinburgh) on the life of Thomas Boston, of Ettrick.

At a public meeting in connection with the Edinburgh and District Union of Christian Endeavour Societies held last week—Rev. David Farquharson, Musselburgh, in the chair—Mr. R. W. Todd reported the number of societies in the Union to be now seventy-three, including thirteen junior. Rev. J. W. Dunbar gave an address on "Sabbath Desecration," Mr. Kenneth M'Lennan read a paper on "The Drink Traffic," and Rev. H. J. Colclough showed the alarming extent to which "Gambling" is spreading among the young.

The annual report of Glasgow City Mission asks attention to the present position of the work. During the past year the directors have been anxiously exercised regarding the funds placed at their disposal, and have discussed and are carrying out various means for increasing the revenue and lowering the expenditure. They have withdrawn agents from three districts, leaving to the neighbouring churches the responsibility of carrying on home mission work in these localities. During the last five years, on an average, the income from all sources has been £550 less than the expenditure. The deficiency has arisen through falling-off in legacies, and the death of liberal givers.

Shall we Change the King's Oath?

A PLEA FOR AMENDMENT.

IT seems a pity there should be so many, though they are, it is true, mainly persons connected with Protestant Societies, who want to maintain the terms of the King's Declaration, in spite of the almost universal desire among Protestants that its language should be modified.

For wherein is there profit or gain for truth in denouncing with opprobrium what to Roman Catholics is sacred? It is no question of the Protestant Succession to the Crown that is at stake. Nor is it a question whether transubstantiation leads to idolatry, or whether the worship of the Virgin is superstitious.

It is simply a question of whether the King from his throne, as ruler of many millions of Romanist subjects, is becomingly and worthily fulfilling that position by using such terms as "idolatrous" and "superstitious" regarding the tenets of religion held sacred by them.

For be it remembered that religious liberty is the basis of the Constitution which the King is bound to uphold. That seems to preclude him from using officially language regarding religious error which would be perfectly justifiable in the lips of a preacher. Let all the teachers of religion denounce as they think well the poisonous figments of false religions with which the world is over full, but the Sovereign of "a free people" is bound as such to stand aside, and while holding with all tenacity for himself and his children the Evangelical doctrine recovered at so great a cost, to grant an impartial liberty to all to hold and teach what they please, with this limitation only, that it shall not be such as tends to immorality, crime, or rebellion.

St. Paul, than whom none could have spoken more vehemently for truth and against error, was publicly justified by the Town Clerk of Ephesus as one who was not a blasphemer of their own goddess (Acts xix. 37). In other words, he asserted that Paul and his companion did not use terms of opprobrium or insult in respect of things held sacred by his audience. But here is the King compelled by law to take up a contrary position, and to arouse bitterness and pain in many of his loyal people by the intemperance of the language put into his mouth by the tradition of a past marked by every violence of religious rancour and strife.

Another point. Whatever may have been the causes that led to it at the time, it seems hard to find consistency in the selection of two out of so many errors for special denunciation; for while the King is required to inveigh against transubstantiation and Mariolatry, and to repudiate "mental reservation," there is not a word about Papal supremacy, purgatory, prayers for the dead, invocation of angels, auricular confession to priests, and all the rest of the unscriptural additions to, and violations of, truth that characterize the Roman creed. Nor ought there to be.

The system is at fault, and the object of our ancestors would have been better attained by a simple, unmistakable pronouncement for the Protestant religion as by law established.

The anomaly of it is that while thus protesting against Roman errors, the Church of England, over which the King presides as its head, is fast becoming leavened with the identical doctrines which he denounces, and while thus clapping the front door with a terrible bang, his own servants are admitting the enemy by the side one. It ought not to surpass the wit of man to discover language that would secure the end in view without thus offending; and as a dweller among an almost wholly Roman Catholic population, whose constant prayer for many years has been, that they may be led out into the liberty, glory, and joy of the Gospel of Christ, I am convinced that language like that of the Declaration is a stumbling-block and a hindrance in their groping for the light, and I think we all ought gladly to join in the present national effort to have it wisely altered.

GEO. F. TRENCH.

Ardfert.

THE JESUITS' OATH.

As is well known, a large proportion of the Roman Catholics in Britain are Jesuits, and it is believed that so are very many of the Ritualistic party in the Church of England. The honesty of these men is above suspicion! Everyone knows that they so follow out the injunction of Him whose name they bear, to let their "yea be yea" and their "nay, nay," that their oath is as good as their word—no one believes either. Such Nathanaels are they that they can hold dispensations to seem one thing and to be another, even to hold livings in the Church of England and to pretend to have its interests at heart, whilst all the time they are Papists, plotting its destruction. And in nothing does their crystalline singleness of heart come out more than in their agitation against the Coronation oath, which King Edward VII. so willingly took a short time ago. Its insinuations as to the possibility of a Roman Catholic swearing one thing and meaning another touched them to the quick. They justly felt aggrieved at its reflections on their honesty and sincerity. For at the bar of history, as well as in daily life, we would ask if a Jesuit has ever yet been convicted of telling the simple truth, or of using words in their commonly accepted sense?

Then the Coronation oath so contrasts with the oaths they are required to take, in tenderness for the feelings of others, and in respect for their opinions! The English Coronation oath tramples ruthlessly on the fine feelings of the Jesuits, and of all the adherents of the Roman Catholic Church, while their oath, forsooth, in contrast, breathes the most exquisite regard for the feelings of Protestants! Let us now see what is the oath the Jesuits take. Here it is, as given in the Masonic Record for April last:—

I do renounce and disown my allegiance as due to any heretical king, prince, or state named Protestant, or obedience to any of their inferior magistrates or officers. I do further declare the doctrine of the Church of England, of the Calvinists, Huguenots, and of other of the name Protestants to be damnable; and they themselves are damned, and to be damned, that will not forsake the same. I do further declare that I will help, assist, and advise all or any of his Holiness's agents in any place wherein I shall be, in England, Scotland, and Ireland, or in any other territory or kingdom I shall come to, and to my utmost, to extirpate the heretical Protestants' doctrine, and to destroy all their pretended power, legal or otherwise.

The Roman Catholic Church is a political conspiracy, and an immoral institution. That is what it is recognised to be in Italy, and the legislature deals with it accordingly. The above oath shows that the Roman Catholic Church in England, of which the Jesuits are an integral part, and the part that rules the whole, whose puppet the Pope himself is, is nothing else and nothing less. The question of religious equality does not enter into the matter at all. Religion is only a cloak, so far as the Jesuits are concerned, to hide teaching that saps all regard to truth and sincerity, loyalty and patriotism, and that incites to dishonesty in speech and action, and to bigoted intolerance and wicked treason.

A. R.

Venice.

Church Parochial Mission Society.

AFTER an absence of nearly ten months from England, Rev. Norman Bennet has returned to take up his school work with the new term. On arriving at the Cape in July last, he was appointed chaplain to the forces, and proceeded at once to the front to join Rev. D. Oliver at Bloemfontein. Here and elsewhere he had many stirring experiences in connection with the operations then taking place.

On returning to Cape Town, the opportunity offered of doing similar work to that done by Mr. Bennet for the last seven years at home. With the consent of his committee, he therefore visited all the principal schools, held special Boys' Missions during the Christmas holidays, and, later, a camp for public-school boys. The Dean of Cape Town took occasion to express profound gratitude for the God-graced and Christ-blessed work wrought by Mr. Bennet during his stay, and especially as missioner to Public School boys. Mr. Bennet will be fully occupied until the middle of August.

Irish Notes.

THE Police-Aided Children's Clothing Society of Dublin is doing an excellent work. During the past year 1,030 children in various degrees of raggedness were clothed by the Society, and it is satisfactory to learn that no attempts were made to do away with the clothes supplied. For the purposes of the Society, the city is divided among several ladies, who visit the people in their homes, and do not shrink from penetrating into the very worst slums. The children supplied are under the special supervision of the police, one of whose officers says:—"Only those who have actual experience of the manner in which the very poor of Dublin live, can fully appreciate the amount of good done annually by this Society."

The Presbyterian Missions continue to do a good work. In India during the year 398 persons were baptized, and several others are under instruction for baptism; in China many of the missionaries have returned to their respective stations, and the remainder are eagerly awaiting the opportunity to do so; in Ireland forty colporteurs are at work, and during the past three months these effected sales of Bibles and other religious books amounting to £378; in Hamburg the number of Jews attending the services is greater, and the baptisms are more numerous than ever before; while in Damascus there are twelve missions, with 535 attendants on public worship, and nearly 1,000 children in the day schools.

Welsh Notes.

THE Brecon Free Church ministers have sent a resolution to the Town Council protesting against the action of the latter body in authorising Sunday boating. In the resolution the ministers stated that they could not but view with alarm the attempts made to secularize the day of rest, a consummation that has been attended with such disastrous results on the Continent.

As a result of careful inquiry, it is estimated that 4,000 Welshmen in fellowship with some section of the Christian Church remove to London every year. It is inexpressibly saddening to find that only 1,000 of these join the Welsh churches of the metropolis. The remaining 3,000 cease to be in connection with the Church of Christ, and have to be classed amongst the "lapsed."

It is stated that the English Calvinistic Methodists of the Principality contemplate the formation of a Young People's Guild. It is to be hoped that the proposed organization will not mean the extrusion of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour. If the choice lies between the two, surely the preference should be for the latter society, if only on the ground of its *un*denominational and *inter*denominational character.

The Quarterly Association of the South Wales Calvinistic Methodists was held at St. David's, Pembrokeshire, on May 14-16, under the presidency of Rev. W. James, Aberdare. Owing to the remote position of the cathedral city, and the difficulty of access to it, there was only a small attendance of ministers and deacons. In addition to the meetings for business, there was one on "The Lessons of the Simultaneous Mission." This was a valuable and helpful meeting, calculated to stimulate all present to greater earnestness and zeal. Thursday was devoted entirely to the preaching of the Gospel, some sixteen sermons being delivered during the day in three of the chapels in the city.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

* I want to interest my* elder "Young People" every week in what Mr. Meyer writes on the Christian Endeavour Topic. Parents will also find the S.S. Lesson Notes suggestive and helpful for Sunday talks with their young folk. See next page.)

The Dolphin.

On the sea-coast of Africa is a town called Hippo. It is situated near a lake, and here people of all ages used to come and amuse themselves by fishing, sailing, or swimming. Boys especially loved to come and play by this lake. Their great enjoyment was to have a swimming race, and see who could swim farthest. A prize was given to the one who did best.

One day, whilst playing thus, a boy determined to try and swim to the opposite shore of the lake. When half-way across, a dolphin met him; now it swam before him and again behind him, at last taking the boy on its back, and carrying him out into the deepest part of the lake. The lad was rather frightened, but presently the dolphin swam back to the shore and landed him safely amongst his companions.

The people flocked around, and asked many questions; and the following day the shore was once again crowded with spectators. The boy lost his fear of the strange animal, and would jump on its back of his own accord, the other boys also following his example. The visitors at Hippo began to make a pet of the animal, stroking him when he came to shore, and pouring sweet oil over his body. Coming to the shore, the dolphin would roll itself on the sand till it was quite dry, and then plunge back into the lake again. At length, so many visitors came to Hippo to see and admire this animal, that (I am sorry to say) the chief men in the town put a stop to the excitement by having the poor animal killed.

In olden times the dolphin was considered a sacred animal, though perhaps, after all, it was only a fabulous creature, just as dragons were. There is a pretty verse of poetry that describes how once a nightingale rode on a dolphin's back. It says:—

Blaming Boreas, o'er the sea I was flying slowly,
For the wind of Thrace to me is a thing unholy,
When his back a dolphin showed, bending with devotion,
And the child of æther rode on the child of ocean. [at,
I am that sweet-chanting bird whom the night doth smile
And like one that kept his word proved my dolphin pilot.
As he glided onward still with his oarless rowing,
With the lute within my bill I did cheer his going.
Dolphins never ply for hire, but for love and glory,
When the sons of song require; trust Arion's story.

You will ask, what was Arion's story? Arion was a great player on the lute. He lived at a place called Lesbos, but spent most of his time at the Court of a great man named Periander, who was ruler of Corinth. Arion was very fond of travelling. At one time he sailed to Italy and Sicily, and there he earned a great deal of money by playing on the lute. When he thought of returning to Corinth he hired a Corinthian ship to take him back, for he trusted the Corinthians, as they knew him so well, and he had a great store of treasure to take back with him. However, when the ship got out to sea the sailors made a plot together to throw Arion overboard and to keep his treasure. Arion found out what they were plotting against him, and he begged them to take his money, but to spare his life. The sailors, however, refused this request, so poor Arion, in despair, jumped overboard. The sailors continued their journey, thinking that Arion was drowned. But they were wrong in what they thought, for at the moment that the minstrel jumped overboard a dolphin was swimming by, and he took Arion on his back, and landed him safely not far from Corinth.

When the minstrel arrived at the city, Periander would not believe his story about the dolphin and the plot that the sailors had made against him; but he kept him guarded by some soldiers until he could find out the truth of the story. Soon afterwards the sailors arrived, and Periander asked them what had become of Arion. They answered that they had left him safe and sound at Tarentum, in Italy. Then Periander began to see that Arion had been telling him the truth, and commanded the soldiers to bring Arion to him.—When the sailors saw the man whom they supposed drowned standing before them alive and well, they could deny their guilt no longer, and they confessed everything. Arion, in gratitude for his wonderful escape, set up, as a thankoffering, a statue of a man riding on a dolphin.

This story teaches us that wickedness will not go unpunished, though perhaps the punishment does not come all at once. The Bible says, "Be sure your sin will find you out." Every wicked thing that people do, God sees, though perhaps man may not see. No doubt the sailors thought they were quite safe, for Arion could not say anything against them when he was dead, but how shocked and frightened they must have felt when they saw the man standing before them to witness against them! G. O. M.

Croydon.

"The Christian" Bible Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 279).

Hidden Text.

Find and complete the following:

1. Thou art my God, I will exalt (Isa. xxiii.-xxvi.).
2. I will take my rest and I (Isa. xvi.-xix.).
3. That walked in darkness have seen (Isa. viii.-x.).
4. Is his mercy clean gone for (Psa. lxxv.-lxxviii.).
5. Shall be revealed, and all flesh (Isa. xxxviii.-xli.).
6. Fret not thyself because of (Psa. xxxv.-xl.).
7. Mercy and not sacrifice (Hos. iv.-vii.).
8. Is good for me to draw near (Psa. lxx.-lxxv.).
9. My heart is fixed; I will sing and (Psa. cv.-cx.).
10. In the day when I am in (Psa. c.-cv.).
11. That I sin not with my (Psa. xxxviii.-xl.).
12. He tarry till I come, what (John xxi.).
13. Behold, to obey is better than (1 Sam. xiv.-xvi.).
14. Shall they call on Him in whom (Rom. ix.-xi.).
15. But the Lord was my stay (Psa. xv.-xx.).
16. Shall many be made righteous (Rom. iv.-vi.).
17. To the wicked; but he that (Psa. xxx.-xxxv.).
18. Also are found sinners is therefore (Gal. i.-iii.).
19. Be more ready to hear than (Eccles. iii.-vi.).
20. With the baptism of repentance (Acts xvii.-xix.).

From each of the above take one word to form the hidden text, spoken by Jesus (Matt.).

[Children under ten do any 5; under thirteen any 10; under seventeen any 15.]

A star (*) is given to those under fifteen who find the hidden text.

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (278).

A. Abraham (James ii. 23).
B. Bartholomew (Mark iii. 18).
C. Courteous (1 Peter iii. 8).
D. Daniel (Ezek. xiv. 14).
E. Enoch (Heb. xi. 5).
F. Felix (Acts xxiv. 25).
G. Greeks (John xii. 20).
H. Holiness (Heb. xii. 14).
I. Idols (1 John v. 21).
J. Jebus (1 Chron. xi. 4).
K. Kenites (1 Kings xxvii. 10).
L. Lies (Prov xxx. 8).
M. Methuselah (Gen. v. 27).
N. Nimrod (Gen. x. 8).
O. Onesimus (Phile. 10 and 11).
P. Pekah (2 Kings xv. 25).
Q. Quenched (Mark ix. 43).
R. Revelation (Rev. i. 1).
S. Sanballat (Neh. ii. 10).
T. Tirshatha (Ezra ii. 63).
U. Uttermost (Heb. vii. 25).
V. Valiantly (Psa. lx. 12).
W. Whosoever will (Rev. xxii. 17).
X. 'Xcellent (Heb. xi. 4).
Y. Yarn (1 Kings x. 28).
Z. Zedekiah (2 Chron. xxxvi. 11).

Owing to the Whitsuntide Holiday there will be no "first" list, but a complete list will be given next week.

No. 278—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Douglas Anderson-Berry, R. and Ernest Aldwinckle, Olive Allam, Ethel Alford*.

B—Aline Bazett*, Ethel, Monica and Alison Bailey, M. Bartlett*, Stanley Burgess, Clara Brown*, Reginald Bristow, Clarence Bass, Emily Bridgewater*, Violette Birney*, Irene Bill, Dorothy Brooks*, Mary, Susette* and Helen* Beck, Millicent Buckingham, Mabel Baker, Annie Blaikie*, Ileene* and Hilda* Barstow, Herbert Braddon, Ada Bratt, Marion Boyle, Robert Bushby, Ella Berryman, May* and Gordon* Bligh, Mabel* and Evelyn* Barstow.

C—Guilelma and Josephine Cheal, Ida* and Mabel* Cole, Hilda Cook, Lydia Cleary*, Kitty Cope*, Gladys Clark*, Sophie Cohen, Anna Chaston*, Percy* and Stanley Chappell, May*, Willie and Kathleen Cullen.

D—Kitty and Violette Donaldson-Selby, Stanley Drew*, Willie, Catherine, Grace and Emily Dempster, Gwennie Davies, Dorothy* and Ralph* Daintree, Nellie* and Willie Dowsett, Violet and Mai* Davidson.

E—Leonard and Olive Ewin.

F—Percy Fitch, Kitty Faussett, Harry Flashman, Vincent, Olive and Mabel Fleet, Margaret Foottit.

G—Cissy Garfit, Winnie Gardner, Thomas Gilbert*, Dorothy, Gladys and Cicely* Gibson, Constance Gabbett*, David Gardiner, Janet* and Eva* Godwin, Margaret Guillaume, Grace Goldsmith.

H—Violet Hatch*, Elsie* and Dorothy* Hanson, Elizabeth and Mary Hooper, Sydney Hanford*, Ina Hemmell*, Ruth, Ince and Dorothy Hunt, Beatrice Hastings, Annie Horstcraft, Willie Hooper, Kathleen and Dorothy Heckford, Dorothy Havergal-Shaw*.

I—Daisy Iredell*, Nellie Irving*.

J—Linda Jones*, Louie*, Hilda* and Winifred* Jeffery, David Jameson*, Lawrence Johnstone, Emily Jones, Alfred Johnson, Gertrude Jones*, Amelia Jacobson, Betty Jacobs.

K—Hannah Knapp, Max and Eva* Kalb, Maurice Kalinsky, Annie Kingsford*, Margaret Kinnaird, Lionel Kepple.

L—Sidney* and May* Law, Georgina Lichtenstein*, John Leigh, Evelyn Lamb, Gladys Lee, D. and Mary Lynn, Beatrice Le Mesurier*.

M—Aldie* and Edith Margetts, Amy Mundy, Nellie, Grace*, Arthur, Lewis* and Owen* Morice, Margie Marston, Alec. Miller, May Mills, F. Messenger, Tom McGlone*, Alan and Nora Marshall, Geoffrey, Winnie, Mollie, Sidney and John Martin, Emily Mumford, Arthur MacLeod-Johnson*, Mabel Morris*, Dorothy and Charlie McMullin.

N—Emily Norris, Gerald and Hilda Nicholls, Nellie and Daisy Nicholas, Blanche Norcock, Amy and Maude Nottage, Eleanor and Valerie Noel.

O—Olive Oxley, Constance Osborne*.

P—E.* and K.* Pasley, Enid and Kathleen Pincott, Cyril and Leslie Partridge, Dora Phillimore*, Walter*, Katie*, Leonard and Winnie Pickneil.

R—Alice and Jessie Ricketts, Kate Rosenbloom*, Gussie and Marion Roach, Marion Richards*, Gordon Remington, Marjorie and Aileen Roberts, Ada Renals, Marjorie* and Edward Rainey, Sidney Robertson, Alice and Hilda Reid.

S—Mary Sowden, Rider*, Stanley and Glanville Smith, Esther and Amy Simmons, Flora Shadbolt, Frances Stileman, Betty Stocks*, Margery Smart*, Edgar, Constance* and Hilda* Schaeffer, Reginald Skinner, David and Stanley Soltau, David Seth*.

T—Florence Tomlinson, Frederick Taylor, Bertha Tranter, Dudley Toye*, Carleton Tuffnell.

W—Gertrude Williams*, Wilfred and Sydney Watson, Winnie Williams, Ella Winser, Leonard Wall, Dorothy White, Ellen Williams, Cecile and Phillis Wright, Mansfield White, Stephen Wilson, Fanny Wheeler*, Sydney Wisdom*, Ruth Warren, Freda Watts*, Bertram Webb*, Katie Welch*, Agatha Ward, Allan and Theo Wallis, Greta Watson*.

Y—Maurice and Gladys Young.

No. 277—Correct Answers (second list) received from:—

A—Mabel Ashwell, Margery Ashdown.

B—Lucienne Brabandes, Ernestine Buhl*, Beatrice Brouard, Frances Burnett*, Millicent Buckingham, Gordon and James Bryant, Helen, Mary and Susette* Beck, James Barker, Leonard Browne*, Nellie Bayford, Gladys Batting, Gordon Berry, Louise Betts*, Ada Bratt, Massy and Conyers Baker, Maud Bunn.

C—Dorothy Clarke, Cicely Craven, Hyde and Duncan Campbell, Annie and Ernest Cole, Alfred Cocking, Dorothy Cooper, George Crawford, Walter, Jessie* and Maggie Carter, Stanley and Percy Chappell, Henry*, David* and John* Colville.

D—Marie Denizot, Marjory Dyke*, Vera Dickinson, Ion. Tom*, Nessie and Mary Dunn, Violet and Mai Davidson, Constance*, Hilda and Elizabeth Drayson, May Darroll*, Harold Davis.

E—Olive and Leonard Ewin.

F—Meg and Agnes Fullarton, F. and Aileen Figgis, Eirene and Gwendolen Fennell, Charles and Frank Freegard, Laura Finch, Ethel Fowler, Phyllis Fry, Edward and Arthur Foley, Jeanne Faucon, Louise Filhol.

G—Margaret*, Stuart, Edith*, Jack and Dorothy Gray, Aimée Guilbert, Elsie Goudge*, Margery and Colin Graham-Brown, Dorothy Green, Edith Grieve*, Dorothy and Winnie Grove, Mary* and Daisy Greenacre.

H—Clarice Herivel, Violet Hatch*, Julyan, Norman, Florence* and Francie* Hoyte, Elsie Hibbs, Ella Hake, A. and May Handasyde, Violet Holford*, John C. Henderson, Ina Hemmell*, Edith*, Henry and Winifred Harvey.

I—Ami* and Isabel* Inglis, Elsie Irvine.

J—Linda Jones*, David Jameson*.

K—Philippa, Dorothy, Cecilia and Grace Kerr, Lilian Kyme, Susie Keen*.

L—Ethel Larwill, Alice Lee, Arthur Llewellyn*, Harry, Edith and Linda Lowe, D. Lynn.

M—Harvey Moore*, Ella and John MacMurray, Alice and Maisie* Mackenzie, Leonard, Dorothy and Winnie Mace, Charlie, Jessie and Alick* Morrison, Charlotte Millar*, Arthur MacLeod-Johnson*, Mary, Daniel, Margaret* and Dorothy* Morris, William* and Isabella* Morrice, Evie Miller, Ella, Margaret* and Joy* McFadzean, Mildred Morgan*, Bertie Mills, M. Marston, Barbara Maconchy, Marjorie Martin, O. Morice*.

N—M. Newall*, Amy and Maud Nottage.

O—Louie Oxley, Maude and Eva Oakes.

P—Myrtle Perry, Geoffrey and Clarice Peach, Mabel and Lucy Pelham-Burn, Christine and Mary Pearson, Isabel* and Gladys* Phipps, Olive Pine-Coffin, Enid and Kathleen Pincott, Ruth Pledger*, Connie, Eddie, Jessie*, Willie* and Ada* Palmer, Laura Percy, Isabel Perks.

R—Maggie Reid, May and Eva Rogers, Jessie and Alice Ricketts, Hope Robinson*, Jessie, Cecily* and Elmina* Roe, Olive Robinson*, Gordon Remington, Maggie Russell*.

S—Germaine Schumann, Ellen, John*, Effie* and Florence Simpson, Frankie Sellwood*, Stanley W. Smith, Poppie Stidolph*, Rose Smith, Agnes* and Hugh Shields, Lydia Shirley, Evelyn*, Gladys* and Violet* Shaw, Glanvill* and Rider* Smith, Mary Sowden, Flora Smith*, Lily and Ellen Scriven, Mary Spiganovicz*.

T—Flossie* and Charles Thomson, Willie Thomas, Marjorie Tracey, Margaret Tweedy, Doris and Madge Twite, Winifred Trotter.

U—Eva Usher.

W—Nellie, Rachel and Pringle* Wilson, Stewart and William Watson, Kenrick, Ernest and Queenie Wakeford, Rachel*, Georgina* and James* Wilson, Leonard Wall, Edith* and Edward Wheeler, Violet Walker, Mary Wilson, Arthur and Louisa Walker, Gladys*, Lilian* and Elsie* Willoughby, Bertie Walls, Ellie and Nora Wyatt.

Y—Robert Young.

FOREIGN LIST.

Nos. 260, 264—William Gray*. Nos. 262, 263, 265, 266—William* and Abigail* Gray (New Zealand). No. 269—Ella and Ethel Dyke, Jacqueline Mabille (Basutoland). Nos. 273, 274—Frank* and Vera* Sjöström (U.S.A.). No. 274—Dora Wallace (Canada).

Personal.

Many thanks for flowers sent during the week. They have given much pleasure wherever they have been sent.

Emily Mumford, Louie Oxley, May Panes.—I am glad to welcome you as new Searchers, and to know you are already interested in the studies.

Douglas Anderson-Berry, Mabel Wallis.—Thank you for your little letters. I am sorry to hear you are ill, and hope soon to learn that you are quite well again.

Ethel Larwill, William Gray (New Zealand).—Many thanks for your interesting letter.

Kathleen Pincott.—Your paper has been accepted. I hope you will soon be quite well again.

A. M. Butcher.—I am very glad to welcome your four scholars. Their papers have been accepted; but in future they must give chapter and verse to each answer.

Clara Brown.—You have missed twice this quarter.

Uncle Tom.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. J. Spiers, Hamilton, May 31-June 16. Mr. Arrowsmith, Plymouth, May 23; Weston-super-Mare, May 27-28; Reading, May 29-31; Surbiton, June 1; Margate, June 4-6. Mr. Hutchinson, St. Matthew's, Bayswater, June 11; Cranleigh, June 22-23; Gravesend, June 28; Southfleet, June 29-30. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Ventnor, June 9; Bonchurch, June 10; St. Lawrence, June 11-12. Mr. R. T. Archibald, Aberdeen, to May 30; Edinburgh, May 31-June 17; Sheffield, June 28; Leeds, June 29. Mr. S. J. Hewlett, with Caravan, Capel, Surrey, to May 30. Mr. E. Clark, with Caravan, Turvey, Bedford.

Village Conference of Caravan Workers in the Tent at Capel, Surrey, Monday, May 27.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending June 1.

Sun.	May 26	Acts	ii. 1-21	Thurs.	May 30	Acts	iii. 12-26
Mon.,	,, 27	,,	ii. 22-36	Fri.,	,, 31	,,	iv. 1-18
Tues.,	,, 28	,,	ii. 37-47	Sat.,	June 1	,,	iv. 19-37
Wed.,	,, 29	,,	iii. 1-11

Poona and Indian Village Mission.—The fourth annual convention of this Mission was held, February 6 to 8, at the head station, Nusarapu, in the native state of Bhor. Though a few members could not be present, fifty-five workers attended. "There was no excitement, but intense unity, love, co-operation, and quiet resting in God throughout, and we realized that He is able, under such conditions, to 'command the blessing' (Psa. cxxxiii). Our buildings at Nusarapur have gone up quickly, and will be completed before the monsoon—hospital, two orphanages, two bungalows, &c., so that we are now able to receive more workers." Mr. C. F. Reeve (director) hopes to visit England in May, and to address gatherings of friends in London and other parts of the country. Communications respecting appointments may be addressed to Mr. H. B. Bilbrough, 29, Park Hill Road, Croydon, Surrey.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, May 26.

Missions: Promises and Prophecies (Psalm ii.)

THIS is one of the greatest of David's Psalms. That it is his we cannot doubt, as we remember the Apostles' distinct affirmation (Acts iv. 25, 26). The twelve verses naturally divide themselves into four strophes of three verses each, and in each of these the scene varies.

The Tumultuous Rage of the Nations (1 to 3). We are caught up into the mount of vision and behold the raging of the people as the surging of a stormy sea. It is as though the masses of mankind were assembling tumultuously, as of old they gathered upon the plains of Babel, resolved to thwart the will of the Eternal, and cast off the chains of his authority. In palace and parliament-house alike the leaders of the people are assembled in grave conclave, devising measures of utter godlessness. It would be impossible to illustrate the imagery of this Psalm better than by reading the story of the French Revolution, where measure after measure was enacted with the definite object of blotting the Name of God and Christ, and all reference to religion, from the statute books. Let us take heed that these storms of passion do not gather in our own hearts when we are called to lives of consecration and resignation. How often the obdurate heart of man resolves to cast away the cords and bands of God's will!

The Eternal Throne (4 to 6). There is no sign of panic there. It stands without a tremor, as the rock at whose face the waves curl in fruitless discontent. All the tumult of the world—rulers and their people—cannot thwart or frustrate God's purpose to make Jesus King. What a comfort there is in this, as we think of the vast power of the drink traffic, and of the impurity, Sabbath breaking, and carelessness of our land and of the world. There is infinite comfort in looking away to God's eternal purpose to give the kingdoms of this world to his Son. Only thus can the agony of the Cross be compensated. Less than this would not repay for the blood-sweat, the crown of thorns, and the death of woe.

The Proclamation by the Christ (7 to 9). Jesus Christ is introduced carrying in his hand the roll, the seven seals of which have been broken by his pierced hand. He unfolds the decree which had been passed in eternity, and which must prevail, that the nations are to be his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth his possession. When you pray, be sure to quote this promise. There is nothing which gives such strength for prayer as the foundation of God's immutable Word. Faith places its finger upon God's covenant pledge, and looking into his face says, "Remember thy promise, and do as Thou hast said."

The Psalmist's Advice (10 to 12). Knowing the terror of the Lord he sets himself to persuade men. That terror is set forth in the closing verses of the previous strophe, which are again quoted in Rev. ii. 27. What a fearful looking for of indignation and judgment is here. How much wiser to turn to God with full purpose of heart, kissing the Son in token of submission. Have you ever done this? Have you ever made obeisance to Him, and pressed his hand to your lips? If not, make haste to do it, that you may escape his wrath, and know the blessedness of those that take refuge in Him.

Let us help to make Jesus King. We can do this in many ways, such as by prayer and sympathy, and a regular storage and giving of a per-centage of our income. It is most desirable that every Christian Endeavourer should set apart a fixed amount of every shilling or pound as it is received. This is God's inalienable right. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

The quarterly conference and the junior rally of the Bradford and District C.E. Union took place last week. In the afternoon an object-lesson on "World Wide Endeavour" was given by Mr. W. H. Hope to 400 Junior Endeavourers connected with the Union. Forty-eight societies responded to the roll call.

* * *

The Convention of the National C.E. Union of Wales will be held at Bridgend June 18, 19, and 20. Rev. James O'Dell, of Swansea, will preach the Convention sermon. A special Welsh meeting for Welsh-speaking Endeavourers will be held. All the meetings will be held in the spacious English Congregational Church, which has been placed at the disposal of the Convention Committee.

* * *

In May, 1900, a Christian Endeavour Society of nine members was organized among the Boer prisoners at Deadwood Camp, St. Helena. By December 29 the one Society of nine members had grown to five Societies of 400 members, and a local Union. There is now a prospect of two more Societies being formed with about 130 members. The secretary of the Union writes that he wishes to open a reading circle for the purpose of instilling the fundamental truths of Christian Endeavour, and of acquainting his associates with the progress of the movement in all lands, and with missionary work in general.

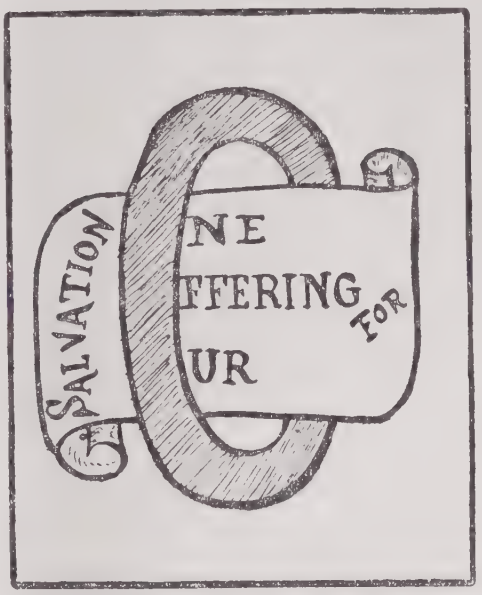
* * *

The Christian Endeavour pledge has been translated into the Samoan language. Literally interpreted it reads, "I hope in the strengthening grace of Christ, and I determine to endeavour to do everything in accordance with his will. I will read the Bible every day in private. I will pray to Him in private every day. And not only so, but everything that I know it is right for me to do, I will endeavour to do. To-day I become a member of this society of Christian Endeavour, established in Malua. I will endeavour to attend every meeting, unless I am prevented by some hindrance which is itself in accordance with the will of Christ. If I should be kept from attending the consecration meeting, I will send a note to the secretary, giving my testimony."

International S.S. Lesson.

June 2, 1901.

Jesus Our High Priest (Heb. ix. 11-28).
Golden Text: "He ever liveth to make intercession" (Heb. vii. 25).



Key to Blackboard Plan.—"One" and "once" are the two words repeated again and again, teaching us the grand truth that God was satisfied with the sacrifice of Christ once for all for the salvation of man.

"Figures of the True."

These words open up a deep Bible study for us.
Chap. viii. 5: "Shadow of heavenly things."
Chap. ix. 9: "A figure for the time then present."
(23) "Patterns of things in the heavens."
All these sentences may be carried out in the books of Exodus and Leviticus.

1. Jesus our High Priest.

The work of the High Priest in the Tabernacle. To offer to God sacrifices for sin daily. Once a year for the whole nation. To bear on himself the names of the tribes before God. To wear on his forehead "Holiness unto the Lord." To burn incense and light the lamps daily before the Lord. To be consecrated and specially set apart for the service of God.

The Levites were given to him to serve him. All these duties of the High Priest may be found to apply to Jesus Christ our High Priest.

2. Jesus our Intercessor (Golden Text).

This would be one of the duties of the High Priest of the Tabernacle. He came between God and the people. Jesus more than fulfils this type; we find Him called "Mediator." "Breaking down the middle wall of partition," "making peace," "abolishing the enmity," "reconciling," &c., and at the present time He carries on his intercession for mankind in heaven itself. Jesus began it on earth. In Luke xxii. 32, He tells Peter, "I have prayed for thee." See also Rom. viii. 34; 1 John ii. 1.

3. Why we need a High Priest and Intercessor.

Because we have sinned against a Holy God; because we cannot stand before God alone; because God cannot look upon the leprosy of the soul; because we so often provoke God. We disobey, we turn aside, we backslide, &c.

4. Instances of Intercession.

Reuben for Joseph (Gen. xxxvii. 21, 22); Jonathan for David (1 Sam. xix. 1-7); Paul for Onesimus (Philemon 10-21); Aaron with God (Ex. xxviii. 12); Moses with God (Ex. xxxii. 30-32); Abraham for Sodom (Gen. xviii. 23-32).

Many instances can be found of people coming to Christ while He was on earth on behalf of others.

Some Christians put down in a book the names of friends for whom they pray.

There is another Book with names written, called Lamb's Book of Life. Is yours there? Is the Lamb of God interceding for you?

The Y.M.C.A.

PERMISSION has been granted to the Lewisham Y.M.C.A. by the London County Council, to hold open-air services on the Hilly Fields and in the Ladywell Recreation Ground.

The Taunton Y.M.C.A. has arranged a tent mission from July 7 to 22. An admirable site has been secured, and a tent will be erected to seat 1,200 people. Mr. George Clarke will be the missioner.

Mr. W. M. Wilson, who has been a prominent worker at the Hawkstone Hall Institute, connected with Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, has been appointed general secretary to the Lowestoft Y.M.C.A.

The work of the new Australasian travelling secretary, Mr. J. J. Virgo, is already bearing fruit. An Association has been successfully started at Launceston, Tasmania, and other encouraging results are reported.

The Whitehaven Association has become possessed of a new building for the sum of £1,100, of which £1,060 has already been raised. Alterations and furnishing will involve an additional outlay of from £500 to £600.

During the past week the Bristol Association has held a series of special meetings for the promotion of Christian life and service. Amongst the speakers whose help was secured were Revs. E. J. Horsefield, F. B. Meyer, J. J. Luce, and W. Y. Fullerton. The attendances were large, and it is anticipated that the conference, which is a new departure, may become an annual institution.

A very interesting case of conversion occurred a few weeks ago. A man left Glasgow on a Friday night with the intention of committing suicide, but a storm being in progress, the captain of the steamship refused to allow any passengers on deck. On the Sunday night the man was invited to the evangelistic meeting, where he received deep spiritual impressions, and was led to seek the Saviour.

At the twenty-first annual meeting of the Croydon Association held on Thursday last there was a large attendance, and Mr. Arnold Pye Smith, J.P., occupied the chair in the absence of Sir Henry Bemrose, of Derby. Addresses were given by Revs. F. S. Webster, R. Baldwin Brindley, and J. H. Crickmer. The general secretary (Mr. J. William Cash) presented the annual report, which contained much of an encouraging and hopeful character.

The thirtieth annual public meeting of the South Branch Y.M.C.A. was held at St. James's Hall, Kennington Park, on May 14, Mr. W. H. Seagram occupying the chair. Rev. C. B. Sawday and Mr. W. Hind Smith were the speakers, and part was also taken in the proceedings by the Stockwell Orphanage choir. The secretary, Mr. E. H. Thomas, presented a report showing much excellent work accomplished, particularly by the distinctly religious agencies.

The fifty-fourth anniversary of the Islington Y.M.C.A. was celebrated by afternoon and evening meetings on May 13. Sir George Williams presided at the earlier gathering at the Priory, when there was a good attendance, and the speakers were Rev. G. F. Fooks (Barnsbury) and J. G. Henderson (Islington Chapel). Mr. W. H. Seagram presided at the evening meeting, which was held in Barnsbury Hall. Addresses were given by Rev. H. Elvet Lewis and Mr. W. Hind Smith. In the report presented by Mr. W. C. East, the secretary, thankfulness was expressed for many signal tokens of spiritual blessing during the past year: a steady increase of members and associates; a much better use of the rooms after business hours; the opening of a residential home; and a growing experience of fruitful effort greatly encouraging the committee for the future.

The annual meeting of the Mile End Artisan Association was held on May 7 at the Lycett Chapel, Mile End. Mr. Henry Conder presided. The secretary, Mr. John P. Fallaize, told in his report how the open-air meetings in the slums, at street corners, and in Victoria Park and at other open spaces, had been blessed to the spiritual enlightenment of many souls. Great blessing has also been received in the indoor meetings, at which the Gospel was clearly presented. The total number of meetings held was 600. Mr. E. Smith, L.C.C., gave a practical address on "What a Y.M.C.A. should be," and the chairman spoke words of hearty encouragement. A new building is an urgent need. The tenancy of the premises now occupied expires this year, and it is felt that if a suitable building could be secured there could be an important extension of this aggressively spiritual work among the people.

Obituary.

MRS. SMYLY, DUBLIN.

DUBLIN has lost a well-known philanthropist in the person of Mrs. Smyly, who passed away on May 16, aged eighty-seven. Half a century ago Mrs. Smyly began to devote her attention to the poor children of Dublin, and ever since then she has worked on their behalf with untiring zeal. She was mainly responsible for the establishment of seven Homes and four free day schools in Dublin, which are, at the present time, constantly benefiting 1,000 children. The home for destitute children, known as the Birds' Nest, owes its existence to her, and she took a keen interest in the ragged schools, where 400 children are fed daily. She was a supporter of the Irish Church Missions, and was identified with the evangelical element in the Church of Ireland. Mrs. Smyly was a daughter of Mr. Matthew Franks, and was married to the late Dr. Josiah Smyly. She was the mother of Sir Philip Smyly, Dr. William Smyly, and the late Mrs. Stewart, who, some years ago, with her husband, a missionary, and children, met her death in China at the hands of fanatical natives.

REV. JOHN DUNCAN, D.D., ABERDEEN.

By the death last week, in his seventy-fourth year, of Rev. John Duncan, D.D., Aberdeen has lost one of its leaders in Christian work, more especially on the social side. Born at Turriff, his childhood and youth covered the stirring times in Scottish Church history, which culminated in the Disruption of 1843. On leaving school he was apprenticed to the trade of gardening, but his talents could not be hid, and, while still very young, he was the leader of a literary society, a lecturer on temperance, and an evangelist. An invitation in 1851 to become an agent of the Scottish Temperance League led up to his appointment, seven years later, to the pastorate of Albion Street Congregational Church, Aberdeen, followed in 1878 by removal to the present Trinity Church.

From the first Dr. Duncan's work lay in the poorest districts, and by steady work he built up a large and vigorous congregation, approving himself a hard-working pastor among his own flock. For more than thirty years he acted as secretary to the Northern Association of Congregational Churches, and in 1887 occupied the chair of the Scottish Union. In 1893 the degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred on him by the University of Aberdeen, and a testimonial was presented to him and Mrs. Duncan in public recognition of his services to the community.

ARCHBISHOP TRAVERS LEWIS.

Dr. John Travers Lewis, who was Archbishop of Ontario and Metropolitan of Canada, until his resignation a few months since, died early on the morning of May 6 on board the Atlantic Transport Company's steamship Menominee, about 1,200 miles out from New York. He had been in feeble health for some time, and had been lying ill for nearly three months at an hotel in New York. On the recommendation of his doctors he started for England, but his strength began to fail from the beginning of the voyage.

Dr. Lewis, whose father was Rev. John Lewis, of St. Anne's, Shandon, was born at Garrygloyne Castle, Cork, in 1825. He undertook work in Canada, and in 1834 became rector of Brockville. In 1861 he was elected to the bishopric of Ontario, on the foundation of that see. During his long episcopate of nearly forty years there have been vast developments in Church work in Ontario, about 300 churches, besides schools and parsonages, having been erected under his direction. In 1893, by resolution of a general synod held at Toronto, he was made Archbishop of Ontario and Metropolitan of Canada, while Bishop Machray was given in the same year the titles of Archbishop of Rupertsland and Primate of All Canada, these being the two provinces into which the Canadian Church was henceforth divided. Dr. Lewis resigned his office of Metropolitan at the close of 1900.

About Books.

A Defence of the King's Protestant Declaration, by Walter Walsh (1s. Swan Sonnenschein), is a timely essay. Those who cannot consult great works of reference will thank the author of "The Secret History of the Oxford Movement" for giving the text of so many documents of critical importance. We trust this substantial pamphlet will have many readers.

Sunbeams on My Path; or, Reminiscences of Christian Life in Various Lands. By Ebba J. D. Wright (née Almroth). (2s. 6d. Nisbet.) We welcome a second edition of this choice little work. The "various lands" include Sweden, Switzerland, Russia, France, Germany, England and Ireland. The wife of Rev. Dr. C. H. H. Wright, the authoress has enjoyed signal advantages in her travels. With its numerous illustrations, the book deserves many readers.

Mr. Charles Inglis' book, Pegs for Preachers: Points for Workers, had the start of many successors, and it is gratifying to find it still pursuing its widely helpful course. A copy of the tenth edition is before us, and as once again we scan the pages we are impressed with the manifest utility of the book. Here are materials for scores of Bible readings and Gospel addresses, and uniformly set forth in the plainest possible manner. It is a good sign that this book is in such large demand, both in this country and America (2s. Morgan & Scott).

A First Primer of Apologetics, by Robert Mackintosh, D.D., Professor at Lancashire Independent College, is a valuable little book. Among the contents are chapters on the narratives of our Lord's Resurrection; the argument from prophecy; and testimony to Christ in history and in experience. The pages are thoughtful, and not unduly speculative. Teachers of senior classes and other thoughtful readers are here offered in small compass an apologetic plea which keeps steadily in view the ascertainments, difficulties, and needs of the present day. (3s. Elliot Stock.)

Pastor James Smith, of Coalsnaughton, has put another helpful volume within reach of hard-worked preachers and teachers — Handfuls on Purpose. Second series. (3s. 6d. Glasgow: Pickering & Inglis; London: Bagsters.) The three hundred and more large pages are filled with good things, and the highest purpose is ever obvious. Here are Expository Outlines, Bible Readings, Seed Thoughts, and illustrations, with a special section on the teachings of the Tabernacle, its furniture and priesthood. Mr. Smith's outlines are more substantial than those presented by some such books; they are, in fact, wrought out so as to afford good and instructive reading for the quiet hour.

The Century Bible is an undertaking possessing features of peculiar interest. Thirteen handy volumes, to cover the New Testament, have already been arranged for. The plan comprises the text of both Authorized and Revised Versions, with introduction and notes. The general editor of the series is Professor W. F. Adeney, M.A., of New College, London. The first volume lies before us—St. Matthew—edited by Prof. W. F. Slater, M.A., of Didsbury College. (Cloth, 2s. net; leather, 3s. Edinburgh: T. C. & E. C. Jack.) The notes are to the point, and from first to last the work is well done. Being of pocket size, and models of typography, these little volumes are sure to be popular.

Mr. Henry Frowde has published two singularly interesting souvenirs of the Victorian Reign. First comes The Souvenir Bible. It is handy in size for pocket use, being known as the Diamond 32mo. edition. It is printed on India paper, and its distinguishing feature is in the form of illustrations. Two of these are of Queen Victoria, one showing her Majesty at the time of her accession in 1837, and the other from a recent portrait. There are also seven other pictures—reproductions of the cartoons painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds, in 1778, for the famous window in New College, Oxford. These represent the seven virtues—Faith, Hope, Charity, Justice, Prudence, Temperance, and Fortitude—which were, it may be truly said, conspicuous in Queen Victoria. The second publication is The Souvenir Prayer Book, which may be had in ruby and pica type. It has been prepared for use, and not merely for preservation as a memento. It contains, therefore, the Prayers as amended by command of King Edward VII. in Council, together with the Memorial Service for January 22, a special title-page, and the illustrations from Reynolds' cartoons. In various forms and bindings, these are very attractive books.

Rev. T. Broughton Knight has written a tribute to the life and work of THE LATE REV. URIJAH REES THOMAS. Those who loved the departed minister will welcome the booklet. (3d. London: Henry Thacker, Memorial Hall; Bristol: W. F. Mack, 25, Park Row.)

Among the Churches.

In the Presbyterian churches Rev. John Bell has become minister of the church at Byker, and Rev. A. B. Macdonald of the United Church at Stonehouse.

In the Baptist churches Rev. G. H. Bebb has become pastor of Mount Pleasant Church, Blackwood; Rev. W. H. Tomkins of Yalding, Kent; and Rev. T. E. Waters of Carrog Church, Llangollen.

Mr. Colin F. Campbell, of the Church Army, preached to the convicts on Sunday week in Portland Prison during his periodical visit to the prison for the purpose of interviewing those convicts about to be released, who desired to start afresh in life.

Rev. J. H. Shakespeare is to congratulated on the progress which is being made with the Baptist Twentieth Century Fund, even if the whole of his sanguine expections have not been realized. The grand total to date is £178,609, the whole of which is to be employed in bona-fide national movements.

The Dublin yearly meetings of Friends, which always precede those held in London, report a decreased membership of fifty-two in Ireland during the past year. The numbers thus fall to 2,557. This decrease of about 2 per cent. is felt to represent proportionately the decrease in the population of Ireland as a whole.

At Union Chapel, Stoke Road, Gosport (Rev. W. T. Float), a staunch testimony is maintained for Protestant doctrine and practice. A circular recently issued states: "The services are conducted in a free and unconventional manner. We aim at making them attractive, not by outward display, but by simplicity and spirituality."

The Connexional Committee of the Methodist Free Churches have appointed Rev. John C. Brewitt, of Cleckheaton, an ex-president of the Conference, to be secretary of its revived Evangelistic Mission, and the summer campaign has been entered upon with a good deal of hopefulness by a great camp meeting in Nottingham Forest.

The Bishop of Ripon maintains touch with his past confirmees at St. James's, Holloway, and Christ Church, Lancaster Gate, by means of an annual letter and a social gathering and service. By the kind permission of the Dean—as in several former years—the gathering was held recently in the Jerusalem Chamber, Westminster, where about 200 met and renewed happy associations.

The reported gift of £10,000 to the C.M.S. has no existence in fact. The intimation of the gift originally came from a gentleman whose authority the secretaries had no reason to doubt, and this gentleman has written to the Society to express his deep regret that he has been deceived. The secretary of the Church Pastoral Aid Society states, too, that the alleged gift of £10,000 to that society has no foundation in fact.

Last Lord's Day was observed in most places of worship connected with the Presbyterian Church of England as "Missionary Sunday." Rev. Alex Connell, as convenor of the Synod's Missionary Committee, issued an appeal for increased liberality, especially in connection with China, where a number of native converts have been murdered.

The appointment is announced of Rev. Dr. Francis Paget, Dean of Christ Church, to be Bishop of Oxford, in succession to Dr. Stubbs. Dr. Paget, who is fifty years of age, is the son of the late Sir James Paget, and brother of the present baronet. He married the daughter of the late Dean Church, of St. Paul's, and was left a widower last year. The new bishop is the author of several works on religious and ecclesiastical subjects.

A number of the inhabitants of Accrington assembled at the Town Hall on Wednesday, May 16, to take leave of Rev. Charles Williams, the esteemed Baptist minister. The Mayor presided, and the gathering was representative of all sections of religious and political thought. Mr. Williams has left Lancashire for Australia viâ New York and San Francisco. His wanderings will be followed with kindly interest by many outside his own communion.

A letter which Rev. Stanley Rogers, of Liverpool, has just received from the martyred Rev. James Chalmers, of New Guinea, contains the following paragraph:—"Time shortens and I have much to do. How grand it would be to sit down in the midst of work and just hear the Master say, 'Your part finished, come!'" A peculiar interest attaches to these words in view of what has happened. The letter, Mr. Rogers thinks, must have been one of the last written by him.

Owing to the complete change in the population of Westminster during recent years, the members and congregation of Westminster Chapel (Congregational) have adapted their services to the altered circumstances, and introduce bright and aggressive Mission methods. Special attention is to be paid to the Sunday evening services, of which a feature will be Congregational singing, led by an orchestral band. The need of such a Free Church Movement in this district is emphasised by the vigorous work now being undertaken in connection with the new Roman Catholic Cathedral.

The Archbishop of York, on Saturday last, opened the first section of the Church House in Lord Street, Liverpool, the erection of which was earnestly supported by the late Bishop Ryle. The present scheme was adopted some years ago, and an extensive piece of property in a central position was purchased for £50,000. The section opened comprises a large board room, committee rooms, news rooms, and offices, where practically the whole work of the diocese will be transacted. In addition, the Bishop Ryle Library, the nucleus of which is formed by the library of the late Bishop and bequeathed for the purpose, finds a home in the building, where various diocesan societies are also to be housed.

Fallen Asleep.

Aged seventy-two. Rev. THOMAS THOMPSON, Wesleyan minister, who retired from circuit work at the last Conference, has died suddenly after fulfilling a preaching engagement.—Helston Wesleyan Circuit has lost by death Mr. THOS. WILLIAMS, who had been a local preacher for fifty-nine years.—Colonel JAMES BARKER (Salvation Army). He was largely instrumental in building up the Army work in Australia, and was particularly successful, both at home and abroad, in operations among the criminal population.—Ventnor Congregational Church laments the death of Mr. JAMES WILLIAM PRONTING, a deacon for twenty years.—Rev. G. S. REANEY, vicar of Christ Church, Greenwich.—Aged seventy-six, Rev. G. C. POLLARD, rector of South Walsham, Norwich, and an earnest evangelical.—At Dublin, Mrs. PARK, wife of Rev. J. O. Park, B.A., secretary of the Irish Methodist Conference, and mother of Rev. J. Foster Park, Methodist minister, Portadown; Rev. W. T. STOKES, late incumbent of Glendalough, co. Wicklow; Mr. A. A. GUINNESS, M.A., formerly proctor in the Irish Church Courts, and for some years secretary of the Protestant Alliance, aged seventy-three.—From enteric fever, at Ladysmith, Rev. FREDERICK H. TAPP. The Congregational churches of Natal have lost a prominent minister, who was in Ladysmith during the whole of the siege, and devoted a good deal of time and energy to work among the soldiers. At the Town Hall his services were often crowded. His work in the outlying districts was seriously interfered with by the war. Mr. Tapp's death occurred on April 22, after a third relapse.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

Whitsuntide. In this Whit-week, when Christians everywhere are thinking and speaking of the Coming of the Holy Ghost, we may well remind ourselves of the chief work which this Divine Person came to accomplish. He is here for the sole purpose of making Jesus real to men:—real to Christians as their Life, their Guide, their Master, and their Goal,—real to sinners as the Measure of their sin, and as their Redeemer. If we enter into the purpose of the Holy Ghost, we reach the heart of all things; if we stand aloof from Him, we are doomed to perpetual confusion. All the horrible evils of society will appear in their true light when once men are "convicted" that the crowning sin of all sins is to disbelieve in Jesus, who was the Father's perfect expression of all goodness and beauty. He who has no adoration for Jesus proves his blindness and his badness, and he is capable of anything, according to his environment. But to accept Jesus, as the Holy Ghost reveals Him, is at once to accept perfect redemption for ourselves, and to entertain unbounded hope for the redemption of others. Until a man receive the Holy Ghost, he knows nothing truly of himself, of his fellows, or of his God.

Opinion v. Truth. A very common remark made by persons who reject Evangelical truth is, "We are entitled to our own opinions;" and this utterance is supposed to decide the matter. We wish it were possible to reprint, and widely circulate the conclusive reply of that Christian philosopher, Sir David Brewster, to those who, in his day, put forth their "opinions" as synonymous with concrete truth. Of his reply (as suitable for our own time, with its looseness of thought, as it was for his), one paragraph may be useful to recall:

> What is opinion? Is it truth? And if it be not truth, is it anything but un-truth—falsehood and error? Conviction is a perception of the truth itself. Opinion is only a guess at it. No man is entitled to hold it as the truth, or act upon it as such, for it is plain that he can at will change his opinions, but the truth will not change. . . . Opinionative people are great self-deceivers, and, besides being very dogmatic members of society, they are the most easy of all to be misled.

Christian Correspondence. A recently-discovered letter, written by John Calvin to a lady who sent him fifteen florins to supply the necessities of himself and the Protestant fugitives whom he helped to his own impoverishment, brings once again to light the practical simplicity of the great theologian. In his note of thanks, Calvin said in effect:

> In short, you are assured of having done an act that is pious in the sight of our Lord, and which He will place to your account.

The language suggests the Apostle's wish as set forth in the Epistle to the Philippians: "Not because I desire a gift; but I desire fruit that may abound to your account." The complete letter-writer does well to follow such excellent models. There is call for a larger use, in friendly correspondence, of words that are fragrant of grace and truth. Let Christian affection find expression, also that faith in God which not only "overcometh the world," but keeps present things in their secondary and proper place.

A Veteran's Farewell. Unique and pathetic interest attaches to the meetings to bid farewell to the venerable missionary, Dr. John G. Paton, of the New Hebrides, which are to be held in Exeter Hall on Wednesday next, June 5. Seldom in missionary annals has the heart of Christendom been so stirred as by the life of the aged apostle of the New Hebrides; and the spectacle of the brave veteran returning to Australia and to his beloved Islands—at the age of seventy-eight—determined to live and die in the sacred cause to which he has devoted his life, should arouse the missionary enthusiasm of London. There should be crowded audiences to wish him God-speed, not only to encourage and cheer the aged missionary himself, but also to give him the opportunity of arousing new zeal for the cause of missions the world over.

A Noble Martyr. It is difficult, from a human standpoint, to understand the reason why such men as James Chalmers ("Tamate"), of New Guinea, are permitted to perish in the performance of their duty. But God's ways are not our ways, and out of our supremest misfortunes He often brings forth his mightiest results. The hearts of all good people at home have been solemnized and touched by this latest addition to the noble army of martyrs. And though the savages who slew him slaughtered their present chance of hearing about their Saviour, they will not be left long to their heathen darkness. Out of Chalmers' grave, and that of his brave young colleague, will rise a noble harvest of souls in time. Admiral Erskine's tribute in The Times to his old friend and comrade fittingly suggests the situation:—

> An earnest and true disciple of his Master, he has yielded up a life of self-negation and devotion to duty to win immortality and a crown of glory which fadeth not away. And it would be entirely in keeping with his Christian character—a humble follower of the Great Example—if his last thoughts and fervent prayers were offered up in the last bitter hour for the poor benighted savages who unwittingly have done to death their truest friend and benefactor.

Parliament and Gambling. The Bishop of Hereford deserves general gratitude for his courageous attitude in the House of Lords towards the gambling mania, in asking for a Select Committee to inquire into its increase among all classes, and to suggest legislative measures for checking betting abuses. A prominent member of the betting fraternity had written remonstrating with him on his proposed action, suggesting that he should leave this sort of thing to the "Nonconformist conscience," and reminding him that bookmakers are good Conservatives and loyal supporters of the Established Church! Fortunately, the Bishop's conscience would not allow him to leave the matter alone. Notwithstanding the discouragement of the Premier, it is a question to be faced and dealt with. Already gaming institutions are illegal, and the police show occasional zeal in enforcing the law. But Parliament can go much further, in suppressing incentives to the pestilent vice whereby men and women are decoyed into ruining their morals and often their homes as well. Still, as the Morning Post observes, "the prohibitions of Parliament can easily be obeyed, and yet there may be as much betting as ever." Private, or semi-private gambling is more widely spread than public gambling, and it is this that constitutes such a menace to our youth. The question is, how is it to be dealt with? Legislation alone will not eradicate it, although we must press for what it can do. We must go to the sources, and treat it as a moral question, which every parent and teacher and preacher is bound to deal with radically. It is of little use to denounce it as a vice, punishable by law; we must get further down, and show it to be a SIN against God and men. Mr. Mackenzie's little book, "The Ethics of Gambling," treats the matter forcibly. It would be a wise thing for all who have any sort of contact with youth to peruse this small volume.

The Growing Militarism. Those who just now are ready to back up any scheme of military re-organization, however costly, and who are beginning to talk in "dark sayings" about the possible need of conscription, would do well to ponder the wise and strong words of the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the cost of militarism, in the recent debate on our financial position. Sir Michael Hicks-Beach said:—

> I never will be a party to any attempt at such a military expenditure as would be comparable with the great military Powers of the Continent. I do not believe that such expenditure is necessary for this country. It would be the utmost folly to do anything of this kind, and I never will be a party to it. With a deep consciousness of my position as Chancellor of the Exchequer, I say I do not believe it is possible for us to continue at the rate of increase which we have seen for the past six years, without the gravest danger to that financial system which has been so long established in this country.

The Habitual Drunkards Bill. If this measure, which is to be taken as a Government Bill in the Commons, is passed into law, it will put a powerful weapon into the hands of the authorities for the suppression of one form of drunkenness. The Bill provides for this evil in an honest and drastic manner, and if is not softened down in the Committee stages it is calculated to do a great service. It provides that any person convicted as an habitual drunkard, who shall within three years attempt to purchase any intoxicant, shall be liable to a fine of 20s. in the first instance, and 40s. afterwards. There are penalties also on the vendor of stimulants to such a person, and provision for the better supervision of licensed houses by the police. If the friends of temperance in Parliament join their forces, and back up the Government in this attempt to deal with a great social evil, they have a bright prospect of carrying the Bill through triumphantly.

Lordly Brewers. The difficulty of passing Temperance Reform legislation in the House of Lords is to some extent explained by the following summary from a Parliamentary report as to the number of liquor shops owned by members of the House of Lords. The leading "liquor-shop keepers" among them are as follows:—Lord Derby owns 72 licensed houses, Duke of Bedford 50, Duke of Devonshire 47, Duke of Rutland 37, Duke of Northumberland 36, Lord Dudley 33, Lord Cowper 22, Lord Salisbury 12, Lord Dunraven 11. To this we must add the fact that many of the titled nobility are financially interested to an enormous extent in brewing and distilling companies. Is it any wonder that those who desire thoroughly to reform the "trade" find their chief and most stubborn opponents in the Upper Chamber?

"The Problem of the Upper Classes." In referring to the frequent announcements of the gift of large sums of money for church building, a contemporary says:—"The personal claims of Christ cannot be compounded for by a money payment." It is right that a high moral standard should be held up before the poor, but it is just as evident that the Gospel of purity and nobility of life should be preached boldly to those in higher and more responsible positions in society.

The Prevention of Poverty. An interesting little book, published by Horace Marshall & Son, CITIES AND CITIZENS, contains some suggestions as to the relief of the poor which might with advantage be adopted in this country. In one or two German cities—says the volume—the principle which underlies the system adopted is to prevent poverty rather than to relieve it when it appears. By means of a simple organization, the needs of any person who is incapacitated by sickness, loss of work, or any other cause, from earning a livelihood, are at once made known, and help is forthcoming. One great advantage of such a method is that it preserves to the unfortunate his self-respect, and so directly helps to prevent him falling into grovelling poverty. Things in our own land are tending in this direction, but very slowly. In several particulars of social work, Germany has set us a good example. Our readers will remember with pleasure, "The Colony of Mercy."

"Plain Living and High Thinking." This is a proverb that is usually more honoured in the breach than the observance, and the Lancet speaks some much-needed words of warning against the growing evils of luxury in food and drink. Plain food, it points out, is more acceptable to the bodily economy than rich and dainty fare. Gingerbeer and cockles are better for us than champagne and oysters, calf's head than turtle, and the eggs of the domestic fowl than those of the plover. Why, the Lancet significantly inquires, waste 10s. on a bottle of champagne, when you can get more wholesome gingerbeer at a penny? Or pay 3s. 6d. a dozen for oysters, when you may have excellent cockles fifty for a penny? It is like burning diamonds instead of coals in the steam-engine—we waste our money and really get nothing for it! This is straight speaking, which is to be commended to all who indulge in needless luxuries of diet, and then complain that they cannot afford to help good causes because of the hardness of the times and the drop in their business receipts.

True Wealth. It is a happy circumstance, as a wholesome set-off against the vulgar parade of wealth to which we have been lately accus-accustomed, that several millionaires are offering a fine object-lesson upon the art of properly using the trust of wealth. Mr. Carnegie's gifts are common talk, and they are all in the right direction. Now we have a report in the New York Tribune from an address given by Mr. Rockefeller to the members of his son's Bible class, in which he urges young men to treat their wealth as a trust, and to use themselves to giving:—

> The acquisition of money is not the greatest thing in the world. Success is not measured in terms of money. Not all men have such great responsibilities and possessions as Mr. Carnegie, but you may have that which is greater than gold, or railroads, or fleets of steamships, and that is the satisfaction of having a splendid character. I say that a man who is without great property may be richer in the possession of a Christian spirit.

Words like these, amidst the fever of gold-hunting, are as cold water in a parched land, and are worthy of the widest circulation.

The Failure of Spiritualism. Considering the furore occasioned by various forms of Spiritualism half a generation ago, and the large claims made for it as a "religious" force, it is remarkable how utterly it has fallen into neglect and disrepute among thoughtful people. That this is not confined to this country, is shown by the following summary of results concerning it, published in the German paper Die Christliche Welt:—

> 1. It has brought to light a series of facts, the accurate and unprejudiced psychological examination of which should widen our knowledge of the soul and of the world.
> 2. So far as the formation of a true science of life is concerned, it has shown itself of very little worth, since it offers us no conclusions on the highest and final questions.
> 3. It has done nothing for ethical progress. The practice of it has, in fact, wrought much moral harm.
> 4. It lends no real support to the Christian religion. Every attempted union of the Church with Spiritualism has been at the expense of true Christianity.

This is a fair statement of the true "inwardness" of Spiritualism, and should be a warning to those who are foolishly tempted into dabbling with a "science" which disorganises the mind more than almost any other form of morbid curiosity as to the Unseen.

Women's Influence on Soldiers. A point that is very often forgotten in dealing with the difficulties of a soldier's life was emphasized by Sir Charles Warren at the annual meeting of the S.P.G. The noble General regarded the removal of a young fellow from all home ties into the artificial life of the barrack-room as the source of most of his temptations; since the banding together of men only, of whatever class, inevitably leads to degeneracy of thought and manners. The soldier cannot do without woman's society, and he will go in one direction or another to find it. It is of the highest importance that he should find it in the right direction, hence Sir Charles lauded the Soldiers' Homes, where men came under the influence of good, Christian women, but he pleaded that much more should be done to supply something akin to home life and privileges.

Romanism at Home. Some little time ago the Spanish Government appealed to the Pope not to permit the emigration to Spain of any of the Orders who will be dealt with under the measure now passing the final stages in the French Chamber. A further request has now been sent to Rome for a revision of the Concordat, which dictates the relations between the Roman Church and the State, and amongst other noteworthy things, it is asked that there should be instituted a vigorous control by the Government of all religious orders. In the face of this presumably necessary action, on the part of the Romanist administration of a country which for centuries has been a hotbed of Popery, it is more than ever impossible to contemplate with equanimity the suicidal action of England in regard to the growing usurpation of Rome.

"Not Many Days Hence."

ACTS i. 5.

THERE is no hurry in God's ordinary work. In grace, in providence, and in history, as well as in nature, it is commonly "first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear" (Mark iv. 28).

For thousands of years the fallen world waited for the fulfilment of the promise made in Eden—the Seed of the woman to bruise the Serpent's head. Not till "the fulness of time" did God send forth his Son. And for the promised return of Christ in glory the Church still waits—so long that we have a reassuring Word to remind us that, in the face of all appearances to the contrary, "the Lord is NOT slack concerning his promise." "Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for Him," is one of our standing orders; for it still remains true of Christians now as in those apostolic days, "Ye have need of patience" (Heb. x. 36).

Scripture and experience alike enforce the lesson, and it is not necessary to do more than call attention to it as lending new force and emphasis to that huge promise which was to be fulfilled to the early Church, "not many days hence." Other things may be desirable; the presence of the Holy Ghost was a necessity to the Church. How speedily the Pentecostal gift was outpoured by the risen and glorified Christ, we all know. Does not the speediness of the gift illustrate, in a striking way, that word of our Lord's which is so often upon our lips, but which we are so slow practically to believe, "How much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him!" (Luke xi. 13)?

Would not the prayers of many of God's children give the impression, instead, that the Lord is with regard to the gift of the Holy Spirit? Do not many seem to forget that the Spirit was actually given, "not many days hence."

HARD TO BE ENTREATED

Glance through the hymns of the Church of Christ, and it will be found that for every hymn of praise and thanksgiving for God's great gift, there are many hymns of prayer for the Spirit to come down. Is it not time we recognised in more of our "cheerful songs" the gift so promptly and abundantly granted? Is it not time that we gave thanks to God for his stupendous gift? Inquirers after salvation are told—and rightly told—to give thanks for a salvation which is freely and fully given, through the finished work of Christ. Would it not be well if prayer for the Holy Spirit were turned into of that silent, long-suffering Guest of whom it is predicted, "He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you" (John xiv. 17)?

THANKFUL RECOGNITION AND PRAISE

And yet the more we recognise that the Spirit was really given as promised ("not many days hence") at Pentecost, and the more we recognise, too, that the gift has never been revoked or withdrawn, so surely we shall the more feel, also, our utter dependence upon our risen Head for daily supplies of the Spirit.

The two figures used by Christ preclude the possibility of regarding any outpouring of the Spirit as exhaustive. "The water that I shall give shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life" (John iv. 14). The blessed Spirit must ever be a well, not a mere cistern, however large.

Again, the promise of the Spirit as "rivers of living water" teaches the same continuity of freshness of the Divine gift.

A friend of mine has a piece of land through a small part of which flows a beautiful river. In one sense the whole river is his, and yet, practically—and actually too—this possession is constantly new. He has, every day, as much as he needs and more, but yesterday's supply has not accumulated. That water which he did not use yesterday is gone, and yet the river is still full for to-day's needs; for the source is the same, and unexhaustible. In like manner the soul in communion with the risen Christ will suffer no lack of the Spirit.

Eternal life He came to give,—
The life by which his people live!
"Life more abundantly" He still bestows:
From Him, the living Head, the current flows.
The members of the mystic body share,
E'en here, the pledge that one sweet dawn shall break
When his own glorious image they shall wear,
And "with his likeness" satisfied shall 'wake.

With full and ready hands was outpoured—and so speedily too—the sacred gift, as pledge and sample of the whole inheritance which is ours in Jesus. Is there, can there be, any retraction? Is there less readiness now at the Source than formerly to send the copious river through our heart's small plot of thirsty ground? Is not, indeed, everything which we, in vague fashion, term "spiritual" really OF THE SPIRIT? Can there be any genuine "spiritual work," "spiritual experience," "spiritual worship," or spiritual life, whatever apart from the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven?

LUCY A. BENNETT.

"Things Written Aforetime."

(ROMANS xv. 4.)

THERE is but One to whom the lost dare* come—
O Son of Man, thou callest lost ones home.

There is but One who will the lost receive;
Blood-bought. Thy shoulder care—they Thee believe.

There is but One who can sin's wrong redress—
Thou, Lord, alone, canst thus befriend and bless.

Needy and poor, and wearied, sore at best,
Sinners draw near to Thee, and know thy rest.

Centre of richest love, the Spirit's bond—
Love, passing knowledge, glorious all beyond.

Wealth manifold, sweet Name in which they trust,
Hallowed indeed that Name to trembling dust.

Only one Way, one Truth, one Life, for such;—
True, tender, keep us, for we owe so much!

Debtors to grace, O blessèd One, we'll rest,
Joy of our hearts, in Thee, and on thy breast!

Most precious thought, O Saviour, Jesus Christ,
Thy grace all through the ages has sufficed.

One sacred page, bedecked with jewels bright—
Undimmed, untarnished, is its blessèd light.

One vision gilds the covenant word unpriced;
All praise to God for gift of Jesus Christ!

And One Interpreter, the Spirit sweet,
Who hidden wisdom gives at Jesu's feet.

Author and Finisher of precious faith,
Oh shut us up to what the Gospel saith!

One blessèd Hope, heaven's sheen of glorious noon,
Though time rolls swiftly on, Thou comest soon!†

One final Home, Love's rapturous prospect this;
Earth's desert passed, with Christ in endless bliss!

Only one joyous song of songs be raised;
The Lamb was slain! The Triune God be praised.

JAMES KNOWLES.

* The writer once asked a very poor and terribly afflicted old woman, whose features were almost obliterated by the ravages of cancer, "Are you afraid of death?" and promptly received the significant answer, "I'm not afraid of God!" So truly was Jesus a panacea for all life's ills and distresses.

† Consummation's reality indeed. Witness some foretastes. Called to the bedside of a dying saint, said the dear one to me, "Why tarry the wheels of his chariot? Let me go, for the day breaketh!" and there and then departed to be with Christ. And whilst moistening her lips with a little wine on a feather, another dear one, raising her hand to prevent further administration, said to me, "I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the Kingdom of God," and instantly "fell on sleep."

The Epistle of James.

BY REV. T. A. GURNEY, M.A., LL.B., SWANAGE.

II.—The Last Message Before Judgment.

THE determination of the date of James' Epistle is vital if we are to regard it as a last message. We have assumed that it was written on the eve of his martyrdom, that is between A.D. 61 and 64. It is one strong argument for this date that such a view alone gives full point and meaning to its special exhortations and warnings, and its special historical references. Among such are:—the warning to the rich Jew (i. 10); the promise of the crown of life at the Lord's hands (i. 12); the guilt of respect of persons in the case of those "about to be judged by a law of liberty" (ii. 12); the vindication or condemnation of faith by its character at its last moment (ii. 14-26); the stern warning against sins of tongue, when we compare it with the bitter religious strife which immediately preceded the siege of Jerusalem (iii. 1-12); the condemnation of wars and fightings which sprang from lust and ended in murder, with the lurid light flung upon them by those last dread years when, under Felix, "rebellion became permanent," and "the number of the robbers whom he caused to be crucified was incalculable"—a time when the High Priests sent their servants to the threshing floors to take by force the tithes which belonged to the other priests; evils which became intensified under Porcius Festus and Ananus, by whom probably James was killed. One verse (v. 6) reads almost like the literal prophecy of that murder. The terrible warnings to the rich Sadducees (v. 1-5) on the supposition of a late date become intensely real. So does the counsel to the true Christian to "stablish his heart because the presence of the Lord is at hand" (v. 8, R.V. margin).

THE SPIRIT OF FORBEARANCE

urged is the more reasonable when "the Judge standeth" already "before the doors," (v. 7-9, R.V).

Other facts in favour of a late date, which come with a cumulative strength when taken together are:—the practical moral tone, with its emphasis of already familiar truth; the pointed use of Old Testament ideas and illustrations; the evident address thereby to the Jewish mind as such; the absence of direct reference to great controversies in view of the impending doom; the address to the "Twelve-tribed nation" as a whole. The Judaic tone is thus accounted for, without needing to assume an early date. If it is a last message we should expect it to be intensely Jewish, to state truth on the old familiar lines, to represent Christianity as the fulfilment of Judaism, to abstain from the use of terms which might even seem to savour of Gentile Christianity. Hence the church is the "synagogue." Its organization is on Jewish lines. Its place of meeting is probably the same. Jew and Christian are addressed in turn. No date, however early, is early enough for such facts.

The same applies to the absence of allusion to the admission of the Gentiles. We should not expect it here. On the other hand, one of the few actual time notes in the Epistle, the reference to existing persecution of Christian Jews, corresponds with the troubles which took place from A.D. 61 to 64. Read this Epistle in the light of the thought of the overshadowing nearness of the end; all is clear. It probably, by its tone, hastened James' martyrdom, and in any case it cannot have long preceded it.

The features and style are in complete accord with its aim. They are derived from the innermost character of the writer and from the conditions under which he wrote. They may be summarized as intellectual terseness, imaginative vividness, moral intensity. Word pictures succeed one another with a swiftness and variety which from any other writer would be baffling. Yet, in spite of their startling brevity—which is intentional—they leave an abiding impression. They are never weak, or vapid, or diffuse. They clench home a truth, stamping it upon the memory with a vividness which will keep it there. They are complete, even though sometimes contained in one word. They are drawn from every quarter. Old Testament lives, Abraham, Job, Rahab, Elijah, contribute several. But James always hands them on to us

STAMPED WITH HIS OWN INDIVIDUALITY.

The natural world furnishes other pictures. The advancing and retreating wave, white with the surf of the oncoming storm, or sobbing in the after swell along the shore—fit picture of the "two-souled man"; the sun arising upon the beautiful Judæan fields with their undulating sea of waving wild flowers and grass; the burning wind of the eastern desert withering the calyx of the flower—picture of the whole state of man apart from God; the huge, unwieldy ships, driven of so fierce winds, like Paul's ship in Adria, yet turning, unlike man's rebellious nature, whithersoever the impulse of the steersman's hand may guide; the spark, kindling in scorching Palestine a whole forest as in a moment, as doth the mischief of the tongue, Gehenna-inspired; the beasts, and birds, and fishes, all alike tamed by man, who cannot tame himself; the fountains bursting forth from the same rocky cleft ever the same, unlike inconstant human nature; the ripe fruits in many a shady olive grove; the fig-tree clinging to many an ancient wall; the vine interlocked with the stones of Jerusalem; the happy harvest-reaping of righteousness sown in peace long before; the patience of the husbandman watching and waiting, not only for the rain which comes just after the sowing, but for the rain which precedes the ripening.

THE INCIDENTS FROM HUMAN LIFE

are also vivid and suggestive. Now the "two-souled man," vainly striving to compass two worlds; now the business man, always on the move, always travelling on (i. 11), never reaching the goal he seeks; now it is "formalist," excellent party man, very orthodox, very "religious," but "run away with by his tongue" (i. 26). Behold "the gold-ringed man" (ii. 2), self-important, clad in shining raiment, creating a stir as he comes into service late, valued for his pocket; yonder the rich poor man, heir of heaven's broadest estates, relegated to a corner. Here is the Mr. Temporary of the New Testament (i. 24), here the Mr. Talkative, soi-disant philanthropist, bowing out his "brother" with benedictions barren of benefits and phrases, which fill neither with fuel nor "fodder" (ii. 16).

Against these are brighter pictures: the eager student of the Word stooping down to ponder the perfect law of liberty (i. 25); the meek wise man with his beautiful and fruitful life; the "ritualist" of the liturgy of love (i. 27), whose worship is to minister to others and keep himself the while untainted; the man who not merely has but endures temptation (i. 12); "the Just One," unresisting even when brought to death, praying even for his murderers (v. 6, 16).

The Book of Genesis.

By Rev. JOHN URQUHART.

2.—ITS PURPOSE.

THE purpose of the first book of the Bible begins to be evident as soon as we have marked its plan. The path steadfastly pursued by the writer is that of Divine selection, and that selection keeps constantly in view man's redemption. This is very noticeable in the way in which the narrative sweeps out when choice is made of Abraham. Up to that point three and a half chapters are the utmost which is devoted to a single section; and even that (which happens in the generations of Noah) is exceptional. But, when we reach "the generations of Terah," which tells the story of Abraham, the narrative swells out into no fewer than fourteen chapters (xi. 27-xxv. 11).

This feature becomes more definite still in what follows. Seven verses only are devoted to "the generations of Ishmael" (xxv. 12-18), and then "the generations of Isaac" occupy ten and a half chapters (xxv. 19-xxxv. 29). One chapter and one verse are given to "the generations of Esau," and the whole of the remainder of the book, consisting of fourteen chapters, to "the generations of Jacob." Thus, thirty-eight and a half chapters are devoted to

THE STORY OF THESE THREE MEN.

What this means will be plain when stated in another way. There are in all fifty chapters in the book, and eleven and a half suffice for the creation of the universe, the world before the Flood, the early career of the fathers of the new humanity, and the posterity of Ishmael and of Esau. But twelve and a half is the fourth part of fifty; so that less than one-fourth of Genesis is regarded as sufficient for the record of all antiquity besides, and more than three-fourths of it are bestowed upon the story of those three men, by whom God is to name Himself, and in whose seed all the nations of the earth are to be blessed! There is something found here that tells of coming joy for God and man. Like the dove, which flew hither and thither over the submerged earth and found no rest for the sole of her foot, but which at last went forth from the ark and found a dwelling-place on earth, so the Spirit of God comes upon Abraham and upon his seed, and comes to dwell. The earth shall see God's salvation, and that salvation shall be "of the Jews."

It is, perhaps, worthy of remark here that "the generations of Terah" form the seventh natural chapter of the book. Seven is a number which is specially significant of the completion of Divine plan. But I have now to mention a most interesting fact.

THE CHRONOLOGY IS CONFINED to the line of Divine selection. In Gen. iv. 18 we read: "And unto Enoch"—the son of Cain—"was born Irad: and Irad begat Mehujael: and Mehujael begat Methusael: and Methusael begat Lamech." Here not a single date or number appears. But when we come in chapter v. (3-8), to the posterity of Adam along the line of Seth, dates are given with the greatest fulness and exactitude: "And Adam lived an hundred and thirty years, and begat a son in his own likeness, after his image; and called his name Seth. And the days of Adam after he had begotten Seth were eight hundred years: and he begat sons and daughters. And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years; and he died. And Seth lived an hundred and five years, and begat Enos: and Seth lived after he begat Enos eight hundred and seven years, and begat sons and daughters. And all the days of Seth were nine hundred and twelve years; and he died."

It will be remarked how careful the reckoning here is. Not only is the age of each, of Adam and of Seth, at the birth of their first-born, recorded, but the period during which they afterwards lived is also given. And even that is not enough. Lest, apparently, there should be any ground for the suspicion that some mistake may have been made in handing down the numbers, the entire duration of Adam's and of Seth's life is given. The same method is carried out in the case of each of the other patriarchs from Adam to Noah, and a full chronology is thus supplied of the old world, all whose other monuments were buried beneath the whelming flood.

The reckoning is continued in "the generations of Noah," the next of the selected lines. But when we come to "the generations of the sons of Noah," the chronology no longer accompanies us. We read (x. 1, 2, &c.): "Now these are the generations of the sons of Noah, Shem, Ham, and Japheth: and unto them were born sons after the Flood. The sons of Japheth: Gomer, and Magog, and Madai, and Javan, and Tubal, and Meshech, and Tiras," and so on. Not once have we a year mentioned. The writer, so careful not only to give, but also to preserve unimpaired the exact numbers in the previous two sections, suddenly in this. Never once is a single number given. When the Divine selection is made of the line of Shem the careful enumeration is as suddenly resumed; and this rule is adhered to all through the book. In "the generations of Ishmael" we are told his age when he died, but nothing is said about his age when the eldest, or any other, of his sons was born. The chronology is dropped. It is resumed when we come to "the generations of Isaac." It ceases in "the generations of Esau," and begins again in "the generations of Jacob."

CEASES TO BE CHRONOLOGICAL

Here we are once more compelled to note the prophetic insight of the book. The chronology indicates surely that these are the lines along which the history truly runs. These lead right on to the destiny for which God waits. He counts the years until it be attained. When we recognize that this destiny involves Bethlehem, Calvary, the return of the Lord from heaven, Israel's redemption, and the earth's peace, everything is explained. Until we recognize that, this will hold its place among the mysteries of the Book.

There are two things about "the book of the generations of Adam," which are worthy of notice. It is here that the first selection is made. Seth is taken. But have we noted how Seth is described? We are reminded that Adam was made in the likeness of God (v. 1); but it is otherwise with Seth. "Adam lived an hundred and thirty years, and begat a son in his own likeness, after his image, and called his name Seth" (v. 3). Here the line that faces towards Christ is a line that needs the Saviour. The image of God in its perfectness has been lost. Seth is begotten in the likeness and after the image of a fallen, sinful man.

This, with the usual suggestiveness of the Scripture, is only hinted at; and another and equally fruitful hint is given in the phrase of Adam." "The book of generations" does not occur again in any of the genealogies. It is not found in any other place in the whole of the Old Testament. It is met with only once again in all Scripture; and that is in the first words of the New Testament—the opening words of the genealogy of Jesus. "The book of the generations of Jesus Christ, the son of David, the son of Abraham." There are two books which concern us much. The first is the book of the generations of Adam. All our names are there. We share his life; but it is a life that has death in it. There is another book in which names are being written, and the record laid up before God. It is the Lamb's Book of Life. All who receive life from Him as really as we have received life from Adam, are classed anew. We belong to another family. We have life now that has no death in it; life whose sweep is eternal. It is life that is everlasting. Is it not striking that all this should be indicated by a change in a phrase in Genesis? And if it is indicated so, whose book is it? Is it man's book or God's?

"THE BOOK OF THE GENERATIONS

In the last of the great natural chapters of Genesis, there is a feature which has occasioned considerable trouble to commentators. In xxxvii. 2, we read: "These are the generations of Jacob. Joseph, being seventeen years old, was feeding the flock," &c.; and the generations of Jacob become virtually the story of Joseph. Now, why should Joseph be linked in this way with Jacob? Why was not Judah taken, the man in whose line the Messiah was to appear?

The answer will be found, I think, when we remember that Joseph was the only one among these patriarchs of Israel who was a type of Jesus. The two histories run side by side with astonishing agreements. Joseph loves his father, and his father loves him; and this mutual affection earns for him his brethren's hatred. In like manner the love which bound the Son and Father separated Jesus from the men of his time, and earned the hatred of the rulers. The hatred becomes murder in both cases. Joseph is taken from the pit and carried into Egypt. The risen Jesus is preached among the Gentiles. Despised, imprisoned, Joseph becomes the confessed saviour of Egypt; and Jesus, persecuted in his members, is honoured at last among the Gentiles. The Israelites, ignorant of their relationship to the great governor of the land, come to procure bread; are hardly entreated, then reconciled, and greatly blessed. And in the latter days the Jews will acknowledge the Gentiles' Christ, be hardly entreated, then reconciled to their Brother and Redeemer, and be blessed beyond their dream.

Thus Genesis, which tells of the Fall and the promise of the Messiah, and which carries us along the lines which lead towards His appearing, ends with a typical Saviour, and a typical salvation for Jew and Gentile.

A Neglected Service.

A CHOICE tract is one of the best agencies of evangelization. It may be fitted to every hand, bringing even to the feeblest the reasoning and persuading zeal of prayerful and practised soul-seekers. The case of the late General Field, secretary of the Evangelical Alliance, may exemplify its possibilities. A tract lightly passed on to him by an officer of his regiment in India won him as a young subaltern for the cause of Christ. In consequence, he prayed daily for the man who had passed on the unused blessing, until, some thirty years afterwards, he, too, was driven by a tract to his knees and to God. Besides speaking efficiently by itself, the tract, reasonably and politely offered, is calculated to open conversation which otherwise would be impossible.

Yet this constantly available and versatile agency is used by comparatively few, though every Christian is called to be in some way an evangelist, and is daily in more or less contact with those who have not received, and who probably do not understand, the Gospel. There are several partial explanations of this. With some the cost of tracts is prohibitive, though it is so small. This hindrance might be removed by co-operation—those who have means providing supplies for such as wish to serve Christ in this way. But clearly those who can afford to use tobacco, or other needless luxuries, are not thus hindered. Simpler tastes and habits, more of the spirit of self-denial, would greatly increase the means of doing good.

The choice of tracts may seem to others a formidable difficulty, but interest soon surmounts this, and a little time spent over samples readily furnished at any reliable depository will put a selection according to his own judgment in the hands of any distributor. Yet a great difficulty remains, and its force is chiefly felt by the best workers, who combine zeal and delicacy, and, while eager to serve, are anxious to be neither intrusive nor irrelevant. Such are apt to lose opportunities, to the distress of their own consciences, because in brief intercourse with strangers they have no confidence that they can put their hands on anything that seems likely to suit the class represented.

Leather "Sorted Seed Cases" have been produced to meet the need of these willing workers. They are made with seven pockets, the two principal being labelled "Gospel" and "Temperance," while others are left to the memory of the user, being devoted to the classes or conditions most likely to be met with—young men, children, seekers, sufferers, or sceptics. The cost of production is nearly 3s. each, and all that is over will be applied, through the publishers of The Christian, to the fund for free distribution. Spasmodic service costs much, and effects little. The habit of soul-seeking is the great need of the Church. The tortoise that keeps going may cover more ground than the hare. Daily service in this way does not mean intrusive or haphazard religious effort, but sensitive waiting upon God, maintained consecration, wisdom by grace, and through experience, even for the naturally unwise, and a great aggregate of life service.

J. F. B. Tinling.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, June 2. Matthew xxiii.

THIS chapter is full of the wrath of the Lamb. In the most scathing terms the gentle, loving Saviour exposes the falsehood, hypocrisy, meanness, and punctilious trifling of the professedly religious leaders of the time.

It is an awful thing when religion is divorced from morality; when men live in water-tight compartments, and on this side profess and display all manner of religiousness, whilst on that they yield to the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life. Let us take heed to ourselves to be absolutely real. These men came to be as they were, because they wanted to maintain a reputation for godliness without practising its moral restraints; and to get the esteem of a most religious people, whilst they gratified every desire of the unrenewed heart. But the same temptation besets us, who live in the midst of godly people, and have made considerable professions. It is gratifying to our vanity to be thought good, and we are tempted to be counterfeits and shams, unless we seek the daily indwelling of the Lord, and are absolutely true to Him, and dare to confess frankly when we have fallen or been inconsistent. May God preserve us from becoming extinct volcanoes, from which the celestial fire has departed, leaving cold ash.

Then the Lord turned with such a pathetic remonstrance to the beloved, the holy city. The heart which had burned with consuming fire to the Pharisees, melted with a patriot's and a Saviour's tears. O my soul, does He desire to gather thee under his wings? then haste thither to hide till all thy calamities be overpast.

MONDAY, June 3. Matthew xxiv.

With what eagerness have successive generations pored over these words of our Lord, in the endeavour to extract from them some clear knowledge of the future. In the case of the early Christians at least, they warned them to flee to Pella; and in doing so, to escape the destruction of Jerusalem under the arms of Titus. But to us all they are full of instruction.

It is best to consider them as containing a double reference. In the first place, they dealt evidently with the approaching fall of Jerusalem. This is the subject of the earlier verses (1-28). Our Lord describes the events which were to mark the consummation of the age (3, R.V. marg.), the Antichrists, the disturbances of the physical and national conditions, the persecutions and opposition with which his people would meet, the steady progress of the preaching of his Gospel to the limits of the known world, and finally the Roman eagles swooping down on their prey, and the fulfilment of Daniel's prophecy.

It is not unlikely that these words will also apply, and with even greater force, to the age in which we are now living. The end will come in precisely the same way. Not a levelling up into a condition of universal righteousness and peace, but the advent of the Lord into the midst of disturbed conditions, in which light and darkness, good and evil, are furiously contending for pre-eminence.

It sometimes seems to me as though, between vv. 28 and 29, we must interpolate the Christian centuries during which the Gospel is being preached to the Gentiles, according to Romans xi. Just as one who looks across a mountainous country may count the peaks, but does not record the valleys that gape between, so the Lord, who speaks throughout this Gospel as the last of the great Hebrew prophets, does not stop to notice the story of the church, which was distinct from the setting up of the kingdom over Israel, and through Israel over the world. Let us watch, for we know not when our Lord cometh. The signs enumerated in this chapter are all taking place around us; the end of the age cannot be far distant.

TUESDAY, June 4. Matthew xxv.

Three remarkable parables occupy this chapter, and observe a marked sequence of thought. First, we are to see to ourselves that we are ready to enter the marriage feast, because our hearts are pure with virginal purity through the Bridegroom's grace and love, and because the light is burning in our lamps through the continually-communicated grace of the Holy Spirit.

Second, we must remember that we are not only guests, children, the bride, but are servants who must give an account of their stewardship. Let those who have been entrusted with but one talent be specially on the watch, for they are most exposed to the temptation to conceal it. Those who can do but one thing are most tempted to do nothing. Remember that your talents lie on the line of your natural ability. What you can do best is probably your talent; consecrate it to the service of Jesus. Remember that though you will not stand before the great white throne, you will have to stand before the judgment seat of Christ, and be judged according to your works.

Thirdly, we are to stand as part of the nations of the world, and hear the King give his awards. It seems to me as though their doom will be largely affected by their treatment of the brethren of Christ, whether they be the Jewish people or his brethren in the great family of faith. The closing words of the chapter are specially important, and for me they are authoritative. I have never believed in the doctrine of universal restoration; there are many reasons for holding it to be untenable. I am also unable to accept the doctrine of life only in Christ, involving the annihilation of the impenitent; my belief, therefore, about the future is defined by these words, and I await the explanation which the facts will furnish of all that the Lord meant. It should be noticed that the word eternal stands in each clause in the R.V.

WEDNESDAY, June 5. Matthew xxvi.

What a chapter is this, saturated with the tears and blood of our dear Lord! What a tender heart was his! How thoughtful for others, at whatever cost to Himself!

Whilst his foes were plotting his destruction, He was casting the mantle of his protection around the woman that loved Him so devotedly, and with prophetic instinct realized the circumstances of his cruel death.

Whilst Judas was laying the mine to destroy Him, He was instituting the Supper which, to the end of time, would bring solace and strength to his people, and ratifying with his own blood the eternal covenant.

Whilst the servants, soldiers, and officers were drawing a cordon round the garden for his arrest, He was yielding up his will to the Father's, though it meant forsakenness, desertion, the weight of a world's sin, and the shame of the cross, and receiving celestial strength to bear the crushing weight unmoved.

Whilst they were arresting Him, as though He were a robber, his mind was kept in perfect peace, being stayed upon God, and calmly discoursing of angels, who, in their white-robed hosts, were waiting within call.

When his foes were seeking to frame a capital charge against Him, He was still, and sad, and silent. He allowed the false witnesses to refute each other. His thoughts were engaged with the great future, when He would be the Judge, and they at his bar.

THURSDAY, June 6. Matthew xxvii.

The vacillation of Pilate made him a criminal of the worst type. Weakness becomes sin. He who dares not enact his noblest and best impulses will speedily find them vanish, and he will sink inevitably into the power of his worst and basest self. When men know the better and do the worse, God gives them up to their own hearts' lusts. At first Pilate clearly meant to release Jesus, but instead of saying so, he strove to give effect to it by indirect means. First he sent Him to Herod, thinking that a Jew would exert his influence for a fellow-Jew; then he sought to touch the springs of pity by scourging the Lord, though He had done nothing amiss; finally, he set Christ against Barabbas, making sure that they would vote for his release rather than that of the highwayman. But none of his expedients was successful, and so he was driven finally to take up the side that at first he repudiated. The straightest and most outspoken course is always the happiest and easiest. You may wash your hands as you like after the deed is done, but water will not avail either for Pilate's, or Lady Macbeth's, or yours.

With hushed hearts we stand in the presence of "that night." It is the tragedy of time, the one supreme act of self-surrender, the unique, unapproachable sacrifice and satisfaction for the sins of the whole world. It is here that myriads of sin-sick, terror-stricken souls, in every century, have found refuge. It is here that the martyr has found comfort. It is here that Jacob's ladder rests. He that ascended is the same also that descended first into the lowest parts of the earth. He became obedient unto the death of the cross, wherefore. . . .

FRIDAY, June 7. Matthew xxviii.

Ere the sun had arisen, although the pomp of morning was being prepared, the women were well on their way—but He was gone whom they sought. How often we look down into the grave of the dead past, into the vault where we have buried blessed experiences of heavenly fellowship; or we peer into the prayers, the forms, the rites of a dead church, which commemorate days of heavenly power and glory—but we do not find the Lord. The Spirit of God cannot tarry long in the grave of the past. He is always beckoning us on and on, towards the Ascension mount and the opened heaven.

It is sweet to see the risen Lord engaging the women as the messengers of his Resurrection; and the alacrity with which they sped to fulfil their ministry. Their feet would not carry them quickly enough. And as they went, Jesus met them. So with us. To go on his errands, is not to leave Him, but to find Him.

The wonderful story of Jesus which begins with the manger-bed ends with the Ascension mountain. He came into this world, making Himself poor for our sakes, and lo, in thirty years He has acquired the sovereignty and dominion of heaven and earth! All is his by right, and He sends forth his messengers to vindicate and assert it. Hear it, young disciple, is this not Christ's word to thee?—Go, and make disciples; go and teach; go and baptize into the name of the Holy Trinity, and count the Master at thy side, in every day of joy or sorrow, of sowing or reaping, of sunny life or of the shadowed valley.

SATURDAY, June 8. Mark i.

This is the Gospel for business-men—short, succinct, vivid. The narrative moves swiftly. The word translated, "straightway," "immediately," "anon," is characteristic of the style. It is supposed that Mark wrote it at the dictation, or under the superintendence, of Peter.

With a few bold strokes the evangelist characterizes the ministry of the herald-prophet, and introduces the Christ. There are no tints of dawn in this picture; the sun seems to spring out of the sea of eternity.

Here is a specimen day out of our Lord's diary. A sermon in the synagogue, in the midst of which a miracle was inserted; then rest in Peter's house, and another miracle; and at even, the healing of large numbers who required his strong and loving help. Yet, in the morning, He is awake before the dawn, and away for prayer. What an untiring life our Master lived! It seemed as though He always worked with his eye on the dial, watching the hands swiftly moving to the fulfilment of the time.

Study the words of Jesus. I have seen a Testament in which they were printed in red type. They are always luminous. "Come ye after Me." "Hold thy peace, and come out." "I will, be clean." "See thou say nothing." How omnipotent and royal they are! "Where the word of a King is there is power." Speak, Lord, and at thy words the gates of heaven shall open, and demons, leprosy, and darkness must flee like ill-omened birds of night.

F. B. M.

Shall we Change the Oath?

THE question whether the Coronation Oath can be modified in expression, while preserving intact the Protestant succession to the Throne, is to be considered by a Select Committee of the House of Lords. It is a question vital to the well-being of every person in the Empire, one on which every member of Parliament, every head of a family, everyone capable of forming an opinion, ought to give his earnest endeavour to arrive at a wise and safe conclusion, in the interest of the present and of future generations.

In order to do this, it would be well for everyone to try his own hand at such revision, and to endeavour to frame a declaration which would be preferable to the present one.

First, let it be asked, what is the primary object to be attained? The reply will probably be, To make the oath less unpalatable to our Roman Catholic fellow-subjects. What is the second object? The answer is already given in Lord Salisbury's motion for a Select Committee of the House of Lords—"to report whether its language can be modified advantageously, without diminishing its efficacy as a security for the maintenance of the Protestant Succession."

Is it possible to combine these two objects? We believe it is impossible. In proportion as the Roman Catholic objection to the Oath is modified, the Declaration of the Constitutional objection to a Roman Catholic succession must be weakened.

Because a reason must be given for the prohibition of a Romish dynasty, and what reason can be given which will be at once more agreeable to Rome, and equally safe for the British Empire? Let every reader try to solve this problem for himself.

The Roman Catholic objection to the Oath does not consist so much in its form as in its purpose. Our forefathers left to us liberty of conscience and freedom of body, in their endeavour to attain which they were broken on the wheel, tortured on the rack, burned at the stake, drowned by the creeping tide, at the hands of a spiritual and temporal tyranny whose boastful and self-condemning motto is, "Always the Same."

Our predecessors took care to rule out this monstrous inhumanity from the British Throne and Woolsack, and they could not do it with velvet gloves or honeyed words. They knew by experience, as this generation does not know, what Rome is and must be, and they embodied their experience in the Oath which has secured the Protestant Succession hitherto, but which we are now in danger of losing.

All must sympathize with Mr. George F. Trench in his desire to remove a cause of offence to his Roman Catholic friends. It is not from them we seek to defend ourselves. Many of them feel the galling chains by which they are bound. It is against the Romish hierarchy, against the demon of Jesuitism, against sacerdotal and sacramentarian priestcraft, that we need to defend ourselves, and still more our children. For they will suffer more than we.

"It is not because the Declaration is 'insulting' that they wish it abolished, but because it is so thoroughly efficient." In a pamphlet issued by the Roman Catholic Truth Society, of which Cardinal Vaughan is president, the writer, referring to the Declaration, says, "It must be admitted that the test was effective. No Catholic could speak the words and remain a Catholic." The (R.C.) Tablet (March 30, 1901) says:—"It cannot be denied that the Low Church section of the Anglican body, and the Protestant masses generally, have a very grave interest in demanding the retention of at least some disavowal of Transubstantiation in the path of accession. And if it desires to succeed, and to thrust an insurmountable barrier between English Christianity and that of East and West, it never could have found for its purpose a better or more effective means than in securing a disavowal of Transubstantiation. Hence a change by which this concrete disavowal would be omitted, would, as Lord Salisbury justly pointed out, have the significance of something more than a mere omission. It would be to them the hauling down of their flag on a fortress which has been their point of vantage."

Yet in spite of this true utterance, Lord Salisbury wants to do this very thing. Are Protestants going to be so foolish as to haul down the flag, and in the name of religious liberty open the door to the unchangeable tyranny of Rome, giving one more instance of "Freedom free to slay herself, and dying while they shout her name?"

MR. TRENCH'S PLEA FOR AMENDMENT OF THE OATH.

Plausible, but ineffective, are Mr. Trench's pleas in our last issue.

1. The remarks as to "persons connected with Protestant societies" is scarcely fair. Is it wrong for Christian people to form themselves into societies in defence of Protestantism? If it is meant that only officials of societies are crying out the implication is quite inaccurate.

2. It is an absolute mistake that "it is no question of the Protestant Succession to the Crown that is at stake." That is exactly what is at stake. With the present Oath none but a Protestant can reign. Remove the oath, and a Roman Catholic may be our king or queen—that is, nominally, for their real Ruler would be the Pope, to whom every Roman Catholic renders supreme obedience.

3. "Religious liberty is the basis of the Constitution." True; but is it a real religious liberty which would open the way for a religious tyranny?

4. Paul at Ephesus was not a blasphemer of Diana, because he came there to preach the Gospel, not to denounce their goddess. But it was the same Paul who, under other circumstances, denounced "false brethren unawares brought in, to whom we gave place by subjection, no, not for an hour." He it was who also said, "Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers, beware of the concision."

5. Is it true that the Oath was "the tradition of a past marked by every violence of rancour and strife." Were the men who framed it men of violence, rancour, and strife?

Roman Catholics find "consistency in the selection of two out of so many errors for special denunciation." The Roman Catholic Tablet, of March 30, admits that Protestantism never could have found for its purpose a better or more effective means than in securing a disavowal of Transubstantiation.

 We have received a number of letters on this important question, which we are obliged to reserve until next week.

Christian Life-Buoy Band.—The first annual meeting of this Society was held on May 16, at the Mariners' Friend Bethel, Old Gravel Lane, E., Rev. T. R. Couch presiding. Stirring addresses were given by Revs. E. A. R. Chinnappa (India), R. D. Thomas, and other friends. The Society has done good work in some dark neighbourhoods of East London, in open-air and indoor meetings, lodging-house services and visitation, and the distribution of Gospel literature. Meetings held at the mission halls, too, have been fruitful in spiritual results.

Endeavourers in Council.

THIS year the Whitsuntide gathering of the Christian Endeavour hosts was held at Sheffield. On Saturday last the trains on all routes leading to that city of steel carried bright, happy crowds—young people enjoying life to the full, and yet eagerly wending their way to four days of meetings in which only the great facts of Christian life and service would be the theme.

It speaks well for the promise of the future that these wonderful gatherings are maintained year after year. Whilst many are falsely assuming that young people can only be attracted by empty amusement, the C.E. Society demonstrated beyond controversy that the youth of our day are ready to consecrate themselves to a really healthy and vigorous Christian life.

The Endeavourers of Sheffield have been busy for some time past in arrangements for the great event, and every credit should be given them. They have succeeded admirably.

On Saturday afternoon those fortunate enough to reach the city in time assembled for in the Albert Hall. Rev. J. Morgan Brown presided, and a short address was delivered by Miss M. Jennie Street. At four o'clock the Lord Mayor of Sheffield gave a Reception in the Town Hall. This magnificent building, decorated with flags and flowers, was filled with the crowds of delegates who accepted the Lord Mayor's invitation.

A PRAISE SERVICE

In the evening welcome meetings were held in the Albert Hall, and in the Drill Hall. At the former, Alderman Batty Langley, M.P., presided over an enthusiastic gathering. A large choir led the singing, and Archdeacon Eyre (vicar of Sheffield) conducted the opening devotions. Between reading and prayer he expressed his delight at seeing such a gathering. He had inquired as to the aim and purpose of the movement, and the reply which he had received could be summed up in three statements, Christian saintliness, Christian brotherliness, and Christian usefulness. The hearty greetings of the vicar were as heartily received.

The Chairman spoke on the indifference which characterizes the age. He mentioned the people who are "going nowhere," "doing nothing," and who "care for nobody," as the derelicts of society, not merely drifting, but a danger to all about them. Ask, however, of the Christian Endeavourer where he is going, and the reply is, "Anywhere for Jesus;" what he is doing, and the reply is, "Anything for Christ;" and for whom he cares, and the reply is, "Everybody for the Saviour's sake."

The address of welcome was delivered by Mr. J. W. Lee, the hon. sec. of the Convention Committee. He greeted the delegates in the name of the C.E., the Churches, and the citizens of Sheffield, and trusted they, by their life and conduct in the streets and homes of the city would be an advertisement for the Society and for Christ, and generate there which would remain when they had returned to their homes. He did not believe that in these days of steam and steel we were losing our moral power, and believed that C.E. was doing more for the strengthening of their country than armies and navies possibly could do. The future of the Church, the city, and the nation was with them, and they would make it by fidelity to-day.

A NEW ENTHUSIASM AND DEVOTION

Responses were given by Rev. J. M. Alley, of Dublin; Rev. James Roos, of Aberdeen; Mr. E. J. Powell, of Newport, Wales; and Mr W. H. Hope, of Liverpool.

In the Drill Hall, Rev. E. Carrington, chairman of the Convention Executive Committee, presided, and the address of welcome was delivered by Mr. J. K. Baker, President of the Sheffield and District C.E. Union. The order of service was the same as at the Albert Hall.

On Sunday the pulpits of the city were nearly all occupied by visitors. The Convention sermon was preached in the Albert Hall by Rev. Dr. Clifford. At night evangelistic meetings were held in nearly all of the Convention halls and centres.

Other Lands.

Progress in Central Africa.

In view of the widespread interest in the progress of mission work and civilization in Uganda and other parts of Equatorial Africa, we give the following paragraphs from statements made by Bishop Tucker last week in a newspaper interview :—

THE political and commercial importance of Uganda has immensely increased since the downfall of the Dervishes and the building of the railway from Mombasa. As evidence of the changed condition of affairs, I may state that on my way home I travelled from Uganda to Mombasa in ten days, a journey which, when I first went out ten years ago, occupied five months. From Lake Nakwio, the public terminus of the line, and over four hundred miles from the coast, I came down in a well-appointed train, with sleeping-cars, lavatories, &c., which runs three times weekly; and when we steamed into the coast terminus station of Kilindini we were only three minutes late. At present there are no dining-cars running, but dak bungalows are established at various stations en route, to which the traveller can telegraph as in England, and find luncheon or dinner awaiting him on arrival.

The lake shore will be reached in September next, and when the line is finished the base for all trading operations will be practically 800 miles from the coast, on the northern shores of the Victoria Nyanza. From this point will branch in every direction trade routes open to all nationalities, and tapping every part of Central Africa right into the Soudan. The Germans are already realizing this, and their merchants are establishing stores, recognizing that there are better opportunities in the British than in the German sphere. There are hardly any British traders in this British centre, as they think they are

HAMPERED UNDULY BY THE GOVERNMENT.

The present restrictions and regulations will have to be modified if British trade is to develop to any extent. Indians are coming up, and succeed in underselling British and Germans alike.

One of the chief difficulties in the way of development is the splitting up of the country into various protectorates. There is a pressing necessity for combining the two protectorates of East Africa and Uganda, and I entirely endorse Sir Harry Johnson's suggestion that the two should be combined under one High Commissioner.

This is the more necessary, as the political importance of Uganda is becoming clearer every day. Uganda, the important British base in the very heart of Africa, will to a large extent dominate and influence the whole of Central Africa. It will be a factor in dealing with questions as affecting the Soudan, Abyssinia, and the Congo State. Sir Harry Johnston, who has just completed his special mission, has a scheme for constructing a short line of railway from the lake terminus of the Uganda line to the Albert Nyanza, a distance of about 160 miles. Should there be any delay in the execution of the Cape to Cairo scheme, this short line would be of great practical value, and would place Mombasa in direct communication with Cairo. But it seems to me most illogical that, while we have train services to the lake, and steamboat communication on those Central African waters, there should be no British service between Mombasa and London. The German-subsidised steamers come into the coast ports deeply laden, and with passengers temporarily accommodated on deck owing to the cabins being full. If the Uganda railway is to fulful its functions, there must be a direct line of British steamers in connection with it.

Regarding Uganda itself, the Bishop says :—There has been very steady progress. The building of two-storeyed brick houses is going on apace, and there is a scheme for connecting the native capital of Mengo and the Government head-quarters at Entebbi by a line of tramway eighteen miles long. All the natives are perfectly quiet, and with discretion on the part of the Government officials they should remain so.

THE ONLY POSSIBLE SOURCE OF TROUBLE

may be in remote parts of the country, where the people have no means of paying the hut tax. At present they have to travel great distances to the capital in order to work this off, and then to make the long return journey to their distant homes. I believe, however, that the Government will realize the danger of this, and will so arrange that these natives can work off their hut tax by bridging, road making, &c., in their own localities.

I unhesitatingly give the fullest credit to Sir Harry Johnston for his kindly dealings with the natives. He does not look upon them as mere niggers, and has certainly won their respect and regard. The native parliament, which meets at Mengo every Monday, is the greatest safeguard the Government has in the country. By its means grievances are discussed and remedies suggested, and I hope that, for its own sake, as well as for the good of the country, the Government will foster it. This parliament of chiefs has a regular order of procedure. The chiefs are seated on European chairs, to right and left of the gold chair on which the boy King is placed when he attends the sittings, and minutes are kept by a native secretary. All decisions are referred to the Commissioner."

Gospel Tracts for Spain.

THE dissemination of Gospel literature has always been regarded by Pastor and Madame Lopez Rodriguez, in their vigorous evangelistic work at Figueras, as a department of work which is peculiarly valuable among Roman Catholics as a means of making known evangelical truth, and combating error.

These devoted missionaries have been able to accomplish much good in this direction in the past, and it is felt that the time has come for a further development, which is the constitution of the "Spanish Religious Tract and Book Society. How this new and important branch of the Figueras Mission came into being is pithily told in a recent circular letter issued by Madame Rodriguez :—

"In 1897 Pastor and Madame Lopez Rodriguez, being in London, called on their kind friends, Drs. Borrett White and Green, of the Religious Tract Society. In course of conversation Dr. Green remarked, 'Why do you not start a Spanish Tract Society of your own?' The pastor made no reply, but kept the suggestion in his heart, resolved by God's help to carry it out. The seed took root, and germinated, for now the Spanish Tract Society is the plant, which with careful cultivation and the Divine increase will, we feel assured, grow into a 'great tree,' to give life, shelter, and shade to souls in this and all Spanish-speaking countries."

Friends of the work will hear with regret that Madame Rodriguez has been suffering from severe inflammation in the right eye. The sight of the other she lost when a child, so that the case is serious. It is hoped, however, that a season of change and rest in England will result in her complete restoration to health.

Captain Dreyfus.—The correspondence between Captain Dreyfus and his devoted wife during his exile contains some passages which are peculiarly touching and tender. When the world despised and frowned upon her husband, Madame Dreyfus wrote words of cheer and comfort which he frankly confesses saved him from despair and insanity. "You are strong," wrote Madame, "in your innocence: imagine that it is some other than yourself who is being dishonoured: accept the unmerited punishment, do it for me, for the wife who loves you. Give her this proof of your affection; do it for your children, they will be grateful to you one day." In another letter Madame wrote :—"God, who has so sorely tried us, will give us the strength to fulfil our duty to the end." And there is a beautiful picture of the little son, of whom the mother says :—"Your little Pierre every morning lisps an ardent prayer for your prompt return. The poor little fellow is accustomed to have everything in life smile on him; he does not understand why his wishes are not heard; he repeats his prayer twice for fear that he has not said it well enough."

Troops in Bangalore.

IN a recent report on his work among the troops stationed in Bangalore, Mr. Wylam H. King writes :—"It is very encouraging to see the Christian soldiers growing in grace, and their boldness for Christ. I went into a bungalow the other day, and after speaking to a few of the brethren, they proposed a prayer meeting. In the middle of the day in the open bungalow they knelt down and praised God for his goodness, before all their comrades. A few years ago this could not have been done without much persecution, but I find day by day that there is a growing sympathy and appreciation shown towards the Christian by the unsaved, which is a great help to the young convert. The work carried on by Mrs. King among the soldiers' wives is growing, and those who have lately decided for Christ have become workers together with Him."

Mr. King occupies his time visiting the barracks, prayer rooms, and hospitals; and, having had many years' experience among soldiers, he has become well acquainted with their needs, weaknesses and hindrances, and has been singularly used of God in pointing men to Christ. Many parents in the homeland have been cheered by the news of prodigals restored, through the faithful and untiring ministry of these servants of the Gospel. Mr. King's address is: "Elim," Victoria Road, Bangalore, India.

The Gospel in Japan.

IN the course of his "Annual Letter" to the secretaries of the Church Missionary Society, Mr. Barclay F. Buxton writes, concerning his labours in Matsuye :—All through this year we have had very good meetings at our preaching rooms. But lately the gatherings have become much more quiet and solemn. More have been willing to come in and stay on right to the end. The meetings have become more like mission services at home. We do praise God for this, and believe that it means that a general, deep work is going on, and we shall soon be able to "launch out into the deep" as we never have before, and let down our nets. We have had many interesting cases of conversions this year. There is the Matsuye Bank clerk who, before he was baptized, was leading his fellow clerks to Christ.

Two have really decided. He himself is a deep student of the Word, and already has a good grasp of it. During the year, I have had many opportunities of holding conventions on holiness lines both in English and Japanese. God has been particularly blessing the missionaries of Japan, and many of our own society and of others have entered into deeper experiences of sanctification than they have ever known before. The blessing granted this year has been given in answer to the prayers of some who faithfully labour for us at home. I would ask these still to bear the burden of Matsuye before God.

Burnt out in Cyprus.

A SAD calamity has come upon the American Presbyterian Mission in Cyprus. Rev. Henry Esson writes from Larnaca :—"We have had stirring times lately, and have had to suffer things that we did not expect. We thought that because we were under the flag of England, nothing would dare to touch us, but we were aroused from our dream of safety by the flames of our chapel on Saturday night, April 6. The chapel was a total ruin and all it contained. We have no doubt that the building was maliciously set on fire. The Government has taken it up, and a reward of £50 is offered, and we hope the offenders may be found. The loss is at the least £500.

"On the 7th, we had our first Communion at Nicusia, when five Armenians were welcomed. On the 14th, we held our first Communion at Kysersia, and two were welcomed; so you see we have joy over the consecration of seven persons to the Lord. The helper at Nicusia reports on having visited during the past six months 131 homes as a Bible reader, besides his usual Sabbath-day's work. Our colporteurs have visited all the cities in the island, and about seventy villages, during the year."

We shall be glad to receive contributions in aid of the fund for rebuilding the chapel at Larnaca.

The Indian Famine.

THE recurrence of famine in some districts of India is adding greatly to the heavy burden of financial responsibility which the missionaries have already to bear in connection with the maintainance of the large number of orphans rescued from starvation during last year's terrible visitation. Rev. Walter Seed, writing from the Wesleyan Manse, Apollo Bunder, Bombay, says: "We have been overwhelmed to find that in all this district famine is again claiming many victims, and acute distress is felt among the poor people. We, for many reasons, resisted all pressure to take children until quite recently. Lately the pressure has been so heavy that we have been unable any longer to refuse. What brought things to a crisis was when our native minister, Rev. S. Rahator, appeared in my bungalow with two small boys, ragged and half-starved, hanging upon his hands. He had kept them for some days, and wanted to know whether I could not do anything for them. We had a lady from England with us at the time, who adopted them on the spot. Since then we have taken in thirty-five children. I shall be compelled to do a great deal in the way of relieving distress from the plague and famine during the coming months."

In connection with the highly important subject of famine prevention, we have received from Miss Harriett Tytler, of Simla, a letter which shows once more the success which attends the adoption of a system of irrigation. In the course of her letter, Miss Tytler says:—"God grant Lord Curzon may do his level best to bring about so great a blessing as more canals all through India. The piece of land I am now negotiating for, whereupon to build an Orphan Home, has a beautiful canal running through it. All through this last severe famine the crops there never failed, proving all that Major-General Cotton said on the subject to be perfectly true."

Armenian Mission in Bulgaria.

A REFUGEE for Christ's sake from his native Armenia, Mr. H. Y. Yardumian of Philippopolis, who has organized "The Armenian Evangelical Mission," among his countrymen and others, scattered over Bulgaria, and is paying a short visit to England for the purpose of seeking help in his work, which has been designated by the American missionaries as being "markedly Providential." The fact that so many of our persecuted fellow Christians from Armenia have found a refuge among the free institutions of Bulgaria, opens up special opportunities for carrying on Christian work among them which should not be overlooked, and which eloquently appeal to the Christians of Great Britain.

Mr. Yardumian having established a school at Philippopolis, is engaged, so far as opportunity will permit, in itinerating among the towns and villages of the country, preaching the Gospel to the people in their own languages, and is seeking also to establish an illustrated weekly newspaper intended to reach them in their homes. In addition to his experience as a pastor in his own country, he has received training in one of the London colleges. Rev. George D. Marsh, for thirty years a missionary in Bulgaria, writes of him as follows:—"He has worked most wisely, unweariedly, and efficiently as preacher and teacher. His ability, zeal, and self-denial commend him to all. I most heartily commend him and his work to all friends who can aid him to establish his work on a permanent basis." His appeal for the funds necessary for this purpose is further supported by the "Bible Lands Turkish) Missions Aid Society. The sum of £500 is needed.

Gift to Sunday School Teachers.—We are asked to call attention again to the offer to supply any teacher with fifty of C. H. Spurgeon's sermons free, on condition of lending them round to senior scholars. Applications to Mr. William Taverner, Greenhithe, Kent.

The Late Mrs. Mary Sankey.

WE recently announced in a few words the death of Mrs. Mary Sankey, mother of the well-known singing evangelist. Death came to the much-loved "mother in Israel" on May 2, at the ripe old age of ninety. Mrs. Sankey was the last of her generation, all her brothers and sisters having pre-deceased her. She died at Newcastle, Pa., of which city she was one of the oldest and most prominent inhabitants.

Mrs. Sankey was the widow of the Hon. David Sankey, whose death occurred a number of years ago. For some time she had been failing, and her life ebbed peacefully away.

Her maiden name was Mary Leeper: she was the daughter of John Leeper, one of the pioneers of Lawrence county. She was born July 17, 1811, and was married on September 2, 1830. She was the mother of seven sons and four daughters. Of these but two are now living, Messrs. Ira D. and Watson Sankey, both residing in Brooklyn, New York.

Mrs. Sankey was a lady of many estimable qualities, thoroughly domestic in habits, and strong in attachment to home. She filled with signal devotion the sacred and responsible offices of wife and mother, and witnessed with much joy the influential labours of her well-known son, Ira D. She was a member of the Methodist Church, and while able took an active interest in church and temperance work.

Her husband, the Hon. David Sankey, was a member of the State Legislature for several years following 1843. He was afterwards internal revenue collector, owner and editor of the Lawrence Journal, president of the Bank of Newcastle, and treasurer of the North-Western Railroad. Ira D. Sankey left the Newcastle home over thirty years ago to join D. L. Moody in evangelistic work. He has since presented the young men of the city with their fine Y.M.C.A. building.

Mrs. Sankey was a woman whom it was a pleasure to know; and sincere and widespread sorrow has been expressed that her long and active life has closed. She was a Christian "grounded and settled" in faith, strong in hope, fervent in love.

Rome in Austria.—The political movement against Rome in Austria is spreading widely, and promises to be potential in its effects upon the future of the nation. Beneath the "Los von Rome" (Free from Rome) agitation there is, it is stated, "a real hunger for God's Word, not only among the poor, but the well-to-do, both in the cities and the country. In spite of all opposition, Protestant congregations are developing, and it is asserted that there have been at least 10,000 converts from Rome. A German association some little time ago spent over £7,000 in the purchase of Bibles, Testaments, and pamphlets, which were circulated through Austria, forty ministers being sent and services arranged for in various parts."

Northfield Conferences.

PARTICULARS are to hand of arrangements for the nineteenth season, and following are some of the fixtures:—

Student Conference (June 28 to July 7 inclusive).—The purpose of this Conference is to deepen the spiritual life of young men in colleges and other institutions of learning, so to develop and train them that they shall go back to their colleges to be leaders in active Christian work among the young men; to develop a love for a systematic devotional Bible study: to strengthen intercollegiate relations; and to bring to them the responsibility for obeying the call of God. The speakers will be—Revs. G. Campbell Morgan, Alexander McKenzie, D.D., Maltbie Davenport Babcock, D.D.; Mr. Robert E. Speer; President Seth Low, LL.D.; and Dr. J. Howard Taylor. Mr. John R. Mott, will be leader, and Mr. G. C. Stebbins musical director.

Young Women's Conference (July 12 to July 22 inclusive).—The aim of this Conference is, in its bearing upon the work of the young women, identical with that of the young men. It is expected that this Conference will be not only especially interesting to the delegates, but also to the many friends outside, for the platform meetings give promise of being fully as interesting as any meetings to be held during the entire summer. The Conference will be conducted as in previous years—platform and "Round Top" meetings daily, open to all; Bible Classes, Association and Missionary Conferences in charge of experienced leaders, including Revs. G. Campbell Morgan, Charles Erdman, R. A. Torrey, John Douglass Adams, D.D.; C. I. Scofield, D.D.; Mrs. Margaret Sangster, Mr. Robert E. Speer, Dr. and Mrs. J. Howard Taylor. The Y.W.C.A. Camp on the Seminary grounds, which was so great a pleasure to many last year, will again be open. The out-door life is combined with the privilege of attending the Conference, and the expense is considerably reduced. Leader, J. R. Mott; musical director, G. C. Stebbins.

Special Bible Lectures (July 23 to August 1; August 19 to September 1).—These will be given by prominent Bible teachers daily from the close of the Young Women's to the opening of the General Conference, and also after the close of the latter. The fewer meetings of these more quiet sessions make a favourable opportunity for personal interviews and thoughtful study of the Word.

The General Conference of Christian Workers (August 1 to 18 inclusive).—The purpose which Mr. Moody ever had in mind, of a gathering for deepening Christian life and service through prayer, Bible study, and the consideration of various lines of Christian activity, will be closely followed as God may direct. Several new features are to be introduced that will further extend the scope and practical helpfulness of the Conference. In addition to the meetings held every morning and evening in the Auditorium, a number of "Institutes" are also to be held with special reference to the needs of different classes of Christian workers. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan and Dr. and Mrs. J. Howard Taylor, with one or two other invited guests from abroad, will be present. It is hoped that, among others, the following speakers will attend:—Revs. H. G. Weston, Tennis S. Hamlin, D.D., C. I. Scofield, D.D., R. A. Torrey, H. C. Mabie, D.D., A. C. Dixon, D.D., A. T. Pierson, D.D. The music will be under the direction of Messrs. D. B. Towner, George C. Stebbins, and F. H. Jacobs.

Under the direction of Mr. John Willis Baer a Young People's Institute has been held for several years, which has been attended with great interest. This year the institute will be held every afternoon at 3.30 from August 13 until the close of the Conference.

Under the direction of Professor D. B. Towner, of Chicago, a Musical Institute will be held daily at 9 a.m. during the entire session of the Conference. The object of this institute is to deal with the subject of music and its sphere in Christian work, specially in relation to church worship, evangelistic, missionary, and visitation work.

Rev. Dr. R. A. Torrey will also deliver a series of addresses daily at 9 a.m., beginning August 6 and continuing through the Conference (Sundays omitted) on "The Fundamental Doctrines of the Christian Faith." For young Christians, as well as many older ones, this will be most helpful.

It is proposed to devote August 12 to the interests of missions. It is expected that a large number of missionaries, from both home and foreign fields, will be present to help in the services of the day.

A model of Solomon's Temple, constructed by the late Thomas Newberry, of London, will be on view throughout the summer, free of charge.

For general information regarding the Conferences, or board at "The Northfield," Seminary Buildings, or with private families, or reduced railroad rates, address, A. G. Moody, East Northfield, Mass.

The Late Dr. Foster, of Clifton Springs, U.S.A.

ONE who, like Enoch, had walked with God for almost eighty years, is no more, for he was taken to the heavenly home on January 15, sincerely mourned by all who had the privilege of knowing him. It was in April last year, on the occasion of our visiting that bed-ridden saint, Major Whittle, who was then at Clifton Springs, that we were introduced to the founder of the Clifton Springs Sanatorium, Dr. Foster, and the little time spent with him and Mrs. Foster is stored in the treasury of our memories.

Henry Foster was born in Norwich, Vermont, January 18, 1821. He prepared for college in the academy at Milan, Ohio, where he also studied medicine under his brother, Hubbard Foster, and Dr. Horner, his brother-in-law. In the academy he bore off the prize for scholarship at the close of his first year. He graduated at a medical college in Cleveland, Ohio, with high honour, and then joined his brother, Dr. Hubbard Foster, who at this time was in charge of a water-cure in Lowell, Mass. From thence he went to New Graffinsburg, near Utica, N.Y., and took charge of a water-cure located there.

From New Graffinsburg he went to Clifton Springs, N.Y., where he purchased the site of the present sanatorium, having his brother, Dr. Hubbard Foster, as his associate for many years, and his other brother, William, as manager, who continued to hold this relation to the day of his death, and bequeathed the large part of his property to the sanatorium.

The fame of the Silesian peasant, Pressnitz, and his alleged marvels of water-cure, had but recently reached America, when in 1850, Dr. Foster, convinced of their efficacy, visited Clifton Springs in search of a place to experiment upon those principles. The present sanatorium grounds were at that time an impenetrable morass, and the young physician nearly lost his life by a misstep while exploring the place, sinking into the marsh up to his armpits. He found the abundant mineral waters that had been freely used by the early settlers, as they had also been by the Seneca Indians, who once held the lands; and with them a rough shed for a bathhouse which, with its one tub or trough, seemed public property. Also, a little wayside tavern and ten small dwellings along a half mile of country road. Enlisting in the enterprise a few friends who could furnish the small capital which he needed and had not, and so securing ten acres of the primeval forest, whose only attractive feature was the fine spring he sought, the doctor began his life-work by rearing a wooden structure with rooms for some three-score patients. By 1856 friends gathered to assist in the dedication of a fine brick addition to the original building, and to consecrate wholly to sacred purposes a beautiful chapel within its walls.

Dr. Foster soon adopted a much broader theory and practice of medicine than simply water-cure. Being a man of deep piety, he thus laid down his theory of medicine: "That the Lord Jesus Christ is the real Healer, that no ''pathy' ever healed a man. In other words, it is the work of the wise physician only to put the human being, by personal cleansings and other ways, in harmony with the ordinary laws of life and health, and so in the proper position to get well; but the Divine power alone heals, no matter whether it is directly, or through means applied." The chapel, then, was the heart-centre of the sanatorium, and here many a patient claimed to have received fresh accessions of spiritual life which reacted upon his physical nature, and promoted his return to health and strength.

At the dedication of the chapel of the sanatorium in 1856, Dr. Foster made his first public avowal of the purpose with which this work was begun, saying: "Thankful for these tokens of Divine approval, I still adhere to my original plan of presenting this institution to God, to be used for the benefit of his people." This ultimate purpose was steadily maintained, and finally in 1881 Dr. Foster, with the cheerful and hearty co-operation of his wife, transferred the sanatorium building, grounds and appliances, by a carefully guarded deed of trust, to a board of thirteen trustees, representing seven Evangelical denominations, who are to manage the property in such a way that it may ultimately become a free health-cure and resting-place of those of God's children who have become temporarily enfeebled by toil or disease. The property thus devised, together with subsequent gifts to the same board of trustees, amounts to about 650,000dols.

At present the facilities of the sanatorium are open to, and eagerly sought by, the general public; but it is hoped ultimately to accumulate a fund which shall render it possible to offer rest and medical treatment, without charge, to the following classes and in the following order: (1) Foreign missionaries; (2) ministers of the Gospel; (3) Christian teachers; (4) indigent church-members. Indeed, representatives of these classes have, from the first, been welcomed to the privileges of the sanatorium at a merely nominal rate, and many a toil-worn Christian worker has, for months at a time, enjoyed Dr. Foster's hospitality without fee or reward. For many years the number of those thus benefited has mounted into the hundreds; and the treatment thus bestowed has cost from 20,000dols. to 25,000dols. per annum. The aggregate at a moderate estimate would make the money value of these beneficences amount to more than 600,000dols. Since 1881 (previous to which time no such list was kept), the names of more than 4,000 ministers, teachers, and Christian laymen have been enrolled by their own signature as having received free treatment or board at reduced rates.

On October 2, 1892, the great work of rebuilding the sanatorium as it now appears was begun; and it was dedicated July 10, 1896. It is a magnificent and commodious building, perfect in all its appointments, and will long stand as a monument of the genius and energy of its founder. Some years ago, Dr. Foster effected arrangements by which Clifton Springs is to be the permanent annual meeting place of the International Missionary Union.

CLIFTON SPRINGS SANATORIUM.

On September 13, 1900, the fiftieth anniversary of the Institution was celebrated. On this occasion Dr. Foster, who, with Mrs. Foster, naturally was the object of concentrated attention and congratulations, gave a long and impressive address, in which he emphatically disclaimed any merit of his own, giving to God all the glory. His was a forceful, yet gentle personality, his a sweet and unaffected Christian life, manifesting itself more in deeds than in words, which created the genuine atmosphere at the Sanatorium so necessary to health, both spiritual and physical. To his last fleeting breath he remained true to his life-motto—"This one thing I do!"

When on his eightieth birthday loving hands reverently and tenderly placed his mortal remains beneath the newly-fallen pure snow-mantle, many friends gathered together to give utterance to their grief over the removal of one who had never lost a friend once gained, whose whole life was a record of generosity and benevolence.

In the Open Air in Scotland.

EDINBURGH.

AT the corner of High Street, Edinburgh, leading from the Castle to Holyrood Palace, we came across a band of earnest workers who were holding their usual meeting, and by song and sermon were setting forth Christ as the alone Saviour. Are these brethren always there? I have never passed that corner, on any evening, about the same hour, week-night or Sunday, but I have seen a service being conducted.

After the open-air meeting, we followed on to Carubbers Close, and had the joy of leading two or three into the light. One bright youth said, "I will trust Christ; I was almost doing it a fortnight ago, but now I'll do it." He was a visitor staying for a few days in Edinburgh, and will for ever bless God for being won to Christ through open-air work.

The large hall of Carubbers Close seats 1,100, and, as one of the brethren said, "I suppose there is not a single seat in the place in which some soul has not been 'born again.'"

ROTHESAY.

A few evenings later found us in the quiet little town of Rothesay; and naturally enough we were attracted to a crowd gathered near the pier. Possibly there had been some testimony or address given previously; but we were sorry that over twenty minutes were spent in speaking of and taking a collection. Moving away, we came upon a second meeting where the singing was both spiritual and attractive, the preaching distinct and definite, and, at the close of a solemn appeal to the unsaved to decide for Christ, one of the ladies in charge of the meeting sang, "Drifting, drifting into the sea of eternity!" The meeting was held in connection with "The Faith Mission," the directors of which are the Messrs. Govan. On the Lord's Day evening a most impressive meeting was again held, Mr. J. G. Govan himself conducting it. I rejoiced at the clear ring of the old Gospel, and the pointed appeals to the conscience of the sinner. God was certainly honoured, Christ exalted, and sinners awakened.

OBAN.

Here I was glad to meet with an old friend, Rev. D. J. Martin, late of Stornoway, at which place, and with Dr. Black at Inverness, we had had some happy times in the open air in years gone by. Saturday evening is a quiet time at this season of the year. Tourists and visitors have not yet arrived, and the Highland folks, having finished their week's labour, gathered round the preachers in goodly numbers. The Baptist minister, Mr. Martin, and Mr. Horace Govan with his helpers, were soon busy in the glorious work. To my great surprise, the first address was given in Gaelic, and though to my southern ears it was a foreign tongue, yet was it "understanded of the people." The speaker was a born orator, and held the people magnificently. He was followed by the two ministers and Mr. Govan, and though the meeting did not close till nearly ten, yet did the crowd grow. At that hour I could see to read the small type edition of Bagster's Bible. I suggested to the audience that this united service should be held weekly by the above friends.

My friend, Mr. Martin, constrained me to give a quiet talk in his church on the Sunday evening; at the close we adjourned to the open air, where we found the friends busy at another large meeting. The friend, who the previous night had spoken in Gaelic, was now setting forth Christ in English, and was declaring the Gospel as volubly and ably as before. The two ministers also spoke, Mr. Martin occasionally breaking out in Gaelic, and it was late before the break of the service.

GLASGOW.

Glasgow Green was the Hyde Park of Scotland, and the remembrance of the conversion of an infidel—who was to have conducted a public debate—at an open-air meeting at which we were privileged to speak some years ago, drew me again to the spot; but, save two or three arguments carried on at the Jail Square, there was no open-air work being done. However, we looked in at the Tent Hall in James Morrison Street; and found a good meeting in progress outside the Exhibition, opposite Finnieston Church, where short addresses were given interspersed with simple Gospel hymns. I hear special arrangements are being made to extend the work among the thousands flocking to the Exhibition, and that the Rev. John McNeill is expected to help in special meetings.

CHARLES COOK.

706

Gospel Triumphs in Ireland.

UNDER the title of "Gospel Triumphs" is published the annual report of the Open-Air Mission for Ireland, whose offices are at 13, D'Olier Street, Dublin. During last year meetings were held in fifty-two different towns, being the largest number reached in any of the past eight years. The preachers employed receive no pay, third-class railway fares being alone provided. The income for the year was £286, expenditure £374, thus leaving a large balance on the wrong side.

Open-air preaching in Ireland still involves persecution, but where tumult arises it is found to be almost always due to the inaction of the police, who permit drunken persons to attack the preachers! Considerable public attention was drawn twelve months ago to street-preaching in Cork, by the address of the Lord Chief Baron at the Spring Assizes to the grand jury, encouraged by which, hostile members of the corporation had a bye-law drawn up "forbidding preaching in the streets." But upon forwarding it to the Lord Lieutenant for confirmation, they were informed that his Excellency declined to sanction it.

Now, every Sunday a noble band of volunteers are giving forth the message in that city. The report says:—"For a short time last summer there was a recrudescence of the violence of seven years ago. A priest finding a copy of St. John's Gospel in a pew of the church where he officiated, stirred up his congregation against the street-preachers, whom he appeared to think guilty of this 'profanation.' The people in a fury rushed into the street, attacked the usual service which was peacefully proceeding, threw the organ into the river, and went to kill the preachers, who were severely beaten, one worker in particular having a very narrow escape from death. However, as on many a terrible day years ago, the loving wing of the Angel of the Lord shielded his servants, and now, once more, all is peace."

Frequently such encouragement is received as constrain the workers to say:—"Oh! if God's servants at large knew the joy of this apostolic work, how they would hasten to share in it!" There are many who, not being able to stand in the fore-front of this battle for the Lord, may yet be willing to supply the sinews of war. The Treasurer is Captain R. Wade Thompson, J.P., Clonskeagh Castle, co. Dublin.

One-by-One Working Band.

SISTER VERA, Deputation Secretary of the One-by-One Working Band, has held some helpful and highly interesting meetings in Scotland Her tour began with a drawing-room meeting in Dalkeith, followed by a gathering in the hall of the U.F. Church, Newbattle. Addresses were next given at Edinburgh, commencing with a missionary meeting at the rooms of the Young Men's Bible Class. A series of five afternoon Bible Readings was arranged in the same building, in which Pastor Leishman, of the Christian and Missionary Alliance, New York, also took part. Much blessing was given. The Lord's power was felt, and the attendance increased each day.

Various meetings in Edinburgh and neighbourhood were also attended with much acceptance and blessing. A week was spent in Biggar, where the impression produced by the sudden death of the lamented Mrs. Govan gave an opportunity of speaking of eternal verities. A visit has also been paid to Dalmally, Argyleshire, where great interest was awakened.

Montrose, Peterhead, and Stonehaven are also to be visited. Communications for Sister Vera may be addressed to the care of Mr. Grant Jackson, 44, Dale Place, Edinburgh, Hon. Sec. for Scotland.

"ONE-BY-ONE" (1d.), and other literature, may be obtained of Mr. Hogben, Welcome Mission, Portsmouth; or of Messrs. Morgan and Scott, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

Livingstone College.

THE opening of Livingstone College at Leyton last Thursday was the occasion of a bright, pleasant function; and the goodly company which assembled was representative of foreign missionary work in the widest sense. Speaking from the chair, Mr. R. L. BARCLAY (treasurer) said he welcomed the company to the lawn of Knott's Green House with mixed feelings, recalling as he did many similar occasions during the long period in which the property was in the possession of his family. It was, however, a great cause for satisfaction that, when it was found necessary to extend Livingstone College, the house proved to be peculiarly adaptable for the purpose.

In the course of the statement made by Dr. HARFORD-BATTERSBY, it was shown that the course of training is intended (1) to enable missionaries and (2) to give simple medical and surgical help to natives. The college does not train "medical missionaries" (a term which is only properly applied to duly qualified practitioners), and each student signs a declaration that he will not take the title of "medical missionary," or assume the position of a qualified medical man. With these careful restrictions the college has secured the cordial co-operation of many members of the medical profession, including the chief representatives of the medical Press.

TO SAFEGUARD THEIR OWN HEALTH,

The contributions sent in to the Memorial Fund amount in all to £4,600, but about £3,600 is still required to meet the total expense of the property, with the necessary alterations and furnishing, including legal and other expenses.

As representing the Royal Geographical Society, Sir GEORGE TAUBMAN-GOLDIE, K.C.M.G., expressed the pleasure the members felt at being formally recognized in connection with an Institution bearing the name of Dr. Livingstone, which is connected with his family, and which is engaged in carrying on plans the great explorer would have highly approved. He revived with satisfaction the story of Dr. Livingstone's relations with the Society, and of the extent to which it was privileged to help him with his work. From his early and long experience in Nigeria and other parts of West Africa, he hailed with gratification any measure which would lead to better and health among missionaries and other Europeans.

MEASURES FOR THE PRESERVATION OF LIFE

Speaking on behalf of the missionary societies, Rev. Dr. LAWES (New Guinea) said it was of the utmost importance that every young man going to the foreign field should know something about the dressing of sores and wounds, and about malaria and other diseases. His final word was:—"Do not let the name be an empty and unmeaning one. Do all honour to the name by supporting an institution which is carrying on the work the great doctor himself inaugurated, and in which he was deeply interested."

The members of the Livingstone family were represented by Mr. FRANK WILSON, who in their name wished all manner of success to the College. They knew no way in which the memory of Dr. Livingstone could be more fitly honoured than by such an effort for the equipment of missionaries. He impressed on his audience the great responsibility which rests on every Englishman going out to a foreign land, being always regarded as as a representative of our Lord and Master. Whether he go as trader, as sight-seer, as hunter, or as missionary, in some way or other heathen people will think of him in connection with the God whom the missionaries go to speak about.

In a few graceful sentences, Mrs. BRUCE (daughter of Dr. Livingstone) declared the College open, and wished it the highest measure of success in the service of God. The visitors were then entertained to tea and conducted over the house, the all-round suitability of which for its special work appealed to all.

Among those who took part in the devotional exercises were Rev. H. E. Fox and Rev. J. G. Train.

The May Meetings.

Among the Deep-Sea Fishermen.

THE annual gathering of the Royal National Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, held at Exeter Hall on Wednesday, May 22, proved, as usual, an inspiring gathering. The building was tastefully decorated with trophies and national flags, and the presence on the platform of a numerous contingent of North Sea smacksmen, including a special choir, added largely to the interest of the occasion.

In the absence, through illness, of the Bishop of Peterborough, Sir Joseph Pease presided. The statement of work given by Mr. G. A. Hutchison was full of encouragement regarding the operations of the Mission in ministering to the religious, medical, and social needs of our fishing fleets in various parts of the world. The Alpha, the first steam hospital trawler, has been a conspicuous success. A steam trawler can be maintained for considerably less cost than a sailing ship, and it must be remembered that the manner of deep sea trawling has undergone a radical change. Sailing smacks have in great part given way to steam vessels with a capability for fish-catching four times that of the old boats. The Alpha has not only done good but she has often sent more fish to market than any other vessel in the fleets to which she was attached. The council has now decided to build and equip two more trawlers of the same type as the Alpha. Describing the hospital work on the Salvador coast, Mr. Hutchison gave a brief account of the progress of the various institutions, making special reference to the new hospital which has been erected on the Newfoundland station. Turning to the work on shore in the British Isles and Holland, the speaker told of remarkable progress, particularly at Grimsby and Milford Haven, where the Homes have been considerably enlarged in order to meet the great demand for coffee bar accommodation and dormitories. A new institution has been opened recently at Brixham. The total record of the year's work showed that no fewer than 8,764 medical and surgical in and out patients received treatment, while 2,807 religious services were held, and 1,065 temperance pledges were taken.

EVANGELISTIC AND MEDICAL WORK,

The Chairman followed with some sympathetic words on the arduous nature of the fisherman's calling, and the next speaker, Sir Herbert Murray, who has visited the hospitals in Newfoundland, testified that he found them as clean and as

ADMIRABLY CONDUCTED

as any of the great metropolitan hospitals. There are about 23,000 men and women engaged in the fisheries, and until the Mission commenced its operations they had practically no medical assistance.

Pastor Thomas Spurgeon's bright and helpful sermonette on "Conversion" was addressed to the fishermen present, and contained some happy illustrations taken from seafaring experiences. Mr. Spurgeon added that there are two fishing vessels using the port of Grimsby, one named "The C. H. Spurgeon" and the other after his esteemed wife, the speaker's mother. When the second vessel was named, the flag was sent to Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon, and she returned it to the captain with the following verse, composed by her husband:—

This flag will bear aloft my prayer
That good success attend you.
God save each one, through Christ his Son,
And from all ill defend you!

A vigorous appeal was now made by Dr. F. W. Willway, who pleaded for help to defray the cost of the two new hospital trawlers. Of the £21,000 needed, £13,400 has yet to be raised.

Good conduct stripes and First Aid certificates of the St. John Ambulance Association were next presented to members of the Society's crews, by Lady Mary Glyn, the men being introduced in a few hearty words by Mr. W. F. A. Archibald. Among other speakers were Mr. Frank Wilson, deputation secretary, and Mr. T. B. Miller. A meeting was also held in the evening, at which accounts of the work were received with enthusiasm by a large audience.

The Christian Community.

THE annual meeting of the Christian Community at Exeter Hall marked the 216th anniversary of this widely-influential and useful society. A large number of friends and supporters assembled, to manifest a deep and practical interest in all that concerns the progress of the Gospel of Christ in workhouses lodging-houses, mission halls, refuges, and the open air. Sir George Williams directed the proceedings, and in a few words heartily commended the efforts which the agents have been enabled to make, under God, to minister to the spiritual needs of men and women not reached by the churches.

The report of the past year, read by the Secretary, shows that the work has steadily increased, with results as encouraging as they are far reaching. Some 450 ladies and gentlemen have given their spare time gratis to maintaining the numerous agencies by which the hearts and consciences of the people are touched, and directed from temporal to eternal realities. Every week 15,000 workhouse and 2,000 lodging-house inmates were visited, eight mission-halls entirely supported, 21,000 breakfasts, teas, suppers were given, 10,500 children's dinners and breakfasts provided; and 1,228 homeless men were sheltered. At the Memorial Hall, Bethnal Green, the services both Sundays and week-nights have drawn together large audiences, and the closest attention has been paid to the Word of God. The numerous missions are situated in where the poorest classes are located. The attention, devotion, and order which characterize the meetings in the workhouse and casual wards, are often touching to witness; but many are true-hearted Christians contented in their lowly condition, and patiently waiting for their home-call. In the infirmaries words of sympathy and encouragement, spoken in faith, have borne fruit in relieving the gloom which overhangs beds of sickness, when the heart is not at rest, and many inmates have passed from the infirmary ward to the joy and gladness of heaven. Tens of thousands have been reached by the open-air preaching, while the social and benevolent work has been prosecuted among the poor and needy, young and old. The income of the Society has risen from less than £20 in the first year of its existence to over £4,000 during 1900.

DENSELY POPULATED DISTRICTS

Rev. W. Cuff, in the course of an earnest address, spoke of the needed for accomplishing the objects which the Christian Community seeks to achieve. He urged the necessity for holding to the belief that none are beyond the power of the Gospel, and pleaded with the workers to seek and rely upon the Spirit of God in their labours.

COURAGE AND PATIENCE

Rev. E. W. Matthews, Sailors' Institute, Shadwell, spoke helpful and encouraging words, which were followed with prayer by Dr. Gritton.

An impassioned address was given by Rev. Arthur Mursell, who rejoiced that the Community does not concern itself with denominational differences, but with the jeopardy of human souls, and the preciousness of their salvation. He was glad to think that the work is of so practical a nature, and spoke fervently of the needs of the multitudes who have no knowledge of any existence beyond the present.

Rev. H. G. Thwaites, of Christ Church, Harrow Road, in impressive terms, addressed his "fellow-workers," with whom he pleaded to stand by the inspiration of the Scriptures, and to seek a full experience of the grace of God, that out of an overflowing heart they may become strong and vigorous in the cause of Christ. Addresses were also given by Dr. Gritton and Mr. W. H. Seagram, and the meeting closed by sending a vote of sympathy to Mr. James Atkinson, secretary, who is laid aside by sickness.

Foreign Aid Society.

BY the kind invitation of Mr. H. Smith Bosanquet, a drawing-room meeting was held at 38, Queen's Gate, S.W., on Wednesday of last week, on behalf of the Foreign Aid Society for the spread of the Gospel on the Continent. Mr. Smith Bosanquet presided over a sympathetic company, and the utmost possible interest was manifested in the accounts given concerning the religious movement in France.

Rev. J. Gosset-Tanner's report was of a distinctly encouraging nature. The Gospel is assuredly taking root in France. The work of Evangelicals is growing in intensity, and the people are of the superstition of Rome, and are hungering for the Word of God. During the last three years 348 priests have left the Church of Rome, and in many districts from every town and village there comes the cry to the Protestants "Come and teach us."

BECOMING UTTERLY WEARY

Pastor Cremer, secretary of the Société Evangélique de France, spoke of the movement in La Corrèze, which is rapidly opening to the Gospel. For some months, five pastors and evangelists have been labouring in the district. The feeling is not one of passing excitement, for the people attend meetings four times a week, and listen to addresses lasting from two and a half to three hours. In Madranges a Protestant Church and parsonage have been built, and the young pastor, full of zeal and energy, has entered on the charge of a body of nearly 250, who have embraced the Protestant faith, and remained unmoved by the bribes and threats of Romish priests. Concerning Treignac, Pastor Cremer spoke in hopeful terms. From every possible direction there comes the call for the Gospel, and on every hand to the Protestants. With the growth of a strong hatred of clericalism there is a stronger love for the Gospel.

DOORS ARE OPENING

After a few words from Dr. L. B. White, a vigorous and inspiring address was given by Pastor Saillens. The only hope for France is its evangelization, and the revival of religion which is now being experienced augurs well for the accomplishing of the task. The great mass of the people is being moved by a religious instinct, and thousands would immediately leave the Church of Rome were it not for the persecution which would follow. In the course of his twenty-six years' experience, the speaker had never known a Protestant mission hall to fail. Hundreds have been opened, and after a few weeks, fruit is seen in the district, and there is a great movement away from Rome.

Rev. Theophile Vernier, representing the Evangelical Society of Geneva, warmly acknowledged the assistance given to Evangelical workers on the Continent by the Foreign Aid Society. He cited extracts from reports of colporteurs, testifying to the spirit of earnest inquiry which is everywhere asserting itself, and the enthusiasm with which the people acknowledge that the religion of Jesus Christ alone can meet their desires and aspirations.

Seamen and Their Friends.

THE operations of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society, maintained on an extensive scale at a large number of ports on the British coast, include many practical efforts in the spiritual and social interests of sailors.

The annual meetings, as usual, embraced a variety of interesting functions. In the morning a devotional meeting was held at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate Street, at which Mr. M. H. Hodder presided.

In the afternoon, a sympathetic audience assembled in the lower Exeter Hall, under the presidency of Mr. Frank A. Bevan, when a statement of the past year's work was made by the secretary, Rev. G. J. Hill, who pointed out that a large and important work has been accomplished at the Society's headquarters, London Docks, and at the respective Bethels and Institutes. In London upwards of 1,500 services have been conducted in various European languages. These have been well attended, and in many instances lasting

SPIRITUAL GOOD HAS BEEN WROUGHT.

A new Bethel and Institute has been erected at Workington, and a temporary building at Lynn. The statistical summary showed that in all 5,219 evangelistic services were held, and 1,043 prayer meetings, with a total attendance of nearly 150,000 persons. Large numbers of Bibles, tracts, and helpful publications have been sold or distributed. Good work has been done, too, in the relief of sick, destitute, and aged seamen. Ships have been supplied with libraries, and the coffee bars and lodging-houses have provided a much-needed alternative to the public-house. In all the philanthropic enterprises of the Society, the main object is to preach the Gospel and lead sinners to the Saviour.

After some hearty words from the Chairman, who referred to the remarkable work accomplished for the Society by the late Mrs. Emily Hill, Rev. W. E. Burroughes, of Chislehurst, emphasized our responsibility as an insular people for the welfare of the seafaring men who render our national position secure, and to whose industry and perseverance the success of British commercial enterprise is largely attributable.

One of the Society's missionaries in East London, Mr. Cairns, gave a graphic account of a particular street in "Sailor Town," in the vicinity of the docks, and voiced the claims of "Poor Jack" for deliverance from the abominable allurements and traps by which he is surrounded on coming ashore.

Mr. Frank T. Bullen, who followed, reminded the audience that the course of economic events has placed us in the position of absolute for our daily food; but we have, as a nation, an unhappy way of neglecting our friends, and in consequence the sailor has been "out of sight, out of mind." In every sea-port the vilest part of the town is that which the sailor is forced to make his home, and the efforts of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society to improve the condition of affairs are worthy of all praise and support. Proceeding, Mr. Bullen contended for wise, unconventional, evangelistic efforts, and for the manifestation of an interest in the sailors' welfare "at least equal to that which is displayed in football, theatres, and other things, which can well be done without."

DEPENDENCY UPON THE SAILOR

Mrs. Maynard, who is a devoted worker in the Mission, was the next speaker. She viewed the work, therefore, from the standpoint of an "insider," and was able to give a glowing account of its fruitfulness in evangelistic, temperance, and children's departments.

The meeting concluded with some encouraging words from Mr. Hodder, who also invited the audience to visit the Society's headquarters, and inspect the operations for themselves. The day's gatherings concluded with an evening meeting, in which, among others, Sir George Williams, Bishop Hartzell, and Rev. John Robertson (East London Tabernacle) took part.

A Refuge for the Needy.

SITUATE in the midst of a very poor district of the metropolis, the Field Lane Refuges have long ministered to the spiritual and social requirements of a vast and needy population.

The annual meeting in connection with the Refuges was held recently in Holborn Town Hall, under the presidency of Lord Aberdeen. Much regret was expressed that owing to illness the esteemed secretary, Mr. Peregrine Platt, was unable to be present.

Mr. H. W. Bush said that the Institutions have done good work among the people, but daily experience emphasizes the need for advance. Among the many departments of that institution not one can be found which it would not be a misfortune to abolish or curtail.

The Chairman, in the course of a vigorous address, spoke highly of the schools in connection with the Refuges, and went on to refer to some present-day evils that contribute to degrade the people, such as pernicious literature, which should certainly be dealt with by the authorities.

Other speakers were Revs. Alexander Connell and Canon Barker, both of whom spoke in sympathetic terms of the work, and appealed in its behalf for an increase of public support.

The proceedings were enlivened by the effective singing of a choir of the children, and there was a display of physical exercises and musical drill. An exhibition of the trades which the boys are taught was also given in another part of the building.

Native Races and the Liquor Traffic.

A DISTINGUISHED company gathered at Grosvenor House last Wednesday on the invitation of the Native Races and the Liquor Traffic United Committee. The chairman—Right Hon. Sir George Taubman-Goldie, K.C.M.G.—commended the Society on account of its non-political and undenominational basis, its freedom from rigid or narrow theories, and the care with which facts are verified to avoid exaggeration. Although much has been accomplished, the work is one which must be continually kept to the front, as otherwise the attention of the Government is taken up with a variety of other questions. A letter from Rev. Dr. J. G. Paton was read by Rev. J. G. Train telling in burning words the terrible tale of the evil wrought among the natives of the New Hebrides through the traffic in drink carried on by French, German, Russian, and other merchants, although the British subjects are forbidden to take part in it.

The paramount importance of dealing with the liquor traffic in new colonies was insisted on by Sir Frederick Lugard, who declared that from the territory of Northern Nigeria (300,000 square miles in extent), administered by him,

ALL LIQUOR IS RIGIDLY EXCLUDED,

the military force at his command being usually employed on preventive service; and steps are being taken to impose duties on its transport by railway which will also be practically prohibitive. Mr. Lionel Phillips (of South Africa) congratulated the committee on approaching a great question in a spirit likely to bring matters to a successful issue. After the close of the present war, he believed the greatest matters to be settled in South Africa will be those affecting the native races, and among these that of the liquor traffic takes a leading place. The native mind was described as totally different from the European in manner of reasoning, and a high tribute was paid to the value of such work in the advancement of civilization as is being done at the Lovedale Missionary Institute. Without hesitation the Hon. A. Wilmot (Cape Town) made the statement that "the use and abuse of intoxicating liquor by aboriginal races are identical." While admitting that there are many and great difficulties to be encountered in the colony, he claimed that, regarding temperance legislation, much greater progress has been made than in the home country; and the great fact to be remembered is that the natives are themselves from the white man's fire water. "You have saved the black people from one slavery; for God's sake do your best a second time for those for whom you are responsible."

CRYING OUT TO US TO SAVE THEM

Although he had to confess that there is no excise law in Cape Colony, Mr. Rose-Innes, K.C., expressed the belief that no Government will be able to increase taxation without imposing such a duty. The workers in the Colony are hampered by (1) the presence of a mixed race; (2) the divergence among natives through the great advances in education made by some; (3) the fact that it is a great brandy-producing country. One point he insisted on was that the law must be made uniform throughout South Africa. Sir Godfrey Lagden (Commissioner for Native Affairs in the Transvaal) described in graphic language the state of depravity in which he found the natives of Basutoland when he went there as British Resident in 1884, and as the result of his experience assured those interested that he believed they could look for the co-operation of the natives themselves. "We stand in relation to the natives as parents to children, and the primary duties we owe to them are to see that they do not fall into the fire and do not get poisoned."

Among others who took part in the proceedings were Messrs. Munt and Morton Middleton.

Seeking Peace.

THE report presented at the annual meeting of the Peace Society, on Tuesday of last week, deplores the recent development of militarism, but sets off against this ten new instances of arbitration, and fourteen others awaiting the opening of the High Court of Arbitration at the Hague, the creation of which is declared to be the crowning achievement of the year and of the nineteenth century. The Society has seven agents at work in the United Kingdom; special efforts were made during the general election. The observance of Peace Sunday, on December 23, was as extensive as in previous years. Over 36,640 invitations to ministers were sent out, to which 3,523 replies were received, promising 5,514 sermons and addresses; and 206,070 copies of various publications were supplied gratuitously. The peace movement was also successfully initiated in France, 1,275 invitations having been sent out from the Paris office to pastors in France and Alsace-Lorraine. Reference was made to an extensive distribution of literature at Paris Exhibition, and co-operation was invited for a similar effort at Glasgow.

Recalling a meeting held in Finsbury Chapel during the Crimean War, Sir Joseph Pease, M.P. (chairman), said the war feeling was so strong that many of those on the platform were hardly allowed to speak, while a wild mob was assembled outside. He could not help thinking that the lesson which this country was learning would be, in the hands of God, a beneficial lesson, teaching people how horrible war was.

The opinion was expressed by Mr. A. Emmott, M.P., that the heart of the Empire is sound on the question, and it was most important that the people should not have their minds filled with a desire for military glory, and be spending on bloated armaments money which might be used for social reforms urgently wanted.

Addresses were delivered by Mr. Alderman Snape, Rev. W. Pedr. Williams, M. Vesseur, and Mrs. J. Holah.

Scottish Permissive Bill Association.—With reference to a statement in our issue of April 18, we are pleased to learn that in declining to approve of all the recommendations of Lord Peel's Minority Report, the Association is acting in harmony with the Good Templars, British Women's Temperance Association, Rechabites, Sons of Temperance, and Band of Hope Union; and like these societies, while opposed to compensation proposals in any form, is in favour of a genuine measure of restriction of the liquor traffic on any of the lines proposed.

Evangelical Continental Society.

THE annual meeting of the above Society was held on May 22 in Loughborough Park Congregational Church, Brixton, S.E.

The Treasurer, Mr. JOHN C. BUMSTED who presided, congratulated the friends of the Society upon the spiritual progress of the work upon the Continent, and pleaded for a greater interest in missionary work in the countries of Europe.

After a brief review of the operations of the year had been given by the secretary, Rev. GEORGE H. GIDDINS, three exceedingly interesting addresses were given on "The Opening of the Department of the Corrèze, France, to the Gospel," by Pastor CREMER; on "The Progress of Evangelical Work in Belgium," by Pastor ANET; and on "The Needs of Evangelical Work in Portugal," by Pastor DA SILVA. The meetwas one of the most interesting ever held in connection with the Society.

Helping Jewish Converts.

THE annual meeting in connection with the Operative Jewish Converts Institution was held recently at the Institute Hall, Bodney Road, N.E., Mr. J. K. D. WINGFIELD-DIGBY, M.P., presiding. There was a large attendance of friends and supporters, and the meeting was one of great interest.

The past year has been one of progress. Every eligible candidate has been accepted, and the total number of resident inmates has been twenty-one. Orders for printing and bookbinding have kept the workers all busy, and nearly £1,500 was paid in wages; whilst every penny of the contributions received was expended for the supply of the bodily wants of the young men.

Rev. Canon KELK, who followed, said that the Institution not only removes the reproach that Gentile Christians are indifferent to the distress of Jewish converts, it also goes far to remove the reproach that Hebrew Christians are unwilling to work. By kind yet firm discipline the habits which form reliable characters are encouraged.

The next speaker, Rev. E. S. BRUHL, said that by regular work, sound discipline, good food, hours of leisure profitably employed, and Christianity put into daily practice, the inmates are gradually developed, bodily and spiritually, and qualified for the special mission of Jewish converts, to supply the Christian Church with intellectual as well as devotional exemplifications of the Word of God.

Hearty encouragement was given by Rev. J. B. BARRACLOUGH, who said that for twenty years he has been a member of the committee of the Institution, and, as an old friend, can testify to its usefulness. Every missionary society to the Jews is greatly indebted to it; both for receiving the converts recommended by them, and supplying them in return with duly qualified recruits.

Rev. W. T. GIDNEY said that the Institution rendered most valuable aid to the London Society by receiving its distressed converts, and printing its publications; and he rejoiced in its evident prosperity.

After the meeting a large proportion of the numerous company took tea in Palestine House, and in friendly converse expressed thankful recognition of the good hand of the Lord upon the work of the Institution.

Nottingham.—With a view to gathering in those who do not attend places of worship in Nottingham, a mission-hall has been opened in Shakespeare Street. The hall, when taken, was quite devoid of furniture, consequently chairs, a platform, and an organ had to be provided. The cost of rendering the interior comfortable, with other expenses, amounts to £100; an evangelist has been engaged for twelve months, and it is hoped that this will become a permanent centre of mission activity. Indoor and open-air agencies are being organized, and already the fruits of labour have been seen in the conversion of souls. Communications for this much-needed mission will be acknowledged by Mr. S. A. Fox, Evangelistic Hall, Shakespeare Street, Nottingham.

The Late Rev. C. A. Fox.

ON Friday last, in the Grosvenor Hall, Buckingham Palace Road, Rev. H. J. R. MARSTON, M.A., delivered a deeply interesting lecture on his departed friend Rev. C. A. Fox. After a few opening observations, he said:—I first met Mr. Fox in 1898. My friendship with him, therefore, was very brief, but I was able to detect some aspects in his character which even those who knew him longer may have forgotten, or which possibly they may never have observed. I speak first of him as (I.) Friend. The first quality of his friendliness was openness and accessibility. His friendship had no ante-chamber; he admitted you at once into his heart. The second quality in this friend was sunnyness, blended with sincerity. How bright he was, how rich in sympathy, how void of affectation? I crown the description of by speaking of its equability. He was ever the same—in summer and winter, in languor and vigour, and at all hours. The words of Coleridge were finely true in him: "Friendship is a sheltering tree." Under the shadow of Charles Fox's friendship you could rest, you could expatiate, ever welcome, secure and glad.

HIS FRIENDLINESS

What is friendship, that affinity exemplified in David and Jonathan, or in the great apostle and the beloved Physician, and glorified by the Lord and Master when he said, "I have called you friends"? Is it not, the disinterested intercourse of equal souls? To such a relationship did Charles Fox admit me, lifting me kindly to that equality with himself to which otherwise I could not pretend. His conversing was full of charm. It was animated and versatile, playful and tender. He loved to talk of poets and preachers, or of nature, social life, men and things. Nothing was more beautiful about his friendliness than his love for children. How reverent it was in its playfulness, how prettily he would instruct them, with what sweet ingenuity would he weave a spiritual lesson into common talk, and with what geniality did he respond to the affection of a child!

I turn to the aspect of (II.) Poet. I class him with those poets in which the Church of England has, especially, been rich—with

HERBERT, AND COWPER, AND HEBER,

Keble and Trench; not with our great hymn-writers such as Wesley and Toplady, Newton and Lyte. The poet has a religious mission, and has ever felt it if he has felt religion. So in the Bible there is ample use of poetry. Need I remind you of David's peerless lament for Saul and Jonathan; of the lyrics of infancy uttered by two inspired old men, and known to us as the Benedictus and Nunc dimittis; or of the lyric of maternity, which we call the Magnificat? Charles Fox rejoiced to fulfil a religious ministry in his verse. He loved a profuse and ornate diction, which showed itself markedly in an almost too abundant use of compound words. He had Wordsworth's love for nature, intense, profound, untiring. Especially he loved nature in her order and her law.

I regret that he did not more freely indulge in the playful muse, and even that he did not, with kindly ridicule, chastise the follies of the day. As samples of his verse, I would name his splendid lines upon the death of Ruskin, the lines to a mountain daisy, nature as teacher, the winter sunset in Hyde Park, and the beautiful verses on his sister's death.

Let me conclude with a few thoughts upon Charles Fox as (III.) Spiritual Master. Let me direct attention to his volume of striking SERMONS ON THE EPISTLES.

The treatment is meditative, rather than scholarly; but the book shows how wide was his grasp of Christian truth. Of the sermons, I myself prefer those on the Romans, the Galatians, and the Colossians. These exhibit respectively the Gospel in itself, in relation to Law, and over against the Philosophies. They will repay an earnest and repeated study.

If I should sum up the lessons which Charles Fox delivered to our time, by life or lip, in prose or verse, they should be these: (1) The personal preciousness of a personal Christ. (2) Almost a mystic's sense of the omnipresent love of God. (3) The power that is in Christianity to satisfy a modern mind richly furnished by nature—cultured, sensitive, and poetic; which, having deeply drunk of the streams of knowledge and of art, yet testified that satisfaction and exhaustlessness are found alone in Jesus Christ.

Live Coals.

COALS are among the most useful blessings we enjoy in this world. They bring light and warmth and comfort into our homes. They have been called "Black packets of bottled sunshine," "Dark things brought to light," and "England's black diamonds." As mentioned in the Bible, coals will suggest many useful lessons for us.

I. A BLACK COAL.—A picture of sin and sadness. "Their visage is blacker than a coal" (Lam. iv. 8). Sin, like a coal, makes us black. The face is the index of the heart, and the sure mark of the life. Sin makes its mark on the heart, face, and life too. A piece of coal is black, cold, and hard until it comes in contact with the fire. So the heart is black, cold, and hard, till it is enlightened, warmed, and quickened by the Holy Spirit. But the Lord has promised to give this change and blessing.

II. A LIVE COAL.—A blessing of light and life. "Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand" (Is. vi. 6, 7). A live coal is a coal alight with a cleansing, quickening power. In a spiritual sense it means the Divine touch of light and life by the Holy Spirit. His influence touches our souls and cleanses us, touches our minds and enlightens us, touches our hearts and warms us, and touches our lips and inspires us for life and service (Acts ii. 4).

III. A BURNING COAL.—A burning fire, and incense. "And he shall take a censer full of burning coals of fire off the altar" (Lev. xvi. 12). This points to the presence, power, and approval of God. It means the Atonement of Christ, made real to us by the Holy Spirit. The burning fire and the blood touch everything; our prayers and service as well as our hearts.

IV. A WARMING COAL.—A warming fire of comfort. "And the servants and officers stood there, who made a fire of coals, for it was cold" (John xviii. 18). Poor Peter was cold, both in body and soul, just then, and it was wise, no doubt, to get near the fire; but that fire would not warm his soul. There is only one sure remedy for this. Keep close to the fire of God's Word. Keep close together. Keep near to Jesus. Work well, and warm others.

V. A HOT COAL.—A busy blessing of love. "Thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head" (Rom. xii. 20). We are to burn people with love, warm people with sympathy, kill people with kindness, and bless the world with an overcoming life. Jesus did this, and we are to keep close to Him, and follow his example (1 Peter ii. 21-24).

A man found frost upon his windows, and tried to scrape it off. A neighbour saw him. "What are you doing?" he asked. "Getting rid of the frost," said the other, "for I can't see out." His friend saw it was foolish, and slow work, so quietly said, "Light a fire inside, and the frost will disappear of itself." How wise this remark, and if our hearts and lives have got chilled by the cold atmosphere of doubt and reason, ask God to light the fire of his love within, and soon there will be warmth, and light, and joy, in heart and life.

Winchester. C. EDWARDS.

Irish Distressed Ladies' Fund.—Those who have patronized and obtained work from the depôts at 411, Oxford Street, London, and 38, Mountjoy Square, Dublin, have enabled many ladies to maintain themselves or add to their slender and insufficient incomes. The charity has been afforded hearty support, the receipts during 1900 amounting to over £2,000, which was disbursed by the Irish and London Executive Committees. The distress and anxiety which is prevented by the timely aid of the fund can only be realized by those who are reduced from comfort to penury through no fault of their own. Copies of the annual report of the executive may be had from either of the depôts.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

I want to interest my elder "Young People" every week in what Mr. Meyer writes on the Christian Endeavour Topic. Parents will also find the S.S. Lesson Notes suggestive and helpful for Sunday talks with their young folk. See next page.)

"Twice Saved."

A STRANGE irregular group of mud and wattle huts, with old thatched roofs, huddled together, without regard to any law of order. A high stockade encircles the village, made of ugly hard wood, selected to withstand the ravages of white ants below ground, and the headlong rush of the village herd when lions prowl above.

These were the home surroundings of little Siawimbu, in the heart of Angola, West Central Africa. This strange village, nestling in the broad shade of a ring of mighty "ovilemba" trees, was the ombala or capital of Bihé's King.

Into one of these little houses, in the dusk of evening, plunged a dark, wild-looking African. There is only the red glow of a little fire on the ground, which he stoops to blow into a flame with his mouth before seating himself upon a tiny wooden block.

"Onye wa luluma uteka ulo?" the voice comes from a reed mat near the wall. Yet again the question is asked, "What for do you tremble to-night?" "Ha," he replies, "husumbako?" (is it not fear?) "Has not the King's medicine man named Siawimbu for a sacrifice to the spirits of the great, and said that my own hands must slay him?"

"My father, my mother! Woe is me! I am lacking," he groaned with a half wail.

"Nilako epito!" (shut the door), the strong voice replies in a dry whisper; our boy is waking.

"My father, my mother, what shall I do? I am lacking, I am lacking."

"To-night we flee," says the mother voice again; "we shall flee far with the moonlight. Early in the morning we shall cross the plain; the day after to-morrow shall we not sleep under the shadow of another chief! Siawimbu shall live!"

Silently, in the dead of night, the king's executioner made a way where the fence was rotten. Then he crept back for a bundle of his precious rubber, while the mother, with her treasure enveloped in an old horse blanket, slipped like a shadow through the night into the forest, cautiously feeling for the rut-like path with her feet.

Presently she was joined by her husband, who speedily loaded her up with a goat skin of meal, a gourd, and a small tusk of ivory. Then on they stole, silently past a neighbouring village, through another belt of wood, across a little brook, and up through the rustling maize fields, where they found an empty store hut in which to await the rising of the moon. The distant howl of a hyena seemed to make their tiny shelter doubly welcome.

When the morning glory of the sun warmed their poor bodies they were far away on the rolling plain, and Siawimbu was saved from death.

. . . . . .

Long afterwards, when listening to the missionary telling how the baby Jesus was saved from death, Siawimbu thought of what his mother had told him, and so he wanted to hear more.

By-and-by, when he learned God's only begotten Son really tasted death for every man, woman, and child, Siawimbu wondered still more. Then the gentle light of God's Spirit shone into his heart and showed him that sin brings death, but that the death of Jesus brought life to all those who would but accept Him. Siawimbu chose Jesus and everlasting life. Now he is a man preaching Jesus to his own people in Bihé.

H. Lawford Nicholls.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. J. Spiers, Hamilton, May 31-June 16. Mr. Arrowsmith, Reading, May 29-31; Surbiton, June 1; Margate, June 4-6. Mr. Hutchinson, St. Matthew's, Bayswater, June 11; Cranleigh, June 22-23; Gravesend, June 28; Southfleet, June 29-30. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Ventnor, June 9; Bonchurch, June 10; St. Lawrence, June 11-12; Gosport, June 13. Mr. R. T. Archibald, Aberdeen, to May 30; Edinburgh, May 31-June 17; Sheffield, June 28; Leeds, June 29. Mr. E. T. M. Dennes, Redhill, June 21. Mr. Phillips Welch, St. John's, Isleworth, June 15. Mr. S. J. Hewlett, with Caravan, Capel, Surrey, to May 30. Mr. E. Clark, with Caravan, Turvey, Bedford. Mr. L. H. Ingram, with Caravan, in Suffolk. Mr. David Clarke, with Caravan, in Essex.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending June 8.

Sun. June 2	Acts	v. 1-16	Thurs. June 6	Acts	vii. 1-16
Mon., „ 3	„	v. 17-32	Fri., „ 7	„	vii. 17-29
Tues., „ 4	„	v. 33-42	Sat., „ 8	„	vii. 30-43
Wed., „ 5	„	vi. 1-15

Poor Little Me!

Won't nobody send me to see the flowers?
Them beautiful cowslips as I've heard say
Which poor little children like me, may pick;
My daddie, he says, I shall go some "some-day."
But "some-day" to me seems a long way off,
And so, I am told, are the country lanes;
But little 'uns sometimes have gone, I know,
Along of "grown-ups," in them 'scursion trains.
But "tripping" costs money, and daddie's poor,
And mammie's away in the better land;
An attic up top is our home, you know,
In Poverty Alley, a-nigh the Strand.
A gentleman called on my dad last year,
To say I should go "if the funds held out."
Then I puzzled o' nights what that might mean,
And it gived me sumfin to fink about!
Till I asked my daddie, who said as how
That "tin was scarce, for that folks don't give
As he knows they would to the 'Fresh-air Fund'
If they saw the places in which we live."
So I never went, and daddie, he says
My cheeks is pale for the country air,
He only wishes that he could save
Five silver shillings to send me there!
Poor daddy works hard, but his pay is small,
And "times' werry bad" as I've heard him say,
So if poor little me is to go this year,
Then somebody kind and rich must pay.
Five shillings would send me for one whole week
To a seaside home, with a garding too;
Oh! ladies and gents, won't you please to think
What the Lord Jesus Christ would have you do?

Charlotte Murray.

"The Christian" Bible Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 280).

Study Psalms i-v.

Find the following:—

1. In his law doth he meditate.
2. My voice shalt thou hear.
3. Who will show us any good?
4. Thou shalt break them with a rod.
5. The way of the ungodly shall perish.
6. Unto Thee will I pray.
7. What is the godly man like?
8. What is the ungodly man like?
9. Who are blessed?
10. Who will God bless?
11. To whom does salvation belong?
12. What does the Lord know?
13. Whom does God set apart?
14. In what lay David's safety?
15. What advice is given to kings and judges?
16. What two things had God done for David?
17. What two things did he expect God to do?
18. Who is meant by "my king"?
19. What advice did He give to the sons of men?
20. Why will God have the kings and rulers in derision?
21. Quote a verse from another Psalm which speaks of having delight in God's law.

[Children under ten do any 6; under thirteen any 10; under seventeen any 16.]

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (279).

Hidden Text.

1. I (Isa. xxv. 1.)
2. Will (Isa. xviii. 4.)
3. Have (Isa. ix. 2.)
4. Mercy (Psa. lxxvii. 8.)
5. And (Isa. xl. 5.)
6. Not (Psa. xxxvii. 1.)
7. Sacrifice (Hosea vi. 6.)
8. For (Psa. lxxiii. 28.)
9. I (Psa. cviii. 1.)
10. Am (Psa. cii. 2.)
11. Not (Psa. xxxix. 1.)
12. Come (John xxi. 22).
13. To (1 Sam. xv. 22.)
14. Call (Rom. x. 14.)
15. The (Psa. xviii. 18.)
16. Righteous (Rom. v. 19.)
17. But (Psa. xxxii. 10.)
18. Sinners (Gal. ii. 17.)
19. To (Eccles. v. 1.)
20. Repentance (Acts xix. 4).

Text found in Matt. ix. 13.

Owing to Whitsuntide, there is no "First List" (279) this week. The complete list will be given next week.

No. 278—Correct Answers (second list) received from:—

A—Irene and Margery Ashdown, Mabel Ashwell*, Ella d'Arenberg, John Allsop, Samuel Allen.

B—E. and Charlie Bailey, Dorothy Butcher, Maggie and Gladys Batting, Eunice Baber, Frances Burnett*, Leonard Browne, Beatrice Brouard, James Barker, Dorothy Benson, Edith Blenkarn*, Lucienne Brabandes, Ernestine Bühl*, Gordon and Stanley Boxer, Eva Browne*, Evelyn Butlin, Gordon and James Bryant, Gwendolen Bailey*, Nellie Bayford*, Aleen Byres-Leake, Harold*, Dorothy* and Gordon Berry, Louise Betts, Maud Bunn, Massy and Conyers Baker.

C—Muriel Collett, Mabel Candlin, Gussie Clark, Agnes Cook, Ethel Cumbers*, Angel Colenso, Rosalind Clarke, Annie and Ernest* Cole, Gladys Calvert, Mabel Campe, Hannah Chapman*, Dorothy Clarke*, John*, David*, and Henry* Colville, Alice Crang, George Cross*, George Crawford*, Ruth Collis, Dorothy Cooper, Beryl Calvert, Walter*, Maggie*, and Jessie* Carter, Alfred Cocking, Alice Cady*, George Cary*, Duncan* and Hyde* Campbell.

D—Harold and Gladys Davis, May Darroll*, Vera Dickinson, Marie Denizot, Mary Dunn, Polognia Daws, Allison Devonshire, Marjory Dyke*, Nessie, Tom*, John, Ion and Elsie* Dunn, Ethel Dancy*, Elizabeth, George, Hilda and Constance Drayson.

F—Arthur Foley, Jeanne Faucon, Louise Filhol, Phyllis Fry, Laura Finch, Agnes, Lewis and Meg Fullarton, Edward Foley, Gwendolen and Elrene Fennell, Mabel and Eva Fletcher, A. and F. Figgis.

G—Hilda Griesheim*, Hilda* and Ivy Godfrey, Edith*, Dorothy Stuart and Jack Gray, Mary* and Daisy Greenacre, George Goodall, Isabel*, Margaret* and Elsie* Goudge, George, Colin and Margery Graham-Brown, Aimée Guilbert, Mary Glass*, Evelyn* and Grace Guiston.

H—Doris* and Harry* Hodgkinson, Elsie Hibbs*, Francie*, Florence*, Julyan and Norman Hoyte, John C. and James Henderson, Hetty Hill, Mary Haines, Violet Holford*, Georgette Hoffmann*, A. and May Handasyde, Ella Hake, Henry, Edith*, and Winifred* Harvey, Eileen* and Elise* Hill, Clarice Herivel*.

I—Isabel* and Ami* Inglis, Elsie Irvine.—J—Lizzie Johnstone*.

K—Susie Keen*, Isa* and Agnes* Kay, Dorothy*, Grace*, Cecilia and Philippa* Kerr, Jeanie Kyle, Lilian Kyme*.

L—Arthur Llewellyn*, Willie, Linda, Harry and Edith Lowe, Grace* and Maggie Locke, G. and Ethel Larwill, Alice Lee.

M—Nellie and Bertie Mills, Dorothy, Leonard and Winnie Mace, Mildred Morgan*, Charlie*, Alex* and Jessie* Morrison, Charlotte Millar*, Barbara Maconochy, Daisie Mackenzie, Winifred Martin*, Margaret*, Ella and Joy* McFadzean, Evie Miller, Ella* and John* MacMurray, Marjorie Martin*, Godfrey Miller, Margaret*, Daniel, Mary* and Dorothy* Morris, Isabel* and William* Morrice, Hilda and Winnie* Moorcroft, Dora Mui*, Dorothy Morgan, Margaret McDougall.

N—Edith Nash*.—O—Louisa O Brien, Eva* and Maude* Oakes.

P—Laura Percy, Isabel Perks, Lizzie and William Porter, Myrtle Perry*, Ada*, Willie*, Eddie, Jessie* and Connie Palmer, Ruth Pledger, Alison Paterson*, Mabel and Lucy Pelham-Burn, Mary* and Christine Pearson, Percy, Geoffrey and Clarice Peach, Olive Pine-Coffin*, Isabel* and Gladys* Phipps, Margery Pibel, Evelyn Primrose-Pechey*.

Q—Frances Quance*.

R—May and Eva Rodgers, Cecily*, Jessie and Elmina* Roe, Hope and Olive* Robinson, Maggie Russell.

S—Kathleen Shepherd*, Lily Scriven, Lydia Shirley, Violet*, Evelyn* and Gladys* Shaw, Nellie Savage, Flora Smith*, Raymond*, Augustus and William* Simpkin, Florence, John*, Effie* and Ellen Simpson, Nannie Sturrock*, Frankie Sellwood*, Stanley W. Smith*, Hugh* and Agnes* Shields, Ellen Scriven, Rose Smith*, Germaine Schumann, Poppie Stidolph, Christine Soans*.

T—Evelyn and Marjory Tracey, Reginald Thresh*, Olive Tritton*, Margaret Tweedy, Willie Thomas*, Frank Thompson, Winifred Trotter, Charlie and Flossie* Thompson, Theodora and Archibald Thorn.

U—Eva Usher.

W—Arthur and Louisa Walker, Mary Wilson, Gladys*, Elsie* and Lilian* Willoughby, Stewart and William Watson, Violet Walker*, Ellie* and Nora* Wyatt, James, Georgina, Sarah and Rachel* Wilson, Edith* and Edward Wheeler, Alexander and Ella Watt, Pringle Wilson*, Bertie Walls, Florry Wilde, Annie* and Sarah Wood, Queenie, Kenrick and Ernest Wakeford, Rachel* and Nellie* Wilson, Kathleen and Charles Wingrave, Dorothy Woodforde, Helen Whitney*, Ronald Watson.

Y—Robert Young.

FOREIGN LIST.

No. 274—Rotha, Eric, Ivan and Lottie St. George. No. 275—Dora Wallace, Ivan, Rotha, Eric and Lottie St. George (Canada). No. 276—Will, Nettie, Kate* and Ina Thomson. No. 277—Nettie, Kate* and Will Thomson (Bulgaria).

Personal.

Margaret Macdonald, Alice Lee.—I am glad to welcome you as new "Searchers." I trust that, like many others, you will find the study useful and interesting.

Margaret.—You must give chapter and verse to each answer.

Lizzie Johnstone.—Yes; I am pleased to see your name once more, and trust you are quite well again.

Margaret Tweedy.—Answers for "first list" are received up to Monday morning.

Eva Usher.—As your birthday is so near the Competition you may continue in the old division this time.

Dorothy Berry.—You gave thirteen words for twelve o'clock; and Harold gave five and eight words for four and seven o'clock respectively.

Uncle Tom.

The Barefoot Mission.

THE Barefoot Mission of the Ragged School Union is doing a beneficent work for the vast numbers of poor and neglected children of the Metropolis. Applications pour into the office daily from clergy, ministers, mission-workers, and more particularly from the managers, visitors, masters, and mistresses of the poorest Board Schools, for clothes for the boys and girls of the labouring classes. In addition to appeals for all kinds of clothing, there are calls for blankets, rugs, cushions, linen, and medicated wool, as well as for calico, flannel, and other fabrics for making up into garments by willing hands.

Grants of clothing are made in response, on the footing of a loan, so as to retain a hold upon them in case the charity should be abused—which very rarely happens. Thus thousands of little people have been made warm and comfortable, protected against the wet and cold, for which a lively gratitude has been expressed. During the past year alone, 19,344 new garments, and 29,606 worn garments, besides 7,636 pairs of boots and shoes, were distributed, as specific grants of clothing, to about 2,800 Board School children; and many thousands more have been distributed through the affiliated missions of the Ragged School Union.

To meet this great demand, numerous sewing circles and bands of ladies are hard at work; and if Christian people generally knew the joy which lights up the face of the little recipients, and the gratitude of the mothers, thousands of other helpers would gladly volunteer to help keep the roomy cupboards well supplied with clothing. Parcels of either new or worn garments are gladly received at the offices of the Ragged School Union, 32, John Street, Theobald's Road, London, W.C., where new rooms for this department were opened by the president, the Marquis of Northampton, on Tuesday, 14th inst. The secretary, Mr. John Kirk, will be pleased to furnish any further particulars of this useful and beneficent Mission.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, June 2.

How to Get Rid of Sin (1 John i. 5-10).

THERE is no question that the Christian heart asks more eagerly than this: How am I to get rid of sin? To be a child of God and to have a good hope of heaven is as nothing, so long as the white mantle of the soul is being perpetually besmirched by sin.

There are three pairs of thoughts in these words (6 & 7, 8 & 9, 10 & ii. 1). The first statement in each pair is false. These three things we ought not to say.

"We lie if we say that we have fellowship with Him and walk in darkness" (6).

'We deceive ourselves if we say that we have no sin" (8).

"We make God liar if we say that we have not sinned" (10).

The first of these statements condemns the false professor and the hyprocrite. The second condemns those who say that they are living sinless lives, because they are measuring themselves by their own standard, which is not wise. (How much wiser, 1 Cor. iv. 4, R.V.) The third condemns those who boast that they have lived so long without sin, and therefore do not need the blood of Jesus. If you ask those with whom these people live, and they speak the honest truth, they will often tell a very different story from that which these mis-guided souls speak of themselves.

The second statement in each pair is the truth. (1) Ver. 7. As we walk in the light with God, we are more and more conscious of our unworthiness and sinfulness. Even if we do not commit positive known sins, we realize that we come short of God's infinite standard. If we do not hate our neighbour, we dare not say that we love him as ourselves. If we do not do wrong things, we cannot say that we do the right always from the purest, holiest motive. How then can we walk in fellowship with the Holy God? Not surely because of our sinlessness, but because the blood of Jesus Christ is always cleansing us, as the tear-water keeps cleansing the eye-ball, and freeing it from dust and grit. So only can God walk with us.

(2) Verse 9. Instead of refusing to admit our sinnership, let us admit it. Let us confess that we come of a sinful race, that we have within us a perpetual tendency to magnify ourselves, that we are always needing the cleansing; and as we confess, immediately our heavenly Father, who is faithful to his Son and righteous to the plea of his atonement, will forgive and cleanse.

(3) Verse 10. Instead of insisting that we have not sinned, which is palpably false, let us stand wholly in our Advocate, who stands for us at the right hand of God, presenting his own blood and righeousness as the sufficient propitiation.

I do not think that we ever get rid of a tendency to revert to the self-life, to gratify ourselves, to live according to our own will. This tendency is what the Apostle calls "the flesh." It acts very subtly, and sometimes appears as spiritual self-satisfaction and pride. But it is always possible, and needs the utmost grace to detect and avoid. The Apostle says that it lusts against the Spirit; though, thank God, the Spirit is against the flesh with more than equal force, so that we may not do as otherwise we would.

We may expect to be saved from all known and conscious sin, from outbreaks of besetting sin, from deliberate and presumptuous disobedience to God's will, though at the end of the best day we ever spent, as we look back on it, we shall be conscious of imperfection and failure. Good as they have been, things might have been better.

Mind these rules:

1. Put away all known evil out of your life. Let the key of every cupboard be given to Jesus: so that his Spirit may cleanse and indwell all.

2. Yield your whole nature to Him.

3. Believe that He accepts it, and enters to fill and keep.

4. Expect that He will help you, in the hour of temptation, and look to Him to do so, handing over the first thought and suggestion of evil to Him.

5. Stand out of the way, and let Jesus live through your whole spirit, soul, and body, to the utmost of your capacity.

F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

A new society of fifty young Cubans has been formed at Cienfuegos, Cuba. They have visited the prison, and sung to 300 inmates, and are carrying the Gospel message to the 35,000 people of the city. Rev. A. De Biarritz, pastor of the Congregational Church, who reports the organization, is jubilant over the good work.

* * *

In looking at the programme for the forthcoming Convention of American Societies at Cincinnati, two subjects seem to have special prominence, those of "Bible Study" and "The Holy Spirit." Miss Hock will speak on "How to read the Bible," whilst Dr. Torrey will give a daily Bible study class. The speakers on the second subject will be Rev. J. F. Carson, D.D., and Rev. G. Campbell Morgan. The opening day will be Saturday, July 6.

* * *

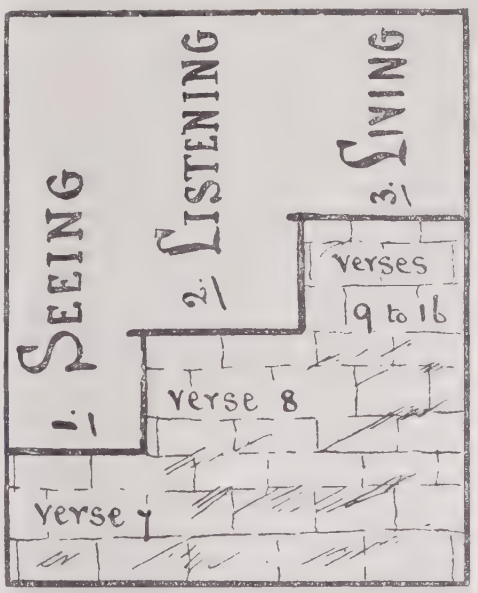
In the American colony at Le Gloria, Cuba, where a church is almost ready for use, in place of the tent at first used for religious services, a Christian Endeavour Society has been organized with bright prospects. The society in L. Troop, Eighth U.S. Cavalry, at Puerto Principe, has grown to sixty-eight members. At first the president was all alone. Now the tent is filled at the meetings, and instead of making fun as they did at first, the men now listen quietly. The members all attend every service, unless on guard or at some other duty.

International S.S. Lesson.

June 9, 1901.

Jesus Appears to Paul (Acts xxii. 6-16).

"I was not disobedient unto the heavenly vision" (Acts xxvi. 19).



Key to Blackboard Plan.—Paul says he was not disobedient to the heavenly vision, so it is as if he went up three steps, one at a time, until he reached the highest of all, living and witnessing for Jesus: He heard the call and he obeyed.

1. "Seeing."

Wonderful light, at noon, greater than the sun (v. 6). Jesus, Light of the World, greater than the sun. Others saw the light, but it did not mean anything to them (9); it did not enter their hearts as it did Saul's. How many to-day see the light, but it makes no difference in their lives. The light showed Saul his own heart, his sins (16), his wrong-doing, his mistaken goodness. Ask Christ to turn his light on to our lives and hearts, and we shall see what we really are, not what we think we are.

Is. i. 6: Wounded, loathsome through sin.

Jer. xvii. 9, 10: Deceitful and wicked.

Ez. xxxvi. 26: Hard and unclean.

Christ's own description of the human heart.

Matt. xv. 18, 19: Have we each seen our own heart in this light?

2. Listening.

After seeing we shall listen to hear what Christ has to tell us, and it will be much the same as He told Paul.

Sins committed; wrongs done to others; disobedience to conscience:—all these things hurt and wound the Lord Christ (8).

"Inasmuch as . . . ye did it unto Me."

"Wounded in the house of my friends" (Zech. xiii. 6); "Crucify the Son of God afresh" (Heb. vi. 6).

Wilful sin is turning our back on our loving Redeemer. Unbelief and disobedience are rampant in these days. Self-pleasing and worldly amusements engross the minds of thousands.

Let us listen to hear what He speaks to us, and if He is asking any question that makes us feel uncomfortable, be sure we are not all right.

3. Living.

Seeing and listening lead to some result. In Paul's case it led him to give his whole life over to Jesus Christ to be used by Him for his glory. (Study 14, 15.) Five things are mentioned. Paul's after life as given in the Acts; his letters and writings—all show what his life became. We can test ourselves by many of the counsels and advice given us from Romans to Hebrews.

Saul's life before he heard the heavenly voice was a good moral life, but that, apart from Christ, counts for nothing.

To live a life acceptable to God we must have Christ as the centre, the motive power, the goal. It must be "all for Jesus."

A Signal Answer to Prayer.

THE question is not seldom raised, Does God hear and answer prayer nowadays? If so, why do we not have instances brought to our notice which are indisputable? To strengthen the faith of such persons, the following incident, vouched for by a gentleman of good social position, which occurred quite recently, is placed on record.

In a Kentish village lives an aged Christian woman in humble circumstances, whose young daughter took a situation in Somersetshire. The mother, while on a visit to a relative, received a letter advising her that her daughter was returning home in a feeble condition of health, with the request that on the day specified a certain train should be met at Canterbury. This request came too late to be complied with, as delay had occurred in the post through the mother's absence from home, the letter having to be reposted to Tunbridge Wells.

Like Hezekiah of old, this aged Christian "spread the letter before the Lord," telling of her difficulties, and waiting upon Him for guidance. "Suddenly," she says, "as I was praying, I heard a voice most clearly and distinctly saying, 'Meet the next train from London at Tonbridge!' I resolved to go at once, although dissuaded by my relatives, who pointed out that the girl would be travelling by a different railway. I reached Tonbridge ten minutes before the next London train arrived. With eager anxiety I rushed from door to door of each third class carriage until (how wonderful it all seemed!) there was my poor girl lying back in a corner in a most feeble and exhausted state."

Such timely and gracious help given by God to an aged servant affords fresh proof of his watchful providence and of his willingness to hear and to answer the prayers of his own children. "Call upon Me in the day of trouble, I will deliver thee." C. O. R.

Clonmel Soldiers' Home.

FOR the last twelve years the house in Upper Gladstone Street, known as the Soldiers' Home, has been a true haven of refuge for tempted and perplexed men of numerous regiments. No words can express their appreciation for the opportunity afforded of gathering together for prayer and the reading of God's Word, seeking thereby to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the love of God.

Prayer is the mainspring of the work, and many who are now witnessing for Christ in various parts of the world bear testimony to answered petitions. The reading class and coffee rooms are well frequented, and the need for a larger Home becomes more and more pressing. The meeting room is far too small for the numbers who gather Sunday by Sunday. More accommodation is required both for the soldiers and the lady workers. The committee have under consideration a house in close proximity to the barracks, where the men would be able to attend without passing through the town, and would thus avoid the haunts of sin which lie between the barracks and the present Home. It is estimated that a sum of £600 will be needed for this object. The hon. superintendent is Miss E. B. Wood, 17, Gladstone Street, Clonmel, Tipperary.

C.E.T.S. Police Court Mission.—The summary o the year's work of the police court male missionaries of the London Diocesan branch of the C.E.T.S. shows that 1,430 pledges were taken; visits to offenders and police-courts, 9,675; cases dealt with at request of magistrates, 1,489; number of persons materially helped, 6,755. The restoration of persons to their friends, the sending of news of a lost one by letter, the removal of boys and girls from vicious surroundings to a morally healthy sphere, are some phases of the practical service which is rendered to those in need. During the year 1,732 cases were handed over to the care of the five women missionaries, who paid 11,428 visits, found sixty-two situations for women and girls, and wrote 2,044 letters relating to cases brought before them. The Women's Shelter Home, which is for inebriates only, admitted thirty-eight new patients, who had been chiefly sent by the police-court missionaries or temperance workers. The annual report of the Mission reviews its operations throughout the Metropolis, and cites many instances which attest the permanent value of the work accomplished. Copies may be had from the secretary, Rev. J. H. A. Law, 4, Sanctuary, Westminster.

About Books.

"THE GOSPEL IN NORTH AFRICA."

UNDER this title, the North Africa Mission has issued an attractive and well-illustrated volume* worth perusal not only by those interested in that particular work, but by all supporters of missions, and especially by such as are interested in Mohammedan lands. The first part, by Rev. J. Rutherfurd, of Lewes, is an excellent epitome of facts concerning Islam; and the second, by Mr. E. H. Glenny, the honorary secretary of the Mission, tells of its work, the development of which is an effectual answer to those who consider that the success of a "faith mission" depends on the personality of a Hudson Taylor or a George Müller. Its members, who have no human guarantee of support, have increased in twenty years from two to a hundred, and although at times confronted by empty coffers, have always been provided for, the annual income rising from £800 to £11,000. The assistance of THE CHRISTIAN in arousing and sustaining interest in the work is appreciatively referred to.

The effects of this work, which extends from Egypt to Morocco, and at one time touched on Arabia, cannot be gauged by the number of converts. From a personal acquaintance with the majority of the missionaries and their stations, as well as an intimate knowledge of those among whom they work, and their creed, the present writer can heartily testify as to the abundant good achieved, the clearing and tilling accomplished, in a difficult field by a sadly inadequate number.

The few points in this volume which strike one familiar with its subject as capable of revision do not detract from its value to the general reader, and specially pleasing features are its cordial recognition of the work of others in the same field, and its freedom from the shibboleths which non-sympathizers would describe as "cant." All who read this are invited to accede to the author's appeal for special prayer for workers to be thrust out into Arabia, the seat of Islam, while offering which they can do no better than read Mr. Zwemer's new book on that land and its needs.

A practical method of supporting this excellent work is to provide, or join with others in providing, for a single worker—about £130 a year, or £2 10s. a month. £5 will procure medicine and attendance for 100 patients, or a hospital bed can be supported for about 10s. a week. All particulars may be obtained from the Hon. Sec., 21, Linton Road, Barking, E.

BUDGETT MEAKIN.

"How to Pray the Lord's Prayer," by Ven. G. R. Wynne, D.D., Archdeacon of Aghadoe, and Canon of St. Patrick's, Dublin, is a thoughtful booklet. (6d. Jarrolds.)

Cassell's Family Doctor, by a Medical Man, is being reissued. It is to be completed in eight monthly parts (6d. each). As a domestic work, this has great practical value.

A Goodly Child (1s. Wells Gardner), by Catherine Ponton Slater, is an interesting narrative of the life of a family of ladies in a quiet Scottish village, showing anew how the best lessons are sometimes taught from the mouths of children.

In Master and Slave, a story which depicts the struggles of a poor man's life in rural England, Mr. Alfred T. Story gives us what is practically a plea for improved social conditions for farm labourers and their families. (2s. R. Brimley Johnson.)

In the handsome "Helps Heavenward" series, Mr. C. H. Kelly has issued a choice little volume by Principal J. T. L. Maggs, B.D., of Montreal, entitled, The Spiritual Experience of St. Paul, with other devotional papers. (2s.) The pages are a spiritual feast, and will amply reward the prayerful reader.

Sunday School Teaching: Practical Lessons from the Study of Children. By J. Gunn, M.A., D.Sc. (1s. Nelson). This is a remarkably practical book, designed to show the bearing of child-study upon Sunday school work. Conscientious teachers, who aim at the best results, will find these pages very suggestive.

An interesting contribution to the fiction of the day is, The Young Squire's Resolve, by Waldo Gray, which may be briefly described as an "anti-priestcraft and anti-alcohol story." It deals with varied aspects of life, both in the Established Church and the Nonconformist bodies; the characterization is vivid, and the interest well sustained, while Mr. Gray consistently aims to enforce high moral lessons. (6s. Fisher Unwin.)

Others besides readers of Truth will welcome Madge's Book of Cookery (3s. 6d. Horace Marshall & Son), in which Mrs. Humphry gives "over 1,000 practical recipes of an up-to-date and economical description," together with hints likely to be useful ranging over the entire field of household management.

While the author has not been able for the present, on account of health, to complete his design, Noah's Ark (6d. Prayer Union for Israel, 95, Southwark Street, S.E.), contains a series of talks on the subject of the Deluge which will be found most helpful by teachers anxious to impress the spiritual lessons of that event on young people.

Thoughts on Rome, and Other Essays. By Conway Scott (Belfast: McCaw, Stevenson, & Orr). The author tells us that these papers were written years ago. None the less do they deserve the attention of thoughtful people. The other essays are "National Health" and "Sir Henry Lawrence," and of these the former is the longer, and deals with matters of great social moment.

In A New Way around an Old World, Dr. F. E. Clark describes part of a long journey, undertaken in the interests of Christian Endeavour, from Japan to St. Petersburg by the Trans-Siberian Railway. The fruit of keen observation, accompanied by sixty-five illustrations and a map, the book is at once instructive and interesting, and should have many readers. (2s. 6d. Partridge.)

The writings of the late Dr. John Pulsford cannot but have attractions for serious readers; they are the product of thought, and stimulating in a high degree. We welcome a choice collection of his studies in a volume of the "Small Books on Great Subjects" series, entitled Infoldings and Unfoldings of the Divine Genius, in Nature and Man. (1s. 6d. J. Clarke & Co.) Though small, this is a great book—a treasury of spiritual gems.

No claim for originality is made by Mr. H. Hankinson for the various methods of Bible study outlined in Searching the Bible Mine (1s. 6d. Children's Special Service Mission), yet many a youthful student will hail the volume as embodying the loving counsel of one who can sympathetically enter into their needs. To the reader who knows the voice of the Spirit of God, it will supply just such guidance as will enable him to make good use of his time, and will lead him past the gateways of sense and time into the very presence of God.

That there is much to be desired in the spirit of our present-day commercial life, is frankly recognized by Christian men everywhere, and the subject is so very important that it is well we should have booklets like Christian Business, by Garston Deen (6d. Stockwell), to ensure that we may never become so used to it as to forget its urgency. At the same time, we do not agree with the author's condemnation of the "entire" commercial system of the country, for God is not without his witnesses among our merchants and raders, nor are they a small company.

The Imperial Protestant Federation has reprinted from the Contemporary Review, Monastic Orders Up to Date (6d. Marshall Bros.), which is rightly named on the title-page, "An Exposure of Terrible Cruelty in French Nunneries." The close veil of secrecy which the Roman Catholic Church draws round all its operations alone makes possible the pretence of high principle in dealings with the poor. Even Protestants have been taught to think with respect of the education of girls in French convents; but here it is shown to be such a horrible system of cruel bondage and heartless severity as could hardly be matched among the sweaters of East London.

A valuable addition has been made to the series of "Church of England Handbooks"—The Evangelical School in the Church of England: Its Men and its Work in the Nineteenth Century. By Prof. H. C. G. Moule, D.D. (2s. Nisbet.) Several papers which appeared in The Record in January last thus appear in a more permanent form, revised and improved. The pages are full of lively interest, and from first to last reliable men and definitely spiritual movements are presented to view. At the same time due attention is paid to good influences from all quarters arising, so far as they have affected the religious life of England. It is impossible not to read with interest this sympathetic sketch of a century's Evangelical work.

The Sources of Islam: A Persian Treatise, by Rev. W. St. Clair-Tisdall, M.A., C.M.S. missionary from Julfa. Translated and abridged by Sir William Muir, K.C.S.I. (1s. 6d. T. & T. Clark.) The treatise shows in a manner that must convince the candid Moslem that the sources of Islam are purely human—not divine, as Mohammedans claim. The translation enables the English student to understand in a measure otherwise hardly possible the teaching of Mahomet and its origination. We would fain hope that it may lead some Christians to take a deeper interest in the evangelization of Mohammedans. To assist in the circulation of the treatise and its translation will be to have part in a great enterprise.

A new edition of James Chalmers, by William Robson (1s. 6d. Partridge) brings the life story of the martyr missionary and explorer of Rarotonga and New Guinea down to the end. The final chapter, which deals with the events since Mr. Chalmers last left this country in 1887, has been written by Mr. Frank B. Broad, of the London Missionary Society, and the volume is calculated to set out on a new career of usefulness, as a help to mission work. For the blood of the martyrs has not ceased to be the seed of the Church. The illustrations add much to the value of the book, and for old and young alike it will prove an attractive volume.

Seeing "ourselves as others see us" is a gift which, though unattainable in any absolute sense, is one of the goals after which men are ever striving. Rev. T. G. Selby has thrown much knowledge of the Far East, gathered at first hand, into the form of conversations sometimes between natives, at other times between Europeans and natives; and the result is a volume—As the Chinese See Us (3s. 6d. Unwin)—which cannot fail to bring home to the thoughtful reader the idea that we have much to learn in regard to the best way of bringing Christian teaching to bear on the Chinese. Light is thrown on native prejudices and modes of thought; and the newspaper reader and intending missionary alike will find its pages well repay perusal.

Whether as a quarterly periodical or as an annual volume, the Sun-Children's Budget is a very desirable publication. Edited by Phœbe Allen and Dr. Henry W. Godfrey, it leads boys and girls along the pleasant byways of botany, and cultivates interests which cannot but be fruitful of good in the training of the young. And all this is done with good taste, and with a welcome regard for typographical and artistic beauty. The third volume of the Budget is before us (3s. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.) and while its general contents amply sustain the high reputation achieved by its predecessors, the correspondence and other practical features show that the circle of readers is steadily growing. The parent who introduces such a magazine into the home does more than he thinks for the development of what is best in the rising generation.

Among the recent issues of the Protestant Reformation Society are—A revised edition of Rev. Charles Neil's "Popular Protestant Catechism" entitled, The Church, and three "Popular Protestant Dialogues"—one on The Lord's Supper, by Rev. Charles Neil; one on The Mass, as performed in the Church of Rome, and imitated by Ritualists, from the pen of Rev. C. H. H. Wright, D.D.; and one on Wholesome Doctrine, as exhibited in the Homilies of the Church of England, from the pen of Rev. James Silvester, rector of Nympsfield, Glos. These are all penny books, to be had for 6s. 6d. per 100 for distribution. A more substantial work is Anti-Ritualism, being a Catechism on the Communion Office, by Rev. W. Preston, M.A., a new edition, revised and enlarged. (2d.; 12s. per 100.) These publications are designed to counteract the teaching given in manuals circulated by Sacerdotalists.

"IF" is a poem printed on card No. 3 of the Silver Series, with a word of cheer to those who can only do "little" things for God. (6d. per doz. Friend, Brighton.)

Mr. T. Thatcher, College Green, Bristol, has issued in booklet form a sermon by Dean Pigou, entitled, THE APPEARANCES OF OUR LORD AFTER HIS RESURRECTION, AND MODERN SPIRITUALISM.

IN REMEMBRANCE OF ME: Helps to the Due Observance of the Lord's Supper. By W. T. Davison. (2d. C. H. Kelly.) A choice booklet, prepared by direction of the Conference of the Wesleyan Church.

THE BEST THING OUT (8s. per 100. Marshall Brothers) is a tract for schoolboys, in which the true story is simply and attractively told of the leading of a Rugby sixth form boy up to the "obedience of faith."

The new issue of the "Useful Arts and Handicrafts" series is devoted to PERFUMES AND COSMETICS (6d. net. Dawbarn & Ward). These publications admirably maintain the high reputation of the earlier numbers of the series.

THE "HELMINGHAM" TRACTS, by the late Bishop Ryle, are in three series. Each packet contains an assortment of twelve sixteen-page booklets, printed on tinted paper, and presenting the Gospel message in simplicity and with pointed fidelity. (6d. packets. Drummond's Tract Depot.)

SELF-DECEPTION (1d. Drummond's Tract Depot, Stirling), by H. K. Wood, is a timely tract showing the sin and danger on the part of professing believers of neglecting, or refusing to forsake all for Christ, and pointing out the way to the wholehearted surrender He claims.

Since writing "The Ministry of Divine Helpfulness," Mr. Thomas Payne has been repeatedly asked, "Why are we subject to infirmities, since they are all in the Atonement, the same as our sins?" and in reply has written, OUR INFIRMITIES: ARE THEY IN THE ATONEMENT? (1d. Chrystal, Manchester.)

A striking lecture by Alexander Farrow deals with the connection of OUR LABOUR MARKET AND THE EDUCATION ACT. The author deplores the waste of capital and industrial wealth, which he contends might be averted by the application of moral principles in the treatment of labour difficulties, and the right appreciation of the place of God in the individual and national conscience. (1d. Blades, East & Blades, 23, Abchurch Lane, E.C.)

A booklet deserving of wide circulation is THE STUMBLING BLOCK, by Rev. Robert Brown. It is a helpful and luminous illustration from Isaiah lvii. 14, and will appeal to those who are awakened to a sense of their need of a Saviour, but are still in the throes of uncertainty and conflict. In TWO LETTERS the same author offers some timely counsel and encouragement to a lady under conviction, and seeking after God. (Twenty-five post free 1s. W. Wileman, 27, Bouverie Street, E.C.

---

* THE GOSPEL IN NORTH AFRICA. By J. Rutherfurd, M.A., B.D., and Edward H. Glenny. With illustrations and maps. (Boards, 2s. 6d.; cloths, 3s. 6d.; presentation edition, 5s. London: Lund, Humphreys, & Co. Barking: Offices of North Africa Mission.)

Obituary.

MRS. HARRIETTE NOEL THATCHER.

THIS faithful servant of Jesus Christ died at the ripe age of eighty-five, on May 18, at Gerrard's Cross, Bucks. She suffered the loss of her home for conscience sake in her young days, and her troublous experiences through life filled her with kindness and sympathy to others. She was decided in her opinions, and true to her religious convictions. A zealous abstainer, she earnestly used her pen against drink and tobacco, and in her later years did good work among the young women employed in the city, in association with Mrs. Fisher's Welcome Mission.

VIVIAN TREWBY.

We regret to announce the death, at the age of twenty-five, of Vivian Trewby, who was killed in action at Kaalkraal in South Africa, on Sunday, May 5, and buried by the Boers. He was the youngest son of the late W. G. Trewby, of Langside, Cottenham Park, Wimbledon; and when volunteers were asked for, joined, as a trooper, the 19th Battalion of Imperial Yeomanry, composed of old public school boys, and known as "Paget's Horse." It is interesting to note that when asked: "Why did you volunteer?" his answer came, clear and unwavering: "My country is in difficulties. I am fitted in every way to go out. I feel I ought to go." This is the spirit with which he had undergone a hard up-country life in New Zealand, only eventually to have his land swept by a terrible bush-fire, which destroyed everything. Shortly before his death he had lost a friend, to whom he had become greatly attached among his fellow troopers, in the Hon. John Waldegrave, whose death was referred to in these columns a few weeks ago. Though called to higher work, Vivian Trewby has left behind him "footprints on the sand of time" by the example of his temperate, pure, determined, and God-fearing life.

THE LATE MRS. SMYLY.

The decease of Mrs. Smyly, of Dublin, to which we referred in our last issue, evoked widespread sympathy with the mourning family. The funeral took place on May 21, the body of the gracious lady being laid to rest in Mount Jerome Cemetery. In the funeral procession walked the members of the staff of the Irish Church Missions, as well as representatives of the London Committee, including Rev. N. F. Duncan. A number of the senior agents of the same society removed the coffin from the hearse to the bier. The chief mourners were Sir Philip Smyly, M.D., Dr. William Smyly, and Mr. John Smyly (sons).

The service in the chapel was conducted by the Archbishop of Dublin and Rev. P. B. Johnson. The former, in the course of an impressive address, expressed admiration of the character of Mrs. Smyly and of the devoted and self-denying work which she carried on for some sixty-three years in the service of her Lord. She undertook and maintained her work in the schools and homes with which her name was connected, because she believed God called her to it. That God gave her success is absolutely undeniable. Hundreds, nay thousands of children who have passed through the schools are filling respectable and useful positions in life, and, far better than this, many of them, at all events, have learned to know and serve the Lord.

The concluding portion of the service at the graveside was conducted by the Archbishop, and Rev. Wm Smyly, rector of Penge (nephew of the departed lady).

We hope to give, in an early issue, a portrait and sketch of Mrs. Smyly.

Rev. David Baron.—Large audiences of Jews and Christians gathered at Posen to hear Mr. Baron's message. Visits to Teschen and Bielitz (Austrian Silesia) followed, and the latest communication is dated from Neu-Landez, "in the darkest part Chassidic Galicia." The street crowds are fanatical and extremely unfriendly. Yet even here there are thirsty souls to whom it has been a joy to tell the story of the Cross.

American Notes.

THE Y.M.C.A. in this city is very actively engaged over new buildings. Two are nearing completion, ground is soon to be broken for another, and money is being collected for two more (one for the French branch and the other for the coloured work). The buildings in course of erection are the one for Columbia University, and that for the Melrose Railroad Branch. The first is the gift of William E. Dodge, is to cost 100,000dols., and will be called Earl Hall. The second will cost 26,000dols., and will be called the Toncey Memorial. The land has been given by the New York Central Railroad. Very prominent features will be the dormitories, the baths and the restaurant, although a large hall will also be provided.

The report of the Christian and Missionary Alliance just issued shows that the contributions have during the past year reached 264,639·54dols., an increase on the previous year of 110,084·15dols. or 72 per cent. Mr. David Crear is now Financial Secretary.

It was announced not long ago that at the election of municipal officers at Long Branch, a very fashionable summer resort on the New Jersey seashore, the enforcement or non-enforcement of the State laws against gambling was made the issue, and that the gambling element carried their ticket. Their victory, however, is not likely to bring forth any great pecuniary fruit, for last week Justice Fort announced, at the county seat, his intention to keep the grand jury in session from then till October 1, which has never been done before. He referred in scathing terms to the disposition of the local authorities to protect the gambling houses at Long Branch, and said in part:—"Term after term the Court has referred to the gambling places at Long Branch. That gambling has been carried on there, in an open and notorious manner is unquestioned. The situation has reached a point where it is now simply a question whether or not the courts of Monmouth county are to abdicate and turn the county over to these criminals and their apologists, aiders, and abettors. The test must be made now. Whatever power the county possesses must be employed. The gambling places along the Atlantic coast in this county must not open this summer without knowing that if they do they will be dealt with as severely as the law permits."

It is frequently asserted by Roman Catholics that the Church has somewhat changed its ideas on some important points, and "adapted" itself in this country to its American environment. Within the last few days, however, two occurrences have proved the falsity of this statement, one being a bitter attack on our public school system by Monsignor Conaty, who holds a prominent position in the Catholic University at Washington, in a speech delivered at Chicago; and the other a plain declaration by Father Harney, a Paulist missioner of this city, made at New Brunswick, a town about twenty-five miles from here. The New York Herald gave a prominent position to the following statement by Father Harney: "I do not doubt, if they were strong enough, that the Catholic people would hinder, even by death if necessary, the spread of heretical errors among the people, and I say rightly so."

At the annual meeting of the American Tract Society, the reports were encouraging. The floating debt of 200,000dols. had been reduced by 110,000dols. since January, 1900; and the Society's "sky-scraper" on Nassau Street, which had shown a deficit of some 30,000dols. the previous year, had now been so managed that it had paid all its expenses. During the year twenty-seven new publications were added to the Society's list. The aggregate number of periodicals issued was over 3,000,000, and fifty-five colporteurs (including seven students labouring in vacations) had sold or given away over 34,000 volumes. General Oliver O. Howard ("The Christian Soldier"), President of the Society, occupied the chair, and President McKinley was elected a vice-president of the Society, in the place of ex-President Benjamin Harrison, deceased.

Among the addresses given, that of Dr. Rankin attracted special attention. There are in "the South," he said, about 7,500,000 of negroes, of whom about 20,000 are preachers. If the negroes are to be lifted up, their preachers, who are also their leaders, must be instructed and lifted up. His own plan has been to assemble audiences by circular at central points, and lecture on such subjects as The Bible, How to make Sermons, Christian Living, Purity, Temperance, and Sunday School Work. Through the efforts of Mr. John C. Martin, a very suitable "library" had been selected for these people, comprising eighteen volumes, containing 8,000 pages, which was supplied through the co-operation of the Tract Society for 12dols.

The Federal authorities seem to have really taken the slave girl matter in San Francisco in earnest. Several raids have been made by U S. District Attorney Woodworth, and a number of slave girls have been seized. It is the plan of the Government to send them back to China as fast as proof is established that they are illegally held. As this course will entail a loss of about 3,000dols. for the owners on each girl, the slave-holders are likely to be forced out of business before long. And the sooner the better.

New York. ROGER MARTIN.

Oxford Letter.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

OXFORD has got its new Bishop. The appointment of the Dean of Christ Church as successor to Dr. Stubbs was not unexpected; and while many will wish that Dr. Paget had stronger leanings towards the Evangelical party, he will have the earnest wishes of all Oxford people for a life of great usefulness as Bishop of Oxford. We cannot but think at such a time of the grievous domestic loss he has recently sustained, and sympathize afresh with him in closing that section of his life with which his wife was associated. Dr. Paget has won the respect of all by the simplicity and sincerity of his character.

During the Eights week, Rev. C. J. Casher and his helpers have again been busy with tract distribution, and we pray that God may wing his Word to many a heart.

The Vice-Chancellor and Proctors have reminded all members of the University in statu pupillari that, if found frequenting hotels, taverns, or restaurants within the city, they are liable to be punished in accordance with the provisions of the University Statutes. This is, of course, no new order, but the reminder, and the circumstances under which it is understood to have been issued, indicate that it is in future to be more strictly enforced. The reminder is the result of a close watch kept on several of the most popular establishments in the centre of the city.

A meeting on behalf of the Oxford Mission to Calcutta was held in the Trinity College Hall on Sunday night under the chairmanship of the President of the College. The Dean of Christ Church (Bishop designate of Oxford) spoke. His chief point was the undemonstrative character of Englishmen, which needed some such thing as the work of missions to save it from its greatest dangers. It was only by self-committal to some such work as this that they might escape from the danger of hesitation, of timidity, of half-heartedness, of double-mindedness, which so easily took shelter behind this great and high quality of a just reserve.

A large and influential meeting in connection with the sale of drink to children and Sunday closing was held in the Town Hall on Sunday evening week. The Master of Balliol (Dr. Caird) presided, and Dr. Fairbairn and Rev. V. S. S. Coles were among the speakers. Dr. Fairbairn, with his usual earnestness, urged that the fatality that killed an empire was always born and bred and nursed within the bosom of the Empire itself. He contended that the State had an obligation to the weak and the defenceless, especially when assailed by a traffic that was legalized and encouraged in its spontaneous strength.

The Y.M.C.A.

UNDER the Lancashire forward movement new Associations have been started at Radcliffe and Ramsbottom.

The St. Helens (Lancashire) Association has adopted a company scheme for the erection of a large new building. Plans have been submitted in competition, and are now receiving consideration. An admirable site has been presented by the president, Colonel W. W. Pilkington.

The annual conference of Y.M.C.A. general secretaries is arranged to take place at Shaftesbury House, Margate, the seaside home of the London Central Association, from June 28 to July 5, following the meetings of the British Conference at Oxford. Rev. John Smith, D.D., of Edinburgh, has consented to give a course of lectures to the secretaries on "The Responsibilities of Christian Leaders" and "The Spring of our Strength."

The Spring Conference of the Liverpool and North Wales District Union was held recently at Bangor. A hundred and twenty delegates from various centres in the district were in attendance, and the meetings were encouraging in the highest degree. The Mayor of Bangor and other representative friends took part in the Saturday evening gathering. On Sunday morning a devotional service was conducted by Rev. J. Emlyn Evans; in the afternoon, under the presidency of Dr. Witton Davies, a session was held, at which addresses were given by Mr. W. Hind Smith and Mr. R. D. Pringle; and in the evening a united evangelistic meeting was held, Alderman Thomas Lewis presiding. A strong provisional committee has been appointed with the view of restarting Association work in Bangor.

Evangelistic.

London Tent Campaign.

THE Whit-Monday rally of the London Tent Campaign drew a large concourse of converts and friends from all parts of London to the great tent at Stratford. The two gatherings which were held were full of spiritual help and encouragement.

In the afternoon, Lord RADSTOCK gave an earnest Gospel address on Luke xiv. 15, distinguishing between a knowledge of religious theories and a personal trust in the Lord Jesus Christ. Mr. J. S. HARRISON, who followed, spoke forcibly on Power promised (Acts i. 5); Power sought (v. 14); Power given (ii. 4); and Power in exercise (ii. 14).

The need of Christlike pity and sympathy for the miserable and suffering was dealt upon by Mr. J. B. WOOKEY, after which Rev. JOHN WILSON, of Woolwich, speaking on the consecration of the lives of young people to the Lord's work, took for his text the words, "There is a lad here," and added the question, "What is to become of him?" Mr. Wilson added some pointed words on our responsibilities for encouraging the young, and referred to the comparative unconcern with which Spurgeon and Moody were regarded in their youthful days.

At the invitation of Mr. LEONARD WEAVER testimonies were given as to the human instrument used to the conversion of Christians present. One friend said, "A tract, placed under my door." An elderly man said, "A little girl, who invited me to a meeting." Another friend said, "A washerwoman, who advised me to go and hear Mr. Charrington, the converted brewer." A remarkable testimony was given by an ex-burglar, who said that while serving nine months' hard labour in Wormwood Scrubbs prison, he knelt one day in his cell, and surrendered himself to Christ. Another notable experience was that of a man who, on entering a meeting, had a coverless copy of "Sacred Songs and Solos" given to him. He placed the book on a seat in front of him, and his eye caught the words of a hymn on the first page, and they were the means of his conversion, there and then.

The meeting concluded with the Doxology, sung as a thanksgiving for the restoration to health of Mr. BEWLEY WEAVER, who was present.

At the evening meeting a stirring address was given by Miss GRACE PETTMAN, who, in the course of an address to the women present, showed how spiritual work could be undertaken in spite of many difficulties. Mr. CHARLES INGLIS spoke on Acts iv. 31, and Mr. J. THEODORE ISAAC on the words, "Not saved;" and Mr. Bewley Weaver followed with a telling evangelistic address.

Mr. RICH, local secretary of the Campaign, told of a glorious work in the tent on the previous day, when over 100 persons sought salvation. Re. J. TUCKWELL also spoke, and the meeting concluded with an impressive appeal from Mr. LEONARD WEAVER for solemn consecration to the Lord's work.

With North Sea Fishermen.

Mr. JOSIAH NIX is having times of blessing among the fishermen in Stornoway. On May 12 he took three services in the parish church, and crowds of people attended. On Sunday week Mr. Nix had a remarkable meeting, and many men yielded to the Saviour. The fishermen are full of faith and expectation for a revival.

Open-Air Work in Birmingham.

At that well-known spot, the Bull Ring, Birmingham, Gospel meetings are held each Sunday morning in the open air. They were commenced in order to counteract secularist teaching, an address on some phase of infidelity being followed by a Gospel appeal. Tracts are distributed, and the friends believe that much good has been accomplished.

Mr. J. R. D. M'Causland in the Highlands.

A mission was recently arranged for Mr. J. R. D. M'CAUSLAND in Inverness, after which he visited Beauly, the beautiful seat of the Frasers of Lovat. He intended his visit to be a short one—only one night, but God willed it otherwise, and the meetings continued with increased attendance and increasing interest for two weeks. The gatherings were held in the U.F. Church, and Rev. J. R. MACRAE, ever ready to use every means of bringing the Gospel under the notice of his flock, nightly presided. It happened that Rev. W. D. A. MACKENZIE, the U.F. minister of Strathconan, was in Beauly on the Sabbath when first Mr. M'Causland sang there. The two at once agreed to work together during the mission, and so nightly Mr. M'Causland sang and Mr. Mackenzie preached the Gospel. At the end of the first week's meetings a deputation from the congregation waited on the pastor requesting his help to secure the continuance of the meetings for another week. To this Mr. MacRae gladly assented, and the gatherings each evening testified to the interest taken in the mission. One feature was the unity manifested by the various branches of the Christian Church in the district.

Mr. Henry Varley in Dundee.

A Mission has been held at Dundee by Mr. HENRY VARLEY, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., from May 14 to 27. The meetings, despite the bright summer evenings, were largely attended, and created great interest. Mr. Varley did not spare himself; he conducted three meetings daily—the noon-day prayer meeting, which is an outcome of Mr. Moody's great work in 1874, an afternoon Bible reading, and an evening evangelistic service. The audiences were larger during the second week than during the first. No Mission held in the town for many years past seems to have been more stimulating to numbers of God's people, and as to other results it need only be stated that on one evening no fewer than thirty-eight people rose up to confess their surrender to the Lord Jesus. Among the many addresses given it is difficult to select any for special mention, because they were all of a high level, and very forcible and convincing; but perhaps the most solemn meeting was on Wednesday last, when the subject was "Death and Afterwards—the Veil Lifted," an exposition of the story of Lazarus and the rich man.

The two lectures for men only, which Mr. Varley gave in the largest hall in the city, on Sunday afternoon, created a profound impression. At the first meeting the entire audience of nearly 1,800 men rose en masse to signify their strong desire that another should be given. These meetings will long live for good in the memory of those who were present.

W. S.

Mr. WILLIAM FORBES has been conducting services at New Brighton, and giving addresses to theatrical women in Liverpool and Manchester.

Mr. J. BENNETT ANDERSON, who recently returned to London after his fourth evangelistic tour in Canada, is taking active part in the London Tent Campaign. Last week he was with Mr. Leonard Weaver in the Stratford Tent, where much blessing has been given.

Mr. F. H. DAWE has just concluded a happy month of service at Miss McPherson's Home of Industry, Bethnal Green Road, in connection with the Evangelization Society. There has been the hearing ear, and we trust the open heart. C.

Mr. W. COLLARD held three days' meetings at Long Ditton Mission, May 18 to 20. We praise God for his visit, which was used to the salvation of souls, the reclamation of backsliders, and in blessing to God's people. On the last evening Mr. Collard gave his life-story, which was a powerful testimony.

T. COOKE-COLLIS.

Evangelists' Engagements.

 This column is intended for Missions of some days' duration, not for engagements of a single day.

MRS. BAEYERTZ.—June 2-17, Gt. Wakering.
MR. J. BENNETT ANDERSON.—During May and June, London Tent Campaign.
MR. W. BRADLAUGH.—Till June 2, Winchester.
MR. JOHN COATES and MR. GEO. BENTLEY.—Till June 3, Lynbrook, with large Gospel Tent.
MR. W. D. DUNN.—June 1-28, Dundee; July 6-20, Larbert; July 28, Aberdeen.
MR. J. ELLIOTT.—June 2, Gospel Hall, Victoria Road, Dartmouth.
MR. JAMES S. HARRISON.—During June, St. Giles' Christian Mission, Sundays only.
REV. J. JAMESON.—June 1-10, Bolton Villas, near Bradford.
MR. BOB JOHNSON.—June 4-7, Epsom Racecourse; 5, Croydon.
MR. NEWTON JONES.—May 30, Mildenhall, Suffolk; June 2, Lavenham; 9, Cleveland Hall, W. London Mission.
MR. W. R. LANE.—June 2, Manchester (Free Trade Hall); 8-17, Mountain Ash, South Wales.
MR. S. LEVERMORE.—May, Merrion Hall, Dublin.
MR. MUSA BHAI, Indian Evangelist.—May 31-June 7, Totterdown Y.M.C.A.
MR. JOSIAH NIX.—June 2, Stornoway.
GIPSY SMITH.—Till June 3, Ilkeston.
REV. F. C. SPURR.—June 2-10, Gravesend; 23. Walsall.
MR. J. WEEDON.—Till end of August, Tent Missions Evangelization Society.
MR. JAMES SPRUNT.—During June, Kensal Rise Tabernacle, except 16, Cecil Hall, Enfield Town.

Personalia.

Mr. G. C. STEBBINS, in a recent letter, rejoiced to report improved health in the case of Mrs. Stebbins. Among duties lying in the near future, Mr. Stebbins mentions the direction of the musical service at the Jubilee Convention of the Y.M.C.A. at Boston, June 11 to 16, and at like services at the Student Conferences at Northfield. Much prayer has been offered regarding these important meetings, and great blessing is confidently anticipated.

Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN sails from Liverpool by the Teutonic on Wednesday, June 12. Dr. Parker is to preside over the public farewell meeting, to be held in the City Temple on Thursday evening, June 6. Rev. F. B. Meyer, at whose initiative the meeting has been arranged, will speak, together with Revs. J. D. Jones, A. Ramsay, and J. Gregory Mantle. On Mr. Morgan's arrival in New York, a meeting will be held to inaugurate his work in the States in connection with the Northfield Extension Movement.

Among the Churches.

The appointment of Rev. Prebendary Barlow, vicar of Islington, to the Deanery of Peterborough is one which will be received by evangelicals with feelings of deep satisfaction.

At Notting Hill Presbyterian Church Rev. Hugh Falconer was recently inducted to the pastoral charge. The church was well filled. Dr. Hanson presided, and was assisted by Revs. Dr. Thoburn McGaw and Alex. Connell.

A new church erected for the congregation of Randle Street Mission (Rev. J. Knox) has been opened at Tranmere, Birkenhead. The building, which has cost £3,000, and was opened practically free from debt, seats 500 adults.

The Forward Movement inaugurated by the Primitive Methodist Missionary Committee at Kettering continues to meet with much encouragement, and it is believed that a strong church will be gathered.

Owing to illness, Rev. D. Burford Hooke has intimated to the directors of the Colonial Missionary Society his inability to continue the full deputation work, and it is hoped it will be undertaken largely in future by ministers and missionaries on furlough from the colonies.

A series of services has been held at Myrtle Street Baptist Chapel, Liverpool (Rev. John Thomas), in connection with the centenary of the cause, Pastor Thomas Spurgeon taking part. Mr. Thomas' health is now better than at any previous time in his Liverpool ministry, and the work of the church is becoming increasingly powerful and aggressive.

With the Bishop of London's approval, Rev. W. Carlile, of the Church Army, is arranging to conduct, free of expense, in London and in large town parishes in the provinces, a number of "Missionary Sundays," for the purpose of trying to secure likely men as candidates for holy orders, and for training as lay workers at home or abroad.

The numerical returns of the United Methodist Free Churches show a total membership of the home churches of 72,575 church members, 6,473 probationers, and 2,422 junior church members. These show increases on the previous year of 490, 1,834, and 454 respectively. Eighteen or nineteen candidates for the ministry will be recommended to the annual assembly at Redruth in July.

The new Baptist chapel at Plashet Grove, East Ham, built by the London Baptist Association, under the presidency of Rev. John Bradford, has been opened for public worship. It is a most commodious building, handsome externally, and well fitted up internally, and is admirably adapted to the needs of this rapidly growing London suburb. Dr. Maclaren preached the opening sermon to a crowded congregation.

The Bishop of London officiated on Saturday morning at the consecration of the new church of St. James', Muswell Hill, this being the first occasion of the kind in which he has taken part since his elevation to the See. The original church, of which Bishop Jackson was vicar, was a somewhat uncomely building, and in recent years has become too small for the rapidly increasing population around it.

A site has been secured in Townhead Street, Sheffield, for the buildings for a slum settlement to be formed in connection with Queen Street Congregational Church (Rev. W. Blackshaw). The premises of Garden Street Church are also to be used for the work of the "Croft House Settlement," as it is to be designated. The scheme involves an outlay of about £6,000, towards which Mr. and Mrs. Blackshaw have given £500, and another £950 has been raised.

By the will of the late Mrs. Nash, who was for many years a prominent and honoured member of the Wesleyan Methodist body, the following societies and institutions benefit, among others:—Wesleyan Missionary Society, £1,000; British and Foreign Bible Society, £1,000; Children's Home, Bonner Road, E., £500; Worn Out Ministers' Fund, £1,200; Strangers' Friend Society, £500; Wesleyan Seamen's Mission, £200; Wesleyan Local Preachers' Mutual Aid Association, £500; and London City Mission, £200.

A large assembly came together at the City Temple, E.C., on Monday last, when Dr. Parker preached his first, experimental, Whit-Monday sermon. The preacher dwelt chiefly with the moral influence of Christian work on London. Referring to the liquor traffic, he urged that it is not fair to tax industry, and to allow laziness, indolence, and drunkenness go free. Without having any wish to interfere with the liberty of the subject, he thought that when one subject is killing another, the law ought to step in and do something.

The annual gathering of the Society of Friends was held last week at Devonshire House, E.C. The opening gathering was attended by nearly 1,000 persons. Epistles were read from Ireland, and from a number of the yearly meetings in America, and committees were appointed to prepare replies. In meetings held later, by men and women separately, reports were read from the quarterly meetings in the Eastern part of England. A statistical statement was also read, showing 373 congregations and 17,346 members, the latter being an increase of 193 on the membership of last year; 370 have entered and 109 have left the Society. There are also 7,797 habitual attenders of meetings, not in membership.

The Bishop of Calcutta, speaking last week at Eastbourne, referred to the value of medical missions in India. It was not many months ago, he said, that he stood in the Khaibar Pass looking down the valley of Afghanistan, and at that somewhat inaccessible spot he found a well-equipped medical mission, which was carried on by Mr. Monro, who was there with his wife, his sons and daughters, and sons-in-law. They spent their lives in attending the natives, and refused any payment. The only thing they asked was that those who received medical benefits should also hear the Gospel preached. During the year nearly 100,000 people must have been reached in this way.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. T. T. WATERMAN, who about forty-five years ago was pastor of Week Street Congregational Church, Maidstone. He subsequently removed to Greenfield Church, Bradford. In 1877 he became secretary of the Christian Evidence Society, a position which he occupied until the time of his death.—Rev. P. MACVICAR, minister of the parish of Manor, in Peeblesshire, for nearly forty years.—Rev. DAVID THOMSON, the retired minister of Firth, Orkney, was recently found dead on the floor of a room in his house in Bridge of Allan.—HANNAH WALLIS, an esteemed member of the Society of Friends, who passed peacefully away at her residence, Birkdale, Southport, on May 16. She leaves behind the memory of a beautiful life.—Rev. A. DAWSON, aged forty-one. After serving as curate at St. Stephen's, Newcastle, and as assistant secretary to the British and Foreign Bible Society for the northern district, he was appointed to the living of St. John's, Barnsley, in 1892. Rev. J. W. COLE, who early in this year left with Revs. Charles Bond and S. Gilchrist for the Upper Congo Mission. Mr. Cole, who was for many years a worker in a densely populated district of Whitechapel, had three years' training at the Missionary Institute at Bow, and subsequently a course at Livingstone Medical College.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

The King's Oath. We have received many letters on the subject of the King's Declaration and Oath. It has only been possible for us to print a few; and they are given on page 14. We invite the serious attention of our readers to the various statements there presented. The subject is one, not only for serious thought, but for earnest prayer that God may so guide events in the near future that the religious liberty which we have so long enjoyed may be in no wise imperilled or curtailed.

Day in the Country. While tendering warm thanks to the friends who have already sent in contributions to our "Day in the Country Fund," we should like to point out to those interested that this is a matter in which promptness is of vital importance. We are thankful that there is no sign of shrinkage in giving; but already the applications received are far more numerous than the number provided for. The letters in our hands constitute a most eloquent appeal on behalf of the poor little dwellers in the courts and alleys of London. The provision for a breath of fresh air in these cases may be classed with the giving of a cup of water upon which a blessing was promised if given in the name of the Lord.

A Timely Appeal. The Star has made an appeal to the Churches, in view of the future settlement in South Africa, to see that the coloured population, on whose behalf the present war has been at least partly fought, are saved from "the clutches of the slave-monger, whose avowed purpose it is to make the coloured man as nearly a beast of burden as it is possible to make the human animal into." This appeal is timely. There can be no question as to our duty as a nation to the native races. And there are ominous signs that, unless there is a manifest body of opinion at home determined to safeguard the rights of the aborigines against all-comers, a determined attempt will be made to reduce them to a condition of veiled serfdom which will be indistinguishable from slavery in aught but name.

Doctors and Drink. The progress of the British Medical Temperance Association has been cause of great satisfaction to temperance workers; and those who have considered the subject well will best appreciate the important and far-reaching nature of the following resolution passed last week:—

> That the leaders of the profession, and the teachers in our medical schools, be requested to urge the students attending their lectures to point out to their patients hereafter the dangers of the habitual use of alcoholic liquors.

Such action on the part of the medical profession would undoubtedly carry great weight with those who are seldom or never reached by public speakers or special literature.

Ministerial Professionalism. "A Novice," writing of his "first impressions of the ministry" in The Examiner, complains of the "atmosphere of officialism," which jars upon the feelings of a new-comer who desires to establish himself in simple human relations with his people. By this he means not the assumptions of the ministers, but the attitude of the people whom they serve.

> What can be more amusing (he asks) than the constant request to say grace and to take prayers, as if none could pray like the man who received a salary for praying? What could be more pitiable than the invitations to ministers to speak or take part in worship, given because men fancy that a servant of God will be offended if his powers are not recognised?

From this flow three evil results. Free intercourse and friendship between pastor and people are prevented. The distance between them is greatly increased and a living sympathy correspondingly prevented. And the church, by delegating all public duty to its minister, as is the tendency nowadays, loses one of its finest opportunities of spiritual culture.

There is another result of professionalism which is painfully felt by ministers themselves in their relations with their people. It is the feeling that a certain discount is taken off the meaning of their words, in view of the fact that they are "expected" as Christian ministers so to think and speak. If the same things were said by an honoured Christian layman as are often said from the pulpit, they would be taken in a more serious sense, and yet the depth of conviction and wealth of experience might be on the side of the minister. The moral of the situation lies in a sturdy endeavour on the part of every minister to impress his people with the absolute genuineness and simplicity of all his words, and actions, and motives. Let him live the life, and in turn they will instinctively give it due weight and influence. "Professionalism" withers and dies in the atmosphere of simple-minded conviction and a holy walk.

Bring in the Young. The attention recently drawn in the Wesleyan Conference, and in many of the Synods, to the importance of a more definite periodical effort on the part of ministers to bring their young people to decision, is bearing fruit. The Conference suggested that, in addition to the usual special weekly classes, the minister in each church should devote himself for a few weeks to influencing those who have reached the age of responsibility to a personal faith in Christ. This is a plan that has been successfully followed by many individual ministers in all the Churches, and the wonder is that it is not more general. It has been proved over and over again that during the years of adolescence many are quite impervious to sermonic appeals, but are highly sensitive to personal dealings. Those who have tried the experiment are loud in their testimony to its worth. The complaint that fewer and fewer young people are being brought to decision would be heard less frequently if this method were tried.

The Problem of the Young Man. Two statements made during the last week call for serious thought. The one was by Dr. Clifford, at the C.E. Convention at Sheffield, to the effect that 40 per cent. of the Endeavourers were found to be young men—a proportion greater than that which prevails in the churches. The other is in the current Century Magazine—we quote the words:

> In London there are at present 800,000 young men. It is demonstrated, by the most careful and systematic census effort, that fully 600,000 of this number do not associate themselves in religious work. If half is true that was told me in London about the prevalence of the most degrading habits among the young men of that city, there is little wonder that those in positions to know look with the keenest apprehensions to the future.

Is the cause of the success amongst young men in the C.E. due to the fact that it offers some definite work to be undertaken? It is quite certain that much of the vice among men is due to the lack of healthy occupation for spare hours. "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do" applies to adults as well as to children. It is in the evening hours, the hours of leisure, that temptations abound.

With regard to the positive statement in The Century, while it is appalling enough, we must not be oppressed by it. Such facts call forth our prayers and holy inventiveness. It is evident that the Churches are but lightly touching the mass of men in London. The question is—how are we to reach them? One thing is clear, many of them can only be reached as a separate class. The great success of Mr. Henry Varley's meetings for men, and those of other well-known evangelists, demonstrates that men can be reached in great numbers, when as a separate class they are appealed to. Why this should be so, it may be difficult to say, but the fact remains, and we have to make full use of it. The next work will have to be a crusade amongst men—on very definite and personal lines, if manhood is to be saved.

All things work together for good. The "disciplinary valne" of suffering has seldom been more quaintly put than in an anecdote told by the late Dr. E. B. Underhill, at one time a valued worker at Shortwood Chapel, Nailsworth.

> Rev. William Winterbotham, who was pastor at Shortwood at the beginning of last century, was imprisoned for four years for a harmless pamphlet. After his prison experience he was on one occasion visiting a member of his flock who was ill. On going into the house he overheard this member and another, who was deaf, discussing him in the chamber above. "I can't make out how it is he's such a good 'un," said one. "Well," said the other, "I know. They kicked 'un and they cuffed 'un and they put 'un in quad, and that's how it is he's such a good 'un."

The function of persecution and suffering for righteousness' sake might be more scientifically expressed, but at least this goes to the heart of it. "The fining pot is for silver, and the furnace for tried gold."

The Attack on the N.A.M. We are very sorry to see that a renewed attack upon the North Africa missionaries has been made in the French Chamber. The charges made by M. Morinaud are simply ridiculous, and were they dissociated from Christian enterprise they would become a subject of amusement. The truth is that several of the Algerian newspapers belong to the order of gutter literature, and they will publish any sort of "news" that is likely to make a sensation and to lead to sales. The editor of an Algerian paper actually told a missionary to his face that he had no personal ill-will against him or his work, but that "it was necessary to publish something for people to talk about." The simplest way of settling the matter to the satisfaction of the French, is for the critics to offer definite and personal proofs of the alleged espionage undertaken by English missionaries in North Africa. Vague and universal charges directed against a whole body of people are both unsatisfactory and unjust. If it is true that our missionaries are printing papers urging the Arabs to revolt against France and to attach themselves to England, then let the offence be definitely proved. All our people court the fullest investigation.

Sir R. Hart and China Missions. The Berlin correspondent of the Daily Chronicle sends home an article contributed by Sir Robert Hart to the Deutsche Revue, in which certain important things are said respecting the future of missionary work in China. Sir Robert quotes the Grand Secretary Wen Hsiang as saying—

Renounce ex-territoriality, and your missionaries can settle and teach whatever they like. If they can make people better than they are, the gain is on our side.

This seems liberal enough, and its genuineness is supported by a similar attitude on the part of many enlightened Chinese. It has been made clear over and over again that really intelligent Chinamen are not hostile to the truth taught by Christian missionaries. But, as Sir Robert Hart goes on to point out, the condition imposed by Wen Hsiang goes to the root of the whole question. The Chinese do not at present always realize the distinction between missionary work and ex-territoriality as an essentially radical one. For the future that distinction must be made abundantly plain. We cordially agree with Sir Robert Hart's conclusion, i.e.—

Would it not be better for missionaries to distinguish between essentials and non-essentials, and to resist every temptation of divesting their environment of its local character, or the individual of his nationality. European domestic manners and customs may appear of great significance to missionaries themselves, but not one of them has anything to do with the salvation of the soul, or with heaven. The object of missionaries should be to make the Chinese Christians, but not Occidentalists.

This criticism applies to others rather than to Protestants.

The Unitarian Failure. Year by year as Unitarians hold their May meetings it becomes clearer that as an aggressive force they are a failure. To console themselves for their inability to touch the people, they fall back upon the statement that their ideas "have penetrated all the Churches," and that they are doing "a good deal in the way of diffusing literature amongst ministers of orthodox Churches." The latter statement is undoubtedly true; but we disbelieve the former statement. The "orthodox" Churches are farther off than ever from embracing anything like Unitarian notions. It is of no use for anyone to beg the real question, as Dr. Stopford Brooke did last week in his sermon, and to claim that we all teach that "the master law of Christianity is that the life of God is illimitable love and the life of man is only found in union with God." The question at issue between us is (and no poetical religious generalities can be allowed to obscure it), was Jesus God or was He not? For upon this everything depends. If He was not, then since He claimed to be, we cannot accept his teaching, since, untrue in the chief thing, He may be untrue in all. If He was, then it is not permitted to accept his teaching and to refuse the claim of the Teacher. The dilemma is absolute. We wish the Unitarians could see that their pitiful failure is due to their illogical and untrue doctrine.

730

"The Times" on May Meetings. In The Times of May 27, there appeared a very appreciative leading article about the "May Meetings," which have now practically come to a conclusion for this year. It is gratifying to see the chief daily journal of the land pointing out the moral and social benefits (not to mention the spiritual ones) which accrue to our own people, as well as to others, by means of the many agencies whose enterprise is emphasized during the May meetings. Many newspapers annually revive the time-honoured jest about the "flood-gates of oratory being let loose" during the Spring meetings, as if much speaking were the chief thing aimed at. The Times sees in these meetings the revelation of an immense force produced by self-sacrifice and good works, and it adds—

No other country in Europe can show the like. It is difficult to imagine the counterpart of our London May meetings in Paris or Berlin.

The Times sets an excellent example, which other newspapers might with advantage follow. Several leading journals, happily, do give considerable space to recording religious work; if the rank and file would follow, a great deal of unnecessary misunderstanding might be avoided.

Loneliness. The Lancet of last week had an article upon the hygienic effect of loneliness, in which it was pointed out that the solitary consumption of food had a deleterious effect upon the organs of digestion, and, indirectly, upon the nervous system. The temptation is to read during a solitary meal, or to consume the food too quickly—both of which things are injurious. The writer of the article reaches the conclusion that companionship is absolutely necessary, even from the hygienic point of view. A vast number of people will agree with The Lancet, and extend the application to the moral sphere. What an army of lonely souls may be found in London alone—despite the many "homes" and institutions designed to attract such persons! There are always a great number of youths and maidens who will not respond to a general invitation to such institutions—they have to be sought out. If it were only possible to seek every young man and woman as they enter into what is often a very lonely business life (lonely in the sense that they find no companion for the heart), and bring them into touch with sympathetic people, much sorrow and much vice would be avoided, while the life would gain in every way.

The Right of Private Judgment. The right of private judgment has received a new interpretation at the hands of the Bishop of Ely. Appealed to to proceed against such of his clergy as were contravening the law by their ritualistic practices, he has declined to permit legal proceedings against any of them, on the ground that he cannot conscientiously punish good men for doing things which they consider it a religious duty to do. This is carrying toleration of opinion on matters of legal interpretation to an extreme limit. No one is denied the right to do as he thinks well in regard to matters of ritual observance as such; but whether, as a member of the English Church clergy, he has a right to do what the law expressly forbids, is quite another question; and it is not to be settled on the principle of the Bishop of Ely's action in this instance. Those who disagree with the legal restrictions of ritualism in that Church can go out of it, and still be free as "good men to do the things they consider it a religious duty to do."

Saints in Caesar's Household.

By Rev. J. P. GLEDSTONE.

"ALL the saints salute you, especially they that are of Cæsar's household"—so the Apostle Paul closed his Epistle to the Church at Philippi. It was strange to find saints in Cæsar's household, yet they were there, and were evidently in close communion with Paul, and were warmly loved by him.

The household of the Emperor was much wider in range than might commonly be supposed, including "the meanest slaves as well as the most powerful courtiers." Dr. Lightfoot says that in Rome itself "it must have formed no inconsiderable fraction of the whole population; but it comprised likewise all persons in the Emperor's service, whether slaves or freemen, in Italy and even in the provinces." And although we may not assume that among the saints in Cæsar's household there were persons of distinguished rank, yet their position secured to them "a certain social importance among their equals." The slaves and dependents of the Emperor in the days of Paul had great influence, and did not scruple much as to the use they made of it.

The fact which impresses us is that men who lived in the midst of such corruption as dishonoured the imperial service should have been reached and saved by the Gospel. A new thing may be a marvel, no doubt; but this new thing, the Gospel, had nothing to gratify ordinary curiosity, brought no promise of earthly distinction, contained no sweetness for carnal natures. It was a revelation of the love and righteousness of God given through One who had been crucified, and as it proclaimed pardon through the cross, it also laid a cross upon all who embraced it.

To bring the Gospel and human nature together is to

BRING INCOMPATIBLES TOGETHER,

and only on the assumption of the ministry of the Holy Spirit can we understand how the truth as it is in Jesus is received, and how sinners are changed into saints. And indeed those who are so changed know what is the power that has done it; they know that they are born of God.

Perhaps the hardest test for these new Christians in the midst of "splendid vices" was that of continuance; how to hold on, how to keep the flame of love burning, how to be true to the high standard of the Holy One, how to walk with unspotted garments. Thus many a youth or young man is converted, but the difficulty arises when he is tested by business trials, by ways of the world, by "things which everybody does." How is he then to hold his ground? We admit, and would even emphasize the tremendous difficulty there is in being a Christian in some places; they are synagogues of Satan, seats of the devil.

But none of them, we may fairly assume, are worse than Cæsar's household. The Christians under Nero had to fight against covetousness, against sensuality, against bribery and corruption, against temptations to oppress and defraud, against all-pervading and everywhere triumphant heathenism and worldliness. And yet they prevailed; they deserved the lofty name of "saints."

It is conceivable that a man may be "called" in some kind of employment, in some situation, in which he cannot consistently remain. For him the first command is to come out and be separate. He can only be a saint by surrendering all he has, and casting himself upon providence to open a new door for him.

These witnesses for God and for an honest conscience, perhaps achieve more than any other kind of worker. Truth attested by sacrifice is hard to resist. Were all professing Christians to turn away from positively un-Christian means of making a livelihood, there would soon be a moral revival. Righteousness and truth would dwell in the land; the nation's exaltation and safety would be like the strength and majesty of the hills.

But our sympathies go forth specially to those who, if not tempted to actual sin, are greatly tempted to bear the Christian name in a formal and compromising way. Hurried, driven by competition, struggling with hard men of few scruples, beset with snares, dimly perceiving the dividing line between good and evil, allured by prospects of quick and large gains—they may so easily become satisfied with a form of godliness; and have no joy, no peace, no exultation, no victory, in their faith.

HOW ARE THEY TO BE "SAINTS"?

Much will be gained in every such case if it be seen that they may be true Christians, holding forth the word of life, shining as lights. The possibility of the thing is the first point. What others have done, they, by the grace of God, may do. If Romans could be saints in Cæsar's household, in what English homes or places of business may not Englishmen be Christians? If they could keep their lamps burning in that death-laden atmosphere, why should not Englishmen always have theirs burning, too? Let it be clearly seen that, save where a man is directly expected or commanded to break the moral law, he may be a true saint of Christ's, and he will have a keen interest in knowing the secret of the life.

It is not so much in the outside circumstances as in the inward grace, yet the inward grace may be strengthened and confirmed by habits over which we have control. The habit of silent prayer sent up to God in a few unspoken words may be cultivated anywhere—in the storm of the sailor's watch, amid the cursing of a crew in the fo'c'sle, during the rush of an express train, in the excitement of the market, amid the distractions of a Parliamentary contest and of a great State function. This hidden spiritual communion is the oil poured on the fire which keeps it from burning low. Any emergency may be met, any temptation defeated by lifting up the heart to God.

In any place it is possible to think for a few moments on some word of Scripture, and thus renew our sense of eternal things. The consciousness of God, the reality of his love, the preciousness of Christ can come in a moment as we turn within upon some familiar text.

THE GLITTER OF WORLDLY PROSPERITY

will not dazzle us, nor the sordidness of earthly poverty depress us, whilst the Spirit gives us, in the glass of the Word, a glimpse of our Saviour's beauty. The things that are seen and temporal may always be counterbalanced by the things unseen and eternal. A meditation in a 'bus or a train may form as true and as helpful a preparation for the day's work as a service in a church.

But we must not depend even on these valuable helps alone. Even the members of Cæsar's household, wherever they might be engaged, did not neglect the assembling of themselves together. Brotherly love was fed by brotherly fellowship. Whatever the time, whatever the place, they observed this duty, they sought this privilege. The resurrection of our Saviour fixed the first day of the week as the sacred day, when they assembled in his name, broke bread in remembrance of Him, and strengthened one another in faith and devotion. It would be interesting to know how they planned their work and engagements so as to be present. In some instances it still requires thought and care to obtain time for public worship, for the prayer meeting, for brotherly fellowship. This united service is vital to Christian consistency where health permits its enjoyment.

WE CANNOT BE HERMITS.

Religion is fraternal. If we are to love one another out of pure hearts fervently, we must have the stimulus of communion in the Gospel. We must exhort one another, bear one another's burdens, watch over one another's eternal welfare with tender solicitude. We are members one of another, and the Head of all is Christ. It is good to realize and show forth our unity. It is at such times that Jesus comes and manifests Himself to his own, that the Spirit works effectually, and that spiritual movements are commenced, which grow and expand until all the world is reached. These little gatherings of saints in the olden time are still influencing the thought and life of mankind; they were of more importance than any assemblies of noble and mighty men.

It would be, in some places at least, a happy augury if the assembly of the saints were to resume its former importance. And, after all, it is of more consequence than any social or political gathering can be, that is, when it is rightly appreciated and reverently frequented. If on the day of resurrection, and once or twice in the week besides, all the professors would, in their several centres, meet for worship, the effect would soon be seen in a revived church and an awakened world. What the Christians could do at Rome, at Corinth, at Ephesus, at Antioch, they can do in London, in Glasgow, in New York.

"Fishers of Men."

One cast his net into the sea,
And left it there; nor sought
To find if any fish might be Within the meshes caught.

Another published far and wide
Time, place, the fisher's name—
And afterwards recalled with pride
How many fishes came.

Methought another figure bent
Above the waters fair,
And watched with smile of full content
His own reflection there.

Another came. The tempting bait
Lay lightly on the brook;
The fishes nibbled soon and late
At ease—there was no hook.

One used a net with mesh so wide
That, though it seemed to fill,
The fishes could, on either side,
Slip out again at will.

There came another fisher yet,
With eyes of dark despair;
He did not trust the Gospel-net,
And cast it without prayer.

Once more I looked. Upon the land
A prostrate form I spied,
Who with a skilled and eager hand
Familiar waters tried.

I marked how, with persistent care,
He hid himself from view;
The while his line with faith and prayer
Upon the deep he threw.

I followed, till the day was done,
His faithful, patient toil;
I saw him, at the setting sun,
Bring home with joy his spoil.

LUCY A. BENNETT.

The Late Rev. C. A. Fox.—We regret that, in publishing last week Rev. H. J. R. Marston's appreciation of Rev. C. A. Fox, we omitted to mention that though Rev. Dr. Moule was not well enough to be present and preside, he sent a written tribute to the memory of Mr. Fox, in which, with his own unique harmony of thought and diction, he analysed the qualities of his departed friend as teacher and poet.

A Diplomat on China Missionaries.

A CONTRIBUTION of the first importance has been made to our information on Eastern affairs in THE REAL CHINESE QUESTION (6s. Methuen), by Mr. Chester Holcombe, who writes from experience gathered during many years spent at Peking as Interpreter, Secretary of Legation, and Acting Minister of the United States. The causes of the recent troubles are laid bare, and frank expression is given to plain truths regarding the treatment of China by Western nations. The present position of Chinese affairs is shown to be in many respects different from the popular conception in this country; and while Mr. Holcombe is unsparing in his exposure of native corruption, it is evident throughout that he does so in a spirit of deepest sympathy for this great nation in distress. From the chapter on "The Missionary," we give the following extracts:—

Among the varied forces operating in China like yeast in flour, the Christian Missionary must be given a prominent position. . . .

Much hostile comment upon their work is rife in so-called Christian lands—more perhaps than among the Chinese themselves. Some of these criticisms are flippant and malicious. They come from a class of foreigners—small, it is to be hoped—whose lives and business constitute a menace and a reproach to civilization. Naturally they do not love the missionaries, for the labours of the latter are not likely to increase the sales of opium and ardent spirits among the Chinese, or to prosper any other forms of vice.

Another class of objectors to the presence of the missionary in China deserve more serious consideration. Some among them insist that the missionary is ahead of his time, and hence out of place in China. They argue that modern civilization and commerce should first be allowed to do their work, and then the missionary might follow and reap his harvest. Just how much might be left for him to glean and to garner after these two forces had done their work, the advocates of the policy have, perhaps, not seriously considered. With opium as the chief corner-stone upon which the fabric of British commerce in China has been builded; with an eager, selfish spirit of money-getting, ready to pander to every native vice, and to import even grosser vices from abroad so long as the Chinese can pay the bill; with object-lessons in drunkenness, gambling, and adultery, found thick in every centre of foreign trade in China, the question may well be raised and repeated: What would be left for the missionary to gather after a non-Christian civilization and an un-Christian commerce had done their work and reaped their harvest?

. . . Nothing can be more preposterously untrue than the assertion of a prominent English writer, who, speaking of the missionaries in China, says:—"But with their lives they risk the cause of civilization." Scarcely less absurd is his declaration that "the manner in which the missionaries have been smuggled into the country against the will of the people, and the injudicious methods by which they have sought to establish their religion, are mainly responsible for the anti-foreign feeling which is so subversive of our (British) interests in the Far East." The same writer glosses over and excuses the hideous opium traffic as being the scapegoat for other events. . . .

. . . He attributes all the absurd stories of the immorality of foreigners, and missionaries especially, to the fact that large numbers of young women have been sent out to labour among their own sex in China, and that they travel around under the escort of a man. Then he adds:—"In the opinion of the Chinese the proper place for women is the domestic hearth, and no good is likely to come of taking her out of her sphere—a lesson which the men of the West are learning by bitter experience." Fortunately this gentleman is an Englishman! . . .

It is unquestionably true that very mistaken notions and ideas are entertained by the Chinese when they first see the free and friendly manner in which Americans and Europeans of the two sexes associate. But the Chinese are not stupid, nor slow to discover facts and draw correct inferences. And when a little time has passed, and these same Chinese see that no evil nor immoral results have come . . . then they admit a new idea, and the change needed more than any other in China, the elevation of woman, begins to work in their minds. If the missionaries in that vast empire had accomplished nothing more during the half century past than to furnish object-lessons of the true position of woman, and the highest type of Christian homes, that result alone would justify their presence in China, and the money invested in the enterprise.

The Epistle of James.

By Rev. T. A. GURNEY, M.A., LL.B., Swanage.

III.—Trial in the Light of the Coming.

JAMES is about to speak of Trial, but his first keynote is Joy. He wrote at a time when Jewish Christians were under a cloud, suffering many hardships from their unbelieving compatriots. How suggestive it is that his very greeting under such circumstances should be "Joy" (R.V. marg., "wisheth joy"). Not the usual Hebrew salutation of "Peace," or the Pauline "Grace and Peace," but the welcome more suited to the light nature of the Greek, "Joy." At once we realise the power of the new Faith to alter in a Hebrew of the Hebrews the old Hebrew aspect of life. Instead of the spirit which bows before the will of God as inscrutable, we have the spirit which accepts it gladly as the very best, even in its present results, as bringing home to the heart "Joy."

And with that Joy the Epistle continues. Four results of Trial are given in succession. The first is trial as (I.) A Source of Joy. "Count it all joy," pure joy, joy with which no anxiety or sorrow is commingled, "when ye fall into the midst of manifold temptations" (R.V. marg., trials), trials of every shape and form, and fall into them one after another, till you are surrounded by them, like a company of soldiers with an enemy of superior numbers hovering on their flanks. Make each separate trial (the tense is aorist), as you fall into it, an occasion not of dismay, but joy. Anxiety brings with it fear and compromise. Thus, are we "in any wise moved to do evil," Joy is our great staying power for a time of stress. "Regard it so," says James, "even if you cannot actually feel it so; let the standpoint of faith, not feeling, rule. Look beyond to the result, and in that result and reward find the happy counterpoise to your present trouble." We know that in that age such words were not written in vain. The early Christians faced the fiercest sufferings in this spirit, and conquered. They slept peacefully almost in the jaws of the lions, thanked their murderers, rejoiced, as Tertullian says, "more when they were condemned than when they were set free." This joy was their strength in the fight with wild beasts, the tossing by bulls, the stretching on the rack, the tortures of the red-hot chair, the agonies of crucifixion.

KISSED THE STAKE,

Trial also brings (II.) The Verification of Faith, and faith is the one thing of any worth about us. The word here translated "proof" (R.V.) carries three ideas with it—Discrimination, Verification, and Purification. First of all, there is Discrimination, or Proof, revealing the presence or absence of true faith. Let us take as example the case of one who has not yet known what real trial is. He is presumably a Christian in the eyes of others, and very possibly in his own eyes. Yet he may be without the true principle of faith altogether. Orthodox phrases, professed belief, outward religiousness, feelings of devotion, may be hiding from the man himself the fact that the will-choice implied in faith has never been made. Trial in such a case is which, by resolving character into its true constituents, will disclose the fact of the presence or absence of faith. "A gilded potsherd," says Manton on this passage, "may shine till it cometh to the scouring." How often afterwards we say, "Before I was afflicted I went astray, but now have I kept thy word." Those Röntgen rays of trial disclosed the hidden defect in our faith.

THE POTENT CHEMICAL ANALYSIS

With this Discrimination there is also Verification of a faith already existent. For a man's faith may be real, yet, like a soldier before his first baptism of fire, never proved as such. Trial will, in such a case, bring with it faith's confirmation. "When He hath tried me," saith Job, "I shall come forth as gold." The furnace of the potter gives the salt glaze to the vessel, vitrifies its colours, adds permanence to the work done partially and tentatively elsewhere, makes it a "vessel unto honour."

A third meaning yet remains. Trial works out the Purification as well as the Verification of Faith. It is the spectrum analysis wherein we study the bright and dark bands of the soul's character, and so learn of what it is composed. Who would dare to say that his faith, though real, was all sound? Now, trial

SEPARATES THE SLAG FROM THE ORE.

It is God's great automatic machine—like that wonderful machine in the Royal Mint—where you see the coin which is already stamped with his image weighed, and that which is light put by for recasting.

From this Purification flows another result of trial: (III.) The Perfecting of Patience. It works out as its actual result, patience, for it unfolds behind the seeming loss the eternal gain, behind the discipline of faith the reward of faith. "But" adds James, "let patience have her perfect realization," "let her make a complete job of it" (Mayor), so as to bring character to maturity. "The first affliction of Job," says Manton, "discovered patience in him, but when evil came upon evil, and he bore all with a meek and quiet spirit, that discovered patience perfect." The patience is to be an active rather than a passive patience—"not only a suffering" (Huther), but even more, a doing. Tertullian and Cyprian, writing in similar times of persecution, both, in their matchless pictures of that patience, extol her as the handmaid of perfection.

The result of such patience will be (IV.) The Completeness of Christian Character. "That ye may be perfect and entire." The two words here correspond, and each completes the meaning of the other. One implies growth to maturity; the second, healthfulness within. James would have them possess a Christianity entirely correspondent with its true principle—sound in its inner character, attaining its true end, the maturity of the sons of God. The first word is of the Epistle. Mark his desire to regard things at their final climax, their last result. So we have the perfect patience here, and the perfect character, the perfect sin (i. 15), i.e., the sin which stands self-manifested in its last terrible results; the perfect gift, which is its contrast (i. 17); the perfect law of liberty (i. 25); the perfect obedience (same root, ii. 8-13); the perfect faith (same verb-root, ii. 22); the perfect man (iii. 2). But the same thought continues to the last:—the wisdom full of fruit (iii. 17, 18); love of the world in its last result (iv. 1, 2); knowledge, judging others, but not saving the soul (iv. 11-17); lust and long-suffering side by side with "the end" of each (v. 5 and 11).

ONE OF THE KEYNOTES

These two words, "perfect and entire," complete the idea of Perfection. Manifested growth, fully developed maturity, realized and achieved end, shine in the first. Trial will make you a spiritual man. But with that will be this other result: soundness of spiritual health (for a full-grown man may be less sound than a child); freedom from hidden disease (same word, Acts iii. 16; 1 Thess. v. 23), no function unfulfilled; hence lacking in nothing, not falling short of your goal. And all in view of the Coming (i. 12).

The Indian Famine.

INTELLIGENCE from India continues to emphasize the grievous condition of the people in a number of districts. The following facts have been put forward by a committee recently appointed to inquire into the state of the Bhils in Central India:—

"Despite the extensive efforts of famine relief during last year, one-quarter to one-half of the people perished. In many cases whole families were exterminated, and in one instance seven out of nine houses were obliterated. The greater part of the domestic animals and wild game died. Owing to lack of seed grain and animals to till the soil, together with the lateness of the rains, little was sown and from these and other causes the

HARVEST WAS LARGELY A FAILURE.

Of those people who still remain, the majority have sold all their possessions. At present the food of the people consists of seed gathered in the jungle. There is in prospect a condition of want still greater than that which existed last year, since the people have neither cattle, grain nor saleable articles remaining."

Several interesting sidelights are thrown on famine work by the report of the Mission carried on in Malwa by the Canadian Presbyterian Church. It is specially gratifying to learn from Dr. J. Fraser Campbell (Rutlam) that Several of those from the former famine are now quite able to earn their own living by giving all their time to work instead of part of it to school; indeed, some of them are well worth their keep to us, for their work as pupil teachers and their help and influence as a whole, in addition to what they do in their industrial departments.

Such words bring encouragement for the future, but already there is much cause for praise to God. From his work among the Bhils Dr. J. Buchanan (Ali-Rajpur) shows that there is a silver lining to the dark cloud, although the distress

CONTINUES WITH GREAT SEVERITY.

The past has been a wonderful year, darkened by famine, cholera, and death; but brightened by opportunities undreamed of for ministering to the destitute, and giving the Gospel to the poor. To know the Bhils, whether in prosperity, or in adversity, is to have one's heart drawn out to them in earnest yearning for their salvation.

Dr. Buchanan adds a description of the measures adopted for the employment of sufferers in the erection of buildings. Instead of putting the work into the hands of large or small contractors, it was carried through by means of day labour—

Taking the raw Bhil and having him make bricks, saw lumber, quarry stones, build walls, stone and brick, make doors, windows, &c.; and the soul of man was never stirred by more needy, sympathetic audiences. Jiva Bhai, the Gujarati Christian mason, deserves special mention for his ability, willingness, and splendid influence with the Bhils. He will have more than rupees or the glory of brick and mortar for his hire.

Help in dealing with the enormous families of orphans was received from different quarters. The manager of a tea plantation, Assam, was conspicuous for activity in this direction.

"The condition of the people," writes Rev. Dennis Osborne, from Poona, under date May 17, "has grown severer, as was expected. The number on Government relief has increased, and are growing graver. I pray that God's people in Great Britain may send us speedy relief, for we cannot turn away from the suffering around us. We have a small supply of milk food in hand as a reserve. What we need is relief for hungry men, women, and children, and support for the numerous orphans."

SUFFERING AND DESTITUTION

Rev. P. B. Keskar, describing the condition of affairs in the Sholapur district, puts the pertinent question:—"Of what avail will the help of the past be, if these sources fail when a dim and distant ray of hope has just begun to make its appearance? Famine has reduced people to beggary, and they will remain in that condition for a long time, or succumb to its effects, unless help is continued to them until better times appear. It is this thought which constrains the missionaries and other people of God to urge the claims of the rescued on the benevolence of his people."

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, June 9. Mark ii.

NOTICE the titles and functions which our Lord takes to Himself, as one who has an unchallenged right to them.

He has authority to forgive sins (10). Before the body could be healed, there must be a deep work in the soul. Probably, also, the physical suffering through which the man had been passing had softened his spirit, and prepared him to receive forgiveness, and our Lord was aware of this before He spoke the words of remission. But notice with what authority He speaks. It was as though the sacrifice of the cross was already finished, and the High Priesthood already entered upon. But there was no doubt of his prerogative! These were no mere words! His Word had power in the visible sphere, and equally in the invisible.

He is the Physician of souls (17). Make haste to Him, all sin-sick ones, all sinful ones. He counts sin, not alone as a crime or as guilt, but as disease, from which He longs to free us. Do not stay away from Him, because so full of wounds and bruises and putrefying sores, or because still trying the potions and medicaments of thine own art. He came to call sinners, and expects them to come, nor is there any sickness that He cannot subdue and heal.

He is the Bridegroom of souls (19). We need love as well as healing. The deepest and most feverish cry of the heart is to belong to someone, to be best and first loved, as the bride of the bridegroom. But Jesus waits to give this also, and He is with thee ever for thy joy.

Thou art as much his love as if beside,
Nor man, nor angel, lived in heaven or earth.

He is the Lord of the Sabbath (28). Able, therefore, to change the Rest-Day from the seventh to the first; and waiting to receive from us the worship which belongs to the Creator of a new heaven and a new earth.

MONDAY, June 10. Mark iii.

The conflict of opinion about the Lord soon made itself heard. How marked it is in this chapter. The Pharisees watch his every movement, and take counsel to destroy Him. The scribes that come down from Jerusalem accuse Him of complicity with Satan. His very friends count Him deranged, and try to extricate Him from the results of what they consider his reckless mistakes.

But the Master pursues his way, as the sun shines on, in spite of all the mists that obscure his pathway. The withered hand is restored; the crowds that press on Him obtain all the healing and help they need; the response to the unkind speeches of his accusers is to send forth Apostles far and wide throughout the country. Here is Love, which is misunderstood and misrepresented, taunted and trodden under foot, meeting with scowling faces and bitter words; but it is not provoked, it taketh no account of evil, beareth, believeth, hopeth, and endureth all things, and never faileth.

The most noticeable fact in the chapter is the selection of apostles from among the disciples. We must all begin by being disciples; we must sit on the low seat to learn ere we can teach; we must show ourselves willing to obey before we can rule. But notice the three departments to which we are summoned: (1) to be with Him; (2) to become heralds of his Gospel; (3) to have authority over demons. What an opportunity is within the reach of all disciples. Let them be faithful in the very little, and they shall be exalted in due time.

TUESDAY, June 11. Mark iv.

There are some interesting additions to the series of parables, as given by the First Evangelist. Notice in the explanation given of the Parable of the Sower, that, among the causes of unfruitfulness, are the lusts (i.e., the strong desires) which enter in and choke the word, and make it unfruitful. In other words, there is no power of reproduction—the energies of the soil are so diverted, that it cannot realize the full product of the seed.

In the second parable, we are practically bidden to bring large and deep measures with us when we come to listen to Christ. Doubtless these measures are our attentive heed and our willing obedience. As we hold these before our Master, He fills them to the brim, and more also; while if we disobey, we not only fail to receive, but lose what we had learned in the past.

The third parable, which is peculiar to this Evangelist, is very beautiful and encouraging. We are shown that our co-operation is necessary in God's manifold operations, in nature and in grace. Man must sow, and man must reap. But during the great interval between these, he is not needed. "The earth beareth fruit of herself." The results of labour seem to be lost. Man can do nothing to accelerate the mysteries of growth. He is necessitated to silence, to inactivity, and to silent acquiescence in impenetrable mystery. He sleeps by night for he needs rest, rises to occupy himself as he may, but in the meanwhile a miracle is being wrought in the heart of the earth, which is gradually elaborated through blade, and ear, and full corn. Do not think all is lost because seed does not bear fruit at once; and do not reproach yourself if the green blade precedes the ripe fruit.

How sound a sleep his sleep is, amid the storm! Ah, his heart reposes on the bosom of God as thine should, and mine, while we remember that, however great their turbulent fury, all winds and seas obey Him.

WEDNESDAY, June 12. Mark v.

How differently our Master dealt with the varied temperaments that accosted Him. To each He administered some special regimen, in the act, or as the condition of his Divine help.

In the case of the demon-haunted Gadarene, He demanded confession. Though the poor victim of Satanic malice, to which his own sin had probably made him liable, longed to be with his Deliverer, he was bidden to return to his friends, and publish all that had been done for him. I suppose that there is as great safety in work for Jesus, in the publication of his Gospel, and in fulfilling the duties of our life, as in sitting even at the Master's feet.

In the case of the woman, whose touch on the hem of his garment arrested his steps, confession was necessary for the training and development of her own character. It would never have done for her to have stolen off with her healing, as though there need be no personal contact with the Giver, no recognition of his goodness, no testimony from her act to others. Always after she would have had the guilty feeling of the thief, and would have missed the rapture of his tender final words.

As to the sweet young daughter of Jairus, who had been the light of her father's home for just so long as the woman had suffered, He charged that the miracle should be kept secret. But you might as well tell stars not to shine or sweet flowers not to exhale their scent. Such love as Christ's cannot be hid. It fills the world with fragrance.

THURSDAY, June 13. Mark vi.

With what simplicity the twelve were started on their mission! But with what authority they spoke! Simplicity and power are closely allied. The truly strong soul is not in need of the adventitious surroundings and circumstance, on which others lean; and in proportion to our willingness to empty ourselves of the sources of human success, we lay hold on Divine power.

The mission of the Twelve was the more necessary now that John the Baptist was withdrawn from his ministry. His had been a brief and tortuous career. For a few months the central figure of the nation, and then hurled down into the darkness of the dungeon, like some extinguished torch. No wonder that his spectre haunted the heart of Herod, who thought that in Jesus he had become reincarnate. The messenger may fall, but the message is taken up and passed on by a thousand lips. Yet notice the contrast between his end and our Lord's. In his case, the disciples who had drunk in his every word dispersed. The head had fallen and the members were scattered. Who thought of proclaiming their departed leader as still the living head and centre of the movement he had set on foot? But when our Lord died his true influence over men began. Before He had been the Jewish Rabbi, now He became the Redeemer of the world.

Presently the apostles returned. They had much to tell. Some flushed with success, others radiant with victory over demons, others, perhaps, overstrained and weary, all needing the quiet holy influence of repose and silence in the Lord's company. And in those quiet hours or days, as the fever passed out of them, as the silt was dropped to the bottom of the lake of Perfect Peace, He taught them memorable lessons of how He would feed the world by his Church, and how his people would be safe amid the storms that swept the sea, since He watches them from the height, and comes to them at the precise moment when his help is most grateful.

FRIDAY, June 14. Mark vii.

The Pharisees laid great stress on ritual. There were endless rules as to ablutions and outward ceremonial, both intricate and cumbrous. So long as their devotees were careful in these observances, they were permitted a wide licence so far as the weightier matters of the law were concerned. This is the tendency of the human heart. It is only thankful to be able to reduce its religious life to an outward and literal obedience, if only its thoughts may be spared.

In the life of holiness everything depends on the regimen of the thoughts. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." It was with infinite wisdom, therefore, that the wise man said, "Keep thy heart above all that thou keepest," and Jesus put first in his black category of the contents of the evil heart, "the evil thoughts." A gang of thieves has been known to put a very small boy into a tiny window that he might run round to unlock the front door to the whole gang. So one evil thought will often admit an entire crew of evil.

It is good to read this touching story of the Syro-phenician woman again. It never loses its interest. We are always learning again the sweet lesson, that faith can wring blessing out of an apparent negative, and use what might seem to be a rebuff as a lever to prise open the treasury of God.

As you turn from the chapter, be sure to notice that picture of the upward look, the sigh, and the touch, they are the conditions of successful work.

SATURDAY, June 15. Mark viii.

What a hasting life was Christ's! This is certainly the Gospel of the Master-Worker, who hastened to fulfil the Father's plan; but, with all his haste, the Master found time for the needs of the crowds. With quick sympathy, He knew when they were hungry, and required a table to be spread in the wilderness. Why were the disciples so backward in realizing the boundless resources at his disposal. Let us beware lest, like them, we have eyes and see not, ears and hear not, and short memories.

At the close of the previous chapter, our attention was drawn to the Master's sighs; here, however, was another characteristic act. He spat on the eyes of the blind man, perhaps to excite his expectation and faith. And repulsive as ophthalmia is, in the East it did not repel Him, or staunch the flow of his pity. We do not always see everything clearly, but step by step we come unto perfect vision. Here we see in a glass darkly, there face to face.

But there was a great price to be paid. Only through suffering and death could Jesus do the most necessary work of all, in redeeming and cleansing the children of men. He might have been the Miracle-Worker apart from death: but to be the Saviour He must not spare Himself, but be willing to pour out his soul even unto death. It was hard for the Apostles to learn this lesson. They wanted the Master to spare Himself. Peter, especially, wanted to dissuade Him; but the Lord knew best what were the needs of men, and how they could be met.

F. B. M.

"Shall we Change the King's Oath?"

THE JESUITICAL PITFALL.

DEAR SIR,—"It seems a pity," to quote his own words, that Mr. George Trench, on account of the "almost wholly Roman Catholic population" by whom he is surrounded, should have been led to state in your issue of May 23 that it was "the almost universal desire among Protestants that its (the King's Oath's) language should be modified." I maintain, sir, that this is by no means the case. Timid people, under the guise of "religious toleration," are frightened at the strength of some of the expressions; but are they stronger than the expressions in Articles xxii., xxviii., xxxi., and xxxvii. of the Church of England?

The Romish Church, as a system, will move heaven and earth to get the wording of the Oath altered; but I beg all earnest Protestants to observe that the Romanists do not really object to the strong, or as they absurdly call it, the insulting language, but to the latter part of the Declaration, which disallows any mental reservation on the part of the one taking the Oath.

This is the Jesuitical pitfall which they would gladly see expunged, as the Church of Rome allows, nay enjoins, such fearful lying if thereby the authority and power of the Church is upheld. It needs that the universal common sense of the whole nation should be aroused if England is to maintain her Protestant Church, which so many are, at present, doing their utmost to undermine.—Yours very truly,

HEYWOOD SMITH.

IN FAVOUR OF ALTERATION.

DEAR SIR,—The words of Mr. George F. Trench are wise, and hit the nail on the head. The question is not whether the "Coronation Oath" is true, or very far short of the truth; not whether Romanism is all the Oath says it is—and a great deal more; but whether any good end is attained by saying so under such circumstances. It is useless to quote Papal Bulls and Jesuits' Oaths, or to "trample ruthlessly," as "A.R." puts it, "on the fine feelings" of Roman Catholics. Two wrongs do not make a right; and has Rome ever done any good—has she ever done anything but harm—by her vindictive comminations?

One may argue with a Roman Catholic; but what becomes of the argument when you tell him he is an idolater? Is not bad blood immediately aroused? Moreover, you beg the whole question by pronouncing the conclusion before you have got through the premises. Your object should be to produce conviction, but you will never produce conviction by calling names, even though the names be true. Everyone who has to do personally with Roman Catholics knows how true this is.

I have for years (though a member of the Church of England) taken part in the secular education of one of the chief Roman Catholic colleges in this country, and I know that the sentiments of the students are thoroughly loyal and patriotic—some of them ultra-patriotic. Now what would be gained for truth, by telling them that they are all idolaters? The Romish system is indeed as idolatrous and unscriptural as any system can well be; but it is for Protestants to prove this, and allow the victims of the system to recognize the conclusion for themselves. AVARY H. FORBES.

Upper Tooting, S.W.

THE OBJECT OF THE DECLARATION.

SIR,—I am surprised to learn that such a representative Protestant as your correspondent, Mr. Trench, of Ardfert, should consider that it is the almost universal desire among Protestants that the language of the King's Declaration should be modified.

The vast majority of writers on the subject have entirely missed the sole object of the Declaration, which is so worded as to ensure that the King, at the moment of declaring, is not a Roman Catholic. The King is made to express a mere private opinion, with which no one is bound to concur, but it is embodied in a form of words which ensures the anathema of the Council of Trent. The anathema is hurled, not at private heretical opinions, but at their utterance. The canon* declares: "Si quis dixerit, in sacrosancto Eucharistiæ Sacramento remanere substantiam panis et vini, unà cum corpore et sanguine Domini nostri Jesu Christi . . . anathema sit."

The King is called upon to express the following opinion, concurred in by the majority of his subjects, Christian and non-Christian:—"I doe solemnly and sincerely, in the presence of God, professe, testifie, and declare, that I do believe that in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper there is not any transubstantiation of the elements of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ, at or after the consecration thereof by any person whatsoever."

Saint Thomas Aquinas taught that the elements must surely be transubstantiated, as otherwise to worship them would be idolatry. The Council of Trent assured the faithful that there was no doubt on the question, and that they might safely pay divine honours to the sacrament. Hence the intense importance of insisting on the doctrine of complete transubstantiation. The Roman Church fully admits that if a particle of bread or wine remains, their service is idolatrous. Our King is made to say that he is of opinion that there is no transubstantiation, and that in consequence the Roman service is idolatrous. Surely there is no insult here.

Mr. Trench seems to regret that the Declaration does not deal with a number of the doctrines of the Roman Church. It would be quite out of place for it to do so. The Declaration is made to the Lord Chancellor, not to the Archbishop; and it only deals with a few of the doctrines of Rome which are defined by the Council of Trent; and, by so dealing, proclaims to the world that the King on the day he meets his first Parliament is not a Roman Catholic.

Of course, if Protestants, Ritualists, Atheists, and Roman Catholics concur in wishing to get rid of the Declaration, it must go, and so must the Protestant Succession, for the wit of man could not devise another so simple and effective a formula for ensuring the continuance of that succession.

The present controversy serves to show how completely the quarrels of Christians are hindering the national recognition of God.

Personal religion, as usually taught, is merely a private compact with the Almighty Judge, to avoid, by a variety of expedients, personal punishment. It is individual and not national. In the Transubstantiation question, all the anti-Roman parties seem far more anxious not to do anything displeasing to man than to try and do right in the sight of God.—Yours truly, A. R. HUNT.

Foxworthy, Moretonhampstead.

THE LAST GUARANTEE OF RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

SIR,—Your columns contain "A Plea for Amendment," signed "Geo. F. Trench." May I in a few lines examine the reasons which he brings forward for such a course?

He rightly urges that if Romanism is to be denounced, it is not sufficient to select two out of many errors for this purpose. Here we have really the gist of the whole matter. It is not the intention of the King's Declaration to denounce Romanism. Its object is to exclude a Romanist from the throne. If it were an attack upon Romanism it would go much further. No Romanist is asked to assent to its terms. It expresses a Protestant opinion, which a Protestant King must necessarily hold. No alternative has yet been suggested which would be effective and at the same time please the Romanists. Our forefathers understood the matter very well, and acted deliberately.

The example of St. Paul at Ephesus, which is quoted by Mr. Trench, is far from favouring his view. It is clear from Acts xix. 26, that the Apostle denounced idolatry there, as he did everywhere. The town clerk was much like many of our politicians, who give us the assurance that there is no harm in opinions, which, if opposed, might give them trouble.

Alas, for "persons connected with Protestant Societies!" It is a pity, in Mr. Trench's opinion, that they do not remain silent. Yet one would have thought that those who have earnestly contended for the faith, are just those who should be listened to at such a crisis. Are we to close the mouths of all who have laboured for the spread of the truth and the enlightenment of Roman Catholics, because they have united themselves in societies for these desirable ends? Are members of such societies as the Protestant Reformation Society and the Society for Irish Church Missions, which have won thousands of Romanists from their errors, to be told to hold their peace on the King's Declaration for the very reason that their Protestantism has been so earnest and practical?

But Mr. Trench fortifies his position by claiming that there is an "almost universal desire among Protestants" to do as he proposes. I do not know his warrant for this claim; but, supposing it to be well founded, the argument that we should follow the majority is a strange one in the mouth of a believer. If it be a sound one, the upholders of truth should always yield when their opponents outnumber them; and, by adopting an opinion so popular, Noah, Moses, and a good many other distinguished saints might have had a much quieter time than they ever enjoyed.

So far from the Declaration being an infringement of religious liberty, it has been its last guarantee. For under Protestantism all have enjoyed a liberty such as a Romish Government neither could nor would grant. EDWARD E. HEATHFIELD.

West Malvern, May 25.

CONTRADICTIONS.

SIR,—As I am quite sure you will think it right to give fair play to all men, even to Jesuits, you will I trust permit me to contradict, in the most absolute terms, two statements to which I find that currency is given in your issue of May 23.

In the first place, it is said: "As is well known, a large proportion of the Roman Catholics in Britain are Jesuits, and it is believed that so are very many of the Ritualistic party in the Church of England." This is absolutely and utterly erroneous. At the beginning of the present year, the Jesuits in this country numbered in all 668, all of them openly professing to be what they are. No Jesuit ever did, or ever could, while remaining a Jesuit, pretend to be a member of any religion except the Catholic Church in union with the See of Rome.

Secondly, your readers are given to understand that Jesuits are accustomed to take a wicked and disloyal oath, a portion of which you quote from a Masonic journal. This statement must likewise be met with a flat denial. No Jesuit that ever lived has taken this iniquitous and ridiculous oath, and I am quite certain that none would take it upon any consideration whatsoever. The said oath has been denounced as a forgery by the Protestant press of Germany, and its origin is clearly traced to the days of the notorious Titus Oates, and the authorship of the often-convicted fabricator, Robert Ware.—I remain, sir, faithfully yours, JOHN GERARD, S.J.

31, Farm Street, Berkeley Square, London, W.

[We insert the contradictions as requested. As to the first statement, it could be reaffirmed most positively as applying to Jesuitical agents of the Papacy in this and other lands. As to the second, it would not be difficult to show that in phraseology and substance the "wicked and disloyal oath" is thoroughly Romish. With but little labour, its terms could be matched and its sentiments illustrated from the creeds, catechisms, decisions, bulls, and other standards of the Papal system.—ED.]

A small publication that is having a large circulation—being now in its fortieth thousand—is The King's Declaration: A Protest and a Warning. By Sidney Collett. (1s. 6d. per 100 net. Partridge.) Another rousing tract is—The Coronation Oath: Shall it be Altered? By Daniel Farmer. (18s. 6d. per 1,000. Bedford: G. H. Stonebridge, 4, Midland Road.)

American Notes.

IT is officially announced at New Haven, Connecticut, that the officials of Yale University have received a large sum of money from a donor who refuses to have his name made public, for a new building for the Y.M.C.A. of the Yale Sheffield Scientific School. The plans show a fine structure of granite and Indiana limestone.

Energetic steps are being taken to meet the Mormon peril. There is a vigorous movement on foot for an anti-polygamy constitutional amendment next winter that will enable Congress to deal with that institution anywhere within the jurisdiction of the United States. At the annual meeting of the Women's Board of Home Missions held last week at Philadelphia, Mrs. W. R. Campbell, of Salt Lake City, said:—"The movement for the anti-polygamy constitutional amendment is a very important one for our country, because there is in the heart of our nation a huge and unscrupulous religio-political hierarchy, with thousands of trained skilful agents working day and night to deceive and lull the nation to sleep while it fastens the Asiatic harem upon our American soil."

A despatch from Idaho Territory says that at Paul's Valley persons who have been selling liquor contrary to law in the Chickasaw Nation have met the severest penalties ever yet imposed there for that offence. Two men were each fined 2,000dols., and sentenced to four years' imprisonment as well. It seems rather hard to some people here that the citizens of New York cannot enjoy the same protection from the liquor traffic that is afforded to the Chickasaw Indians.

A movement is on foot to erect a monument to Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, in Cuyler Square, Fulton and Cumberland Streets, Brooklyn. A committee visited Park Commissioner Brower last week, to ask his permission for its erection; he said he would gladly give his consent if the monument should be a popular one, and not represent any one sect, or creed, or church. Of course, also, it must be artistically worthy. He suggested that a committee of fifty well-known citizens be secured to canvass for the 30,000dols. which the monument is expected to cost.

New York. ROGER MARTIN.

* We give an English translation of the entire canon:—"Whosoever shall affirm that in the most holy sacrament of the Eucharist there remains the substance of the bread and wine, together with the body and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ; and shall deny that wonderful and peculiar conversion of the whole substance of the bread into his body, and of the whole substance of the wine into his blood, the species only of bread and wine remaining, which conversion the Catholic Church most fitly terms transubstantiation: let him be accursed."—[ED.]

Other Lands.

Among the Macuchi of Amazonas.

FROM time to time we have given notices of the travels of Mr. Geo. R. Witte in South America. Having visited the Caraoh and Cherente Indians in Goyaz and Pianhy, he has now established a regular Mission station among the Macuchi Indians living in the Rio Branco region of Amazonas, not far from the British Guiana border. Writing under date of March 8, he says that with Mr. Nonnen, his assistant, he had but just received the first consignment of letters since leaving Manáos in August of last year. Aside from the feeling of isolation, which would sometimes, quite naturally, overcome these two lonely workers in that abandoned corner of Brazil, both have been kept well and safe, and have been very busy in work in connection with founding their first station, which they have named Ebenezer, in recognition of the wonderful way in which God has led them thus far. We make some extracts from Mr. Witte's letter:—

The treatment of the Indians by the Brazilians in this region is not at all cruel, but, nevertheless, advantage is taken of their ignorance. We quickly recognised that to deal with the Indians successfully, it would be necessary to go apart from the neighbourhood of the fazendeiros (cattle breeders), and also to keep some distance from the larger Indian settlements. Many of whether originating with themselves, or adopted after the white man's example, are such that separation is an indispensable condition for the success of any school where the young are to be brought up and trained. Thus we were led to select our present location, which is about twelve miles east of the Tacutú River, at the foot of a beautiful mountain-ridge, known as Serra do Coano-Coano.

THE CUSTOMS OF THE INDIANS,

The location is healthy, and the lands look fertile, though planting can only be done at the end of the rainy season—June or July—and means for turning up and preparing the virgin soil must first be provided. At present there is not a single plough, or harrow, or waggon this side of Manáos, so far as we are aware. Cattle-raising is the sole industry of the province, and the only planting done is in little patches along the river, where mandioca, beans, and tobacco are raised for home consumption.

The Indians in our neighbourhood all belong to the Macuchi tribe, which is said to number 20,000 souls. They are dispersed, however, over so wide a territory, and are so migratory in their habits, that it would be extremely difficult to make a reliable census of them. Especially at this season of the year the Indians are all on the move, whole communities being deserted by both young and old. This is partly due to the drying-up of the streams, compelling the Indians to follow the receding waters up-stream for fishing and game. In riding over the most frequented trails, one may often encounter whole villages en marche, the men ahead with their bows and arrows, while heavily loaded with babies, water gourds, cooking utensils, and the necessary apparatus for making farinha, which is the Indians' and Brazilians' bread. Physically, the Indians are not bad looking, excepting that the women, owing to their early marriages and hard life generally, are most ugly featured. Moreover, the women are used as beasts of burden, carrying astonishing loads on their bare backs over long distances, living on a mouthful of farinha and water.

THE WOMEN TRAIL BEHIND,

Religiously, the Macuchi do not seem to possess any system of belief whatever; certainly they have no rites of worship or stated times for assemblies, as I found among the Indians in other parts of Brazil. No idols are seen among them, nor does their language seem to have any terms expressive of the existence of God, or of a Great Spirit, as have the Indians of North America. Plural wives are common among them, and drinking "Cachiri" is quite a favourite pastime. Otherwise they are not a dangerous people to live amongst, and we are especially favoured in having some unusually decent ones for our immediate neighbours. In selecting our location, we were divinely guided, as we can now see very clearly. Though suffering inconveniences from the long summer-drought, our locality is far less affected than other sections which I have visited. Our water, indeed, has to be carried at present for about a mile from a mountain-brook, to which we have cut roads through the dense virgin forest.

AFTER BUILDING A HOUSE,

which we did with the aid of five strong Indians, we have begun to enlarge and improve a forest clearing, which I bought from an Indian neighbour. Farming is absolutely needful to us, for a twofold reason. First, the prices for food-stuffs and merchandise are so high at Boa Vista, that we could not possibly live here if we had to buy everything, much less could we provide for Indian youths whom we take into our household. Secondly, the Indians need the instruction and example of a settled industrious life. There is indeed little hope that many of the grown-up folk will give up their migratory and shiftless habits, and for that reason our hope is centred in training the young. For the present we have only three boys in our household. The first two were sent to us from the lower Tacutú by chief Ildefonso, the most intelligent of all the Macuchi captains.

The fame of the "brancos" has spread far and wide, and even from across the border an Englishman (living three days' journey from us) has sent a messenger to inquire if we would take his "half-breed" son to educate. He was too young, however, and we had to decline, as we had to treat similar requests from different Brazilian fazendeiros but we urgently need reinforcements and additional means for instruction. There should be at least one married man at our station, preferably a carpenter or practical farmer, of tried Christian character. We could also use a "preaching" missionary, who is not afraid of a little rough life, to travel about on horseback, after learning the Macuchi language.

A LARGE WORK COULD BE DONE,

In June (D.V.) I expect to be in Manáos (address, care of Rev. M. E. Carver, Caixa do Correio, 12), and the time to send these needed workers would be then. Later than August the journey cannot be made, except by special canoe, which would cause an enormous expense. Some day, God willing, we hope to have our own mission boat, for which the Missionary Pence Association, Exeter Hall, Room 20, is still receiving contributions. With an earnest request for special prayers in behalf of our station, our people, and the two lonely workers in this most forgotten part of the Neglected Continent, Faithfully yours,

GEORGE R. WITTE.

Boa Vista, Rio Branço, Amazonas, Brazil.

Aguilas, Spain.—In the fourth annual report of the Aguilas Mission, Mr. R. Pollock Simpson reports that in the midst of much opposition the work of God has prospered, and the workers have been cheered by seeing souls here and there "called out of darkness into his marvellous light." He writes hopefully and confidently of great things in store for priest-ridden Spain in the future. The hall had been taken from them by the landlord, and as no other was available the meetings have been held in the house of one of the Christians. It is too small for the purpose. A piece of land has, however, been found, for which the brethren have resolved, out of their poverty, to pay £30; but £50 more will be required to build a hall. The little band are all evangelists as they have opportunity, and on their visits to different towns and villages converse with those whom they meet about spiritual things. Over eighty names have been received of persons who appear to have given earnest heed to words spoken in this way, and Gospel literature is sent to them at intervals. The correspondent for this work in Britain is Mr. R. M. Craig, 35, Buchanan Street, Glasgow.

Failure of the Latter Rain.

THE Spring ("latter") rain has almost entirely failed this year at Jerusalem, and the rainfall during the whole season has only been half the usual quantity. More is not expected till next October. Water is already much dearer than it was at the worst part of last summer. Provisions have also risen greatly in price. The rich and well-to-do who have good cisterns in their houses will feel the effect severely, but for the poor Jews, who have no water supply, the condition is terrible.

In order to economize water, the Government have stopped all building operations; this throws many out of work. Our manager at Abraham's Vineyard writes, May 13:—"I am overwhelmed with applicants, between twenty and thirty every morning (one morning thirty-seven); they are all in rags, their clothes just hanging on them. When told that I cannot take them on, they point to their mouths, and ask for bread. I see them turn to go with tears running down their cheeks; but there is consolation in the thought that our seventy workers are spared that misery."

IT IS A HEART-BREAKING SIGHT,

Our great rock cisterns on Abraham's Vineyard are this year only half full. We are reserving this water to give away later on, when famine prices come, and are now giving money to the poor, that they may buy. Some 870 souls shared in our last distribution, among them many sick and blind. Great efforts must now be made to employ as many as possible through the summer; and to give water to at least the sick and feeble—and thus save life where possible. Never for many years have we known so great a failure of the "latter" rain—at Jerusalem. E. A. FINN, Sec. Soc. for Relief of Persecuted Jews.

41, Parliament Street, S.W.

Distress in Jamaica.

AS is well known, the West Indies have been passing through great financial distress. Whatever may have been the cause, their case is, and has been for some time, a very sad one. Jamaica has not been more fortunate in this respect than her sisters. In the general distress the churches have naturally had to take their share. Since 1895 the poverty of the majority of the members has been very severe, and the marvel is that they have done so well for the support of the Gospel among them.

Only those who are in the heart of the matter know to what bitter straits the Christian ministers in general have been reduced. This is not the fault of the members, it is rather their misfortune that this has been the case. A more willing-hearted people could not be found. If sacrifice be of true religion, then the people of Jamaica have shown in the most noble way that they are in possession of it. When the times were good, and the outlook promising, both ministers and members were led to what some regard as an extravagance in the direction of multiplying places of worship, and in improving those already in existence. Evil times having come, the churches are now grappling with what is certainly a hopeless task. The interest on the indebtedness is enormous, and the debts are increasing by amounts that show nothing for them.

ONE OF THE GREAT TESTS

Among the churches thus situated are those of the Wesleyan Methodists in the Morant Bay circuit. They have among them about 670 members, whose average earnings, taken at the highest estimate, are not more than 4s. 6d. a week. The original and accumulated debts on their churches amount to £1,340, involving the payment of a yearly interest of £84. I am asking the Christians of England to help their brethren yonder by removing for them, altogether or partly, an intolerable burden. Rev. Marshall Hartley, No. 1, Coleman Street, London, will receive and acknowledge contributions for this purpose,—Yours faithfully,

W. H. ATKIN

Mrs. Arthur W. Marling.

MISSIONARY TO THE FAN TRIBES.

SOME years ago we called attention to the work of Rev. A. W. Marling and wife, American missionaries among the Fan people on the Gaboon River in French Congo territory. The Fans were long ago declared by Du Chaillu, the great traveller and explorer, to be the most promising tribe of all the population of West Africa. They have shown a remarkable readiness to adapt themselves to the new modes of life that have resulted from European rule and influence.

It is about twenty years since the devoted workers we have named entered Western Equatorial Africa. Mr. Marling had the great honour of reducing the Fan language to writing, and supervised the publication of a catechism and reading book, also some Scripture portions and Christian hymns. The books were a power for good in the region, and other translating work was carried forward with unremitting diligence by the missionaries and native helpers. At length, in the midst of his testimony and toils, Mr. Marling was called to his rest. For the moment, to the work; and the poor Fans, who had learned to love Christ and those who had preached his Gospel among them, were thrown into deep sorrow. Mrs. Marling, however, not only shared her husband's devotion, but was equally enthusiastic in her attachment to the great missionary cause. She could not bear the thought of leaving the field in which God had manifestly owned her labours; and, although shortly after her husband's death she had to visit England and America, in the interest of her children and for other purposes, she may be said to have left her heart in Africa. Her mind has ever since been exercised upon plans for the advancement of the Gospel in the Fan country, and not without the promise of important results.

THIS SEEMED AN IRREPARABLE BLOW

And this is what might be expected from one whose call and consecration were so definite and thorough. When, in 1879, the venerable Albert Bushnell, missionary of the Presbyterian Board of the United States, pleaded for Gospel messengers to reinforce African stations, his words touched the heart of the young lady who afterwards became Mrs. Marling. From love to Christ, and out of compassion for needy races of men, she devoted herself to the service of God among a large and backward tribe of the Dark Continent.

THE PEOPLE WERE CANNIBALS,

it is true, also in bondage to witchcraft, and given over to licentiousness, but all the same they must be evangelized. Now, when the place filled by her departed husband is vacant, and looks like remaining so, the brave lady has devised means of continuing the work herself. She remembers that in past years the Lord gave her favour in the eyes of the people, who recognised her as a teacher sent from God. She fears she may not have seen the last of cannibalism and rapine; anyhow, "none of these things move her."

As we have seen, the late Mr. Marling gave the Fans some Scripture portions—Genesis and Matthew; he was engaged upon the Psalms and the Acts when called to his rest. He also aimed at giving the people a book telling in a simple manner the entire Bible story. In fact, he supervised the translation of a work which is well known in America and is not strange among us—Foster's "Story of the Bible." Mrs. Marling has taken in hand the completion of this work, and, with the help of a reliable native teacher, has prepared a book which will relate and describe to the Fan tribes the wonderful works of God both in creation and redemption. Foster's book was primarily intended for children and young people, and is therefore eminently suitable for such readers as it will have in this its latest dress. Mrs. Marling is at present in London seeing this book through the press. This is AN IMPORTANT UNDERTAKING.

To introduce into the midst of a people among whom reading is in steady progress, a thousand copies of a substantial book, narrating the marvellous story which the Holy Bible unfolds, is an enterprise that may well touch the imagination of thoughtful people, and evoke the generous support of earnest Christians. For the present—perhaps for years to come—this book will be the Scripture manual of the Fan people. Many will pray that God may bless it in its ministry. There is reason to hope that the missionary will soon find multitudes of hearts open to receive instruction regarding the deeper truths which lie behind the familiar story in the pages of the Sacred Record itself.

From a Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry, 55, Baker Street, London, W.

It is proposed to bring artistic illustrations to the help of the letterpress in this work of religious instruction. The value of this adjunct in the peculiar circumstances can hardly be over-estimated. Mrs. Marling has received much encouragement in her appeals to this end. The son of the compiler of the "Story" has given many picture-plates, as well as money; and the Religious Tract Society has also made a goodly grant of engraving electros. The printing has been undertaken by Mr. W. Walters, of the Scripture Gift Mission. The entire edition of the "Story" in the Fan language will cost about £300, and one-half this amount is already in hand. Mrs. Marling hopes soon to receive the remainder.

It is sincerely hoped that workers will not be wanting to enter the field to direct to Christ the men and women whom the printed page will enlighten as to saving truth. Mrs. Marling would be delighted to witness the reinforcement of the work, also the planting of new stations for Gospel effort; and as the people are found in a French colony, possibly the Holy Spirit may impress the appeal on some warm hearts in France or Switzerland. There will then be need for some home committee to administer affairs and organize support, but that should not involve much difficulty.

For the information of any who may be led to offer for service, we may add that the Fans occupy a country estimated at about 250 square miles. The district has many water-courses, which greatly facilitate evangelization. English Christians helped very heartily to give the Fans the Gospel hymn-book which they now use with so much pleasure. Communications for Mrs. Marling, and gifts in aid of her work, may be addressed to the care of the publishers of The Christian.

The Gospel in Hawaii.

THERE is encouraging news from the Sandwich Islands. Rev. Charles L. Rhodes writes as follows in the Boston Congregationalist:

"The churches of Hawaii within the past few months have inaugurated a new evangelical movement. When the American Board, after over thirty years of missionary effort, withdrew its support, it left established churches in every part of the islands, and a body of churches strong enough, as it was believed, to carry on the work.

"The Hawaiian Mission Board was organized as a home missionary body, and has continued to be an active agency. It has not only sustained the native churches then established, but has organized others. It has carried on foreign missionary work in the Marquesas, Gilbert, and Caroline Islands, and latterly has taken measures to begin the evangelization of Mindano in the Philippines.

"But the past few years have been years of disorganization in Hawaii, as well as years of development. The rise of the sugar industry has wrought wonderful changes in

THE DISTRIBUTION OF POPULATION.

Churches were left without people, and people were moved by the tide of change to places where there were no churches. This tended to break down the churchgoing habits of the native Hawaiians, and the spiritual life of the people suffered.

"This new movement is an effort again to bring the Gospel to every inhabitant of the island, and in particular to the native Hawaiians, other nationalities being looked after by other agencies. The students of the North Pacific Missionary Institute are being trained for this special Gospel work. Under the leadership of Rev. John Leadingham and Rev. Theodore Richards every part of the islands is being visited, and Gospel meetings are being held everywhere. The people are visited in their homes. The stereopticon, illustrating scenes from the life of Christ and other Biblical narratives, is used. The work is apostolic in its character and incidents. Many conversions are reported, and much spiritual quickening among those nominally Christian. Churches, which have been a weight on the Hawaiian Board for years, are now showing signs of a more active life. Pastors are encouraged, and regular pastoral work is increased in power. The old missionary power, which in the first half of the last century changed these from heathen to Christian isles, is again being displayed."

THE LATE

Mrs. Smyly, of Dublin.

THE name of the late Mrs. Smyly, of Dublin, is a household word throughout Ireland. The greater part of her long and useful life was devoted more particularly to the rescue and training of destitute children, but she was a large-hearted friend of every cause that made for the spiritual and moral benefit of the people.

Mrs. Smyly was the third daughter of Mr. Matthew Franks, of Merrion Square, Dublin. It is now more than half a century since her sympathies were first stirred by the miseries of child life in the Irish capital. With characteristic energy she set herself to work a change in the conditions in which the poor lived, and to make the provision which was necessary for the desolate and neglected little ones.

As a young woman she started a school for children in a hayloft, and a number of eager young pupils soon gathered round her. This was the commencement of zealous and far-reaching labours, the fruit of which is seen in the network of institutions which have now been in existence for so many years with great advantage to the community. Breakfasts were given to the starving, and the pathetic appeals of the who came together, led to the establishment of a Boys' Home. Then came a similar refuge for girls, in which training was given for domestic service; and the work continued to expand. Mrs. Smyly received valuable aid from Miss Blanche Whately, daughter of Archbishop Whately, and from other ladies whose sympathy she enlisted. There are at the present time seven Homes and five free day schools, in which over a thousand children are cared for.

RAGGED, HOMELESS LADS

In due course Miss Franks became the wife of Dr. Smyly, a well-known Dublin physician, and her family grew up to be distinguished and respected in various departments of Christian service.

Mrs. Smyly was a strong Protestant, and her association with the Irish Church Missions was one of the outstanding features of her career from the time when, in 1846, that important organization was commenced in Dublin by Rev. Alexander Dallas. The I.C.M. undertook the responsibilities of training the children in the homes, of maintaining the teaching staff, and of giving the necessary pastoral oversight, while Mrs. Smyly and her helpers attended to the personal requirements of the inmates, in addition to raising the cost of the up-keep. Besides conducting other departments of enterprise in the Evangelical cause, Mrs. Smyly collected a large sum year by year for the support of Scripture Readers working in the Dublin slums. Until about a year ago her Sundays were spent, till late in the afternoon, at the Mission headquarters in Townsend Street; and it was a beautiful sight to see the venerable servant of Christ taking her place as in the unique adult Sunday school held in the Mission church each Sunday afternoon.

A DILIGENT TEACHER

It is interesting to note that, although Mrs. Smyly's work inevitably aroused a measure of opposition, not a few Romanists were prompt to recognise its value. Shortly before her death, two remarkable testimonies by members of the Roman Church appeared in the public press. One was as follows:

Mrs. Smyly was the greatest benefactress the Irish Catholics ever had. She gave her life to their service without proclaiming her devotion and self-sacrifice from every pulpit, or demanding recognition and obedience from the lay body, as if she were superhuman.

The other occurs in the striking book "Five Years in Ireland," by Mr. M. J. F. McCarthy, who says:

I have a great respect for Mrs. Smyly. I have seen her constantly moving through Dublin, though I never had the honour of speaking to her, and no man of experience could look on her distinguished face without feeling that she was, indeed, a lady of great ability, great force of character, and one whose presence and personality must be a source of help and consolation to all with whom she comes into contact.

Although so fully occupied with the solution of religious and social problems, and the propagation of Gospel truth at home, Mrs. Smyly yet found time to sympathize and co-operate with workers in the foreign field. It was largely owing to her influence that a Children's Home, or "Bird's Nest" (to recall the name of her well-known institution at Kingstown), was established in the Fuh-Kien province of China, near to the place where her missionary daughter, Mrs. Stewart, was (with her missionary husband) cruelly murdered by fanatical natives.

From Photograph by Messrs. Werner & Son, 89, Gratton Street, Dublin.

The end of Mrs. Smyly's long and self-sacrificing life was notably hastened by a carriage accident, which occurred in August last. She lay for several days in an unconscious state, and although she subsequently resumed her work with characteristic vigour, she manifested symptoms of increasing weakness, and, as we have already recorded, passed away on May 16 last. Her memory will long be her works remain an enduring monument of what can be accomplished by a whole-hearted and obedient servant of God. We may appropriately conclude this brief notice of the departed lady's life and labours by quoting the words of the Archbishop of Dublin, spoken at the funeral service:—

TREASURED BY THE IRISH PEOPLE;

Mrs. Smyly undertook and carried on this work because she believed that God gave her the work to do, and that it was one in which she could do good, spiritually and temporally, to the neglected, destitute, and many of them outcast children of the slums of Dublin, and, so far as she could, to lift them from their miserable surroundings, and to give them some hope for this life and for the next. That she was successful, that God gave her success in this work, is absolutely undeniable. She collected large sums because the absolute sincerity of her purpose was manifest, and the ability of the management of the schools was recognised. In the providence of God she was spared a life that stretched beyond the usual terms of existence here. All who sympathize with this work have cause to be deeply thankful that she was enabled to carry it on almost unto the very end. Such a life as hers, such a self-denying devotion in the cause of God, is it not an inspiration to the Christian Church?

May the Lord of the harvest cast the mantle of this faithful servant on many of his children.

Colliery Explosion in S. Wales

THE South Wales coal field has again been stirred to its depths by a devastating explosion. This time the scene is the Universal Colliery, Senghenydd, Aber Valley, near Caerphilly; where in one moment eighty-three men were hurried into eternity at five o'clock on Friday morning, May 24. Thus fifty-seven wives are left widows, and 230 children rendered fatherless.

Mining experts declare that the violence and force of this explosion is unprecedented; thus the work of exploring the mines and recovering the bodies has been extremely difficult and dangerous. Consequently, up to Saturday evening last the whole of the bodies had not been found. This is a sad feature in the disaster, and adds considerably to the suffering and anguish of the bereaved. It is pitiful to behold the grief of widows and aged parents, as they walk to and fro to the pit's mouth, many times through the day, and all hours of the night, seeking in vain for some tidings from below of those they loved, and whose loss they now mourn.

The awful suddenness of the catastrophe may be gathered from the position of the men found in the hard heading, in what is known as the Pretoria district. One was found leaning against the side where he had been working, as though taking a rest before renewing his labour again; another had a mandrel in his hand, while one was found in a recumbent position apparently in the act of "holing." The cases are all very sad, but the following are exceptionally pathetic:—Mrs. Davies, widow of Ebenezer Davies, one of the firemen, whose body is still in the mine, also that of her son, is in a very delicate condition and nearly blind. While we commended her to God in prayer, she cried piteously, "O Lord! my faith is almost gone: it's more than I can bear." Mrs. Lewis, whose husband and son were killed, and a second son only left the pit five minutes before the explosion, has been very ill for some time, and is left with eight children. David Jenkins, the only support of his aged parents, nearly seventy years of age, also supported his three sisters, and the son of a brother who was killed in Cilfynydd explosion seven years ago. Mrs. Lower's two sons were killed; they were her only support, and she is left with six young children.

Unhappily these explosions are not uncommon, and many of the readers of The Christian know I have visited the scenes of every one in South Wales for the past sixteen years, rendering spiritual comfort and financial aid to the bereaved families. In this case, for the first time, the families will benefit under the Workmen's Compensation Act, but it will be many weeks before the claims are paid. There is great need of immediate temporary assistance: some cases are absolutely destitute. I shall be pleased to distribute among the most necessitous cases any money sent to me for the purpose.

Thos. M. Wintle,
Supt., Undenominational Christian Mission.
Pontymoile, Pontypool, South Wales.

Endeavourers at Sheffield.

WHIT-MONDAY is always a gala day at Sheffield, the great Sunday-school festival being held on that day. This year the presence of thousands of Endeavourers added to the interest. Early in the morning crowds wended their way to Norfolk Park, where 10,000 Sunday-school children gathered together, and then had a good time in the park. It was a most picturesque sight, witnessed by a multitude of people variously estimated at from 50,000 to 80,000.

At 11 o'clock the Convention sessions opened. Four meetings were held simultaneously for the consideration of the topics, "Winning the Young for Christ," and "Claiming the Young for the Church."

In the afternoon an interesting junior rally was held in the Drill Hall, which was packed for the occasion. A Temperance Demonstration, in the Albert Hall, also attracted large numbers, the speakers being Miss Agnes Slack, Rev. A. T. Guttery, and Councillor Trevor, with Alderman Clegg in the chair. But the most important meeting from the C.E. standpoint was the annual gathering of the British National Union, held in the Montgomery Hall. Rev. J. D. Lamont, the retiring president, occupied the chair, and spoke of his work during his year of office. He had visited many centres, and his heart was gladdened by all that he had seen, while his life had been broadened by contact with ministers and workers of all denominations. A cable from Dr. Clark was read, announcing the motto for twentieth year of Christian Endeavour—Phil. iii. 13, 14.

A YEAR OF PROGRESS.

Rev. W. Knight Chaplin presented the report. Since the great convention in London last July, 533 new societies have been enrolled, of which 119 are juniors: 11,000 associate members have become active in the sixty per cent. of the societies from which he had received reports. The denominational increases stated are:—Baptists, 100 societies; Congregationalists, 114; Primitive Methodists, 109; Presbyterians, forty; United Methodist Free Church, twenty; Methodist New Connexion, twenty; Society of Friends, six; Church of England, thirteen; Wesleyans, twenty-one. The total number of societies in various denominations now stood as follows: Congregationalists, 1,798; Baptists, 1,740; Primitive Methodists, 761; Presbyterians, 716; United Methodist Free Church, 553; Methodist New Connexion, 305.

The treasurer's report showed a year of extraordinary expenditure, owing to the Alexandra Palace Convention. A substantial balance in hand had become a balance due to treasurer of £112, but the income of the Union from publications promises to wipe off the debt at an early date.

Rev. John Watson, D.D., of Manchester, who has rendered excellent service for Christian Endeavour in the Primitive Methodist Church, was unanimously elected president, and duly installed, after which an enthusiastic and encouraging meeting closed. On Monday evening again there were several simultaneous meetings. At the Albert Hall the speech of the evening was by Mr. Robert Cameron, M.P., on

"THE YOUNG AND CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP."

Mr. Cameron had hardly opportunity to do justice to his subject. Probably he did not know that in C.E. Conventions the time-table is strictly adhered to, and the bell rings in a remorseless manner. He indulged in a lengthy introduction, and had to curtail his remarks on the topic. However, all he said was excellent, and he received a well-merited ovation. He spoke of the C.E. as the Sunday School Continuation Classes, and hoped that in these young people were learning to pray and to know their Bible, and were developing the sturdy character which can say "No." The political life of the country needed a pure and sturdy manhood. If voters are corrupt, representatives will be so, too. The work of England in the future must be in the hands of the Church, and the evils which blight its fair fame to-day must be sought out and for ever crushed.

"THE GREAT DAY."

Tuesday was the last and truly the "great day of the feast." At the Albert Hall in the morning Rev. C. Stedeford presided.

Miss Weatherley excelled herself in speaking of "The Endeavourer's Responsibility to his Lord." She spoke of responsibility for character and for service, and strikingly illustrated her argument, comparing a bar of gold with a bar of iron of the same weight. The iron would be worth £1, and the gold £10,000, but if only enough work should be put upon the iron it could be made to produce watch-springs to the value of £50,000, or five times the value of the gold.

Rev. Arnold Streuli, in speaking on "The Endeavourer's Responsibility to his Society," pleaded for a character which will commend C.E. to all the world.

Rev. F. J. Horsefield, of Bristol, the pioneer of C.E. in the Church of England, spoke on "The Endeavourer's Responsibility to his Church," and urged intelligent interest in the history of his church; unceasing loyalty to its principles; fidelity to its service; and endeavour to be extenders as well as defenders.

During the afternoon denominational rallies were held, and in the evening consecration services in no less than six centres. That in the Albert Hall was conducted by Rev. F. B. Meyer, and the subject of his address was, "Self Surrender: A Condition of the Spirit's Indwelling."

From Dr. J. G. Paton.

DEAR SIR,—Let me most cordially thank you and all the readers of your paper, The Christian, who have contributed to the £83 12s. which you have so kindly sent me for the work of our Lord Jesus in the New Hebrides Mission. May Christ reward and bless you and them all with an ever-deepening joy in his service and salvation, and may The Christian, as in the past, be more and more a power for good in deepening the interest of all its readers, not only in home and foreign missions, but in all church and Christian work and in giving for its support.

You will all be glad to hear that in our mission in the New Hebrides the Lord has now given us about 18,000 converts and 3,000 church-members, some 300 of whom are native teachers and preachers assisting us in our work on the islands. Indeed, every convert becomes a missionary to others, asking God's blessing on meals and conducting family worship daily. He has also enabled our missionaries to translate the Holy Scriptures into twenty-two new languages, as spoken by the inhabitants of each island we occupy, and the natives have paid for the printing of them in all these languages, except one New Testament, for which some unknown friend of Jesus paid, through the United Presbyterian Church of Scotland.

Could any other power but God's Word have brought 18,000 of our South Sea Island cannibals to live in peace and happiness, loving and serving Jesus Christ? As we have yet some 60,000 cannibals whom we have not reached on our group, I have, in America, Canada, and Britain been pleading their cause, trying by collections at meetings and voluntary help from God's people to raise what will enable us to get more missionaries to give the Gospel to them, and enable us to keep those workers already in our Mission. The handsome help of your readers I receive in deepest gratitude, and I plead for your continued prayers.—Yours faithfully, John G. Paton.

2, Park Quadrant, Glasgow.

Lambeth Dust Women.—After much prayer and waiting upon God for guidance, suitable premises were secured in the Commercial Road for providing a crêche to which dust women can send their babies to be cared for and fed for 3d. per day. The dedication service was held a few days ago, and was conducted by Rev. F. B. Meyer, and encouraging words were spoken by Revs. J. Tolefree Parr and T. J. Hazzard. The Home is to be known as Emmanuel Crêche, and it will also be the centre of Gospel services on Mondays for mothers and on Wednesdays for young people. The hon. secretary is Mrs. E. Dupe, 72, Commercial Road, Lambeth, S.E.

The Scottish Assemblies.

CHURCH OF SCOTLAND.

ON the presentation of the Jewish report, Professor Nicol said that the influence of Christian schools on Jewish society in the Levant was telling very largely in favour of a modified feeling towards the Gospel of Christ.

In submitting the Home Mission report, Rev. Theodore Marshall was glad to be able to say that they had not fallen back, but rather gone on increasing their evangelical workers. This year there were 270 agencies, ten more than had ever been reported to the General Assembly. Last year they reported larger figures than ever before, and the same increase took place in the year which preceded that. With regard to church stations, 22,000 of their people every Lord's Day worshipped in connection with mission churches and stations. In 1900 they had assisted in building and enlarging sixteen places of worship.

A special committee proposed a system providing for a more thorough and extended scheme of pastoral instruction, training, and guidance for students who may be looking forward to the service of the Church as ministers, medical missionaries, or teachers. While regarding it as essential that no student should be obliged to live in any of the residences, the Assembly approved of the action of the Board in contributing towards the erection or enlargement of such residences as may be instituted at university seats, provided the buildings were placed at the disposal of lecturers who may be appointed to visit them.

Referring to certain "explanations" of the Sabbath desecration which had been witnessed at the building of the Glasgow Exhibition premises, Principal Story said they really meant that it would have implied some diminution of the profits if the Sabbath had been properly observed. The same remark applied to the cases quoted of labour in Lanarkshire. It was

A QUESTION OF SHILLINGS AND PENCE.

The valuation of the Lord's Day was a matter estimated by the expense; it cost too much, and therefore it was not kept. Let them get rid of all hypocrisy and cant, and if a man were clearly convicted of keeping his workmen on Sabbath, do not let them have pious divines coming forward and defending his action.

When introducing the subject of Foreign Missions, Mr. McMurtrie said that only three times in their history had the baptisms exceeded 1,000; last year the number was 1,072. It had been suggested they should leave China and go to safer ground, but the voice of the Christian Church all over the country had been—"Here am I; send me." He announced an offer from the directors to hand over the East African Scottish Mission to the Church. The mission was founded nine years ago in the vast district between Mombasa on the coast and Uganda. While almost on the equator, the mission station was extremely healthy, being situated 6,500ft. above the sea level, and had the advantage of being on the railway line from the coast. It was endowed to the extent of £37,000, and there is in addition a reserve fund of £2,000. The transfer is not being arranged.

UNITED FREE CHURCH.

Widespread satisfaction is felt at the filling of the Chair of Church History in the New College, Edinburgh—vacant through the retirement of Principal Rainy—by the appointment of Rev. Dr. A. R. MacEwen, minister of Claremont Church, Glasgow. In returning thanks, Professor MacEwen said that, though a studious life was congenial to him, he did not accept the chair for the purpose of historical research. The colleges were for the training of students to be ministers of the Gospel, and it was his chief desire and prayer that he might have grace and wisdom to help the men of the rising generation to serve Jesus Christ in the ministry with greater fidelity and consistency, and with more purity and power, than he himself had shown.

One of the interesting results of last year's union has been a movement for the organization of women for home work. Principal Rainy explained that it was intended to be an association through which there might come up from all parts of the Church suggestions as to what was wanted, and as to what had been found practical and practicable, so that the ideas might be matured and the suggestions be made the current property of the whole Church in the women's department, which at present were not known, realized, or applied to practice as they might be.

The report of the Committee on Foreign Missions bore that the total amount raised in the United Church at home and in stations abroad during the past year for foreign work was £194,881 14s. 8d. The total number of Christian agents labouring in the mission fields in India, Kaffraria, Natal, Livingstonia, the New Hebrides, and South Arabia, was 1,142, and there were in addition 354 unbaptized teachers.

It was agreed to appoint Rev. Dr. George Robson to be sole editor of the Missionary Record, and Rev. W. Agnew to be sole editor of the Children's Missionary Magazine, the appointments to be for five years from December next.

The Sabbath Observance Committee's attention has been directed to labour as it exists in some of our industrial centres. The practice has crept in with increasing requirements of certain industries, and the high pressure of competition. But there has been an awakening of the conscience to the "slavery" that arises from continuous toil, even though sweetened by largely augmented pay on Sabbaths. In the iron-smelting centres, where such labour is prevalent, it is pleasing to report that efforts are being made to reduce it, or so regulate it, that only what is necessary shall be undertaken. In Coatbridge, as busy an industrial centre as there is in Scotland, with works of a kind that demand more or less unceasing toil, a vigorous effort has been made to effect a lessening of Sabbath labour, or such a distribution of it, as shall secure for men their Sabbath at stated times.

Scottish Notes.

THE usual Ministers' Autumn Meeting has been arranged to be held at Bridge of Allan, September 16-18; and it is proposed that the general topic should be, "The Ministry in Relation to the Present Condition of Church Life and Work."

The Primitive Methodist Conference has commissioned Rev. Samuel Morton to assist in the initiation of a forward movement among the Edinburgh Methodists. The Literary Institute purchased a short time ago will be the centre of the new endeavour.

A few days ago the annual Christian Convention took place within the policies of his beautiful estate of Douglas-Support, on the invitation of Rev. Sholto D. C. Douglas. At the Saturday afternoon conference there was a very large gathering from all parts of Lanarkshire. Mr. Douglas presided, and an address was given by Rev. John M'Neill on "The Feeding of the 5,000." Rev. George Johnstone (New Marnock) and local ministers took part in the proceedings.

The Scottish Christian Social Union has been formed (a) to claim for the Christian law the ultimate authority to rule social practice; (b) to affirm the social mission of the Church, and make suggestions as to how that mission may be best fulfilled; (c) to investigate, where necessary, the social and economic facts in different departments of the national life, and to study how to apply the truths and principles of Christianity to the problems arising therefrom; (d) to take action, as occasion arises, for the furtherance of specific reforms.

The annual report of the Highland Temperance League shows that such work in the northern and western counties has during the year been attended with special difficulties. The crises through which the trade has passed have been much in evidence in the distillery districts. Higher wages and general business activity have placed in the hands of many larger opportunity for self-indulgence, which has too often been taken advantage of. The two agents have, however, addressed 419 meetings, and there are evidences of progress in several directions.

The Late Mr. T. S. Heley.

BY WILLIAM LUFF.

FOR twenty-five years the name of Mr. T. S. Heley, of Wing, Leighton Buzzard, has been widely known in connection with village mission work, and many heard with sorrow of the closing of his work on earth on Wednesday, February 27. With his pony and trap he has visited almost every village in Buckingham and Oxfordshire, besides many villages in fifteen other counties. His plan was to give Gospel papers from door to door, and speak wherever there were ears to hear. It was our joy to accompany him in many of these tours, and we know of no better way than his of reaching the dark villages. The cause of death was pneumonia; but even when unconscious, God's servant was giving out hymns and Scriptures, as was his wont in the villages. Many friends and neighbours gathered in the village churchyard to sing a last song of "Peace, perfect peace," over the the body of the now silent preacher.

Shortly before his death, Mr. Heley published a brief record of his work, entitled "Stories of Village Preaching" (1d. Morgan & Scott). From this we cull one or two incidents:—

From Photograph by Mr. Alf. H. Case, Leighton.

One Lord's Day morning, in a Bucks. village, an elderly man told me he had been seeking and praying for a long time, but found no peace. He had had visitors also, who prayed with him. We turned into his house, and our text was 1 Pet. ii. 24, "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree." Soon his face brightened, and he exclaimed, "Oh, I see, I have only to trust in what Jesus has done." We bowed before the Lord, not to ask for pardon, but to praise Him for redeeming love. When we next went that road, he was with the Lamb in glory, and his wife, through his testimony, I understood, was trusting in the same Saviour. Years after, when holding a mission miles away from that village, their grand-daughter met me, who also was a Christian. She said, "Whenever I see you it reminds me of grandfather, and how he found peace in the Lord Jesus."

We were present at the funeral referred to in the following narrative:—

In our earliest open-air work we had great blessing in some needy villages in Bucks., &c., the meetings, with the help of others, being kept up in the open air for two summers. Many times of blessing were experienced there, the result after twenty-five years remaining still, although most have gone home, and nearly all are scattered. The first visit brought several to decision, and years after we met two who testified to the grace of God. Fourteen or fifteen years after we met another, in a sad trial. Having heard in an adjoining village that a funeral had just taken place in C——, we started to it. It was a young man killed instantly on the railway. On the way we called at three houses, and in one I saw the mother, who had found the Lord in the previous visit. My greeting was, "If the Lord Jesus came to-night, should you be pleased to see Him?" "Indeed I should!" was the reply. "We have just buried my son, who was killed on the railway in Leeds; do come in." Two of us went in, and this remarkable leading was, we believe, a great blessing, for the house was full of mourners.

Several of our visits to the villages were preceded or followed by what appeared the special voice of heaven. Mr. Heley wrote:

A very solemn time was experienced at a corner of a village green by two of our party, the theme of both being "Prepare to meet thy God." One speaker was deeply moved, and said, "I feel that something terrible is going to happen—some great judgment." After the meeting they went quietly to their lodging, and within an hour or two a party of men, who had just left a public-house, were driving round the corner where the meeting had been held, but turned too shortly, so the wheel ran up the bank. They were instantly overturned, and one was killed. On another occasion, when we had finished visiting, &c., in a village, we noticed a road we had not been through, and followed it. We drove on some two miles through an uninhabited district, when we met two waggoners with their teams. They seemed excited, and the last one said there had been a terrible accident forward. Not stopping to inquire what it was, we urged him to "flee from the wrath to come." In about a mile we came to a village, and noticing groups of people about, we began speaking in front of a public-house, &c., and visiting. We soon learned that a poor fellow had been crushed under the wheels of a ploughing engine, and unwittingly I had gone into the place where he lay to speak to some men. The people were some of them much moved, and we pleaded long and earnestly with them to flee to the Refuge. Our way followed the track the engine had come, and for miles we carried the news and preached the Gospel. The news spread rapidly, and everywhere our strange visit was announced among the wonders.

The simple faith of the villagers was very cheering. Here is an instance:—

A poor old drunkard, eighty-four years of age, was found mightily convinced of sin. He, too, "Beheld the Lamb of God," and lived until he was ninety to testify of the wondrous grace of an uttermost Saviour. Once in visiting him a little time before his decease, he said, "I am simply trusting in the finished work of the Lord Jesus. I shall never perish there, shall I?"

One other incident introduces the work among the Hereford and Worcester hop-pickers, which was commenced and linked on to the village work. Mr John Jones, of Shepherd's Bush, was speaking in front of a row of cottages; he explained that neither church-going nor chapel-going could cleanse from sin nor tears, nor prayers, nor any works to which people resort can cleanse from sin, "Nothing but the blood of Jesus."

In various ways he brought out the truth in each, ending with "Nothing but the blood of Jesus." A heavy shower abruptly ended our meeting, and we drove on. The next summer we were there again. A Christian woman, living in a cottage opposite to where the meeting had been held, said to me, "Last year you had a meeting here, and the theme was 'Nothing but the blood of Jesus.' Our aged father," she said, "sat at the door and heard it. A few days after he asked me, 'What did the man in the lane say on Sunday?' She repeated the words. The truth was brought home to his heart by the Spirit, and he was changed, and became a man of one idea. His life had been a very sad one, and he realized it, and every day his now favourite words were repeated. During the winter he fell ill, and whoever came to see him, 'Nothing but the blood of Jesus' was his theme, "and," said his daughter, "as the disease became worse, he said but little else, and his last audible words were 'Nothing but the blood of Jesus.'"

This incident was printed as a booklet, and appeared in various forms in this and other countries, and of it Mr. Heley records:—

I walked into a gipsy camp, in the hop country, one moonlight evening, and found the colony about retiring to rest, so gave a young woman some Gospel books, among them "Nothing but the blood of Jesus." After a few words I retired; but two years after she told Mr. Jones how the perusal of the book had led her to the Lord Jesus, and following on had led her, then the family, to a Mission Hall near their home, and most of them were now converted.

At the age of sixty-two our beloved friend has finished his good work. May his testimony stir others to follow on in similar efforts!

Whit-Monday Meetings.

TALBOT TABERNACLE.

THE Whit-Monday missionary breakfast held at Talbot Tabernacle, Bayswater, was presided over, as usual, by Pastor Frank White, the esteemed pastor of the Tabernacle. This was the twenty-third annual gathering of the kind called together during Mr. White's ministry in West London.

There was a goodly company, representing different sections of the one Church of Christ, at the morning meal in Powis Hall, and a yet larger gathering at the meeting which followed in the Tabernacle. The spirit of Christian fellowship beautifully prevailed, and throughout the engagements of the morning a quiet but gracious working of the Divine Spirit was manifest. China, India, Africa—south, central, and east—Portugal, Madeira, and other mission fields were represented.

Pastor Lecoat spoke of the work of the Breton Mission, and Pastor Jefferd of similar operations among the Roman Catholics of Madeira. Mr. and Mrs. Spencer Walton, fresh from distressing scenes of warfare in South Africa, told of the conquests which they had seen effected by the Prince of Peace in African hearts that had been at enmity with God. Mr. Miller, of the Scottish Industrial Mission in Central Africa, recounted the Lord's leading and working in connection with an agency which will arouse larger interest as the minds of Christians become familiarized with its methods; and a great hush fell upon all hearts as Mr. and Mrs. Green told, to the glory of God, how "in deaths oft" during the recent Boxer rising in China, they had been kept in peace and marvellously preserved. Most humbling—and therefore spiritually wholesome—were the messages breathed into the very heart of the meeting by the Spirit of grace and truth through the words of these devoted workers. R. W. H.

KILBURN HALL CONFERENCE.

Notwithstanding the glorious weather inviting into the country, Kilburn Hall, N.W., was again filled on Whit-Monday afternoon for the usual Bank Holiday Conference. The meetings were marked with growing interest and power. It is gratifying to see such large numbers, especially of young men and women, who thus show their desire for spiritual advancement rather than the good that comes from physical and legitimate recreation on the only day that many of them are free from the claims of business, and not a few of those whose daily round of toil partakes of the character of drudgery. The many beaming faces and the hearty sounds of praise indicated that the cup of each was overflowing, and that there was no cause for regret in their choice of how and where to spend Bank Holiday. "And they being let go went to their own company."

After prayer by Mr. James Sprunt, Mr. James E. Mathieson, who presided in the afternoon, gave an excellent keynote to the day on being "filled with the Spirit," reading Eph. v. 14-20. Pastor Fuller Gooch gave an excellent address on the two-fold glory of Christ as Son of God and Son of Man, and Pastor D. M. Cameron followed by speaking from Matt. xi. 28. Surgeon-General Partridge, whom all were grateful to God to see so far recovered, then gave a testimony of how greatly the Lord had been with him through pain and trouble, making him happy even in suffering.

The evening meeting commenced with a touching word from Mr. Marshall Broomhall, of the China Inland Mission, on the wonderful way which God had helped and sustained his children in China throughout the recent terrible troubles, and Rev. I. Row followed, urging the necessity of more workers in the mission field.

Pastor John Telfer spoke with power on the Feast of Pentecost, after which Pastor McCracken drew some helpful lessons from the life and walk of Enoch. Mr. Monro Collings suggested that something practical ought to come out of the meetings in service for the Master, basing his remarks on the latter part of 1 Chron. xxix. 5. Mr. Edward Hurditch gave a brief, final helpful word, and Lord Radstock closed this happy Conference with prayer.

Forty Years of Service.

AN enthusiastic meeting was held at Costers' Hall, on Whit-Tuesday evening, when Mr. W. J. Orsman, J.P., was congratulated on having completed forty years of honorary Christian work on behalf of the street-trading classes, and was also presented with a testimonial.

Mr. Collinson referred to about twenty letters which had been received from well-known persons regretting their inability to be present, including the Earl of Aberdeen, and the Marquis of Northampton, who was willing to do anything for such work, and whose absence was unavoidable. Mr. Collinson asked Mr. Orsman to accept three things—an address, a travelling-bag, and a cheque for £50, that being the balance of what had been collected for the testimonial.

Mr. Orsman accepted the gifts, but handed back the £50 as a first donation towards a second contingency fund of £500, a similar sum having been already set aside for the same purpose. In acknowledging the sympathy felt for him, and referring to the fact that he was getting older, Mr. Orsman quoted the Psalmist's words, "O God, Thou hast taught me from my youth; and hitherto have I declared thy wondrous works." While thanking God and his friends, he had to confess that during thirty years he had owed much to his wife, who had always encouraged him, and oftentimes, when unable to attend the meetings himself, Mrs. Orsman had ever thought it her duty to be present, whether in hail, rain, or snow. Characteristic references were made to

FRIENDS OF BYGONE DAYS.

Special mention was made of C. H. Spurgeon, of the Hon. Baptist Noel, at whose church a cobbler conducted a large Bible class. George Cruikshank had been accustomed to visit Golden Lane to draw his ragged school sketches. The late Sir Arthur Blackwood had also shown much sympathy. The work had been a mission to the poor in its earliest days, and it was so still, and it was as much needed as ever. Statistics were given, showing the great increase in the number of societies and hospitals for the poor in the course of forty years. In the beginning mission workers were regarded as intruders, and he had been defended by Lord Shaftesbury. He had never changed in his doctrinal teaching, the Bible was enough for them; and he had never sanctioned any exhibitional religion. They believed in the Bible, and their converts grew up among them. If he had to begin again, he should do the same. There were fifty-three operations carried on in connection with Costers' Hall, and their meeting-room was not large enough to hold all the members of their clubs, &c. Mr. Orsman added that he hoped to go on as he had done for some time longer.

Mr. R. C. Morgan, who presided, said he remembered the men of 1860 who had favoured mission work of that kind, Costers' Hall being one of the oldest and the best. He wished that there were more of such missions. He thanked God for Mr. Orsman's consistent testimony.

Mr. John Kirk congratulated Mr. Orsman and his friends on behalf of the Ragged School Union. Mr. Orsman was where he was at the first in regard to catholic-mindedness. All the way through he had shown adaptability to many situations. At the council table of the Union, he had been a leader among leaders.

Rev. W. Cuff said that the meeting was not only a happy one, it was pathetic. Such pioneers as Mr. Orsman had smashed prejudice, and had made Christian work what it was. He had known Mr. Orsman since 1864, and the years behind them had been golden years. He was thankful that his friend had never turned back. As regarded his testimony for the truth, all the victories won at the Shoreditch Tabernacle and at Costers' Hall had come through the Gospel. Mr. John A. Groom also gave testimony to Mr. Orsman's Mission, and to such work generally.

It is to be hoped that the Contingency Fund will be sustained by all Mr. Orsman's friends. It is one which we think an essential feature in all Missions.

Rev. John Wilkinson's Jubilee

A LARGE company of friends gathered in Mildmay Conference Hall last Friday afternoon, to congratulate Rev. John Wilkinson on his completion of fifty years of service in the work of the Lord among the Jews. Recalling with gratitude their first meeting, in the same hall twenty-three years earlier, the Chairman (Mr. James E. Mathieson) named three characteristics of Mr. Wilkinson's teaching which he had recognised as very important and helpful—(1) its Scripturalness; (2) its spirituality; (3) its affectionate perseverance. He rejoiced that his friend had been used of God as a true and successful missionary to the Jews, as a great missionary to the Church of Christ, and as an important agent in the distribution of the Scriptures among the Jews.

A most cordial reception was accorded to Rev. John Wilkinson as he rose to tell of the goodness of the Lord during the sixty-two and a half years since his conversion at the age of fourteen years, when his leader into the truth was his now sainted mother. He traced the steps by which he was led, until his attention was specially directed to a college where students were in request, with a view to taking up work among the Jews. The thought was new to him, but as soon as he answered the call there came the confirmation, "That's your sphere."

Turning to the second half of his work, he told in touching terms how the Lord had sent in the means required in answer to faith and prayer, until the voluntary contributions now amount to £168,591 5s. The whole experience was summed up in the words—"having nothing, and yet possessing all things."

THE NEW TESTAMENT MOVEMENT

had been a special delight, and had resulted in the distribution of at least a million and a quarter volumes among Jews speaking various languages.

A personal item of exceptional interest was the narration, by Rev. Aaron Matthews, of his own conversion—at Newark, in 1864—through the instrumentality of Mr. Wilkinson, who had also kept hold of his hand afterwards until he was thrust out into mission work.

Speaking as the representative of a small circle of friends, Pastor Fuller Gooch expressed the deep love which they felt for Mr. Wilkinson, for the Master's sake, for the work's sake, and for his own sake; and presented a cheque for £200 as a token of their personal affection. "We meet," he said, "to glorify the Master of a servant, who has had grace given to glorify Him. May the Lord spare him till Jesus comes!" Going back over thirty-five years, he recalled how they had come into contact in Norfolk; and thanked God that one of the privileges of his ministry had been the continuance of the close fellowship then begun.

Another pleasing feature of the meeting was the presentation of an address by a deputation from the Hebrew Christian Prayer Union; and among other friends who took part in the proceedings were Rev. D. B. Hankin, Pastor Frank White, Mr. William Greene, Rev. F. L. Denman, and Rev. Isaac Levinson.

New Forest Gipsies.—In connection with the Country Towns Mission a useful ministry is carried on among the gipsies of the New Forest. The missionary, Mr. G. R. Shaw, in his annual report, relates many instances telling of spiritual and temporal blessings which have resulted from the Christian service rendered to these wandering tribes. Evidence is not wanting that the aversion of the gipsy to a settled dwelling house is becoming less marked, and numbers of families are living in cottages, and their children are attending schools. The spiritual part of the work is ever kept to the front; but the temporal wants of the gipsies are not overlooked. The sick and aged have special care, and through the kindness of Christian friends they have been assisted with gifts of clothing and other articles, as well as money. It is evident that were it not for the Mission large numbers of these poor creatures would remain in spiritual darkness, and lack even the merest necessities of life. Communications for this much-needed and beneficent Mission should be addressed to Mr. G. R. Shaw, Ashurst, Lyndhurst, R.S.O, Hants.

The Ministry of the Word.

At home and abroad the work of the Association for the Free Distribution of the Scriptures is bearing abundant fruit, and communications from Christians in all parts of the world bear witness to the triumphs of the Word of God in every land. Miss L. Perks, of the Winchester Soldiers' Home, referring to gifts of marked Testaments, writes: "The troops were anxious to obtain copies. The nurses of the R.A.M.C. and St. John Ambulance asked for a few copies to take back with them to the base, general and field hospitals in South Africa, saying how thankful the sick and dying were to have a few verses read to them. One sergeant who has come home for a few weeks showed me his Testament given to him last autumn, saying whatever else he had lost, he had kept the study of which had brought him to the Lord."

HIS PRECIOUS TESTAMENT,

From Naples, Mr. S. Burrowes writes: "The Bible distribution under God's blessing is increasingly fruitful. Hundreds of men who got Bibles and Testaments years ago turn up again and tell us how they reverence their precious book." Herr A. C., of Bohemia, says:—"A great many of the Scriptures procured by your grant I have sent by post to South Austria or distributed when travelling there. There are no colporteurs in Carniola, Istria, and other parts, so I am very thankful that by your help I am able to scatter the good seed among the poor Slavonians." From Umballa, India, Rev. R. Thackwell writes:—"We have had much encouragement in the distribution of the Scriptures during the year. Mrs. Thackwell has acted as colporteur, meeting the trains at the railway station, giving to all who could read and had no portions of the Scriptures. She has also, when in the hills in the summer, visited for the same purpose the houses of

NATIVE CHIEFS AND THEIR RETINUES.

I have myself, through native assistants, distributed copies of God's Word to the villagers, who, were it not for your society, would never have a copy. We know that a great many people are interested in their personal salvation through reading the Scriptures we have given them." To these testimonies it is only necessary to add that all funds subscribed are available for the objects of the Association without any deduction, the work being done by voluntary helpers, and the expenses for printing and postage privately defrayed. The following are the numbers of Scriptures distributed:—185,256 Bibles, 1,122,819 Testaments, and 1,182,439 portions. A perusal of the annual report cannot fail to impress readers of the fact that truly the Word of the Lord is accomplishing that which He pleases, and prospering in that whereto He has sent it. For many years the work of the Association has engaged the unremitting care of Mrs. Robertson, whose address is—The Chesils, Christchurch Road, Hampstead, N.W.

Ready to Perish.

THESE words well describe the condition of those whom the Liverpool Midnight Mission seeks to save. The Homes are not so full as they have been in times past, as many of the women have caught the spirit of the age, and are disinclined to submit to training or restraint. During the year ninety-seven cases have been dealt with. Some were restored to friends or placed in situations, and others remained in the Homes. Preventive measures go hand-in-hand with rescue work, and no testimony of these fruitful efforts could be more useful than the numerous letters received from former inmates who have been helped to a happy re-settlement in their place in life. The Mission is largely supported by the earnings of the women, and orders for laundry and sewing are always appreciated. Communications may be addressed to the matron, Miss Hobley, 6, Belmont Grove, Belmont Road, Liverpool.

National Anti-Vivisection Society.

THE immense gathering at the annual meeting of this Society a few days ago, at St. James' Hall, was indicative of the strength and volume of feeling which exists in this country against the vivisection of animals for the object of medical study or discovery. The president, Lord Llangattock, occupied the chair, and in the course of a vigorous address said the question to be faced was whether it was wrong to torture animals? They need not be afraid of the physiologist. Physiology had not yet, thank God, taken the place of religion or morality. Referring to the practices in hospitals, the speaker contended that to criticise the management of such institutions was not to attack them. They wanted to see them cleansed of a terrible stain. He knew of thousands of pounds that had been diverted from hospitals on account of vivisection.

The Hon. Stephen Coleridge advocated the abolition by law of vivisection practices. With men and women physical pain is easier to bear than disgrace, infamy, ruin, or a broken heart; but animals tortured by the vivisector have no armour of the intellect to summon to their aid. Vivisection was further denounced by Canon Wilberforce as a system of fraud, cruelty, and impious inquisitiveness. Impressive addresses were also given by Lady Pender, the Dean of Hereford, and Mr. Ernest Bell.

Irish Notes.

TEN candidates have been accepted for the Methodist ministry in Ireland this year. Three others withdrew, and two were declined.

The Irish Colportage Association has now forty agents in the field, and these sold last year 11,346 Bibles, Testaments, and Psalms, being a considerable advance on the sales of the previous year. Twenty students assisted during part of the year in the work of the Association, which is helping to spread the light in the darkest parts of the country.

Last week three religious bodies held their annual meetings in this country. These were the Congregational Union of Ireland, the Baptist Union of Ireland, and the Reformed Presbyterian Synod. Rev. Dr. Forsyth, of Cambridge, was present as a delegate from the Congregational Union of England and Wales at the first, and spoke and preached; Pastor H. D. Brown, M.A., of Dublin, presided at the second; and Rev. A. S. Lyons, of Newry, at the third. Each of these Churches, although not very large, is doing a good work in Ireland, and is helping to emphasize a particular side of the truth which otherwise would likely be forgotten or ignored. Besides, they save the larger Churches from becoming imperious and careless, and thus they discharge important functions.

The Belfast and district branch of the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, which has now been at work ten years, continues to justify its existence. It has four inspectors, and has local committees in sixteen districts in Antrim, Down, Armagh, Tyrone, and Louth. The number of cases investigated during the year was 1,297, affecting the welfare of 4,048 children. In 177 cases it was found necessary to prosecute, and in 118 cases the offenders were sentenced to imprisonment. It is almost impossible to picture all that is involved in these figures, but it is certain that the sufferings to child-life which they imply would be multiplied tenfold, but for the influence of this Society. Moreover, in most cases the drink is the cause of the cruelty to the children.

At the present time the Roman Catholics of the South and West of Ireland are manifesting a very intolerant spirit towards Protestantism. For example, it was proposed a few weeks ago to establish a Hospital Saturday in Limerick, and although the project had the warm support of many Roman Catholics, like the Mayor of Limerick, Mr. John Daly, it was defeated by the priests because Lady Limerick, who had been at one time a Roman Catholic, had some connection with the matter. Also, in Cork, the South Infirmary had been always an undenominational institution, towards the support of which the Protestants contributed last year about £600, while the Roman Catholics gave less than £100. Yet it has been resolved to place a nun at the head of this hospital, and also to bring in nuns as nurses in place of the professional nurses hitherto employed there. Everywhere Roman Catholics are not permitted to associate with Protestants, and thus the feebleness of Roman Catholicism is tacitly admitted, while its intolerant spirit is likewise made manifest.

A Biblical Herbarium.

IT has been our privilege to examine, with interest, Southall's Biblical Herbarium, containing specimens of over seventy of the plants and plant-products mentioned in Holy Scripture. The collection is likely to form a valuable instrument in the hands of lecturers, teachers, and leaders of Bible-classes. That Canon Tristram has carefully examined the specimens, writes of the collection in the highest terms, and has edited a handbook for the use of teachers, themselves constitute a guarantee that the work has been carried through with thoroughness and accuracy.

There can be no doubt that real interest would be excited in the minds of young people if such specimens as these were passed round during the teaching of a lesson. We handled a branch of the thorn of which it is believed the Saviour's crown was composed; the gourd, or wild vine, which produced "death in the pot" of the young prophets (2 Kings iv. 38-41); the bulrushes of which the ark of Moses was constructed; and tares and wheat bound together. Frankincense, myrrh, cummin, and balm of Gilead, with many more, were real things to us—not merely names, as they had been previously. The Herbarium is no toy, but a substantial and effective "tool for teachers." (Price £2 2s. Size of box about 24 inches long, 12 inches broad, 10 inches deep. Agent, W. H. Brown, Sibford Ferris, Banbury.)

Welsh Notes.

IN order to bring the history of Welsh Congregationalism up to date, Rev. P. L. Roberts, of Liverpool, is writing a volume to supplement the work of the late Drs. Thomas and Rees.

The Welsh Wesleyan Assembly is to meet at Llanidloes, Montgomeryshire, on June 9-13. The retiring president is Rev. Rice Owen, of Ferndale. He will be succeeded by Rev. Hugh Jones.

At the last quarterly meeting of the Welsh Baptists of Anglesey, a resolution was passed, urging all shopkeepers belonging to the Baptist denomination to refuse to supply boys under sixteen years of age with cigarettes or tobacco.

The North Wales Temperance Association conducts annually a temperance examination. This year there were only seventy-seven candidates. The papers set dealt with temperance principles and facts. Out of the seventy-seven competitors sixty-six were successful.

At the last quarterly meeting of the Cardiff and District Free Church Council, it was announced that a Free Church Girls' Guild was in course of formation, and will be inaugurated in the autumn. The Council has decided to commence forthwith a series of open-air services in the town.

The statistics of the denomination showed on the whole a gratifying increase. The number of chapels and preaching stations is 1,572, an increase of fifteen in the year. The number of communicants is 158,114, or 2,056 more than last year's reckoning. There has also been an increase of over 4,000 in the number of adherents.

The general assembly of Welsh Calvinistic Methodists was held this year at Aberystwyth. The retiring Moderator, Rev. J. J. Roberts, Portmadoc, delivered an address upon "The Origin, Constitution, and Present Duty of the Denomination." Many of the meetings were devoted to business. The last day of the Assembly was set apart entirely for the preaching of the Gospel.

The report of the Foreign Mission work of the denomination was most cheering. The number of native communicants in the churches of Khassia and Jaintia in Assam is over 15,000—an increase of 1,056 during the year. There are over 13,000 children in the Sunday schools. Towards the Twentieth Century Fund some 9,000 rupees have already come to hand. The report of the work carried on in Brittany also was of a most encouraging character.

The annual Whitsuntide Preaching Festival of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists of Liverpool began this year on Thursday, May 23, and continued on the evenings of Friday and Saturday, and all day on Sunday. In some chapels sermons were also preached on Whit-Monday evening. Possibly the most important feature of the Festival was a united fellowship meeting held on Whit-Monday morning. Some twenty of the most distinguished ministers of the denomination took part in the various meetings.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

 I want to interest my elder "Young People" every week in what Mr. Meyer writes on the Christian Endeavour Topic. Parents will also find the S.S. Lesson Notes suggestive and helpful for Sunday talks with their young folk. See next page.)

A Wolf Story.

By Rev. E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

MY dear young people, please listen to the talk of a young wolf with his mother, and to a lesson learned from the fable.

"How I wish, mother, I could be a dog, and then I would not go hungry as we sometimes do now; for I have heard that dogs get food every day. How can I learn to be a dog?"

"I will tell you. Go to-night to a farmer's house where there are children, and do not bark sharply—let the children play with you. You will soon forget that you are a wolf."

When night came, the little wolf crept near to the farmer's door. The farmer picked him up, saying, "Here is a little wolf I found on the door step."

The children all ran to see him, and treated him as if he was a puppy dog that had come to stay with them. The farmer told his neighbours that he had found a young wolf; the children said, "It is a beautiful little puppy dog."

One day the farmer brought a weak lamb into the house. The children fed it, and it was soon ready to run about and play with them. All the time the farmer kept his eye on the young wolf which was now getting pretty large, and the children said: "Father, Lupus is almost big enough to take care of the sheep!" "Yes," the father said, "he might eat up some of the lambs instead of taking care of them." He put the lamb back in the fold.

That night the young wolf did not sleep well. He thought of the weakly lamb in the fold, and he found his way to where the sheep and lambs were gathered; he sprang over the fence and caught the lamb. He killed the poor thing and ate it. He dared not go back to his master and the sweet-faced girl who fondled him when he was so small. Off in the distance he heard the barking of the wolves, and away he ran to join them. After all, he had a wolf's nature instead of a dog's, and found himself more at home with wolves than with children.

I heard of a lady who thought pigs were very nice if they were kept clean. One was given to her. She made a little dress for it and taught it some nice tricks. It used to follow her about, and the boys and girls were glad to see the little animal. One day she was going past a deep mud hole, and the pig broke away from her and went down into the deep mire. The clean clothes were nearly spoiled. She fished out the pig and had him washed and dressed again; but his nature was the same, and at length she got tired of taking care of him in that way. She said, "He is a pig, and never will be anything but a pig."

Dear young friends, every child that has ever lived, and every man and woman as well, has a sinful nature. If the nature is to be changed, the heart must be renewed. That pig with clean clothes on, was nothing but a pig, and his nature led him to love the mire. Just as surely as that young wolf had a wolf's heart, and though it might act like a dog, after all it had a fierce nature that led it to destroy that young lamb, so surely you have a sinful heart. You need to ask God to forgive your sins, and change your heart. In Ezek. xxxvi. 26, his words are: "A new heart also I give and a new spirit will I put within you. I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and give you a heart of flesh." Jesus had to suffer a dreadful death on the Cross that we might have our sins forgiven, and our hearts changed. Ask God for his sake to give you a new heart, that your whole nature may be changed—made holy now and glorious by-and-bye.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. J. Spiers, Hamilton, to June 16. Mr. Arrowsmith, Maryate, to June 5; Cromer, June 9; Lowestoft, June 10; Leicester, June 12; Broughty Ferry, June 15-21; Ballater, June 23; Braemar, June 30. Mr. Hutchinson, St. Matthew's, Bayswater, June 11; Cranleigh, June 22-23; Southfleet, June 29-30. Mr. J. S. Tyler, Ventnor, June 9; Bonchurch, June 10; St. Lawrence, June 11-12; Gosport, June 13. Mr. R. T. Archibald, Edinburgh, to June 17; Sheffield, June 28; Leeds, June 29. Mr. E. T. M. Dennes, Redhill, June 21. Rev. A. G. Dodderidge, Croydon, June 22-24; Hampstead, June 23; Tooting, June 29-July 1. Mr. Phillips Welch, St. John's, Isleworth, June 15. Mr. E. Clark, with Caravan, Lavendon, Olney, Bucks. Mr. L. H. Ingram, with Caravan, in Kent. Mr. David Clarke, with Caravan, at Great Bardfield, Essex. Messrs. T. Spurgeon, Page, and Wilson, with Caravan at Horley.

A Bairn's Hymn for Sunday.

The eminent Dr. Guthrie, when on his deathbed, said, "Sing me a bairn's hymn."

By Rev. RICHARD GLOVER, M.A., Rector of Wotton.

Happy, happy Sunday,
Best of all the seven;
In the week the one day
That makes earth like heaven.

Fit to call it Sun Day,
Day so warm and bright,
Shining on a sad world
With its gladsome light.

Sweeter name—"the Lord's Day,"
For He loves it so;
And it will be Man's Day
When the Lord they know.

On that day his own face
Shone as did the sun,*
Shone to think of Sunday joy
He for his had won.

As it is the Lord's Day
I will call it mine;
Mine to love it, then my face
Like his own will shine.

Like Him here, in heaven
Like Him we shall be;
Shining bright with happiness
Thro' eternity.

"No night there," but Sun Day;
There, days are not seven,
But one bright and holy day,
And that will make it heaven.

* Rev. i. 10 and 16.

"The Christian" Bible Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 281).

By whom and to whom were the following said:—

1. "He hath done all things well" (Mark vi.-viii.)
2. "I can do all things" (Phil. iii.-v.)
3. "That maketh all things" (Isa. xlii.-xlv.)
4. "He will tell us all things" (John iii.-v.)
5. "Thou knowest all things" (John xix.-xxi.)
6. "Prove all things" (1 Thess. iii.-v.)
7. "Giving thanks for all things" (Eph. iv.-vi.)
8. "Please all men in all things" (1 Cor. ix.-xi.)
9. "We are witnesses of all things" (Acts ix.-xi.)
10. "Thou knowest all things" (John xv.-xvii.)
11. "All things are possible" (Mark viii.-x.)
12. "Observe all things" (Matt. xxvi.-xxviii.)
13. "Shewed you all things" (Acts xix.-xxi.)
14. "All things are for your sakes" (2 Cor. iii.-v.)
15. "All things work together" (Rom. vii.-ix.)
16. "All things are delivered unto Me" (Matt. x.-xii.)

[Children under ten do any 4; under thirteen, any 8; under seventeen any 12.]

QUARTERLY PRIZE COMPETITION.

The Prize Questions at the end of this month will be set from the following Books:—

Divisions I. and II. Genesis (such portions as are covered by Hebrews xi. 1-22).

Divisions III. and IV. Leviticus. Chapters i.-xi. and Hebrews.

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (280).

Psalms i.-v.

1. i. 2; 2. v. 3; 3. iv. 6; 4. ii. 9; 5. i. 6; 6. v. 2.
7. "He shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of waters," &c. (i. 3).
8. "He is like the chaff which the wind driveth away" (i. 4).
9. "Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him" (ii. 12).
10. He will bless the righteous (v. 12).
11. Unto the Lord (iii. 8).
12. The way of the righteous (i 6).
13. "The Lord hath set apart him that is godly for Himself" (iv, 3).
14. God was his shield (iii. 3, also iv. 8).
15. To Kings: "Be wise"; to Judges: "Be instructed" (ii. 10).
16. "Thou hast enlarged me when I was in distress" (iv. 1); "Thou hast put gladness in my heart" (iv. 7).
17. "The Lord will hear when I call unto Him" (iv. 3); "Thou, Lord, only makest me dwell in safety" (iv. 8).
18. Christ (ii. 6).
19. "Stand in awe and sin not" (iv. 4).
20. ii. 2 and 3.
21. Psa. cxix. 35, 47, 92

No. 280—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Irene Ashdown, R. and Ernest Aldwinckle, Olive and Miriam* Allam, Ethel Alford*, Douglas Anderson-Berry*.

B—Alison and Monica Bailey, Cyril Baddeley, Ethel Bailey, Maggie Batting, Eunice Baber, Clarence Bass, Marion Boyle, Evelyn*, Mabel*, Ileene* and Hilda* Barstow, Robert Bushby, Ada Bratt*, Annie Blaikie, Gwendolen Bailey*, Violette Birney, Dorothy Brooks*, Gordon* and May* Bligh, M. Bartlett*, Herbert Braddon*, Ella Berryman*, Millicent Buckingham, Emily Bridgewater*, Stanley Burgess*.

C—M. Candlin, Gussie Clark*, Agnes Cook, Ida*, May* and Willie Cullen, Ida* and Mabel* Cole, Mabel Camps, Sophie Cohen, Anna Chanyen*, Kittie Cope*, George Cross, Lydia Cleary*, Hilda Cook.

D—Tom Dunn*, Stanley Drew, Gwennie Davies, Ethel Dancy*, Ralph* and Dorothy* Daintree, W. and Nellie* Dowsett, Polognia Daws*, Mai Davidson, Rhoda Dunlop*, Emily*, Willie Catherine and Grace Dempster.

E—Leonard* and Olive Ewin, Mary Ellis.

F—Percy Fitch, Harry Flashman, Arthur Foley, Olive, Mabel* and Vincent Fleet.

G—M. Gover, Grace Goldsmith, David Gardiner, Thomas Gilbert, Daisy and Mary* Greenacre, Winifred Gardner, Margaret Gorrie, Dorothy*, Cicely* and Gladys* Gibson.

H—Theodora Hill, Stanley*, Francie*, Norman* and Florence* Hoyte, Harry Hodgkinson, Willie Hooper, Hetty Hill, Ina Hemmel*, Sydney Hanford*, Mary, Hilda and Elizabeth Hooper, Dorothy and Elsie Hanson, Beatrice Hastings*, Annie Horstcraft, Ince, Ruth and Dorothy Hunt, Dorothy Havergal Shaw.

I—Elsie Irvine, Nellie Irving*.

J—Alfred Johnson, Linda Jones*, Amelia Jacobson, Betty Jacobs*, Emily Jones, Hilda*, Winifred* and Louie* Jeffery, David Jameson*.

K—Hannah Knapp, Maurice Kalinsky, Eva and Max Kalb, Annie Kingsford.

L—Cecilia Lichtenstein*, Sidney* and May* Law, Arthur Llewellyn, A. Leigh, Georgina Lichtenstein, Maggie Locke, Constance Long, Beatrice Le Mesurier*, Gladys Lee.

M—Barbara Maconchy, May Mills, Fanny Messenger, Winifred, J., Mollie, Geoffrey and Sidney Martin, Godfrey and Alec Miller, Dorothy* and Charlie McMullin, Lewis, O., Arthur, Grace* and Nellie Morice, Doris Martin*, N. and Alan Marshall, Bertie and Nellie Mills, Tom McGlone*, Evie Miller, Irene Mabille, Mabel Morris*, Mildred Morgan, Amy Munday, Edith and Aldie* Margette.

N—Emily Norris, Daisy Nicholas, Blanche Norcock, Amy and Maude Nottage, V. and Eleanor Noel.

O—Olive Oxley.

P—Dora Phillimore*, Isabel Perks*, Walter, Leonard, Katie and Winnie Picknell, Ethel* and Kathleen* Pasley.

Q—Fr. Quance.

R—E., Madeleine and Marjorie Rainey, Emily Rowden, Alice and Hilda Reid, Gussie and Marion Roach, Alice and Jessie Ricketts, Marjorie and Eileen Roberts, Kate Rosenbloom, Marion Richards*, Gwendolen Ravenhill*, Gordon Remington, Ada Renals, Maggie Reid.

S—Margery Smart*, Glanvill*, Stanley, B. and Rider* Smith, Stanley and David Soltau, Eric Slater, Mary and Percy Sowden, Esther* and Amy Simmons, M. and G.* Spurgeon, Constance Sherbrooke, Betty Stocks*, Whately Smith, Frances Stileman, Christine Soans*, Kathleen Shepherd, Florrie Smith.

T—Frank Tomkins, Reginald Thresh, Bertha Tranter, Dudley Toye*, Archibald and Theodora* Thorn, Olive Tritton*, Marion Tarry, Frank Thompson, Vincent Taylor.

W—Sidney and Wilfred Watson, Cecile and Phillis Wright, Sydney Wisdom, Ella Williams, Stephen Wilson, Annie* and Sarah Wood, Florence Wilde, Katie Welch*, Ruth Warren*, Gertrude Williams, Bertram Webb, Helen Whitney*, Fanny, Edith* and Edward Wheeler, Agatha Ward, Mansfield White*, Theo and Mabel Wallis, Winnie Williams.

Y—Maurice and Gladys Young.

279—Correct answers (complete list) received from:—

A—Irene Ashdown*, Mabel Ashwell*, Douglas Anderson-Berry*, Ethel Alford*, John Allan, Ernest and Ralph Aldwinckle.

B—Frances Burnett*, Ileene*, Hilda, Evelyn* and Mabel* Barstow, Ella Berryman*, Stanley Burgess*, Dorothy Brooks*, Leonard Browne, Reginald Bristow, Clarence Bass, May* and Gordon* Bligh, Violette Birney, Eunice Baber, Robert Bushby, Dorothy Benson, Maud Bunn, Beatrice Brouard, Millicent Buckingham, Aline Bazett, Gertrude Bush, Monica and Alison Bailey, Gladys Batting*, Evelyn Butlin, Victoria Bevan, Annie Blaikie*, Ernestine Bühl*, Lucienne Brabandès, Herbert Braddon*, Mary*, Helen and Susette Beck, Gordon Boxer, Louise Betts*, James Barker, Dorothy*, Gordon and Harold* Berry, Massy* and Conyers* Baker, Clara Brown*, Archibald and Theodora* Thorn, Olive Tritton*, Marion Tarry, Frank Thompson, Vincent Taylor.

C—D. Rosalind Clarke, Percy* and Stanley* Chappell, Hannah Chapman*, Ruth Collis, Gladys Clark*, Kittie Cope*, Ida*, May* and Willie Cullen, George Crawford*, Hilda Cook, Mabel* and Ida* Cole, Lydia Cleary*, David*, Henry* and John* Colville, Ethel Cumbers*, Agnes Cook*, Ernest and Annie Cole, George Cross, Elma and Josephine Cheal, Walter, Jessie and Maggie Carter, Sophie Cohen, Anna Chanyen, Mabel Campe*, Alfred Cocking, A Colenso, Alice Crang*, Dorothy Cooper*, Gladys Calvert, George Cary, Hyde* and Duncan* Campbell, Dorothy Clarke, Beryl Calvert.

D—Tom*, Mary and Nessie Dunn, Stanley Drew, Nellie* and Willie* Dowsett, Mai and Violet Davidson, Ralph* and Dorothy* Daintree, Ethel Dancy, Vera Dickinson*, Kitty Donaldson-Selby, Maria Jenizot, Polognia Daws*, Allison Devonshire, Rhoda Dunlop*, Marjory Dyke*, Elizabeth, Hilda, Constance and George Drayson, H. and Gladys Davis, Emily*, Willie*, Catherine and Grace* Dempster, May Darroll.

F—Kitty Fausset, Ethel Fowler*, A. Foley, Hyacinth FitzSimons, Louise Filhol*, Jeanne Faucon, Percy Fitch, Laura Finch, Frank and Charles Freegard, Mabel*, Olive* and Vincent* Fleet, Phylis Fry, F. and A. Figgis, Eirene and Gwendolen Fennell.

G—Thomas Gilbert*, Grace Goldsmith, George Goodall, Winnie Gardner, Margaret Guillaume*, David Gardiner, Margaret Gorrie, Dorothy*, Cicely* and Gladys* Gibson, Evelyn* and Grace* Gulston, Théodore Gill, Dorothy Green*, Constance Gabbett, Mary Gover, Edith Grieve, Aimée Guilbert, May Glover, Isabel* and Margie* Goudge, Mary* and Daisy* Greenacre, Mary Glass*, Henry Goulding, Katie Green*, Colin, Margery, and George Graham-Brown, Janet Godwin*, Hilda Griesheim, Stuart, Dorothy, Jack and Edith Gray.

H—Willie Hooper*, Dorothy Havergal Shaw*, Elsie Hibbs, Dorothy*, Ruth*, and Ince* Hunt, Violet Hatch*, Elsie* and Dorothy Hanson, Ella Hake, Beatrice Hastings*, Annie Horstcraft, James and John C. Henderson, Kathleen and D. Heckford, Sydney Hanford Hilda, Mary Elizabeth Hooper, Ina Hemmel*, Edith, Winifred and Henry Harvey, Norman, Julyan, Florence and Stanley Hoyte, Georgette Hoffmann, Hetty Hill*, A. Handasyde, Violet Holford*, Mary Haines, Elsie Hill.

I—Nellie Irving*, Elsie Irvine, Daisy Iredell*, Isabel and Ami Inglis.

J—Gertrude Jones, David Jameson*, Emily Jones*, Alfred Johnson, Linda Jones*, Amelia Jacobson, Betty Jacobs, Lizzie Johnstone*, Louie*, Hilda* and Winifred* Jeffery.

K—Annie Kingsford*, Lionel Kepple*, Margaret Kinnaird, Susie Keen*, Lilian Kyme, Agnes* and Isa* Kay, Maurice Kalinsky, Eva Kalb*, Hannah Knapp*.

L—Edith and Linda Lowe, Alice Lee, Georgina and Cecilia* Lichtenstein, Beatrice Le Mesurier*, Gladys Lee*, Arthur Llewellyn, D. and Mary* Lynn, Maggie Locke, Mary* and Sidney* Law, Constance Long.

M—Daisie Mackenzie, Margaret, Ella and Joy McFadzean Mabel Morris, Aldy Margetts*, Arthur MacLeod, Johnson*, Mollie*, Sidney*, Geoffrey* and Winnie* Martin, O., Arthur, Nellie, Grace and Lewis Morice, Philip Martin, Amy Munday, Irene Mabille, John* and Ella* MacMurray, Alec and Godfrey Miller, J. Martin*, Fanny Messenger, May Mills, B. Maconchy*, Margaret Macdonald, Marjorie Martin, Jessie*, ——* and Charlie* Morrison, Dorothy and Charlie McMullin, Evie Miller, Bertie and Nellie Mills, Dora Muir*, Margie Marston*, Maisie and Alice Mackenzie, Doris Martin, Dorothy Morgan, Harvey Moore*, Winnie, Dorothy and Leonard Mace, Charlotte Miller*, John Macfarlane*, Margaret*, Daniel, Mary and Dorothy* Morris, Mildred Morgan, William* and Isabella* Morrice, Connie Murfin, Alan Marshall*.

N—Edith Nash, Eleanor Noel, Nellie and Daisy Nicholas, Gerald* and Hilda* Nicholls, Emily Norris, V., Noel, Maude* and Amy* Nottage, Blanche Norcock.

O—Olive Oxley*, Maude* and Eva* Oakes.

P—Geoffrey, Percy and Clarice Peach, William* and Lizzie* Porter, Isabel Perks, Myrtle Perry*, Laura Percy*, Jessie*, Ada*, Willie*, and Eddie Palmer, Mabel and Lucy Pelham-Burn, Gladys* and Isabel* Phipps, Leonard*, Katie*, Winnie and Walter* Picknell, E.* and K.* Pasley, Evelyn Primrose Peshey*, Phillimore*, Enid and Kathleen Pincott, Margery Pibel, Cyril Partridge, Mary and Christine Pearson.

R—Eva and May Rodgers, Jessie* and Alice Ricketts, Jessie*, Cecily* and Elmina* Roe, Hope Robinson*, Madeleine, Marjorie* and Edward* Rainey, Kate Rosenbloom*, Alice and Hilda Reid, Gordon Remington*, Mary Rolland, Gussie and Marion Roach, Gwendolen Ravenhill, Ada Renals*, Marion Richards*, Aileen* and Marjorie* Roberts.

S—Mary de Spiganovicz*, Glanvill Smith, Dollie Salt*, Ellen* and Lily* Scriven, Lydia Shirley*, Flora Smith*, Constance*, Hilda*

and Edgar Schaeffer, Evelyn, Violet and Gladys Shaw, Frankie Sellwood, Germaine Schumann, Poppie Stidolph, Kathleen Shepherd*, Esther Simmons*, May, Violet and C. Salvesen, Reggie Skinner, Rose* and Stanley W. Smith, Nannie Sturrock*, Stanley and David Soltau, David Seth, Margery Smart, Agnes and Hugh Shillas, William, Augustus and Raymond Simpkin, Betty Stocks*, Christine Soans, Mary Sowden, Whately Smith, Frances Stileman*, Effie*, Ellen, John* and Florence Simpson, Mildred Singleton, G.* and M.* Spurgeon.

T—Carleton Tufnell*, Evelyn Tracey, Florence Tomlinson*, Olive Tritton*, Willie Thomas, Dora Thorn*, Vincent Taylor, Margaret Tweedy*, Winifred Trotter, Frank Thompson, Dudley Toye*, Bertha Tranter, Marion Tarry.

U—Eva Usher*.

W—Mary Wilson*, Kathleen* and Charles* Wingrave, Lilian*, Elsie* and Gladys Willoughby, Freda Watts, Mabel and Theo Wallis, Edward* and Edith* Wheeler, Arthur* and Louisa Walker, Ronald Watson, Leonard Wall, Rachel* and Nellie* Wilson, Nora and Ellie Wyatt, Sarah Wood*, Pringle Wilson, Winnie Williams, Annie Wood*, Florence Wilde*, Bertram Webb*, Dorothy White, Greta Watson, B. Walls, Stewart and Willie Watson, James, Sarah, Rachel* and Georgina* Wilson, Alexander and Ella Watt, Ernest, Kenrick and Queenie Wakeford, Dorothy Woodforde, Katie Welch*, Ellen Williams, Helen Whitney, Sydney Wisdom, Sidney and Wilfred Watson, Mansfield White, Stephen Wilson, Agatha Ward*, Phillis and Cecile Wright, Fanny Wheeler.

FOREIGN LIST.

No. 275—Vera* and Frank* Sjöström (U.S.A.). No. 276—Vera* and Frank Sjöström, Dora Wallace (Canada). No. 278—Phyllis Boyd (Malta). No. 279—Louis Berthé (Nice).

Personal.

BETTY STOCKS, THEODORE HILL, J. AND E. ESSAM, FRIENDS IN ABERDEEN, and others.—Many thanks for the lovely flowers.

ARTHUR SHAND, JOHN MACFARLANE.—I am glad to welcome you as new "Searchers." I trust you will enjoy the study, as so many others are doing.

CECILIA LICHTENSTEIN.—Thank you for your letter. I am glad you can again take up the "Searcher" work.

JAMIE DE HAILES.—I am sorry you find yourself unable to continue the "Searcher," but hope you enjoy the Bible Class.

UNCLE TOM.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending June 15.

Sun. June 9	Acts	vii. 44-60		Thurs. June 13	Acts	ix. 1-16
Mon., „ 10	„	viii. 1-13		Fri., „ 14	„	ix. 17-31
Tues., „ 11	„	viii. 14-25		Sat., „ 15	„	ix. 32-43
Wed., „ 12	„	viii. 26-40

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, June 9.

HOW TO ENTER CHRIST'S FAMILY (Matt. xii. 48-50).

THERE were those on earth who belonged to our Lord's family by physical descent, but had neither part nor lot with Him by spiritual affinity. But it is possible for us, so far severed from Him, in the slow progress of the ages, to be related to Him by blood. "The same is my brother, and sister, and mother." There is only one God and Father of all.

It was clear that his own family, even Mary, his mother, did not understand Him. We are told distinctly that his brethren did not believe in Him (John vii. 5). That came later (Acts i. 14). At this present juncture, to their dismay, they learnt that He had come into direct collision with the all-powerful religious leaders of the time, and they felt that the kindest thing to do was to suggest that He was not in his sound mind. The actions of an irresponsible, unbalanced intellect could surely not be counted against Him or them! So they desired to extricate Him from the effect of his rashness, and to call Him out of the crowd to the quiet and security of their home. But Jesus saw that they were subordinating religion to respectability, and the will of God to the fear of man, and so He turned from them, and repudiated the idea that their policy had any binding power over Him. The ties of nature and of kindred must snap if they pull in a contrary direction to the evident will of God.

If we make the will of God our first aim, obeying it though the Heavens fall, though the flesh cries out and our friends are filled with alarm, at the cost of losing all, then we show that we partake of the very nature of our Lord. As He is a son, so are we sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty. But this nature can only have been wrought in us by the same Spirit who indwelt his human nature, and with whom He was one before the worlds were made.

In other words the doing of God's will is only possible to those who have been born out of the family of Adam into that of God. The children of Adam do the lusts of their father, they follow the devices and desires of their own hearts. They obey the promptings of their own will. The new truth is necessary before the nature, which is full of self-will, can become devoted to the Divine will. We must be translated out of the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of the Son of God's love; and God must send forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying Abba, Father (Col. i. 13; Gal. iv. 6; John i. 12, 13).

This, then, is the characteristic feature of all God's children, that they do the will of God. His thought is apparent in the Lord's Prayer, where the children are taught to say, "Our Father, which art in Heaven . . . thy will be done." This is the one perpetual burden on the hearts of the regenerate. Even the poor slaves in the great Roman houses were bidden by the Apostle to remember that, in obeying their masters, according to the flesh, they might do the will of God from their hearts (Eph. vi. 5, 6).

To know the will of God we must not trust the impulses of our own natures, which sometimes catch at a passing whim and conceive that it is the will of God. The will of God is generally contrary to our self-indulgence, calls for faith and resolution, is in collision with the opinion of the children of this world, and is indicated rather by our daily circumstances, and by the Word of God, than by the guesswork or impressions of the soul. We must wait quietly before we can know. It was said of Mr. Reginald Radcliffe that he would take weeks, and even months, to ascertain God's will before he would act.

How blessed to be united so closely with the Lord Jesus: to be more and nearer to Him than those who sat with Him at his meals, or shared the humble joys and sorrows of the home at Nazareth! To know Him, after this fashion, is the beginning of heavenly blessedness.

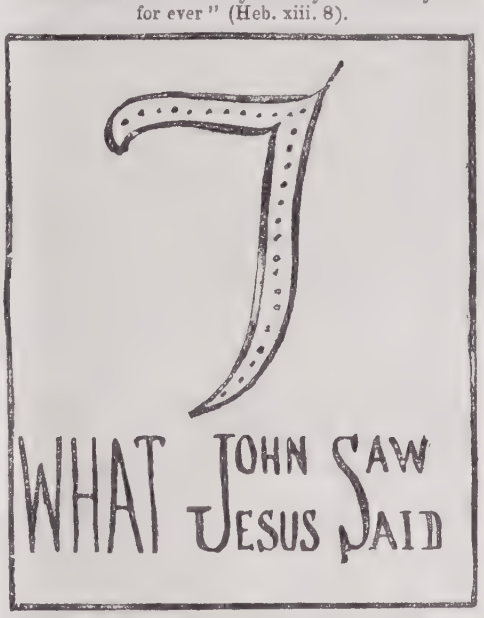
F. B. M.

International S.S. Lesson.

June 16, 1901.

JESUS APPEARS TO JOHN (Rev. i. 9-20).

"Jesus Christ the same yesterday and to-day and for ever" (Heb. xiii. 8).



Key to Blackboard Plan.—The lesson seems to divide itself into two divisions. What John saw. What Jesus said, and the three "sevens."

1. WHAT JOHN SAW.

John saw wonderful things, and above all he saw Jesus risen from the dead, and glorified in heaven.

All the things he saw he was told to write down that others might know. Notice the Triune God (10). The Lord's day, in the Spirit, the voice of Jesus, Son of God; so John could write: "Our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ (1 John i. 3).

Seven candlesticks: Churches. Names in v. 11.

Seven stars: Leaders of the Churches.

Christ was in the midst of them, so He is always in his Church.

"In his right hand" (16). How often had Christ's right hand been used when on earth. Touching lepers, blind eyes, raising dead, &c. He not only holds the Church in his right hand, but he holds individuals (see Isa. xli. 10, 13).

John saw Jesus in a different form from what He was when on earth (13-16), but there are some points the same, showing that Jesus was the same Saviour.

How often He had said, "Fear not" (17) when on earth! Find instances in the Gospels. How often He had gently touched suffering man!

Yet there was a difference. He had been a Man, now He is a King. He had been dead, now He is alive.

2. WHAT JESUS SAID.

Jesus told John about Himself (17, 18), and then He gave John a command (19). The first: Gen. i. 1 and John i. 1. The last: Matt. xxviii. 20 and Psa. xc. 2. (19) Write: The things which thou hast seen (chap. i.); the things which are (chaps. ii. and iii); the things which shall be (chaps. iv. to end).

3. THE GOLDEN TEXT.

The same Jesus. Yesterday: While on earth, walking, talking, healing, sympathizing—from the cradle to the Cross; the life of a man, with all its temptations, trials, and difficulties.

To-day: In Heaven our glorified Redeemer, the Lamb of God (see whole Book of Revelation), our Intercessor and High Priest (Lesson for June 2), coming again as King of kings.

For ever: All through eternity—no ending, from everlasting to everlasting—this same Jesus.

Is He your Saviour?

Will you be with Him?

The Kingstown Mission.

I HAVE had the pleasure of seeing something of the Kingstown Mission, a little known, but splendid piece of Christian service. Miss M. M. Carr, sister to the founder of a Home for Destitute Children in Dublin, is secretary, superintendent, indeed mainspring of the work, which is conducted at 38, Corrig Avenue, Kingstown. To her come those "afflicted and distressed," chiefly men degraded by drunkenness, sin, or misfortune, seeking help and hope. In winter about sixty, in summer about thirty-six men are given employment in cutting wood, &c. Some are carpenters, and are capable of making articles of furniture. Others have come from far different positions—a tutor, a collegian, a dentist—and cannot get on very fast with wood-chopping. There are heavy expenses for the yard, mission hall, and the cottages where the poor men live, and help is urgently needed. No case, however difficult, is refused help, and God has never failed hitherto to send supplies for actual necessities, though sometimes faith has been sorely tested.

Bible classes and meetings are held almost daily, and are greatly enjoyed. It does one good to see the bright faces and hear the hearty voices of men who were once sunk deep in the mire of sin. Much blessing has rewarded the faithful workers; conversions have been frequent, and have stood the test of time. Last Christmas not one of fifty pledged abstainers broke down, in spite of temptations; and lately some of the Christians have planned to get up in time to have a little prayer meeting together before work begins—no small test of earnestness in the case of working men who must be early at their posts. It must be remembered that most of those who attend the Mission are Roman Catholics, and thus are brought "from darkness to light," as well as "from the power of Satan to God."

Forty-three men regularly attend the Bible class, and a helping hand is also held out to women, who do laundry work. Copies of the report will be gladly forwarded by Miss Carr, at the address given.

C. MAUD BATTERSBY.

Cromlyn, Rathowen, Ireland.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE British Conference at Oxford which opens on June 25, promises to be well attended. The names of over 450 delegates have already been received.

The first official report of the newly-appointed organizing secretary for Australasia, Mr. J. J. Virgo, tells of good work in Tasmania. The Hobart Association has been removed, with promising results, to a central site, and the work at Launceston has been revived, with Mr. Henry Smith, late hon. sec. of Ealing Y.M.C.A., as secretary pro tem.

In connection with the Lancashire forward movement, a workers' camp was held at Pooley Bridge during Whitsuntide. The local arrangements were efficiently carried by members of the Penrith Y.M.C.A. A missionary conference for the districts is to be held at Bradshaw, near Bolton, on June 15. The Bolton Association is engaged in an effort to secure more suitable premises for its growing work.

Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Oatts are nearing the completion of their tour in the Colonies in the interests of the Y.M.C.A. and the Y.W.C.A. In India, Australia, and Canada their visits have been of the greatest usefulness to the work, and of much value and encouragement to the workers. Three weeks have been spent in Ontario, and six missions conducted, some of the meetings being very large. It is hoped that Mr. and Mrs. Oatts may take part in a joint meeting of the Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., which is to be held in the grounds of Mildmay Conference Hall on June 25.

Helpless Children in Dublin.—The year 1900 was one in which a large number of little ones shared the benefits of the Elliott Home, Dublin. Many of the older inmates have been passed on to other homes, in order to make room for younger ones. Visitors are unanimous in testifying to the happiness of the children both in and out of school. Many of the little ones have a sad record. One case is sufficient to show the woe that comes in the train of a drunken mother. The wife of a sober labouring man is sentenced to three months' imprisonment for neglect and cruelty of her family, the youngest child not being a year old. Three of the children are taken to the Home, while the father pays for the baby to be nursed. As in past years a helping hand has been given to parents in trying circumstances by taking charge of their little ones until they had tided over their difficulties. Few can realize what a comfort it is to a poor mother in hospital, or obliged to be away from home for a time, to feel her little ones are in safe keeping. The Hon. Secretary of the Home is Miss A. Smyly, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam Street, Dublin.

Obituary.

MR. WATSON GRACE.

WE regret to announce the death of Mr. Watson Grace, the esteemed secretary of the Friends' Foreign Missionary Association. Comparatively a young man, he had yet accomplished a great amount of useful service. A worker of conspicuous devotion and purity of motive, his efforts had been very fruitful in the furtherance of the Association's work. Mr. Grace's name was prominently before the public of late in connection with his appeals on behalf of the famine sufferers in India. He succeeded in raising a large sum of money, and in the work of food distribution his energy and talents for organization were of the greatest value. The loss of this able missionary secretary will be keenly felt, both by Friends at home and by the Association's workers abroad.

BISHOP HELLMUTH.

The death is announced of Dr. Isaac Hellmuth, formerly Bishop of Huron, aged eighty-one. As his name implies, he was not of English extraction; for he was of the Hebrew race, and born at Warsaw. At the age of twenty-six he entered the Christian ministry, and spent the next thirty-seven years of his life in the service of the Canadian Church. He became Vice-Principal and Professor of Hebrew and Rabbinical Literature of the Bishop's College at Lennoxville, Quebec. He was rector of Sherbrooke, in the same diocese, and acted as general superintendent in British North America of the work of the Colonial and Continental Church Society. He served the diocese of Huron, first as archdeacon, then as dean, and in 1871 was appointed to succeed Dr. Cronyn as Bishop. In 1885, on the nomination of the Simeon's Trustees he became rector of Bridlington, Yorkshire, and in 1891 the Colonial and Continental Church Society gave him the chaplaincy of Holy Trinity, Pau, which he held for six years. After occupying for two years the rectory of Compton-Pauncefoot, Somerset, he retired owing to failing health in 1899.

REV. JACQUES L. LIENARD.

The French Protestant Church is mourning to-day the loss of one of her most promising sons—another bright young life laid down for Christ and Africa. Born in 1875, of an old Huguenot stock, and heir to a rich inheritance of faith and earnest work for God, the cry of the heathen first reached his heart at the age of eighteen, in his early college days; and when, in 1897, at the Theological College of Montauban, Rev. François Coillard pleaded the cause of Barotsiland, M. Liénard, with thirteen other students, offered for the mission field.

He was foremost in all missionary efforts during his college career; and a month's vacation spent in England resulted in the publication of an illustrated missionary handbook—the first of its kind in France. In February, 1899, he and his brave young wife, with the other members of M. Coillard's devoted band, sailed for the Zambesi. Illness and death have since reduced their numbers to a mere handful, and when M. and Madame Adolphe Jalla left Lealuyi last year, on their much-needed furlough, it was to M. Liénard that they handed over the work at the capital.

Full of life and vigour, and of God-given enthusiasm, he was struck down by fever, and on March 7, after only four days' illness, they laid his body to rest beneath the great tree at Sefula, there to wait for the resurrection morn. Pastor Coillard is thus left once more alone at Lealuyi, and at the time of writing Madame Liénard remained at Sefula—the oldest of the stations.

The Naples Society for the Protection of Animals has been obliged, through diminution in income, to reduce the number of its inspectors to thirteen; but good work continues to be done, and the Society has been able to organize an Italian League for the Protection of Animals, whose inspectors are now at work in Rome, Genoa, Bordighera, and Brindisi. The Society is represented in this country by Miss P. H. Johnston, The Beeches, Carlisle.

Is the Bible True?*

WE have here 680 pages of controversy, written by a disciple of the late Prof. Robertson Smith, and intended to show that from his point of view it was possible to give an affirmative answer to both these questions. The book abounds in repetitions, and might well have been reduced to less than half its size. Its contents are fairly analyzed at the beginning, but there is no index at the end—a serious drawback in a work of this kind. The writer praises up his old master, Dr. Robertson Smith, in the most extravagant style. He is "the greatest all-round, and specially O.T. and Semitic scholar of the age," "the most unique all-round scholar of our age, and the greatest Semitic scholar of this or perhaps of any time"; he "combined with the keenest critical power and vast knowledge, a thorough grasp of scientific theology, with its bearing on questions of Biblical criticism, and a rare capacity of stating questions with scientific precision and masterly cogency." The notorious article on the Bible in the Encyclopædia Britannica is not, we think, referred to by name in the book before us, but Prof. W. R. Smith's Old Testament in the Jewish Church is several times given as an authority, partly, no doubt, because it was intended for the ordinary Bible reader; but this is the book in which, after assigning three chapters of Exodus to Moses, he teaches that Deuteronomy was "found" in the temple in Josiah's time, and that by whom it is written "is of no consequence," while the so-called Levitical legislation is brought down to the period between Ezekiel and Ezra, being intended to insulate the people from the surrounding nations after the captivity; and this is the book in which it is affirmed that "what is quite certain is that, according to the prophets, the Torah (Law) of Moses did not embrace the law of ritual," together with "worship by sacrifice, and all that belongs to it." But enough on this branch of the subject.

Mr. M'Intosh is by no means in full sympathy with all the results of Higher Criticism. On the contrary, he floods them with

A TORRENT OF RHETORICAL ABUSE.

Rationalism in his view "exhibits in its worst forms that crude dogmatism and traditionalism against which it belches forth such blustering but self-destructive rage!" Dr. Horton specially rouses his animosity. "It would be difficult," he says, "to find a single writer on the questions so full of errors and contradictions, exaggerations and vagaries, at once so superficial and one-sided, loose and illogical in treatment of any single point of the controversy," and so on for several octavo pages of scorn. Principal Fairbairn, Ian Maclaren, and others are chastised with equal vigour.

The shrewdness of many of the writer's criticisms is indubitable, and he has shown excellent sense in upholding the authority of the Epistles and exposing the false view that a complete idea of Christianity can be drawn from our Lord's teaching in the Gospels. He deals fairly and forcibly with the various renderings and interpretations given to 2 Tim. iii. 15-17, deciding in favour of the Authorised Version. In accordance with this view, he holds that "though the Bible was written through the instrumentality of fallible and imperfect men, yet such an infallible Divine influence was imparted to them, and such an unerring and pervasive control was exercised over them by the inspiration of the Holy Ghost, that it secured that all they wrote for God was true, trustworthy, and of Divine authority (p. 362).

We have italicised the words "for God" in this sentence, as they are of the utmost importance, and suggest that natural inquiry, as we now have them come under this definition? If we knew this, we should know all. We gladly accept Mr. M'Intosh's view that the "acknowledged writers of the books of Scripture were generally well-known ambassadors of God—prophets of Jehovah or apostles of Christ . . . whose messages and position as divinely commissioned teachers were accredited by miracles, or verified by fulfilments of predictions, or attested by the testimony of the Spirit in the consciousness of the Church" (p. 367). If these men were divinely commissioned to write or to dictate to scribes—which is practically the same thing—we may be sure that God gave them all needful power, guidance, and suggestion. This is dynamical inspiration, and the Scriptures written under such circumstances are rightly called inspired, and are consequently authoritative, whether as records of events or as revelations of truth.

HOW MUCH OF THE SCRIPTURES

But it is just here that the great stumbling-block in the author's teaching presents itself. He holds rightly that we apply the word "inspired" not to any particular translation of the sacred Books, nor to one set of textual readings as opposed to another, but to the original books themselves as they left the author's hands, or as they were completed by his authority. Take for example the Book of Deuteronomy. It professes to consist of the farewell addresses of Moses, which, according to this profession, must have been taken down at the time by authorised scribes, who were well trained for the work in those days. (See "The Students' Deuteronomy." Eyre & Spottiswoode). But Mr. McIntosh tacitly acquiesces in what he calls the now current and generally accepted view (!), that "while in spirit and essence, in substance or principle, the book is Mosaic, yet, as we have it, is not in the form it would have come from Moses, especially in the legislative parts; but Mosaic principles were developed, adapted, and added to by later inspired writers, or writer, to meet later needs and conditions, and different documents used in its composition, which plainly reveal themselves in our present Deuteronomy" (p. 224). The author goes on to say that "the literary methods of these early times and Eastern people were exceedingly different in many respects from ours, and consequently what would be thought unpardonable among us was not unknown among them—such as connecting the names of distinguished men with books which might not be their actual productions." The final result is that "it is only in cases where a clear and is established and declared in a particular instance by Christ or some inspired writer, that the question of the truthfulness of Scripture or the infallibility of Christ can arise."

UNQUESTIONABLE AUTHORSHIP

See where we are landed by these painful utterances. No plain reader of Deuteronomy can know whether he is reading a faithful record of what Moses said; and he is to console himself with the thought that "forged decretals" were neither unfashionable nor unpardonable in the early ages of Israel's history—as if there had come down to us a large selection of Semitic literature to illustrate the point! nay, more, the truthfulness of Scripture and the infallibility of Christ are only to be discussed in connection with a plain case where authorship is established and declared by Christ or some inspired writer. Now, unfortunately, the Biblical writers were not in the constant habit of naming the writer from whom they quoted; hence, although Deuteronomy is more or less clearly referred to in ten of the historical and twelve of the prophetical books of the Old Testament, and in most of the books of the New. Yet because these writers do not happen to cite it by name as an authorised record of the speeches of Moses, we may take it as written under the authorisation of—nobody knows who!

A more dismal or bewildering conclusion can hardly be conceived. The error here laid bare vitiates the whole of the writer's laborious contention; but we cannot help trusting that a man who is so earnest and outspoken for Christ may yet see his way to hold that the traditional view of Scripture, as held by Jew and Christian, is in the main the correct one.

R. B. G.

* Is Christ Infallible and the Bible True? By Rev. Hugh M'Intosh, M.A. (9s. Edinburgh: T. & T. Clark.)

The Temperance Ironsides.—At the Rhos and district ministers' fraternal, held a few days ago, opportunity was given Mr. Tennyson Smith for expressing his views on the subject to which he has devoted many years of study and labour. In a powerful address he spoke of the Crusade as an ally of the Christian Church and ministry, by advocating a more aggressive attitude on the part of the Church against the liquor traffic. The lecturer expounded at length the policy and objects of the Ironsides, and expressed his firm belief in the ultimate victory of the Christian Church over the evils of intemperance. A resolution of appreciation of Mr. Smith's work was adopted by the ministers present, who also expressed the hope that his energetic campaign would impart new life and spirit to the temperance cause in the district.

Jews in Canada.—As a result of the expulsion of Jews from Roumania and other countries, hundreds have landed on the shores of Canada. In 1895 the Montreal Jewish Mission was initiated by Rev. John McCarter and his wife on an undenominational basis. During the five years which have elapsed the Jewish population has almost doubled. Christian Jews volunteered as helpers, and their efforts have chiefly been devoted to pioneering; but the needs of the Mission are increasing, and it seems no longer possible to carry on the work without a hall, reading room, library, &c. Persistent opposition has been experienced, and gatherings have more than once been dispersed. The missionary and his helpers are denounced by name in the synagogues, and every prominent citizen whose name is mentioned as being in sympathy with them is remonstrated with. Mr. and Mrs. McCarter have found great acceptance in visiting Jewish families. As opportunity arises, Scriptures and tracts are circulated in various languages. Another result of the work is the fostering among Christians a sense of the duty and privilege of giving the Gospel to the Jews in Canada. Mr. McCarter's address is 324, St. Urbain Street, Montreal.

Evangelistic.

London Tent Campaign.

THE work in Stratford continues to be attended with much blessing, the local committee leaving no stone unturned in order to reach the people of this densely-populated district. Throughout the past week large numbers have been gathered night by night, and many have been impressed. Mr. LEONARD WEAVER, who, with Mr. J. BENNETT ANDERSON, has been speaking almost every evening, also addressed a mass meeting for "men only" on Sunday morning last. A pleasing feature of this meeting was the fact that many of those who were converted during last season's mission were to be seen anxiously seeking to bring their shopmates to Christ. In the afternoon and evening Rev. J. T. VINE and Mr. J. GRACIE conducted the meetings, Miss E. ANGEL singing the Gospel. The word was with power, and many confessed the Saviour.

At Fulham Mr. WILLIAM GROVE has been "holding the fort" since the opening, assisted by Mrs. TETLEY. The meetings have grown in interest and numbers, and not a few have been brought in.

The work at Dartford tent—which was the first to be opened this season—has received much blessing, the WEAVER BROTHERS, after preaching and singing with much power and acceptance during the past week, witnessing a great breakdown on Sunday last. Many were the slain of the Lord. Friends will be glad to hear that Mr. BEWLEY WEAVER, although looking pale as the result of his recent illness, has gained strength, and that his Gospel addresses have borne good fruit.

The tent at Kilburn is pitched on the same site as last year, and although the opening has been attended with some uncertainty, owing to difficulty regarding the land, the gathering on Saturday evening, when Mr. Leonard Weaver inaugurated the work, was full of promise. The local committee are ably led by such well-known Christian workers and organizers as Mr. Sabey and Mr. A. Fry, whose efforts are being well supported by an efficient choir, conducted by a competent and genial choir-master. On Sunday afternoon Mr. R. S. BRADBROOK, who with Mr. Bennett Anderson is now taking the services, gave a thoughtful address to the large number of Christians present. The meeting was much appreciated. In the evening, when Mr. Anderson preached, the tent was well filled, and God used the powerful message and appeal to the salvation of a number of persons, who boldly stood on their feet as evidence of their accepting Christ. At the Kilburn Hall of the Evangelistic Mission, three converts from the tent work were recently received into fellowship, making twenty in all, being the fruit of last year's work.

The admirable site secured by the Clapton friends is a sign of the earnestness of their desire to see blessing come to the district. The tent is erected in the High Road, opposite Lynscott Road. On Saturday evening last, a large concourse of people gathered for the opening meeting, and the address of Mr. Bradbrook was listened to with attention and profit. At the close of the meeting, kneeling side by side, were a lady and gentleman—husband and wife—who both earnestly sought the Saviour. It was a very affecting scene. Another interesting incident was witnessed when a fine, intelligent young man, as he knelt in penitence, handed the evangelist his pipe, tobacco, and matches. The meetings on Sunday were conducted by Mr. Leonard Weaver. The afternoon meeting was well attended. The speaker told out the glorious Gospel, and spoke of the need for aggressive effort in order to reach the unsaved. The gathering was one of much spiritual profit. In the evening the tent was crowded, and at the close of the service a great number rose for prayer, and many for salvation. It was a time of great power and blessing.

At Islington the committee have arranged to put up a large tent on the "Moody" site at the Priory, Islington, by kind permission of the C.M.S. College authorities. It is to be opened some time during August, and accommodation will be provided for 3,000 persons. W.

The Open-Air Mission.

Some members of the Open-Air Mission visited Cumberland this Whitsuntide, and had a capital day's work in the open-air on Whit-Tuesday at Millom, a mining town in that county. Five speakers took part in the meeting, including Mr. FRANK COCKREM, the secretary. The crowds were good and most attentive, and as the Millom Hiring Fair for farm-servants was held on that day, a good number of young men were reached. The evening meeting, held near the sports field, was listened to by an eager, most attentive crowd, and some inquiries were dealt with at the close. The power of God was very manifest, both in the preaching and in the singing, which latter part Mr. Gray conducted very ably. Rev. Dr. JOSCELYNE, the vicar of the parish, helped in the meeting.

The Edinburgh Castle.

Mr. J. S. HARRISON has just concluded his annual visit of a month to the above hall. It was a time in which the Lord, by his Holy Spirit, gave messages of Divine truth both to saved and unsaved. Mr. Harrison has a close acquaintance with the Word of God, which means that all his addresses are made wealthy with its exceeding riches.

W. N.

Ascot Races.

It is anticipated that a larger concourse than usual will be found this year at the forthcoming fashionable race meeting at Ascot; it is therefore hoped that Christians will rally in force to proclaim the Gospel to the assembled multitudes. It is expected that contingents of workers will be sent by both the Open-Air, and the Racecourse, Mission. Supplies of suitable literature will be needed for distribution. The local hon. secretary is Mr. A. E. Sidford, Woking ham, Berks.

Gospel Work in Barry Dock.

Our new tent was opened on Sunday last, and it was a grand sight to see the crowd which came in to the evening services. A well-known circus is in the town, and as Mr. William Dunn, who was once a clown in it, was preaching, we visited the show, and were pleased to see some of the performers present at the Gospel service as the result of our invitation. We have Gospel meetings nightly, and twice on the Lord's Day. We are being greatly helped this season by Mr. Charles Chenery, who was to have gone to China as a missionary, but is prevented from doing so for the time being by the disturbed state of that unhappy country. We have erected our Gospel tent this year on the fair ground, which is usually thronged by the sort of people we hope to "catch."

GERALD R. COULTAS.

Meetings at Margate.

Many in Margate have good reason to be thankful to God for the ministry during Whitsun week of his servants Mr. SPENCER JOHNSON and Mr. FAIRCHILD HUXTABLE. A service was held at the Grand Theatre on the evening of Whit-Sunday, and at the Parochial Hall of the Holy Trinity Church on the two following days. Rev. Walter Senior, vicar of Holy Trinity, and the Free Church ministers cordially co-operated with the missioners. The theatre was crowded, and the Gospel messages listened to with wrapt attention.

Mr. Spencer Johnson had been the soloist during the Simultaneous Mission at Margate, and his second visit was cordially welcomed. There was abundant and convincing testimony that God had indeed owned the words sung and spoken by his servants. The meeting on Tuesday evening was deeply moved; several professed conversion, backsliders were reclaimed, and lukewarm believers stirred. It was a season of refreshing and rejoicing. On Wednesday the numerous inmates of the Royal Sea-bathing Hospital had the opportunity of listening to the evangelists, and they also gave evidence of blessing received. Altogether the visit has been a gracious time. J. E. C.

Mr. Charles Cook's Work.

Mr. CHARLES COOK'S open-air services in Hyde Park have been resumed for the thirtieth successive year. Reference was made to this interesting fact at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A., on Monday last, by Mr. HENRY VARLEY, who voiced the sympathy of many friends in expressing appreciation of the spirit and perseverance with which the services have been carried on for so long. At the conclusion of Mr. Varley's encouraging words the audience rose and sang the Doxology.

A correspondent writes: "A remarkable and enthusiastic meeting was held in connection with the celebration of the anniversary on Monday night last, when a magnificent crowd of attentive hearers, the great mass of whom were men, were gathered around the platform. We were pleased to see quite a galaxy of evangelists present who had come to stand by and help their friend and brother who has so long and faithfully proclaimed the Gospel in this forum of the people. Mr. Cook was himself in charge of the meeting, and after the impressive singing of his goodly band of singers, he introduced Mr. E. P. TELFORD, Mr. J. S. HARRISON, Mr. JESSE MAYO, and Mr. BRUNNING, who set forth Christ as the only hope for the sinner. The meeting lasted for nearly two hours, and was closed by the immense audience joining in the Doxology. It was noticeable that every hat was taken off while the praises of our God were being sung. Near by an infidel was talking; but barely a hundred people were listening. To God be the glory; great things He hath done."

Evangelists' Engagements.

 This column is intended for Missions of some days' duration, not for engagements of a single day.

MR. J. BENNETT ANDERSON and MR. R. S. BRADBROOK.—Till June 8, Kilburn Tent Willesden Lane, N.W.

MRS. BAEYERTZ.—Till June 17, Gt. Wakering; July 7-22, Brynn, near Wigan.

MR. JOHN COATES and MR. GEORGE BENTLEY.—June 8-24, Mitcheldean, with large Gospel Tent.

MR. W. COLLARD.—June 15, 16, Hope Mission, Merton; 19, Lincoln; July 7-22, Tent Mission, Long Ditton.

MR. W. D. DUNN.—Till June 28, Dundee; July 6-20, Larbert; July 28, Aberdeen.

MR. JOHN ELLIOTT.—June 9, Gospel Hall, Warren Road, Torquay; 16, Gospel Hall, St. Marychurch; 23, Gerston Hall, Paignton.

Mr. JAMES S. HARRISON.— During June, St. Giles' Christian Mission, Sundays only.

REV. J. JAMESON.—Till June 10, Bolton Villas, near Bradford; 15-24, Hawes, Wensleydale.

MR. BOB JOHNSON.—Till June 7, Epsom Racecourse.

MR. NEWTON JONES.—June 9, Cleveland Hall, W. London Mission.

MR. W. R. LANE.—June 3-17, Mountain Ash, South Wales.

MR. HERBERT LENG and City Policemen, Shoreditch Tabernacle, June 11; Baptist Church, Stroud Green, June 16; Memorial Hall, London Street, BethnalGreen, June 23.

MR. MUSA BHAI, Indian Evangelist.—Till June 7, Totterdown Y.M.C.A.

MR. JAMES SPRUNT.—During June, Kensal Rise Tabernacle, except 16, Cecil Hall, Enfield Town.

MR. R. SPRAGG.—During June, Martock and surrounding villages, with tent.

REV. F. C. SPURR.—Till June 10, Gravesend; 23, Walsall; 30, Weston.

MR. J. WEEDON.—Till end of August, Tent Missions Evangelization Society.

LONDON TENT CAMPAIGN.—Tents are now erected in the following districts:—Stratford, West Ham Lane; Fulham, Lillie Road; Dartford, Westgate Estate (closing Sunday, June 9); Kilburn, Willesden Lane; Clapton, Lower Clapton Road, close to the Congress Hall; Brixton, Canterbury Road (opening Saturday, June 8); Woolwich, Woolwich Common (opening June 15).

Request for Prayer.

For blessing on Gospel Tent services at Broughty Ferry.

Personalia.

Rev. W. A. ESSERY, hon. sec. of the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society, has returned to England after a tour of inspection through Egypt, Palestine, and Syria.

Mr. S. LEVERMORE isto sail for America in the Teutonic on Wednesday, June 12, in order to join Mr. Rowland Edwards in evangelistic work in Philadelphia during the summer. Mr. Levermore returns to England in September.

Canon W. HAY M. H. AITKEN is about to take a partial rest after much work. He will be in residence at Norwich during August and September, and hopes to resume mission work in October.

Mr. CHARLES CARTER, secretary of the Evangelization Society of Australasia, whose visit to this country we announced a few weeks ago, has now arrived. Friends are invited to address communications for him to care of the Evangelization Society, 21, Surrey Street, Strand, W.C.

Notices.

APPLICANTS FOR TRACTS.—Mr. Jos. Insall, town missionary, 9, Trafalgar Street East, Scarborough; Rev. J. W. Atkinson, Claremont, Cawley Road, London, N.E.; Mr. Edmund S. Wray, evangelist, Dagenham; Mr. G. Murray, 14, Fairfield Road, Higham Hill, Walthamstow, Essex; Mr. J. Ayers, Edith Villa, 42, Dunbar Road, Forest Gate, E.; Miss Hatfield, care of Mr. Harrison, Toft Road, Knutsford; Mr. Charles Quick, 72, Dalston Lane, London, N.E.; Miss Perks, The Cottage, Knutsford; Miss E. Cullen, 54, Bateman Street, Cambridge; Miss Lardent, 135, Rushmore Road, Clapton, London, N.E.; Mr. Arthur Blatch Cox, 1, Speedwell Avenue, St. George's, Cosham Road, Bristol; Mr. G. Lines, 41, Henry Street, Pentonville, London, W.C.; Miss L. Botby, 13, Baker Street, Lloyd Square, London, W.C.

COMMUNICATIONS RECEIVED WITH THANKS.—C.J.N. S.L. F.P. M. and C. G.W.L.B. R.G.M.B. E.L.M.M.B. S.S.M. G.S.H.S. F.M.W. Dr. B. C.M. Mrs. F. J.E. E.J.T. S.H.W. R.V.H. J.H.C. L.W. E.M.C. C.S. M.S. Baron von G. J.E.C. W.A.E. G.W.S. J.A.R. J.B.C.M. W.H. N.F.D. R.B. J.R. J.S.D. J.G.P. J.W.A. E.T.W. T.S.P. W.H.M.H. W.C.B. E.L. Col. F.P. D.B.F. G.W.L.B. W.S.G. A.K. R.H.E. G.E.B. W.F. A.R. A.R. T.M.W. D.F. M.A.B. W.A. J.C. H.C.C. R.W.H. A.S.B.C. E.H. R.McL. G.M. J.G.A. S.B. P.B.K. I.S. G.W. A.S. Dr. J. H.B. E.D.E.T. G.J.J. M.S. J.C. E.C. M.A.H. S.C. J.B.W. G.R.C. W.N. J.S. H.H.G.F.T. G.A.M. L.L. T.C. G.L. G.H.P. A.C.D. W.H.D.

Fallen Asleep.

Rev. W. E. WILSON, Church of Scotland, assistant minister at Wishaw, has died as the result of injuries received in a cycling accident.—Mrs. WESTCOTT, wife of the Bishop of Durham, passed away at Bishop Auckland Castle on May 28, after a brief illness. The deceased lady was for many years devoted to foreign missionary work.—Mr. EDWARD PAUL, an office-bearer in Sefton Park Presbyterian Church, Liverpool.—Rev. A. DAWSON, vicar of St. John's, Barnsley. He was well known as secretary for the Bible Society for the Northern District.—Mr. RALPH VINCENT TYMMS (eldest son of Dr. Tymms, Principal of Rawdon College), drowned while bathing. His native kindness and high Christian character endeared him to a large circle of friends.—At Derry, Mr. WM. H. BIGGER, D.L., an earnest and devoted member of the Presbyterian Church, father of the late Rev. Professor Bigger, M.A., and father-in-law of the late Rev. Dr. Rogers, ex-moderator of the General Assembly, aged seventy-nine years. On June 1, after much suffering, Mrs. COULTAS, wife of Mr. Gerald Coultas, superintendent of Barry Dock Christian Mission, S. Wales.

Queensland.—An evangelistic campaign was begun in Queensland last month, which it is intended to carry on throughout the winter now beginning. The movement is the outcome of the banding together in prayer during the past year of some of the Lord's people in the colony, and our readers are asked to unite in supplication for a rich blessing on the effort. The campaign is being inaugurated with a Simultaneous Mission in the Brisbane churches, after which it is intended to take up the other towns, and, as far as possible, the country districts also.

About Books.

SOME JUNE MAGAZINES.

THE Church Missionary Intelligencer is chiefly devoted to verbatim reports of addresses delivered at the recent anniversary meetings. There are, as usual, budgets of news from many parts of the foreign field while the editorials give welcome information on topics of wide interest.

The Quiver is above the average. It includes another of Dr. Stalker's series of articles on the Life and Work of the Redeemer, a readable sketch of Richard Baxter and his associations with Kidderminster, and an account of the Huguenots' church beneath Canterbury Cathedral. There is a wealth of illustrations.

The Young Woman opens with a thoughtful article, "How to Deal with the Hooligan Girl," a chat with Sister Grace (Mrs. Kimmins). The story of Charlotte Brontë is continued, and there are other attractive papers. To the Young Man, Mr. W. T. Stead contributes a lucid character sketch of General Booth, and Rev. R. E. Welsh writes on the "Art of Living with Oneself."

The Boy's Own Paper for June contains, as usual, a liberal supply of instructive and recreative reading. The coloured frontispiece is of exceptional merit, both in design and execution. The companion magazine, Girl's Own Paper, shows all its familiar features, the illustrations being abundant and of a high order. Extra Summer Numbers have been issued in connection with each of these well-known periodicals. Both present complete stories and attractive sketches and articles.

The Sunday at Home has a variety of good and useful reading. Sybil C. Mitford writes "A Pilgrim in Bunyan's Country." There is a capital account of the work of the Browning Settlement. The many illustrations in the part include new portraits of Archdeacon Sinclair, Canon Fleming, and Dr. Joseph Parker. The Leisure Hour more than maintains its high reputation with a number that is notable for the variety and excellence of its contents. The articles on "Short Weight" and "Student Life in Scotland" are particularly good.

The British Workman publishes an interesting symposium, contributed by working men and women, on why the working classes do not attend church. In the Family Friend, Mrs. Isabella Fyvie Mayo writes on "The Sacred City of the Hindoos." The Friendly Visitor contains a profusely illustrated account of the South American Missionary Society and its splendid work. The Children's Friend gives us a number of bright letters about their holidays from boys and girls. Summer topics also rule in the Infants' Magazine, which is beautifully illustrated.

The pages of Good Words yield both entertaining and instructive reading on a number of subjects. The Sabbath meditations on St. Paul's Epistles, by Rev. Geo. Jackson, are stimulating and suggestive. Rev. V. L. Whitechurch writes on "The Oldest Thing in the World: Its Signification, Historical and Ethical;" and Rosa M. Barrett deals aptly with a question of much moment—"Hooligans at Home and Abroad." The varied contents of the Sunday Magazine maintain their high level. An informing article deals with "The Religious Outlook in Australia;" the story of the life and labours of Mrs. Wightman, of Shrewsbury, is told by F. D. How, in his "Noble Women of our Time" series; and Dr. John Watson's paper on "Respectable Sins" deals with Egotism. The children's interests are well cared for by Dr. Wells, whose "Sunday Evenings" this month are taken up with "The Child's Prayer," which most of us know as "The Lord's Prayer."

A little volume of verse likely to bring new hope and cheer to those who have been beset by trouble and difficulty will be found in Silver Linings to the Clouds of Life, by William Alfred Gibbs. (2s. 6d. Stock.) Several of the pieces are reprinted from The Quiver, and all have a helpful and spiritual ring.

Old and New Century Bells is a volume of timely addresses by Rev. John R. Vernon, M.A., Prebendary of Wells. (2s. 6d. nett. Wells Gardner & Co.). It is a pleasure to read anything by the author of "The Harvest of a Quiet Eye"; and here we have a series of addresses delivered during the season of Advent, 1900, and published by request. The "bells" give forth six peals, on Morality, Philanthropy, Devotion, Faith, The Relation of Science and Revelation, and The Coming Century. Then there is a muffled peal in verse—In Memoriam, Queen Victoria. The author has his own point of view, and it is not always the one that we would choose; but he advances strong principles in polished style. We trust his earnest pages will have many readers.

A HISTORICAL TALE.

IT is a good while since we read so interesting a story as Casque and Cowl: A Tale of the French Reformation. By F. M. Cotton Walker. (3s. 6d. Partridge.) The pages take us back 300 years, and, in the words of the author's introduction, to times when "the new-risen church was a church militant, and religion could not yet walk the streets in silver slippers, or sit inactive at dreamy ease, letting the old enemy scale and undermine those hard-reared battlements whose foundations were laid on the lives of her martyred sons, and cemented with her own heart's blood." This volume is, moreover, as instructive as it is interesting; not only does it reflect the social and political movements and tendencies of the time, but it sets in a true and striking light the dogmas and superstitions of Romanism and the grounds of Protestant faith and practice. There is much that is beautiful in the record of Evangelical testimony; graceful in literary style, and trustworthy in historical substance, the work has our hearty commendation. It is emphatically a book for the times, and we trust it will have many readers.

TWO CONGREGATIONAL MINISTERS.

FROM recent biography we single out two admirable pieces of work. In each case the subject had been Chairman of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, and a life-like portrait accompanies the memorial records.

First comes Joshua Clarkson Harrison: A Memoir. By One who Knew Him. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) It is the story of a beautiful life, introduced by a cordial preface from the pen of Dr. R. F. Horton. A son of the manse, Mr. Harrison was born at Wooburn, Bucks, in 1813, and had business training as a young man in the London house of I. and R. Morley. The first prayers of the father were that his offspring might serve the Lord in the Christian pastorate, and in due course the son realized his vocation as lying in that direction. Mr. Harrison was trained for the ministry in Homerton Academy, in the days of Dr. Pye Smith, who will long be remembered as one of the foremost theological writers of his time. From his first charge at Tottenham Mr. Harrison went to Park Chapel, Camden Town, in 1846, and there he laboured with great acceptance and much fruitfulness for the long period of forty-five years. He was Chairman of the Union in 1870, and did public work in other important ways until his death in 1894, at the good old age of eighty-one. The memoir brings to mind many interesting men and events of bygone days—among men, Adolphe Monod, John Stoughton, and Thomas Binney; among events, the Protest against Papal Aggression in England in 1850, and the "Rivulet" Controversy, as affecting the teachings of that remarkable man, T. T. Lynch. Those who knew Mr. Harrison will enjoy the book; those who had not that pleasure will find the volume good reading, as setting forth the career of a Christian minister—a true pastor—of loving heart and noble life.

The second biography is that of a man who was par excellence a preacher—a pulpit orator and a platform leader:—The Life of E. Herber Evans, D.D. From his Letters, Journals, &c. By Rev. H. Elvet Lewis. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) Needless to say, the subject was a Welshman. He was born in 1836 at Pant yr Onen, near Newcastle Emlyn, and brought up in a religious atmosphere. Converted to God while yet a lad, he entered upon active life in the drapery business. He had an impressive call to ministerial duty; and leaving commercial walks he passed through a preparatory curriculum at colleges in Swansea and Brecon. Deeply interesting particulars are given of the making of a preacher who became famous all at once, being called the "Welsh Spurgeon" while yet pursuing his student course. It is a pleasure to read the pages in which the mysterious hwyl is described, also to have so many details of curious customs associated with religious life and work in the Principality. Dr. Herber Evans held charges at Morriston and Carnarvon. He was a hard worker, and not to be tempted to spheres that might have increased his celebrity, although they could not have added to the usefulness of his full and busy life. He was Chairman of the Union in 1892, and for several years before his death (in December, 1896) he was Principal of Bangor College. His joys and sorrows are well portrayed in these pages, and many gems from his writings are given by the way.

The Free Church Year Book for 1901 is a goodly volume. In addition to an official report of the sixth National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches, held at Cardiff in March last, full particulars are given of the various organizations of Nonconformity. It is a very useful book of reference; it is more—even an impressive testimony for God and an evidence of service on a large scale. (2s. 6d. nett. Office: Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street.)

The subtle Romeward trend of the Ritualistic movement, and its tendency to unsettle faith altogether in certain cases, are vividly portrayed in Horace Morell (6s. Drane), by Cecil Haselwood, while the evils connected with vivisection are also introduced. The teaching on all the religious points raised seems to be thoroughly Evangelical and Protestant.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh, of the National Anti-Infidel League, has added a thoughtful little book to the baptismal controversy. It is entitled, The Doctrine of Baptism: As Taught in the Bible. (6d. Stoneman). Mr. Bradlaugh is earnest in debate, and courteous withal. He holds infant baptism to be a grave stumbling-block in the way of the Gospel, and advocates a more loyal adherence to the original practice of believers' baptism.

Mr. Coulson Kernahan's writings always have titles that take a good deal of reading. His latest book, Wise Men and a Fool, is strikingly named. In it the author takes the reader into his confidence in regard to the great writers by whom he has been specially influenced. The chatty papers deal with R. L. Stevenson, George Mac Donald, Frederick Locker-Lampson, Browning, Tennyson, Emerson, Watts-Dunton, and others. There are some well-finished portraits. (3s. 6d. Ward, Lock, & Co.)

We welcome a second edition of Miss D. Alcock's By Far Euphrates. (3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) In the form of a tale, we have here one of the most pathetic chapters of the Armenian massacres of recent years. The outstanding facts are from consular and other reports; that the pages are by the author of "The Spanish Brothers," is proof of their forcible character. The sufferings of the Armenian Christians should not be forgotten. This tale will help to keep them in mind. It places them in the right light, and magnifies the grace of God which enabled so many witnesses to suffer the loss of all things—even life itself—in the name of Christ.

It is a beautiful thought that the same hand which saves the smoking flax from being quenched and the bruised reed from being broken, also provides wonderful compensations in the lives of those who recognise that chastening is of the Lord. The beauty and interest to be found in the most common-place circumstances and surroundings are charmingly pointed out by Hettie Travers in From an Invalid's Window (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society); and the book is fitted to open to others similarly situated the portals of a new world of quiet and peaceful pleasures. Without including friendship—"for that is touching higher and more sacred ground"—a few "sick-room interests" which enabled the author to reap "the harvest of a quiet eye" close with some parables of the sick-room, of which the last is concerned with the Stepping Stones from Lone Isle to Fair Haven.

Many will thank Dr. Elder Cumming for his new volume, After the Spirit: Being Farther Papers on the Eternal Spirit, His Person and Work. (2s. 6d. Drummond's Tract Depot.) In the preface Dr. Elder Cumming informs us that during the nine years that have elapsed since he issued his work, "Through the Eternal Spirit," the subject has been constantly before his mind by reading and meditation, and he had come to realize that there were many questions on the subject which had not been treated in his large book. Now, having dealt with Scripture teaching on Sanctification, Dr. Elder Cumming dwells upon the personality of the Spirit, and his work in Regeneration, and in the Divine Economy of the Church. Expressions of special significance in connection with the teaching of Scripture regarding the Holy Spirit are explained at length, and there are lists of occurrences of the most instructive of these.

The new issue of The Photo-Miniature is devoted to Landscape Photography. It will have peculiar charm and interest for those who follow the higher branches of the art. (6d. nett. Dawbarn & Ward.)

The May issue of the British Warehouseman describes the business of Messrs. Hitchcock, Williams & Co., and includes a plate giving portraits of the principals of the firm. (Offices: 151, Fleet Street, E.C.)

Mr. G. E. Ginder (39, St. Michael's Hill, Bristol) has published a series of tinted tracts (square envelope size) giving a verse of Scripture on one side, and the passage from which it is chosen on the reverse (1s. 6d. per 1,000).

Cassell's Guide to London (6d.) is brought up to date. The form is compact and handy. The information supplied gives the visitor to the City such practical help as lends interest to every walk through the City.

Quacks and their Advertisements (parts 1 and 2, 1d. each, White Cross League, 7, Dean's Yard, Westminster), supplies what many a Christian worker requires in dealing with special cases. Modestly, yet frankly, questions are faced which we cannot ignore altogether, however much we try.

Of the numerous booklets by Mr. Gerald R. Coultas, Evangelism is deserving of wide circulation at the present moment. It is a specific and timely message to mission-workers, comprising helpful suggestions for dealing with the anxious. (1d. each, 6s. per hundred. The Author, Mission House, Barry Dock, South Wales.)

Reprints of three addresses by Mr. Edwin Richmond (Gladstone Buildings, St. James' Street, Sheffield) will be welcomed by a circle wider than that of the hearers: Practical Methods for Filling Chapels (1d.) deals frankly but kindly with matters sometimes overlooked because of their nearness or familiarity; Christians and the Drink Traffic (1d.) states the present position of a subject which is claiming a growing share of public attention; Curses of the Past Century gives "the dark side of the picture," and by no means over-states the case.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for THE CHRISTIAN should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for THE CHRISTIAN by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "THE CHRISTIAN" POSTAL DEPARTMENT, BOUVERIE HOUSE, SALISBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs. John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

The Bible League. In the Bible League devoted men and women are banded together with the object of warning the thoughtless against the tendencies of modern criticism, as well as of promoting the dissemination of sound views regarding the inspiration and authority of the Holy Scriptures. Friends of reverential study of the Word of God will learn with satisfaction that a Conference under the auspices of the League will be held on Friday next in Exeter Hall, the two sessions beginning at 4 and 6 p.m.

Derby Day. Derby day has come and gone again, with its usual saturnalia of excitement and ruinous indulgence in the vice of gambling and betting. The newspapers gave highly coloured reports of the various "events," and in almost every case refrained from any exposure of the fearful pit of iniquity on which this "national institution" (!) is sustained. Year by year the crowds that go down increase, and so do the sums that change hands, and go ultimately to enrich the bookmakers. It is impossible to measure the demoralizing effect of such "sport" as is found at Epsom, in debauching the morals of the community, and in undermining the sturdy virtues which are our heritage from our Puritan forefathers.

Statistics of Gambling. Figures recently published present in an appalling way the rapid growth of gambling in the community, more especially among working men. When we hear that some £20,000,000 a year are spent on this vice in the United Kingdom, of which £10,000,000 come from the pockets of the working-classes, the corruption of the country comes home to us with humiliating emphasis. Every pound spent on a bet is a pound diverted from its true purpose. It is lost to its legitimate uses. The sum thus squandered by the classes who are clamouring for Government old age pensions, will almost secure the amount aimed at for the whole population. The best friend of our wage-earners must feel that while this state of things flourishes, any indiscriminate national provision for old age would only encourage many in the indulgence of a soul-destroying vice by making them still more thriftless as to the future.

A Timely Warning. Mr. Andrew Carnegie, whose munificent gifts to education are so well known, has made a further gift to the nation of some wholesome advice in the current number of the Nineteenth Century. Speaking as a great manufacturer and financier, who knows the facts, he is by no means pessimistic as to our future possibilities as the greatest trading nation in the world. He acknowledges that our monopoly is gone, but not our supremacy. It is the financial and political outlook which is alarming. He specially deprecates the aggressive temper which alienates other governments and peoples, and which threatens to lay on the productive capacity of the British nation such burdens as will render it incapable of retaining the trade that is essential to the preservation of our position in the world. It is militarism and pride of race which are the chief rocks ahead.

Church Overlapping. An interesting work has just been accomplished at King's Lynn through the agency of the Free Church Council. Several small enterprises, which were to have been undertaken separately in the interests of several denominations, have been combined in one central Evangelical Free Church. Thus, the problem of overlapping has been definitely dealt with, to the satisfaction of all concerned. King's Lynn has set exactly the example that was needed. It is the first church of its kind, we believe, erected since the formation of the Free Church Council. The Kingdom of God would gain much if, wherever there are several places of worship too thickly planted within a limited area, a strong central united church could be formed. The present overlapping in so many places is a terrible hindrance to aggressive work. One powerful central church, devout and zealous, possesses an impact which four or five struggling causes can never possess.

A Question for the Churches. It is an alarming report that comes from Scotland as to the decline in attendance at public worship. According to the British Weekly, the proportion of attendances to sittings has declined in twenty years from fifty-one to forty-one. The same is true of Sunday-schools, where the number of scholars seems to be seriously diminishing. This state of things is put down to the increasing laxity as regards Sabbath observance. But this laxity is itself a result rather than a cause, and can only be put down to the growth of the secular and irreligious spirit. It is clear that a time of trial is before the Churches, not only in Scotland, but throughout the whole land.

Religious Decadence. It is startling to find a leading member of the Society of Friends writing so pessimistically of the decline of Quakerism, and so definitely in regard to the causes which have led to it. Mr. Rowntree says:

> A transformation has been passing over us during the last fifty years. . . . All the streets of Vanity Fair are open to our young people. . . . The quiet self-centred life is gone. . . . Our standpoint is shifted. . . . Home influence is not what it was. . . . It is also true that the essentials of our faith are loosely held, and but imperfectly understood. It is plain the change is a critical one. It cannot leave us as we were; it must either lead to decay, or to a renewal of life and power.

We fear as much may be said of other religious communions. It is, alas, "the spirit of the times."

The Dearth of Students. For several years there have been complaints of the diminished number of "candidates for Holy Orders" in this country. America now is complaining about the same thing. There are 200 fewer men in the Protestant Colleges of the United States than last year. The decrease affects all the denominations alike. Only one explanation is offered, i.e., "that in the ministry young men fear they will lose liberty of thought." Yet, on the other hand, it is admitted that in America, the number increases of those who are entering the ministry without "a proper theological training." These two distinct facts seem to us to explain the whole situation. The former class of men evidently lack the impulsive force of a distinct vocation; the latter class apparently are possessed by it. It is certain that where a Divine vocation to preach is given to a man, and a man is willing to obey the call, any difficulties in the way of fulfilling it will be vanquished. At the same time vocation and preparation ought never to be separated. In the present state of things Christian teachers cannot be too well equipped. It might be desirable, however, to inquire whether the College system is all that it might be. There is something lacking if a man fears that, through it, he may "lose liberty of thought." But if by "liberty of thought" is meant freedom to accept as truth any vagary—then men who desire that are far better outside the ministry.

The "Labour Church." A number of so-called "Labour Churches" have been established of late in various large towns in England. The creedless programme was a high-sounding ethical one, the Gospel apparently being too simple and out-of-date for the leaders of the new movement. The Labour Church Record, however, in a striking editorial, frankly admits that the results have been, not the dethroning of the old declarations of sin and salvation, but one more illustration of the folly of all such boastful attempts to save the lost.

> The secretary of one of our Labour Churches writes: "Going about the country I find Labour Churches generally weak, unbusinesslike and quarrelsome. . . . A lady who has lectured for the Labour Church informs me that at one Labour Church she visited, the chairman had no belief in spirit or immortality, but coarsely said that men were 'done with like pigs' when dead."

The history of all these so-called ethical movements is stereotyped, but the leaders and followers in the new ones refuse to profit by it.

Anti-Christian Perversions. We referred last week to the Unitarian failure and to their begging of the real question between us. Since then, other of their meetings have been held, at one of which perverted statements were made concerning orthodox belief in the Incarnation. These statements were transmitted to the public by the daily papers; it is a pity, therefore, that they misrepresent facts. It is an insult both to the minds and hearts of Christians to describe them as believing in our Lord's Incarnation because "men despair of communion between the Eternal and themselves; hence the figment of a God-man who was supposed to relieve the difficulty." A greater perversion of the facts could not easily be imagined. It would be well for the speaker to acquaint himself with the doctrine of the Incarnation, and cease to combat antagonists of straw.

Adult Bible Classes. In a recent Note and Comment in reference to adult Sunday-schools, it was stated that there is no difficulty in getting men to attend, the trouble being in finding teachers. A monthly contemporary, The Quiver, gives some details in regard to an experiment made over twelve years ago, by the vicar of St. Helens, Lancashire, who holds a Sunday afternoon Bible class in the parish church. It appears that the members now number 1,500, that the attendance sometimes exceeds 1,000, about 700 being the average. In 1889, the attendance for the year was 15,548; in 1899, it had increased to 26,323. This encouraging example calls for wide imitation. We have known other instances in which an adult class of the kind gradually spread into pew after pew of a place of worship until it became a congregation, the foundation being the simple exposition of the New Testament, with its clear statement of man's sin, and its divinely illumined declaration of forgiveness and salvation in Christ.

"Justice to Ireland." The decline in the population of the Sister Island revealed by the census returns is, naturally, being quoted as an illustration of the baneful influence of British rule. Should not, however, some allowance be made for the painful fact that a large portion of the country is under the blighting and retarding domination of Rome? If Ireland could be generally prosperous under that influence, it would be an exception to the universal experience that, where Rome rules, material, as well as spiritual, destitution spreads over the land.

The True Census. It is usual to base estimates of the prosperity of a nation upon the growth of its population, but such statistics often are very misleading. Counting bodies only, the millions held in subjection by an empire are regarded as the foundation upon which its greatness rests. But, as a thoughtful writer has said:—

> The real vitality of an empire is not even in the men and women who pay its taxes, but in those who live and die, not merely to stain a map in colour, but to dig its foundations strong and deep. Only God keeps count of these, the nation's bulwark and defence, and when these fail it falls, though it be walled round with forts. . . . We talk of saving the empire; the only way to save it is to make it a theocracy, seeking not its own glory, but the glory of God.

Disestablishment "from Within." The Churchmen's Liberation League, which was started five years before the "crisis" in the Anglican Church became acute, has now supporters and sympathizers in every diocese, whose aim is the promotion of Disestablishment from within the Church itself. At a recent gathering, prominent Churchmen expressed the conviction that the only method of reforming the Church was by first freeing it from State control; and acknowledged that the existing connection between Church and State in England has become injurious to the spiritual interests of the Church and a hindrance to the progress of true religion. Even the Church Times has made a candid pronouncement on the subject. That the severance of Church and State has ceased to be the bugbear of large numbers of Churchmen, is well-known. Here at last we have the chief organ of the dominant party in the Anglican Church openly considering its advisability from the Church point of view. Accepting the very reasonable dictum that the Establishment is good where State and Church are co-terminous, bad where that condition is absent, and only tolerable in proportion as that condition is fulfilled, it goes on to say that from this point of view it might well seem that in England, at the beginning of the twentieth century, the establishment of the Church is a fruitful cause of evil on all hands. Citizens, who are not Churchmen, have ground for objection in that a religious body which is not, in fact, national enjoys the privilege and prestige of a national Church. Churchmen, on the other hand, have a grievance in the possibility at any moment of a Unitarian becoming Prime Minister, and filling the Episcopal thrones with his nominees.

Apathy and Temperance Reform. The need of rousing public opinion to greater activity on the drink question is seen in the futility of legislative reform till that is done. There never was a time when it was more needed. As can be shown from revenue returns, the consumption of drink is twice as much per head in this country as it is in the United States. And yet it seems impossible to move the nation to a real recognition of the seriousness of the situation, much less to an effective spirit of reform. It would appear as though a social evil must appear in some leprous and scandalous form before public opinion can be really roused. Norway, which is now one of the soberest countries in Europe, was once the most drunken, and it was not till the evil had grown so great as to threaten the very existence of the nation that, in sheer alarm, the Norwegians faced and grappled with it, happily to good result. It would be idle to build on so grim a contingency in the case of Britain. Where Norway succeeded, we may fail. Hence the need for strenuous and indefatigable temperance work.

Drink and our Sailors. Quite a stir has been caused in commercial circles by Captain Lamb's speech, made at the annual meeting of the Liverpool Mercantile Marine Association, upon the state of the Merchant Service. The discussion which it has provoked is likely to do real good, by calling attention both to the laxity of the present order of things and to the dangers attending the same. Captain Angier, of a well-known firm, declares (thus confirming Captain Lamb) that British masters would not engage so many foreign seamen were they not driven to do so on account of the insobriety of the British sailor. The chief cause alleged for this discreditable position of affairs is the inactivity of the Board of Trade and their refusal to grant more disciplinary power to commanders of vessels. If this is so, a powerful deputation of masters might move the department to activity both in the interests of the country and of the men themselves. And it would be an excellent thing if more captains took a personal interest in the sailors' institutes, which are found everywhere. When a ship reaches port, the men go off whither they will, and there are always plenty of vile creatures waiting to plunder them—financially and morally. Sailors are often very tender-hearted fellows, and a little leading from a generous captain would go a long way with many of them.

Discharged Prisoners. The authorities are at last taking a strong attitude of repression against the custom of many Boards of Guardians of depositing the children of prisoners who are being released from prison, at the prison-doors. Such an act is most prejudicial to the chances of a man just released, to find work at once, and many cases of hardship arise from it. The reason alleged for such action is the desire of the Guardians to keep down expense. But it is a shortsighted policy, which in the end defeats itself; it hinders the parent from taking his place in the ranks of workers, and the Government is wisely advised in its endeavour to do away with it.

Barrack Schools. In the annual report of the State Children's Association there is a strong complaint that, in spite of the condemnation of the custom, there are still 3,141 children in metropolitan infirmaries and workhouses. "Barrack schools" have been officially condemned more than once, the system of boarding pauper children out having long since been proved to be the best way to deal with them. And yet, at the present time, only 5 per cent. of such children are boarded out, while £48,000 have been spent within the last five years on the structural improvement of the schools in which the others are herded. The blighting effect of the barrack system upon the individuality of the children, who have to be kept as a class apart, and under peculiarly strict supervision, is well known. The public has a right to see better provision made for the training of the unfortunate children who have to be cared for by the State through no fault of their own, and who are thus sorely handicapped in the race of life.

"Paternal" Masters. It may be safely affirmed that great numbers of young people employed as domestic servants or as assistants in shops, &c., take the wrong turning in life for lack of kind "parental" direction. Away from their own home influences, their lives are sharply divided into two parts. In the one part they have to serve their masters under strict rules; in the other part they are free to seek their own pleasure in hours of relaxation. The master's jurisdiction does not extend to this second part. But this is just the dangerous part of a young person's life, in which a little kind parental counsel is most needed. In old English life both servants and assistants entered more into the family life of their masters than they do now, and the dangers menacing young people were greatly decreased. In our modern large establishments this sort of thing is next to impossible in the same way, but there ought to be an attempt, in some degree, to introduce the home element. If not as a whole, it could be done departmentally.

Rome and Modern France. An extremely able and discriminating paper from the pen of our friend Pastor R. Saillens, of Paris, upon the subject of "Roman Catholicism and Modern France," appears in the current number of the Sword and Trowel. It will be advantageous to all lovers of the Lord's work upon the Continent to acquaint themselves with this article, in which the true inwardness of the religious situation in France is clearly exposed. M. Saillens describes France to-day as "the battlefield of two worlds—the old and the new; too Popish to be steady in her liberal course, too anti-Popish to sit down quietly in mediæval darkness." One proof of this is found in the fact that many of the gross superstitions which flourish in Spain and Italy are unpopular in France. The Inquisition has never settled in France, and Jesuitism is illegal and odious to the people. The conclusion reached by M. Saillens is this:—

> Such, then, is the France of to-day: deceived by freethought, prejudiced against Protestantism, yet still more abhorrent of the Jesuits' rule. She is waiting for something: for what Emile Zola, at the close of one of his books, loudly calls a new religion!—a religion of good sense, of liberty, and of morality. Where will it come from? It must come from us, or it will come from nowhere.

Mortgaging the Future.

IN this phrase is suggested one of the most prevalent and dangerous features of present-day life—a tendency that pervades every class of society, and which threatens both in public and in private life to poison the future happiness of those who give way to it, whether they be nations or individuals.

By it we mean the growing habit of pushing the burden of to-day on to to-morrow; of incurring present responsibilities which can only be met next month or next year; of drawing largely on the bank of credit in order to enjoy a luxury or to avoid an act of self-denial.

Recently we were in the throes of a violent discussion, in which the whole nation was taking part, as to the proper way to meet the expenses of the terrible war still going on in South Africa. About eleven millions of this money is to be met by present taxation; the rest (by far the larger part) is to be added to the national debt. That in itself is a striking instance of the tendency before us, though probably to some extent at least inviting. But, not content with postponing the payment of the bulk of our indebtedness into the dim future, we find a violent antipathy, on the part of those on whom this new taxation falls, to bear their share of the national burden at all; and it is certain, that whatever other industries or incomes were taxed, there would be the same protest. Rather than tax ourselves, we would (all but a very few) say:—"Add the whole amount to the National Debt, and let the future pay it."

Public bodies are guilty of the same policy. It would of course be both impossible and unjust to expect the present to pay down for all the public works and the improvements in physical and social comforts such as tramlines, reservoirs, harbours, parks, &c., of which future generations will have the enjoyment. At the same time the debts incurred by our county and local authorities, in the name of the public, are steadily growing, and unless checked, our children will find that they are buying their comforts at a ruinous rate.

But it is in private life that the most dangerous form of this evil is seen. Half a generation ago a healthy and successful commercial movement was initiated — that of buying and selling on the cash system, and a great boon it has been both to traders and customers to carry on their business on this sound and honest basis. More recently, however, an opposite movement has begun, and is now spreading at an alarming rate. Firms, anxious to secure business, send attractive prospectuses round broadcast with such headings as this, "Why Pay Cash, when you can buy everything on the Instalment Principle?" Thousands of weak-kneed people are caught by these fascinating circulars, and fall into the temptation of buying what they cannot afford to pay for. Young couples furnish their houses more expensively than they can need on the "hire system," and weight their first year of married life with anxieties they should never have incurred. Young men with slender incomes buy expensive bicycles, cameras, musical instruments, and other luxuries all too thoughtlessly, and either forfeit their purchases by failing to continue payment, or have to pinch themselves of necessaries in order to provide themselves with superfluities. In a hundred subtle forms this evil spreads.

It would be well if all who are tempted in this way would pause. It is the easy road, that leads often into difficulties and sometimes into ruin. We have been warned on the highest of all authorities not to borrow to-morrow's trouble. The same great word applies in reverse—we should never shirk to-day's trouble or responsibility by pushing it off into the morrow. Each week's, each month's, each year's responsibilities should be carefully met as they fall due. This is the secret of solvency, of peace, of happiness.

There is one other application of the subject. We are spiritually prone to the same peril. It is the root of all procrastination, of all delay, in settling the great questions and responsibilities of the soul. "To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow!" How much failure and sorrow and tragedy is expressed in that sad word! It is the "primrose way" to the pit of remorse and ruin—this easy escaping from to-day's duty by mortgaging to-morrow's opportunity. Hope is a beautiful angel, but there is one robed like her who is the Prince of Darkness, and when he whispers "There will be time—to-morrow," he is borrowing from the vocabulary of a Christian grace a weapon for the undoing and slaying of the soul.

The Epistle of James.

By Rev. T. A. GURNEY, M.A., LL.B., Swanage.

IV.—Final Approval and Final Rejection.

FROM the thought of trial, with its great purpose, we pass on to the goal which lies beyond it. Trial, or temptation, faithfully endured, will bring with it final approval (R.V., "when he hath been approved") at the hour of Christ's coming. Trust in earthly good will carry in its wake ruin and death.

What is our most pressing need in our trials? Wisdom from above. For there is everything in such difficulties to produce nervous anxiety, hasty irritability, or even cowardly panic. So, in answer to one who cannot count trial a thing of pure joy yet, James says, "If, as a matter of fact, you are conscious that you are very lacking, that you lack wisdom itself how to act, ask for this living insight, and it shall be given you." Here, again, is another of the many echoes of the Sermon on the Mount, which make much of the music of this Epistle. They deserve a Bible study to themselves.

But such asking must have certain simple features in order to be successful. (I.) It must realize God's willingness to give. "Ask from the giving God." What a contrast to the Pantheist's, the Moslem's, the Heathen's God! Immanent in nature yet above it; transcendent, yet in closest sympathy with his creature. The answered prayer of Elias (v. 17) shows that the prayer of a righteous man availeth much (v. 16) when "energised" by the Spirit of God. More than this, He gives "to all" alike liberally, without reservation, without after-thought, and even without upbraiding. But for this, the sense of past mistakes, or misuse made even of answered prayer, would make us despair of praying. "He giveth more grace" ("a greater grace," marg. R.V.) to the humble (iv. 6).

(II.) Such asking must also be whole-hearted. Our real hindrances to answered prayer lie in ourselves. We must "ask in faith, by no means wavering." This word "doubting" or "wavering" describes the divided heart, the vacillating allegiance, "the conjunction of yes and no, but so that 'no' has the preponderance." "Conscience," say I, "you counsel well." "Fiend," say I, "you counsel well." But fiend has it. The same word recurs in ii. 4, in a bad sense: "Are you not at variance with your faith?" A tremendous nature-picture clenches the necessity for this whole-hearted faith. The doubter "is like a wave of the sea, driven by the wind and tossed."

Is it fanciful to detect in the very rhythm of the words employed, "anemidzomenos" and "ripidzomenos," a clue to their meaning? The wave, first lifted by the wind, then fanned into surfy madness; swelling and retreating; roaring before the oncoming storm and sobbing in the after-swell along the shore; borne aloft (Weisinger) like the doubter with lifted crest (in proud contempt of the world), broken and grovelling on the sand; "green glimmering toward the summit" with "stormy crests that smoke against the skies," then falling "in vast sea cataracts," "whitening for half a league," far over marbled sands. These two words must echo a personal recollection. James must have seen that storm on the Lake of Galilee which was not far from Nazareth.

A heart so torn with the rough tempests of doubt cannot reflect the calm, clear light of the Father's will, cannot be the mouthpiece of the Spirit's pleading, cannot safely carry upon its storm-swept bosom the precious freight of answered prayer. "A doubtful petitioner," says Stier, "offers not to God a steady hand or heart, so that God cannot deposit in it his gift." "Let not that man," emphatically adds James, "imagine that he shall receive anything from the Lord."

The deep, latent secret of his disquiet is then unmasked. He is "two-souled." The very word is coined as a picture of his pitiable state. Within, unseen to the eye of man, but keenly marked by God and manifest in fatal result, the fierce civil war between the King de facto and the King de jure, between Flesh and Spirit, between Lust and Love, between Sense and Faith, Self and God, is ever going on. Of necessity his outward life reflects this inward struggle, like the sea's hollow warning along the shore of the storm raging elsewhere. He is "unstable," "tossed with tempest" (Isa. liv. 11. Sept.), "in all his ways."

The remedy for such instability is the glorying in the will of God as best, whatever it brings. "Love," says Caussade ("Abandonment," p. 14), "holds the place of all things to souls that walk in the way of abandonment." The poor Christian may glory in his present spiritual exaltation. The rich Sadducean Jew may glory equally in the loss of those earthly possessions, identified with which he himself (not merely his riches, verse 10), shall pass away. Separation betimes from that which is hastening to destruction can alone save the true life. Another nature-picture brings the lesson home. You mark in swift succession, as the picture of the rich man's danger (it finds echo in v. 3, 4), the rising of the sun with its fierce, burning heat-glare; the eastern wind from the desert, synonymous, in its very name of Kauson, with heat; the withering of the grass; the falling off of the flower from its calyx, blighted; the perishing thus suddenly yet irrevocably of "the grace of the fashion of it." Thus hopelessly, thus finally, shall the rich man perish in his journeyings after gain ("his goings," R.V.), his restless quest after perishing riches. "Riches," says Manton here, "will be your abasement, if you do not make them so."

The crown of life will be given to the Christian when he has been fully tested, whether by poverty or wealth. The very word "Stephanos" implies the largess of blessing which it bestows. It is (Mayor) the wreath of victory, the festal ornament of the elect, the crown which secures an everlasting prize. It is "promised" by the Lord Himself. Probably we have here one more of the unwritten words of the Lord Jesus. "The Church is heir to the Cross," said Luther. But there is a crown beyond it.

The Protestant Succession.

NOTHING less than the Protestant Succession to the British Crown is aimed at by the Romish agitation which has been more or less active since the King repeated and subscribed the Declaration against Transubstantiation in February last. The prime movers make no secret of this as being their ultimate aim, but many who are seconding their subtle proposals are altogether insensible to the real object of the movement, and also as to the inevitable results that must attend the attainment of such object.

In the first place, the Declaration is not abusive or vituperative, as might be inferred from the writings and speeches of those who condemn it. In the second place, it is not a denunciation of the religious views or opinions of others, either in this or other lands. It is a statement of personal conviction, and nothing more.

The Declaration is made by the Sovereign for himself. It says nothing of religion in the state or Popery in the nation. It simply speaks of these as they affect the Sovereign himself; and for the assurance of the people as a whole, religious or irreligious, Protestant or Roman Catholic, the Sovereign "solemnly and sincerely in the presence of God"

TRAVERSES IN THE MOST EMPHATIC MANNER

the doctrine which every Papist is rigorously required to hold. No one can remain a Romanist and say:—

I do believe that in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper there is not any transubstantiation of the elements of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ at or after the consecration thereof by any person whatsoever; and that the invocation or adoration of the Virgin Mary or any other saint, and the sacrifice of the Mass, as they are now used in the Church of Rome, are superstitious and idolatrous.

This, however, is said by the Sovereign, and more, for he adds that he uses the significant words "in the plain and ordinary sense, . . as they are commonly understood by English Protestants, without any evasion, equivocation, or mental reservation whatsoever"—also without any dispensation, actual or prospective, by the Pope or any other authority or person.

This Declaration is a test; and a free people do well to apply such a test. The which imposes the test, is a heritage which every Briton should venerate and jealously conserve. God was with the nation when Parliament adopted the "Act Declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject and Settling the Succession of the Crown." He has been with the nation since; and the measure and degree in which his presence and blessing are now recognized will have much to do with the spirit in which Papal threats and intrigues are met in their latest development.

"BILL OF RIGHTS,"

The Declaration guards the throne in the interest of the people. Our ancestors were wise in the form of words drawn up to secure this end; and Kings and Queens who have sought the public weal have readily made the Declaration their own. No test could have been more satisfactory in operation. In the words of

A ROMAN CATHOLIC WRITER,

in a pamphlet on the subject, the Declaration is "an effective bar" against Papists succeeding to the throne; "no Catholic could speak the words and remain a Catholic."

In a word, the Declaration against Transubstantiation is an act by which the Sovereign is rendered ineligible for Papal service. He cannot use the words put into his mouth, and at the same time be an agent of the Pope. The Standard, like other papers, has written in favour of alteration; but as to the revised form it adds, "The task is one of no ordinary delicacy." We have said the same, and are at a loss to conceive of a Declaration that shall at once provide the needed safeguards and be unobjectionable to Roman Catholics.

Having secured their liberties at a great price, our Protestant ancestors aimed to secure for their posterity the same blessing. They cannot have dreamed that, at the end of two hundred years or so, nominal Protestants would be found practically saying that it matters little or nothing whether the Sovereign be a puppet of the Pope of Rome or a liberty-loving ruler of a free people.

DUTY TO GOD.

SIR,—It is with much sorrow that I have noticed a tendency to outweigh our duty to God by a sense of duty to men. To pander to men in cases of Christian doctrine is to insult the Blessed God, act unfaithfully to Christ, and despise the blessed liberty purchased by the blood of many of God's martyrs at the hand of murderous Rome. Sentiment should not be allowed to come in when it is a question of the living Word of the living God.

One of the last links which have bound this country under God's gracious protection for so many years now, was snapped when Mr. Bradlaugh was allowed to refuse to bow to the professed avowal of faith in God and enter a Parliament unfaithful to their constitution. Now another critical moment is at hand for this country, and I appeal to you and all Christians, while it may be true that Romish rule may yet usurp for a time the rule of the King of kings, to see to it that such a catastrophe is not aided by Christian blindness, worldliness, and lack of fidelity to Him who has loved us and given Himself for us, that we should spend the "time of our sojourning here in fear" and "bring forth fruit unto God."—Yours in the love of Christ, A. E. WALKER.

24, Bunhill Row, E.C.

THE DECLARATION AFFORDS PROTECTION.

SIR,—Apply the principle of removing everything in our constitution uncongenial to Roman Catholics, on the ground that it is a stumbling-block, and a hindrance to their receiving the true light of the Gospel, and you will thereby throw open the throne and government of this country to the Papacy to control at will, and leave our Sovereign absolutely unprotected from the Vatican.

Moreover, until Roman Catholics learn the plain fact that their system is of a character condemned by God as idolatry, it is unlikely they will forsake it. The plain, strong words of the Declaration are like the searching condemnations and home thrusts of the Gospel preacher's voice. Painful to hear, and kicked against by Satan's dupes, let us hope they will lead to searching of heart, and better still of Holy Scripture, with blessed results to many a darkened soul.

Even Roman Catholics are likely, therefore, thus to benefit by them, and if, as their own organs admit, they have prevented for over 200 years the occupation of our English throne by a member of the Roman Apostasy, they have their use not only for Protestant Christians, who thus enjoy the freedom of private and public worship, but for our Roman Catholic fellow-subjects, who are thus protected from the vile coercion of their own canon law in all its dread ecclesiastical and inquisitorial terrors. No wonder the Jesuits wish the Declaration altered, and teach so many Christians clever and plausible excuses for accomplishing their design. E. MANSEL TOWNSHEND.

Llanvapley Rectory, Abergavenny.

ROME'S DECLARED OBJECT.

SIR,—It is probably true that it is "mainly persons connected with Protestant Societies who want to maintain the terms of the King's Declaration;" the obvious reason being that those persons, having made a special study of the whole subject, are more alive to the real dangers involved in any alteration than any other persons can possibly be.

It must be acknowledged, however, that the modification now sought for sounds very reasonable, and it would be reasonable were we dealing with any other system than that of Rome; but those Protestants who desire such modification should remember that, by Rome's own confession, they will be satisfied with nothing less than the absolute subjugation of this free country to the dominion of the Pope of Rome, although our Roman Catholic friends have made so many fair promises to the contrary. To this end Rome's agents have been persistently at work ever since the Reformation, and have so completely succeeded in hoodwinking our statesmen from time to time that a large number of enactments have been introduced tending in that direction.

When the Roman Catholic Emancipation Act was passed in 1829—which Dr. Chalmers afterwards described as "an historic blunder"—the Roman Catholics solemnly swore, amongst other things, before the Parliamentary Committee, "that they would never attempt to assail the Act of Settlement, or endeavour to upset the Protestant succession to the throne." Our then statesmen, being ignorant of Rome's dreadful duplicity, apparently looked upon that undertaking as being genuine, sincere, and reliable; but neither they nor those who are now ready to alter the Declaration appear to have taken into account Rome's imperious mandate that "by no law natural or divine is it obligatory to keep faith with heretics."

Surely Lord Eldon's words in the House of Lords spoken on the occasion of the passing of the Emancipation Act, read almost like a prophecy:—"Those Roman Catholics with whom we have to deal are much too wary to apprise us, by any immediate conduct, of our danger; but that they will triumph—not to-day nor to-morrow, but when I shall have been consigned to the urns and sepulchres of mortality—I have no more doubt than that I now stand here. I, therefore, my Lords, pray to God that those evils may be averted which I foresee." While in 1851, in reference to another Act further facilitating the reintroduction of Popery into this country, Cardinal Manning said, "The Royal supremacy has perished, and the supremacy of the Vicar of Jesus Christ re-enters England full of life."

If some Protestants cannot "find consistency in the selection of two out of so many errors for special denunciation," let me assure them that our Roman Catholic friends find no difficulty whatever on that score, for in the Roman Catholic paper, The Month, for March, 1896, we read: "There are two things that explain the selection made by England (in the King's Declaration of these doctrines to be repudiated by way of political test, first, the convenience of finding an effective bar against the Papists. . . . It must be admitted that the test was effective: no Catholic could speak the words and remain a Catholic." While in a recent issue of The Tablet, it is admitted that the reference, in the Declaration, to transubstantiation "strikes home to the very heart of the conflict."

In view of such testimony, I leave it to your readers to judge whether it is not our highest wisdom to oppose any alteration whatever in the King's Declaration.—Yours faithfully, SIDNEY COLLETT.

191, Belsize Road, N.W.

A TIME TO SPEAK PLAINLY.

SIR,—As to the Plea for Amendment, should it not rather be called a plea for a further concession to Romish demands? Is it not more than ever important in these days to call a spade a spade, than to beat about the bush in the vain idea of conciliating those who, by the very tenets of their Church, are bound not to be conciliated?

It is argued that the Protestant Declaration has singled out only two errors for repudiation, and inquiry is made as to why the others are not named. The answer is obvious. The Bill of Rights was not a theological instrument, and was drawn up for a specific purpose, and therefore selected the two fundamental dogmas which no Roman Catholic could repudiate. And therefore our Sovereign must of necessity be a Protestant after having once taken the oath, and recited his repudiation of Transubstantiation and Mariolatry, without any mental reservation whatever.

Our Lord Himself, all gentleness, love, and kindness as He was, was not mealy-mouthed when He denounced the corruptions of the Jewish priesthood—a priesthood, be it remembered, endowed, established, and founded by God Himself. And therefore I do not think the wording of the Protestant Declaration and Oath a whit too strong.

Finally, we are told that this Royal Declaration hinders the conversion of the untutored and uncultured Roman Catholic peasants in the West of Ireland! I doubt whether one in a thousand of them has ever so much as heard of this necessary safeguard to our religious liberty and freedom.—Yours, &c.,

Southsea. AGATHOS.

Saints.

"CALLED to be saints!" in a world unclean,
Saints, with the upturned transfixed gaze;
Walking in white, while a hand unseen,
Wondrously guides thro' begrimed highways.

"Called to be saints," by the small still voice,
And wearing a red cross-mark imprest,
As living sign of a deathless choice.
Deep, deep down in a love-thrilled breast.

"Called to be saints," in the damp, chill night,
Of many a sorrow that may not pass;
And not where a flood of beauteous light
Pours gleaming gold thro' cathedral glass.

"Called to be saints," with these beating hearts
That sicken and sigh in life's rough press;
And not with the finely-chiselled parts
Of pulseless forms in a dim recess.

"Called to be saints," in some lowly sphere,
Unwritten large on the roll of fame;
With few to notice, and less to cheer,—
Possessing withal God's mystic name.

WINIFRED A. IVERSON.

Guildford Convention.

By the invitation of the convener and chairman, Rev. Francis Paynter, a large assembly of friends interested in the deepening of the spiritual life came together at the opening of the Guildford Convention last week. Among the speakers were Revs. E. W. Moore, A. E. Barnes-Lawrence, Evan Hopkins, J. Gregory Mantle, W. Fuller Gooch, and others. The spirit of expectancy was clearly evidenced, silent prayer in most of the meetings giving place to clearly expressed words for definite blessing.

One can only in these columns give the outline of one or two of the addresses given; all were intensely helpful, and decidedly practical, and must have given much joy to many hearts, and lifted many souls to higher planes.

Rev. E. W. Moore, speaking from Isa. xl. 31, said: The words were spoken of desponding ones (27). Despondency may arise from physical causes, or from temporal trials, when difficulties thicken on the path, and circumstances seem against us; or it may be caused by, or arise from, spiritual conditions. A small coin may blot out the sun if held near the eye. It is also a word of encouragement to prayerful spirits; all the strength and grace that God can give us are awaiting those who fulfil the conditions. See the three-fold promise, "They shall mount up, they shall run, they shall walk." Mark the order! If any but God had written it it would not have begun "They shall mount up." We shall never run along the quagmires, the bogs, or even along the daily monotony of everyday life, unless we first have strength to soar aloft, then when we have mounted up like eagles we shall have strength to come down and walk as becometh risen ones in Christ.

There is here a heavenly atmosphere. I have seen a golden eagle soaring 14,000 feet above the earth; mounting above the clouds and mists of earth, so may we soar in the light of the Divine countenance. Mark, also, there is a heavenly vision. How differently the eagle views the things of earth to any of the animals chained to terra firma; its habitat is the sky, and it can afford to look down upon the things of earth. But there is also a Divine strength implied. There is all the difference when in trial in "fleeing on horses," and using your wings. The devil may put a hedge round you,

BUT HE CAN'T PUT A ROOF ON IT.

The way of life is above; get above you difficulties. How different is the flight of an eagle to that of an arrow! With what speed the arrow starts on its journey; but the farther it goes the less swift it becomes, the less steady, and at last falls helpless. How different the eagle! With difficulty perhaps it has been taught to fly; the mother bird sails with the eaglets on her broad expanse of wings, sails into the azure, and then drops them. In alarm they flutter, in their terror stretch out their wings, and almost as their terror increases their ease and comfort grow, for the stronger they become, until as they mature and grow they soar aloft. The arrow flies by the power of an external impulse, the eagle flies by the power of an indwelling life.

Let us be careful! We may get a lift, a push from a convention or a meeting, but the glowing flame may die down, the ardour decrease, but if it be the intaking of the life more abundant by the Spirit, it will last. A friend advertised to speak from "The blessing which lasts." The place was crowded—everyone wanted a blessing which lasted. Let us fulfil the conditions "Wait upon the Lord." The life of a man is his will; let us exchange our wills for his. It has been said, "It is no good for a bird to have wings unless he flaps them." So let us exercise our faith: let us flap our wings and soar aloft; let us "lay hold of eternal life," and we shall mount up like eagles, we shall run and not be weary, we shall walk and not be faint.

In the afternoon of Tuesday, Mr. Moore also gave the address, choosing as his text Song of Solomon iv. 16: "Awake, O north wind: and come thou south; blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out. Let my Beloved come into his garden and eat his pleasant fruits." Here are a few of the leading thoughts:—We all take an interest in gardens. How lovely they begin to look. Our special interest, our deepest sorrows, our highest hopes are bound up in a garden. Paradise was lost in a garden, and we had well-nigh said was regained in that garden of dark Gethsemane. Heaven will be a garden as well as a city, for there shall grow therein the Tree of Life. Christ was mistaken for a gardener once, and no wonder for He was the Supervisor of the garden. But we are not talking now of the garden of guilt, nor the garden of sorrow, nor the garden of glory, but the garden of the Church. The Church is here

COMPARED TO A GARDEN.

Gardens are sometimes purchased at considerable sums. A certain garden at Oxford where Addison was wont to walk was sold for an enormous sum. The hanging gardens of Babylon cost not merely money but human lives in their construction, and we know at what price the Church was bought "which He hath purchased with his own blood." The garden of the soul was of great value, and its redemption was precious.

The Church is compared to a garden also because it has been reclaimed from the wild desert. Parts of Australia which were once desert, have by irrigation been converted into colonial vineyards. Central Park, New York, was also reclaimed and made to blossom like the rose. So has our Divine Husbandman reclaimed his people from a purposeless life, and enabled her to bring forth fruit unto God. He will make her desert like the garden of God. A garden after it has been reclaimed needs to be carefully tended, to be fenced, to be guarded from wild boars from without, and kept from weeds within. Hath He not promised to water his garden, and to tend it night and day?

Some Christians have "saving grace," but know little of "keeping grace." They seem to confuse our Lord's responsibility with their own. Our responsibility to trust continually; his to keep eternally. He keeps by his power, his providence, and his presence. He preserves us also from those things which retard our growth.

In a garden there is also a variety of flowers and fruit; every kind of flower is there, the lofty palm, the lowly daisy. A Quaker friend once said, "All flowers ought to be of the colour of drab," but we could not agree with him; there is a beauty in the diversity of a garden.

A garden to be well watered needs to have a fountain in it, and so at Versailles and Peterhof you have fountains in the gardens. So in the garden of the Lord there is a river, an indwelling fountain,

AT WHICH WE ALL MAY DRINK.

O beloved ones, do not go to God for salvation and somewhere else for pleasure!

A garden is meant for the pleasure of the owner. "Let my beloved come into his garden."

My Saviour comes and walks with me,
And sweet communion here have we.

Notice in closing the prayer offered, "Awake, O north wind: and come, thou south; blow upon my garden:" Many will say, "I cannot pray for the north wind; that will wither up my garden." Ah, the weeds have need to be killed, as well as the flowers to be nourished, and an important factor is that biting, killing wind.

On Thursday two remarkable addresses were given by the Bishop of Mombasa and Mr. Fuller Gooch, but space hinders our speaking of them here.

On Tuesday evening a Christian Endeavour rally was held in the smaller hall, when hearty singing, mingled with earnest, brief prayers, characterized the service. An interesting and helpful address was then given by Mr. Spencer Walton, of South Africa. Meetings were held in the open-air on three evenings under the direction of Mr. John McAuliffe. Large audiences gathered as the twilight deepened. Interesting testimonies were given by many young brethren, and distinct, definite, and awakening addresses were also delivered by well-known evangelists and Mr. McAuliffe. C. C.

Southsea Convention.

The Southsea Convention opened, as usual, on Whit-Monday. In the absence, through serious illness of Rev. F. Baldey, Rev. J. F. Butlin presided, and at the opening prayer meeting directed the thoughts of his hearers to 1 Sam. vii. 1-7, pointing out that it is possible to lament over and yet cleave to idolatry, with the inevitable result of leading to trouble. Rev. Dr. J. Gritton spoke on the promise of Another Comforter, who came as promised; and was followed by Rev. N. S. Taylor (Prayer Union for the Lord's Return).

In the early part of Tuesday Mr. Butlin gave addresses on, "How much more" (Luke xi. 13); and on Rom. iii. 19, illustrating the condemnation of Jews and Gentiles alike under the law by reference to the procedure in ordinary courts of justice. Dr. Gritton expounded in interesting and instructive fashion Psalm lxxxiv. In a Bible reading given in the afternoon, Rev. Hubert Brooke—beginning at 1 Thess. i.—traced the regular growth of the New Creature in Christ, and showed how the different Epistles are specially adapted to the successive stages.

On Wednesday a second Bible reading was based on Eph. iv. 10-12, when the relative privileges and responsibilities of pastors and people were faithfully pointed out, and the fact shown that all are required for the perfecting of the saints, and the edifying of the body of Christ.

On Thursday addresses were given by Dr. Neatby, Rev. J. Luce, and Rev. R. Middleton; and the afternoon was devoted to a missionary meeting. A letter was read by Dr. Gritton, recounting some of the atrocities practised upon the Stundists in Russia. This was followed by addresses from Mr. Joyce (China Inland Mission) and Rev. H. E. Fox (Church Missionary Society), dealing with the gifts of the Holy Ghost, and the necessity for testifying to them.

The evening meeting was addressed by Mr. Middleton, who delivered a most heart-searching address upon the growth and ripening of the grape, laying stress upon its bloom, &c. Mr. Fox followed, asking for whom fruit was grown. Not for for its own benefit, not for that of the tree, only for the owner.

White Cross League.

An influential meeting was held in Westminster Town Hall on Wednesday of last week, on the occasion of the eighteenth annual meeting of the White Cross League. The Bishop of London (who presided) said that as head of Oxford House he had come in daily contact with a great many young men, and hundreds of them were as free from vice as any woman. Such was his reply to the devil's lie which was circulated by vicious men among the younger fellows in their midst. He who kept his mind off filthy subjects, and took plenty of physical exercise, would find it not only possible but easy to live a pure life—that life which the chivalry due to all women demanded of them. Many men said they would not drag a pure girl down—why then, when she had fallen, should they kick her lower, instead of endeavouring to lift her up? The sin was theirs just as much as it was that of the first man who struck her down. Disgusting pictures and the impure literature read by boys and girls had a good deal to answer for, but the White Cross League was doing a great work in distributing literature to counteract their evil effect. He had used it himself for years before he came in contact with the Society.

Mr. W. S. de Winton spoke from a layman's standpoint, and advised that parents should speak to their boys and girls before they sent them away to school, so that they might be fore-armed against evil companions; Major Frederick spoke of the great debt he owed the White Cross League for the aid they had given him among the thousands of young soldiers under his command at Caterham; and Sir Dyce Duckworth, M.D., treated the subject from a medical point of view.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, June 16. Mark ix.

THE Transfiguration probably took place at night, at the end of the quiet week of rest in which our Lord prepared Himself and his followers for his decease. The light that shone upon his face broke from within. Long afterwards, the Apostle Peter remembered it, when he said, "We were eye-witnesses of his majesty when He received from God the Father honour and glory, and there came such a voice from the excellent glory." Always after, Mount Hermon to him and others was "the Holy Mount" (2 Peter i. 16-18). The glory of that hour did not blind our Lord from the inevitable suffering through which alone his true glory could be secured (v. 12).

In the miracle that follows, the most important item is the contrast between the if of the father, and the if of Jesus. For the one, the fear was that Christ would not have power enough; for the other, that the father would not have faith enough. A true faith may be obscured by a good deal of unbelief. Do not look at your faith, but at Christ. A small glass of water is sufficient to set in motion a vast hydraulic press, and the least touch of faith is sufficient to move omnipotence.

The best of men are but men at the best. We all need the lesson of humility and mercy which our Lord inculcated in vv. 36, 39, and we all need to adopt severe measures with every member that offends, that causes us to stumble.

MONDAY, June 17. Mark x.

The law of marriage was extremely loose among the Jews, as is always the case when society is nearing some terrible catastrophe which will shatter it. The Pharisees taught that men might put away their wives for the most trifling causes. So long as the writing of divorcement was given, a man was free from any obligation to his wife, and each of them was at liberty to marry again. It seemed almost more than the disciples could accept, that their Master should insist on such a radical reform as the application of the original law of Eden—one man for one woman, one woman for one man. Is not Christ radical? Did He not go to the roots of things? Note those words, "From the beginning of creation." Go back to the beginning of things.

His love for children (v. 13) was beautiful. They were his Father's little ones, the sweet flowerets of the earth, the nestlings of the heavenly home, who had come to this lower world, trailing clouds of glory. How winsome Jesus was to them; and to the young man who came running with his enthusiastic devotion, and to the disciples who had left all to follow Him! Yes, and to the brethren that wished to sit right and left of his glory; and to Bartimæus, the beggar, crying to Him from the wayside.

But all through these latter chapters there are traces of the burden that rested on his soul, the cup to drink, and the baptism to be baptized with. The comet that stands longest nearest the sun, must be prepared to follow the furthest orbit into the dark. It is those who know so much of the spirit of Christ in this world, that they are brought into sympathy with all the trials that are in his heart, that approve themselves of the same royal nature as his own, and shall sit right and left of Him. In Him these things are natural; in them they are the direct result of the Spirit's work and gift.

TUESDAY, June 18. Mark xi.

Lift up your heads, O ye gates! and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors! Behold, the King cometh, and with Him cometh the kingdom. Go out, O my soul, to welcome Him. Pour out the multitude of thy emotions, thy thoughts, thy praise. Let them make garlands, and strew the way with flowers. When He enters Mansoul, Emmanuel brings blessedness. Blessed is the kingdom of our father David that cometh, when his name and nature are proclaimed. Do not be afraid of Him, O heart of mine, for He is meek and sitteth upon an ass's colt. The royal war-horse, savouring of pride and pageantry, is not for Him. For meek hearts the King is lowly, but for a world in arms He will sit on a white horse conquering and to conquer.

Be not startled, however, if He looks round about upon all things, taking in the whole contents of the inner life at a glance, preparatory to casting out, as in v. 15, the beast-like forms of intruding sin, and all which has stolen away the loyalty which pertains to God only.

The verses that follow from the 20th are full of meaning. Evidently the fig-tree withered in answer to the silent appeal of the Saviour to his Father. In answer to his upward look, the fig-tree had withered from its roots, as an emblem of the inevitableness of the destruction which was threatening the chosen, but fruitless people. This gives the key to successful prayer. When we pray we must believe that we have received (24, R.V.). We must take from God. We must wait before God until we know that He has put into our hands the boon of which we stand in need. But this is only possible to those who live lives of perfect forgiving love towards their fellows, and of absolute obedience and devotion towards God.

WEDNESDAY, June 19. Mark xii.

In the parable of the vineyard, our Lord condensed the history of the Jewish people into a parable, after the manner of Isaiah. The story of Israel is full of the desire on God's part for fruit from those on whom He had expended unusual care. It was a fair question that He asked of old, "What more could I have done?" Prophet after prophet came to gather the ripe fruits of the nation's gratitude and obedience, to be sent away with disappointment, and chagrin, and threats of martyrdom. Jesus knew that as the Son He could expect no better treatment. He knew quite well that they would not brook his assumption of ownership of the vineyard. They could not endure that He should say that Israel was rightfully his. The inheritance must be ours (v. 7). But, notwithstanding the provision of rejection and death, the Lord knew that the spiritual temple of God could not be complete without Him, and that in spite of the hatred of the builders, He would yet become the elect and precious Corner Stone.

All day the tides of battle broke around Him. Verse 13, Pharisees and Herodians tried to catch Him. Then the Sadducees approach Him (v. 18). And lastly, the scribe (v. 28). The warrior that stands with his back against the wall wielding his dinted sword-blade against his assailants, parrying every thrust, and thrusting back, is the only adequate metaphor of this day of duel. Cull from the midst of the clash of arms those precious jewels, "Render to God the things that are God's." "He is the God of the living." "The Lord our God is one." "Thou shalt love." "David saith by the Holy Ghost."

As evening fell He blessed the woman who gave her mites, and appraised them as unspeakable riches, more in value than the gifts which cost nothing. God looks at the amount which is left, man at that which is given.

THURSDAY, June 20. Mark xiii.

Apparently this discourse followed directly on the stormy scenes described in the former chapter. The Master sat on the Mount of Olives to rest on the evening of the last day that He was to spend in Jerusalem, and his four most intimate friends, with some foreboding of approaching disaster, asked for signs that should guide them in navigating the tempestuous seas on which the barque of the Church was entering.

These words are full of instruction for us, because each age ends with much the same characteristics, and as to-day we hear of wars and rumours of wars, as earthquakes, famines, and troubles desolate the surface of the world, as martyrdom crowns the brow of those who count not their lives dear unto them, and as the Gospel is being slowly proclaimed unto all the nations, it becomes increasingly apparent that the end is not far away.

To judge by the twenty-fourth and following verses darker days are yet in store. And as we anticipate them, let us remember that ours must be the pilgrim life, which holds loosely to the present. Surely for us also summer is near (29)! That blessed summer of unclouded glory, of thermal heat, when love and joy shall reach their full maturity. Lift up your heart, fainting one. Summer is nigh! The Lord of the Harvest is at hand, even at the doors.

The evening, when the after-glow of Pentecost was still in the world, has passed; the midnight of the middle ages is passed; the cock crowing of Luther's Reformation is passed; the morning is already breaking. It is high time to awake out of sleep, for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed.

FRIDAY, June 21. Mark xiv.

Simeon, when he took the Babe to his heart, said that in Him the thoughts of many hearts would be revealed. It is remarkable that all who approached our Lord in the last passages of his life-story seemed as though under a peremptory summons to utter their deepest nature. This chapter is a remarkable illustration of these remarkable words.

Mary comes to Him, and, in spite of all the criticism and hostility of Judas and others, reveals herself as a pure and lovely nature, absorbed to self-forgetfulness in her love to the Master. In contrast with her deed of love, in which she so evidently identified herself with the spirit and intention of the Redeemer, stand out the calculating prudence and parsimony of his immediate followers, and the base treachery of Judas. The sun, which draws out the sweet fragrance of flowers, elicits the putrid odours of stagnant water. To some Christ is a savour of death unto death, as to others of life unto life.

The good-natured courtesy of the owner of the house, in which the guest-chamber was procured; the bitter sorrow of the disciples and their heart-searching, when they heard that the traitor was one of themselves; the impetuous insistence of Peter on the tenacity of his devotion to the Lord, which was so contradicted, first by his drowsiness, and then by his denial; the kiss of the traitor; the flight of the young man (thought by some to have been Mark himself); the infamous knavery of the Council, which was tried at the bar of Christ, as He stood before them—all these are revelations of the secrets of many hearts. Let us watch ourselves. Christ is always the touchstone of character.

SATURDAY, June 22. Mark xv.

The more Pilate saw of Jesus, the more he disliked the part which he seemed constrained to play, almost in spite of himself. And of all other traits, the silence of Jesus surprised him most. What sublime faith was evinced in this reticence.

But this power of the Lord Jesus over Himself was so constantly manifested, as when the soporific draught, prepared by the ladies of Jerusalem, was placed to his lips, and He refused to drink it. It was a simple act, yet full of heroism. In such an extremity, one will drink anything; but not so Christ. He would not let his intellect be clouded; He must bear the guilt of the world in his heart and thought, as well as in his body.

In modern executions the greatest pains are taken to make death instantaneous. Anything which prolongs the agony is bitterly resented by us all. But, in crucifixion, death was deliberately prolonged.

All through the five hours of anguish the pain of Christ's body was far inferior to that of his mind. He was dying for the sin of the world. The prince of this world was being judged. Christ was carrying his people with Him through the deep dark waters to the shores of Resurrection and Life. And that act glorified the cross. It had been the symbol of slavery and degradation; from that moment it became the symbol of heroism, self-sacrifice, and salvation. "God forbid that I should glory, save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." Compared with the great ones of this world, Christ's burial was poor, but how rich in love!

F. B. M.

Other Lands.

Mission Work in India.*

A VISITOR'S IMPRESSIONS.

I WITNESSED the funeral of the premier nobleman of a Rajputana State. Two of your missionaries were occupying that place in the procession, which a Hindu prince reserves for his most honoured friends. The deceased, from being the keen opponent of the Mission, became its zealous friend, and earned the nickname of the "Padre's Pupil." On his death-bed he avowed his faith in Christ, and requested the missionaries to befriend his heir as they had befriended him.

I wish you could all visit Mr. Campbell's Colony of Mercy at Toondee, in the heart of the jungle, and see the many products and by-products which the divine dynamics have created there during the last twenty-one years. Take one example: you would find eighteen Santals printing and binding books in five languages, and doing it so well that they are never out of work. They print the only Santali newspaper, and they will soon bring out the first dictionary of their mother tongue. I saw some four hundred heathen Santals at a market. It seemed scarcely believable that they were of the same race as Mr. Campbell's people.

It would do your heart good to see the Medical Missions among these jungle folk. The patients at the hospitals made profound obeisances to me. They did not know that I was only a poor preacher. They thought that I must also be a miracle-worker, a life-giver, and, to use two of their phrases, an eye-maker, and an incarnation of the great god. "Oh, you are not men; you are gods!" said one of these wild hillmen, whose long-lost eyesight had been restored. You will find patients there who have painfully made a nine days' journey, and passed the doors of three or four well-equipped Government dispensaries, lured on by the Christian atmosphere of your hospitals and the fame of your healers.

As we were leaving a hospital, two men came running after us, bringing with them a third. He was weak-minded, they said, and they wanted

THE MEDICINE THAT CURES SILLINESS.

The district magistrate visited one of these Missions, and was delighted. He offered to give what help he could. He made good roads through the jungle to the hospital, and planted 1,000 fruit trees.

A well-known American preacher, on his return from India, told me that he had long hesitated about devoting his daughters to Foreign Missions. But when he saw "the Scotch lasses," as he called them, in India—their happiness in their work, their energy, their well-developed powers of service, and their manifest usefulness, he felt that he could wish nothing better for his daughters than they should be like them.

But some of your missionaries are distressingly overburdened. At Kalna I found what looked like a big fair—mild-eyed oxen chewing the cud, unyoked waggons, groups sitting tailor-wise or frog-wise, and boys selling sweetmeats. These were the patients—many of them far-travelled—around Dr. Macnicol's Bethesda or Mercy Hall, waiting for the moving of the waters. Going inside I found two large waiting halls filled, and one of the doors damaged by the inrushing crowd. Though he had been there for less than two years, he had sometimes 900 patients in one day; and, like his Master, he could often scarcely find time to eat. With joined and uplifted hands they asked me to beseech you to send another Sahib to help their Sahib, and to send their Sahib back to them soon. He had saved many lives they said; and they and their children might die if he did not come back.

None of our missions would long be hampered by the lack of men or money if we were all as liberal in supporting our religion as Hindus are in supporting their squalid idolatries. A visit to India adds emphasis to the poet's exclaim:

In Christian hearts, oh for a pagan zeal!

Some among us are now setting a very noble example. In India I visited some native agents whose salaries are paid by a friend. He is carrying on his business in the interest of foreign missions, and he now supports not less than fifty native missionaries.

I met several mission converts who have lived an honourable Christian life for nearly half a century. Some of the younger converts have gained the complete confidence of the missionaries, while others are as weak as were some of the members of the Apostolic Church. But what about our own converts? Are we inquiring more about fruits abroad than about fruits at home? Is the harvest here, all things considered, relatively as great as in some parts of India?

Many of the missionaries are hopeful. They believe that very many are Christians at heart, who yet make no profession of their faith; and that the Kingdom is coming to India like the dawn. "Young missionaries may be pessimists, but we older missionaries never can, after all the changes we have witnessed," so testifies one.

A young Hindu doctor, when in Glasgow, one day witnessed the celebration of the Lord's Supper. He confessed to me, what I knew to be the fact, that he had wept from the beginning to the end of the service. "Oh," he replied to my query, "I was thinking of the divine beauty and grandeur of your religion, of its wonderful compassion for sinners, widows, children, and outcasts; and was also thinking of my poor country, and our poor religions. What could I do but weep?"

Soldiers in India.

AS a constant reader of your journal, I write to ask you to make known the wants of the Soldiers' Home at Lucknow.

The building, which is one of the finest of its kind in India, was opened last summer. It has secured the patronage of the men of all the regiments here, and as many as 300 often frequent it on a single evening.

Its object is an undenominational one, and it aims at the spiritual welfare of the soldiers, irrespective of their creed. In the prayer room all churches are represented, and many conversions have taken place. Still the Wesleyan chaplain is the responsible manager, and he bears the burden of the debt on the building and its outfit. It has cost £1,800. The Army and Navy Committee in England have given £100 and lent £400 free of interest, to be repaid in ten yearly instalments. About £350 has been subscribed by friends and officers. We now therefore require about £950.

But more important than the debt is the working of the house; and for this we require an English lady who has the gifts and graces that fit her for work among the soldiers. The debt prevents my offering a salary. If it were cleared off we could give a nominal one. Rooms are furnished in the house for the residence of a lady worker. If it is laid on the heart of anyone to offer for this work, I should be glad to hear, and give further particulars. Meantime, may I ask the prayers of God's people that the good work, which has cheered us hitherto, may be continued?

EDWARD MARTIN,
Dilkusha, Lucknow. Wesleyan Chaplain.

The Blind Poor of Jerusalem.—It is almost impossible to overstate the utter sadness of the lives of the destitute blind and half-blind in Palestine. Happily there are hospitals for those who are not incurable; but outside such institutions there are the hopelessly blind. Miss Lovell has opened a small Home in Jerusalem, where eight girls are learning to read and write by means of the Braille system. It is desirable that Miss Lovell should be set free to write, and get written, the books that are needed, as all must be written in Braille before any society can print them. She needs a helper who would assist in the care of the children. Miss Lovell may be addressed care of British Consul, Jerusalem.

"After the Storm."

A NOTE of joyous thanksgiving to God runs through the comprehensive report of the Wesleyan Methodist Mission at Hyderabad, which is published under the above title. Grave fears were entertained that the storm of famine and plague in its passage would scatter the people gathered together, and wreck the work of twenty years. The tempest has been weathered, and the Mission to-day is as strong and buoyant as ever. The prevalence of famine naturally affected its ordinary operations. In each circuit relief works were started within reach of the starving poor, and those who were without other resource were called to day labour. The case of Christians was first considered, and as opportunity arose non-Christians were admitted to the works. The expenditure on relief, of course, has been great, and has been met by the deep concern and sustained liberality of the Missionary Committee and Women's Auxiliary; and it is no too much to say that in three circuits at least churches built up by must inevitably have been dispersed if not destroyed, but for the lavish and loving sacrifice of brethren in the homeland. The altered conditions resulting from the congregation of people in famine camps have been used to the furtherance of the Mission work. Everyone capable of teaching has undertaken daily systematic Bible instruction, and to the greater part of the people the history of our Lord and his Apostles, as well as many portions of the Old Testament, are as familiar as they are to English Christians. The Mission is now responsible for the feeding, clothing, and educating of over 200 helpless little ones.

TWENTY YEARS' ARDUOUS TOIL

The number of native Christians under the pastoral charge is 6,890. This community is scattered over a wide stretch of territory, and is found in 218 different towns and villages. This is far more than the sixty-six evangelists now labouring in connection with the Mission can effectively teach and supervise. Consolidation and progress have been the dominant notes of the life of the Church. Suffering has drawn the members closer together. Ties that bound them to their unregenerate past have been snapped, old customs—more or less reprehensible—have been suppressed, and the entire social life of the people now finds its sanction and support in the Gospel. The district comprises and of these 1,517 are under instruction in the day schools.

2,353 CHILDREN,

Unwholesome and innutritious food this year supplemented the work of the dispensary, and the waiting rooms of the hospital at Medak and the Houses of Blessing at Serjana and Ramayanpett were visited by one unbroken stream of patients, driven on by famine and its attendant ills. The Mission workshops for lace-making at Secunderabad, and for carpentry at Indore, have been in continued operation; and for the former a fine new building has been erected, in preparation for a large development of the industry.

In every department the work has been severely tried during the year, and now that the crisis has passed the Mission stands out stronger and more prosperous than ever, to the thankful joy of the workers.

Seamen at Palermo.—The Palermo branch of the Gibraltar Mission to seamen is the centre of useful activities on behalf of sailors of many nationalities. The chaplain and lay-reader, in visiting the ships, have been received with much friendliness. The sailors have been responsive, and have made good use of the Rest, for the purpose of writing their letters and spending their leisure profitably. The Sunday evening services have been attended by large congregations. The most frequent inquiry is for something to read. Recent newspapers, illustrated periodicals, back numbers of magazines, for distribution, will be gratefully received by the chaplain or reader. The address of the Rest is, "The Welcome," 76, Via Borgo, Palermo.

* Extracted from an address given by Rev. James Wells, D.D., Glasgow, at the General Assembly at the United Free Church of Scotland.

Among the Indians of British Columbia.

AMONG the most striking narratives told at the Ecumenical Missionary Conference, held in New York last year, was that by Bishop Ridley, of the transformation which had taken place in thirty-five years among the Indians of British Columbia through the preaching of the Gospel. At the beginning of that period, he said, "there was not a Christian from the tidal waters, hundreds of miles to where the rivers rise in the midst of the mountains. Now there is not a tribe or a community without its church and school and band of Christians."

The diocese of Caledonia lies to the western portion of British North America, stretching from Alaska southward along the seaboard. Scattered over the area are about 35,000 Indians, a number of the tribes rising above all the others on the continent with respect to intellectual and material progress. When Bishop Ridley first knew the country all was different; but dangers which were faced in Christian confidence gave place before the preaching of the Gospel. On one occasion a man stepped forward from a crowd of 150, deliberately spat in Bishop Ridley's face, then knocked him down and kicked him. That very Indian afterwards took the missionary by the feet, begged his pardon, and died a triumphant Christian after witnessing a good confession.

The leader of the boldest band of pirates on that coast himself related afterwards how on one occasion he and his followers were overcome by the silent gaze of a small congregation of Christians. On a Saturday evening the heathen went in, ordered them to cease praying, tore up the Bibles, destroyed the building with axes and crowbars, and as the tower presented unexpected difficulties set fire to it. One of the younger Christians asked, "Shall we not fight for the house of God?" to which a more experienced member replied, "No, Jesus never fought, He died; we will die rather than fight." Then began a change in the tribe. At his baptism one of the men said, "From that night onward I dreaded the Spirit of God. Out on the ocean or where the snow peaks looked over the seas, there the Spirit of God followed me and I was afraid, and when I hunted among those peaks the Spirit of God hunted me, and I was afraid." Another man who was one day holding the end of a tape measure in the laying out of the best site in the town for a church, said, "Bishop, do you know that hand and until I heard the native preacher say that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanses from all sin, I never had peace in my heart."

SET FIRE TO THE CHURCH,

Bishop Ridley counts it among the greatest privileges of his life that two of the five translations of the Word of God for these Indian tribes are his own handiwork. A thoughtful man said to him, "Before you gave us the Book you threw links before us, and we picked them up, but they did not fasten us anywhere. You have given us now the chain, and it is a golden chain, binding us all together and all to God."

The influence of contact with irreligious Europeans and Americans is most deplorable. Drunkenness spreads rapidly, and all too readily the example of loose living is copied. "Licence to the Indians is more deadly than bondage, and the whites sink with them from our standard, more hopelessly low." The utter heartlessness of these traders is well brought out in an incident related by Bishop Ridley, in a letter published recently in the Church Missionary Gleaner:—

I was much struck with the complaint of a trader who said the magistrate was becoming stricter of late. "In one year he inflicted fines on drunken Indians amounting to £300." "But who supplied the liquor?" I asked. "The white man." The presence of the missionary has been a stimulus to the magistrate. "He takes the Indian's money from us," moaned the man. "You plied your trade," I said, "until the Indian would hunt just long enough to be able to buy drink, and then trade away his women to eke out his income to live on. You kill the goose to get at the egg quickly, and now sell less than ever legitimately, to your own loss." Nothing is sadder than to see these, our fellow-countrymen, unconsciously act as if thoughts of God and about their souls never come to them. Christless and reckless!

The Bishop's pen-portraits of some of the converts include interesting and vivid touches. A group of Indians demurred to going to meet him, on account of the amount of

SABBATH TRAVELLING INVOLVED,

and their scruples were only removed when it was pointed out that Monday might also be set apart that week. On the arrival of the party, the bishop says—

I proceeded to examine the catechumens, tired as they were; first an old medicine-man, then his much more attractive old wife. He was a man of few words, but of deep thought. She treated him with much respect. Her face was a finer one than could have been expected among these people, and a contrast to the deeply-lined visage of the man.

BISHOP RIDLEY.

Next came a widow of about forty-five years of age, whom Mr. Palgrave regards as a saintly heroine. For years she slaved for a husband with an injured spine and an idiot son. The father died a Christian, and even the idiot showed more intelligence in religious thought than in any other thing.

The most interesting was a younger woman who had been doctored some years ago when she was very ill. She is a pleasant and intelligent woman, and has shown as much aptitude in teaching others as in learning. She acted as interpreter with uncommon grace and ability. Like an Oriental she sat cross-legged opposite the person examined, and the lifting up of her eyes to Heaven—such lustrous eyes—when interpreting a prayer, was a sight that reminded me of the Magdalene at the cross, one of Scheffer's lovely pictures in the Dresden Gallery. When Christ revealed to her his love, it filled her with devotion, lighting up her countenance with the beautiful glow that drew forth praise for the grace that works such wonders. Like most of the elderly people, the behaviour of the chief Nanook with that of the young men, who think the rude whites are the pink of perfection, and imitate them. He is a man of medium height, and, though over sixty years of age, is straight as an arrow. He lives a nomadic life. So did Abram, noblest type of gentleman. Though his shadow never darkened Porch or Academy, yet no Alcibiades could behave with more grace than my vis-à-vis. He has nothing to learn as to deportment, tone, or gesture.

WAS DIGNIFIED IN CONTRAST

My hour's interview with him was a singular pleasure and entertainment. He spoke to me as if he credited me with power to understand him, and not to the interpreter—yet he paused for her as gracefully as he spoke. He could not grin if he tried, or smirk, but smiled as graciously as a peer of the realm when trying to conciliate and engage the superior talents of a useful commoner.

After this came, in the vernacular, a service of prayer and praise in the cabin. I could not understand it, yet I enjoyed and shared in it. It was a solemnizing thing to watch this company of about thirty souls worshipping in their tongue our glorious God. His light, apart from Nature's, had

NOT REACHED THEM THREE YEARS AGO.

They stand facing the same way, chanting the Te Deum and other canticles; they sing "Nearer, my God, to Thee," and "Gentle Jesus, look on me," both so slowly and solemnly that a new meaning supervened, adding more than ever a heavenly force and spirit to human productions. After the others had filed out, Ayediga (the interpreter) waited a brief space to thank me from saving her body from the grave (alluding to my medicine), and then sending God's man to teach her things to save her soul.

"He taught me much before I was baptized; tell him to teach me much more now that I am within his family, that I may know how to please Him. I want to know more of God's Son, Jesu Chreest. When I know what is right I shall not do the wrong. Now I am not afraid to die. God's Son makes all safe and sure."

We quote the following poem from Not Myth but Miracle (1s. 6d. Seeley), in which Dr. Ridley has preserved a metrical description of a gathering of Indians, when the chief was appealed to to suppress the lately-planted Christian faith. The lines are given as a paraphrase of an untranslatable song sung by the poet of the tribe:—

God of the forest, God of the sea,
Builder of nations, lovest Thou me?

God of the ocean, Giver of light,
Bridle our tempests, banish our night.

Far above star-worlds Jesus is Chief,
Pouring down springtide, opening our leaf.

Spirit of Jesus, stronger than tide,
Swifter than lightning, with us abide.

Silence of ages, seal up the past—
Into the boundless all of it cast.

Breathe on us summer, O rising sun;
Shorten our shadows till there be none.

Circling for ever, evening forget,
Love for thy centre never to set.

The Bible in Argentina.

I AM longing to have evangelistic meetings in Spanish during the winter months in Buenos Aires, where we now have a population of about 800,000 souls, and very little is being done in pure Gospel preaching on apostolic lines. Of course, several missions in the city are doing excellent work, and Christian schools are being established; but the great need, to my mind, is a kind of simultaneous mission to reach the masses who never hear the Gospel of Christ. If means are forthcoming, I would be happy to do something in this coming winter.

Bible work and preaching combined are the most powerful weapons against Romanism. During the last three months I have by God's grace been able to dispose of twelve boxes of Holy Scriptures, mostly in Spanish, containing I find, after making up my accounts, 544 Bibles, 455 Testaments, 1,026 Gospels or portions, in all 2,025 Scriptures.

One dear man to whom I sold a Bible is now reading the book with intense delight to his soul. He attends our meetings with his whole family, about eight in all. I believe precious souls will be brought to Christ through that one Bible. I know of people who remember our books and Bible visits ten or eleven years ago, and some are now members of small native churches. How many there may be, I do not know; but this is certain, that God's Word shall not return unto Him void. We find it bearing fruit even in dark South America "after many days." Emilio Olsson.

THE LATE

Rev. E. Bacheler Russell.

IN the spiritual, as well as in the natural spheres, there is much of mystery in the workings of Divine Providence. This was felt most keenly when, a few months ago, as the result of a bicycle accident, Rev. Edward Bacheler Russell was called to his rest and reward, as it were in the heyday of life and usefulness. In the midst of events which it is difficult to understand, it is ever well that we trust a loving Father "who knoweth our frame," and whose thoughts toward us are "thoughts of peace and not of evil."

Mr. Russell was the younger son of the late Mr. John Russell, of New Romney, and was born in 1852. Possessed of considerable means, he spent his young manhood in worldly pursuits and amusements. By God's grace he was converted through the preaching of Mr. Moody during the evangelist's first visit to London in 1875. The story of this great change may best be told in Mr. Russell's own language. In the course of an address on his conversion, he said:

I had been living for some time previously in my own house, loving ease, and desiring to be quite free from all home restraints, that I might do as I liked, and go where I liked. I always had a passionate love for horses, and spent a great deal of my time in the saddle. I very soon began to go on to the turf and take up racing. I had my own horses; I had my race-horses, I had my hunters; I hunted all day. If I was not on the racecourse I spent a great deal of time at the card-table, in the ball-room, in the theatre. I began to gamble, and, having entered on a gambler's life, I knew not how to get free; indeed, I didn't want to be free, for I loved it.

Just at that time (1875) a great deal was said in the daily papers about Moody and his work in Scotland. I read the daily papers, and Moody's work got somehow mixed up with the racing and betting news, and I came to read about him as well, and at last I thought, "Well, this is a wonderful work, and a wonderful man. I wonder what it means." He was announced to be coming to London, and one day, just before that time, I came home from the racecourse weary, depressed, worn out; everything had seemed to go wrong; and there, in my room, all alone, I knelt down—you may think I was very foolish and very ignorant—I knelt down before a painting of my father, who passed away in my childhood, and I made a vow before him, and in the presence of God, that I would not go to another race meeting until I had asked Moody whether it was right for a Christian man to go to races. I thought I was a Christian man then, and I wanted to ask Moody, having read so much about him, whether it was wrong for a Christian man to go to race meetings.

Before Mr. Moody's visit, the perplexed young man had a great temptation. An important racing engagement intervened, and why could he not go in spite of his vow? The significance of the crisis was realized, and a stand made. Though the troubled man did not yield, his horse ran, and won in the contest. Again the tempter made himself heard: "Go to the races to-morrow; why miss another such day's sport?" However, God gave needed grace, and once again the vow was respected.

At length the day arrived for Mr. Moody's mission to open. The theatre was suggested in preference; and the theatre was visited instead of the mission meeting in the Agricultural Hall! It was a miserable time, however, and the anxious soul became convinced that the devil was trying to keep it away from the Gospel preacher. Serious searchings of heart followed, and the next evening found the resolute inquirer in attendance at the Gospel meeting. Mr. Russell thus continued his story:—

That night (March 11), I listened to the message—I was not thinking much about it; and I heard the singing of the hymn by Mr. Sankey, "Come home, come home, O prodigal, come home." No doubt that had some effect upon my soul, but I did not go in to the after-meeting that night. The next night I went again, and after the meeting went into the inquiry-room—it was quite a new thing in those days, and I was one of the first to go. Very soon Mr. Moody came to me, and when I asked him whether he thought racing was wrong for a Christian man, he took me by the hand—oh, such a grip; it seemed to come from the heart—and he said, "Are you a Christian?"

If anyone had implied before that I was not a Christian I should not have liked it, and should have thought it very rude and impertinent. But I didn't with this man. He was true and strong, if ever a man was, and when he asked me that question it didn't seem to surprise me at all, and at once, for the first time in my life, I realized I was not what he meant by a Christian. "No," I said, "I am not." "Do you want to become one?" he said. "Yes, I do." "Very well," said Mr. Moody, and then he asked me to wait a few minutes whilst he spoke to someone else. I sat down, and presently a gentleman came and spoke to me about my soul. I got very angry, and was going away, like Naaman, in a rage, and was passing Mr. Moody talking to two young men, when he gave me another grip, which seemed to soothe me at once, and he said, "Well, is it all right?" "No," I answered, "it's not all right."

From Photograph by Messrs. F. Byrne & Co., Richmond.

"Oh," he said, "but you must not go away like this. Bring a chair, and sit down with us." I did so, and speaking to us three young men, he said, "There are three things that I want you to do—believe, receive, trust Jesus." Afterwards we knelt down, and he prayed. Then I went away, and as I didn't feel anything I thought it was not all right. I wanted some miracle to be performed, and as I had no special feelings about it, I thought it was all wrong, and that I was not converted.

That night I returned to my hotel, and went right up to my room. I didn't want any food for the body, and in my room I prayed as well as I knew how, "Lord, I believe; help Thou my unbelief." The next morning I made my way to Mr. Moody's prayer meeting at Exeter Hall. Pale and ill-looking I know I was, and I sat near the platform, feeling absolutely miserable. I knew now I was all wrong, but I longed with my whole soul to get right. Several in the Hall spoke, but I took no notice until Moody stood up and spoke in reply to the criticisms of the papers about his after-meeting work. He told the audience about his inquiry-room meeting the night before, how he was talking to two young men, and a third came up to him. "That was I," thought I.

And it was then, between twelve and one o'clock, on March 12, 1875, that the light broke into my soul, and as I sat there, miserable up to that moment, I thought, "What a fool, what an utter idiot, I have been. I have been praying 'Lord, I believe,' and I never believed at all." Here, now, I put forth my hand for salvation and took it, and I believed God. And oh, the peace that came into my heart and soul in a moment! Oh, what a change! Mine was what is called a sudden conversion; but every man's conversion is a sudden conversion. One moment we are this side of the line and another we are that; there can be but one moment in passing over the line.

This point marks the beginning of a career of much usefulness. For twenty-five years Mr. Russell exercised a happy ministry in connection with the Church of England, but his influence went beyond the limits of that communion. He began to testify for Christ as a layman on the staff of the Evangelization Society. After studying at the London College of Divinity at Highbury, he was ordained in 1886, and laboured for a time in the Isle of Man. For seventeen years he worked in connection with the Church Parochial Missions Society; and from 1889 till 1895 was vicar of Appledore-with-Ebony in Kent. In the winters of 1896-7 and 1897-8 he undertook special missions for the C.M.S. in Travancore and Cochin. The return voyage from the latter of these was undertaken in the ill-fated P. and O. ss. China, which was wrecked on the island of Perim, not far from Aden, fortunately without loss of life. In 1899 he accepted the vicarage of Leyton, Essex, and the duties of that important charge immediately became the concern of his devoted and strenuous life. Entrenched in the affections of his people, he found his position one of large opportunity, and he was wholehearted in the service of men for the love of Christ.

The sad circumstances of Mr. Russell's death may be recalled in few words. With his wife and two children, he was spending a holiday last summer with Mrs. Russell's parents at Rosehall, near Invershin, in Sutherlandshire. On the afternoon of August 30, when returning from a bicycle ride, he lost control of his machine while descending a hill, and was dashed over the low parapet of Walkerdale Bridge, being instantly killed on the rocks below. The sad news and the funeral which followed (at Redhill, Surrey), served to show in some degree the deep affection which was entertained for Mr. Russell. Nonconformists combined with clerical friends in telling of his good deeds and pointing to the example of his noble life. In the words of Rev. A. W. Crockett, one of his curates:—"He was indeed a brother beloved. He was devoted to parish life and work, and had definitely given himself to the Lord for his use in Leyton as long as strength lasted."

Much as he enjoyed a mission, with its life and movement, Mr. Russell was a thorough worker in the more routine concerns of the settled ministry. The secret of this is made clear by Mr. Crockett:—"He sought—almost, I think, unconsciously—to reflect 'the mind of the Master' in all things great and small; in all his conversations and interviews, and in all the affairs of life, he was conspicuously Christ's servant. His wisdom in things spiritual was, I think, quite extraordinary. He lived in the secret of the presence of the Lord, and his unconventionality of method and practice was not the least of his charms. He never sought to imitate—he was always just himself, using to the full and developing every day all the grace and talents with which he was so richly endowed." It is a joy and privilege to recount the story of such a man, and to praise God for his fruitful ministry.

Valedictory Meetings.

Rev. Dr. J. G. PATON.

UNDOUBTEDLY one of the most difficult enterprises in the history and progress of foreign missions has been the evangelization of the fifty or more islands that constitute the New Hebrides, with their population of cannibals and savages of the most degraded type. For all time the name of Dr. J. G. Paton will be instinctively associated with Gospel effort among these tribes. His heroic, patient endurance and fervent devotion to the land of his adoption have thrilled the heart of Christendom; and probably few were surprised to learn that the noble at the age of seventy-eight, was about to return to his beloved sphere of labour, determined to spend his last days in the sacred cause to which his life has been given.

APOSTLE OF THE NEW HEBRIDES,

Exeter Hall was not any too large for the friends who assembled on Wednesday of last week to cheer and encourage the aged missionary, and to listen to his farewell words. Dr. Paton must have realized anew how near his work lies to the heart of Christians at home. The afternoon meeting opened with a favourite missionary hymn, after which prayer was offered by Rev. Geo. Turner (Sutton). The organizing secretary, Mr. A. K. Langridge, spoke briefly of the practical expression which the interest in the New Hebrides Mission found in 1889 by the establishing of a permanent memorial—The John G. Paton Mission Fund. Through this special organization the freewill offerings of God's people in every quarter of the globe have flowed to cheer the heart of his aged servant in forwarding the fulfilment of his prayer for the conversion of these South Sea Islanders to Christ. The immediate object of the fund is to accomplish the extension of the Gospel to those islands of the New Hebrides that still remain in heathen darkness. So generous has been the response that the fund is now responsible for the support of four European missionaries, four European lay assistants, and eighty native teachers.

In acknowledging the hand of God guiding and directing the steps of his servant, Sir Mark J. M. Stewart, M.P., wished Dr. Paton an as he returns with a strong faith and courageous hope. Dr. Paton himself was received with great warmth. With characteristic vigour the veteran missionary recalled the anxiety with which forty-two years ago he entered the field. In the first twenty years of his work seven missionaries and a number of native teachers were murdered, and his own life has been attempted again and again. When he first set foot in the New Hebrides—a land of terror, whose coast sailors dreaded to approach—savagery was rampant. The inhabitants wore no clothing, had no written language, and lived in a condition of extreme degradation.

AFFECTIONATE AND PRAYERFUL GODSPEED,

Portions of Scripture have now been translated into twenty-two languages. On eight of the islands the whole population is Christian, and life and property are safe. In their heathen days the natives had been extremely dishonest, and as indicative of the complete change which has been wrought, the speaker related how, in passing along a road, he discovered reeds stuck in the roadside, upon which were hung articles lost by a traveller, awaiting the return of the owner. Till the labour of missionaries had made life and property safe, few traders and no Frenchmen landed in the islands; but then the traders came in to undo with brandy and and rum the great work that had been done.

Horrid crimes were the result, the natives being maddened by this liquor. So far as he knew only two of the Christian converts had come under the influence of drink. During his sojourn in the islands he had seen 18,000 cannibals brought to live in peace and happiness, loving and serving Christ. Three thousand of these are church members, and 300 are native teachers and preachers. He loved his own country as much as any Briton, but he loved far more the work of the Lord in the islands to which he was returning. Between 40,000 and 60,000 natives are still unevangelized, and with touching earnestness the speaker appealed for more workers, and expressed his joy that God has laid it upon the hearts of two medical missionaries to accompany him to the South Seas. The venerable missionary's closing words were a plea that the needs of the poor darkened heathens should be laid before God continually in prayer by Christians in the homeland.

Another gathering took place in the evening, when Mr. Frank Spence presided, and Dr. Paton spoke of the encouraging prospects of the Mission. It may be mentioned that all contributions go direct to the missionary himself, to help in the fulfilment of the yearning desire to which he has given expression:—"It has been the dream of my life to see one missionary at least planted on every island of the New Hebrides. Then I could lie down and whisper gladly, 'Lord, now lettest Thou thy servant depart in peace.'"

Rev. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN.

CROWDED audiences are no exception at the City Temple, and while perhaps it would be too much to say that the overflowing congregation of Thursday evening has never been surpassed, certainly few of the remarkable gatherings held in Dr. Parker's church have been characterized by deeper or more spontaneous enthusiam. The occasion was a public farewell to Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, who is leaving England to undertake the extension work in connection with the Northfield Institutions, founded by the lamented D. L. Moody.

Dr. Parker presided, and in the course of a characteristic address, said he wished to speak to the people of America who are so soon to welcome Mr. Campbell Morgan. He approached this with some reproach, rebuke, and distrust, and confessed that he could not feel towards them as he will when Mr. Morgan returns. He did not know what other object would have drawn so large a concourse together. They had met to surround a brother and minister who has been faithful to the Word of God and the Cross of his Son. The meeting was one of the happiest signs that an Evangelical ministry is by no means exhausted. Mr. Morgan was a Bible expositor, and a Biblical and expository ministry is the only one that can endure. Dr. Parker assured Mr. Morgan that he takes with him the love of a wide circle of friends, and their expectancy of great things flowing from his ministry.

TRANSATLANTIC AUDIENCE

As a neighbour and brother pastor, Rev. A. Ramsay spoke in appreciative terms of Mr. Morgan's ministry. The force of that ministry was betokened by so extraordinary an assembly. No one could hear him preach without having a vision of the man behind the preacher. In their farewell there was because of the blank which he leaves. We could have wished that opportunity had arisen for the exercise of his ministry in this country, but God has willed it otherwise. Mr. Morgan's service to America will be one small way of repaying the debt England owes for the life and work of D. L. Moody.

A NOTE OF KEEN REGRET,

Rev. J. D. Jones (Bournemouth), said he was convinced that the call to which their friend was responding was not the call of America, but the call of God. Their gift to America was a man who has the Gospel, and the passion and power to preach it. Mr. Morgan has not looked in vain for results of his ministry, through which there has always sounded a note of appeal.

In the course of a brief address, Rev. J. Gregory Mantle recalled his associations with Mr. Morgan in Birmingham, and spoke of the sincerity and singleness of purpose which has been manifest in his ministry. Gipsy Smith followed with impressive reminiscences. He appealed for more sympathy to be shown towards pastors in their labours.

A unique reception was accorded Mr. Morgan as he rose to speak, the whole congregation rising with him. Having acknowledged the kind references which had been made to his work, he said he had, during the last few weeks, experienced many surprises in the numerous farewell gatherings which had been arranged. The question had arisen in his mind—What does it mean? All this generous outpouring of sympathy he recognised as a tribute of love to be laid on the grave of D. L. Moody. Concerning his ministry, Mr. Morgan thanked God that He had enabled him to deliver

A POSITIVE MESSAGE.

He had endeavoured to speak of the things he knew from personal experience. While he had many regrets in severing ties which were dear, he had no sorrow, for not a shadow of doubt remained in his mind that he was entering a door opened by God. Of the future Mr. Morgan could not speak. "I go because the cloud leads that way; when it leads towards home, I shall return. Nothing will be more cheering and helpful to me than to know that loved ones at home are labouring for me in prayer as I go forth to obey the King's command."

A memorable gathering was brought to a close by Rev. F. B. Meyer offering prayer, and the vast audience rising, and with one voice wishing Mr. and Mrs. Morgan and family an affectionate "God-speed."

SABBATH AT NEW COURT.

At both services last Lord's Day New Court Chapel was crowded, and hundreds of visitors were unable to obtain admission. In the evening Mr. Morgan used the opportunity for making a fervent appeal to the undecided. Speaking from the words "Strive to enter in at the narrow door" (Luke xxxiii. 24, R.V.), he preached an impressive sermon.

As Mr. Morgan dealt with various hindrances, and pleaded for them to be set aside, many of the congregation were deeply moved, and it was evident that much heart-searching was going on. The crisis was reached in the meeting which followed the service, when between fifty and sixty made their way to the inquiry rooms. The service was one which will live in the memory of those who attended.

On Monday night the chapel was the scene of an enthusiastic gathering, when Mr. Morgan received the hearty wishes and prayers of his flock for his future service. Many ministers from neighbouring churches took part.

"Home Missionary Circle."

THE branch "Circle" at Southend-on-Sea, Essex (Congregational Hall), was recently favoured with the presence of Pastor A. E. Sims (organizing secretary) at the usual weekly meeting a few days ago. Many old friends were there to welcome him. One member informed Mr. Sims "that since joining the Home Missionary Circle he could point to five souls whom the Lord had saved through his humble efforts."

Mr. Sims' address was on "Our Fellowship with God and what it implies" (1 John i. 3, 4)—(1) Relationship, (2) Regality, (3) Responsibility, (4) Rejoicing. "Many succeed well in showing how selfish and miserable religion can make one! Fellowship with God transforms us into unselfish and joyous beings. Might every Circle member prove relationship to Him, enjoy regality with Him, bear responsibility for Him, and experience rejoicing in Him!" It proved a timely word for which many expressed thanks.

A Circle has also been formed at Polesworth, near Tamworth, concerning which Pastor Houghton writes:—"On the Sunday night of Mr. Sims' mission he made a special appeal to Christians, and the result was that about thirty came forward and consecrated themselves to any service for the Lord which it was in their power to render. Many of these have become members of the Circle. The branch recently formed at Baddesley is rendering good service, especially in open-air work."

Full information, concerning the "Home Missionary Circle," may be had for two stamps from Mr. Sims, "Hope" Gospel Mission, Upper Stainshaw, Northsea, Hants.

Home Missions.

The Gospel at the Derby.

[BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONER.]

IT seemed last week as if an overwhelming tide of worldliness were sweeping over the town and neighbourhood of Epsom. The greatest of the English race meetings brings together a throng of men and women representative of every grade in the social scale, from the highest to the lowest. Spiritual things are far from the thoughts of the multitudes, yet it is most cheering that the servants of Christ find even such an occasion capable of being turned to good account in the seeking out and winning back of those who have wandered on the mountains of sin.

Arriving in the town on Tuesday evening, we found pleasure seekers and loiterers everywhere, and in the main thoroughfare, under the clock tower, the red banner of the OPEN-AIR MISSION was conspicuous in the position to which it seems now by long usage to be conceded almost a prescriptive right. The fierce opposition experienced by the workers of earlier days is now entirely a thing of the past. Year by year the preachers of the Gospel of the Grace of God have returned,

UNDETERRED BY OBSTACLES AND DIFFICULTIES.

Now, instead of hostility and attack, there is nothing worthy of the name of serious interruption. The crowds come and go, and last week there was abundant evidence of a disposition to linger at the spot, all being well aware of the nature of the message they would hear.

The effort is a joint one, about one-half of the band of fifty workers belonging to the London City Mission; but the expense connected with it falls entirely on the Open-Air Mission (Secretary, Mr. Frank Cockrem, 11, Adam Street, Strand, W.C.). At the head of the local friends, Miss Alexander continues to be the mainstay of the work, although—to the regret of many—no longer able to take the same large share as in years gone by of the active part of it. On Sunday a number of friends spent the day visiting the various gipsy encampments on the Downs, and were well received wherever they went. Gospels and tracts to the number of about 125,000 were distributed in the course of the week, workers specially set aside for this purpose being stationed at all the more important crossings.

On joining the main company the first voice we heard was that of Mr. Barry Wake, announcing the names of the speakers; and the musical arrangements were under the charge of Mr. Alfred Williams, efficiently supported by the members of the City Mission band and male choir. Among other friends in the group were Mr. George Heath, Mr. William Day, and Mr. Gregory Page (Epsom Town Mission).

The services had been begun on Monday evening, when, as well as on the earlier part of Tuesday, the hearts of all were encouraged by

THE MANIFEST PRESENCE OF GOD.

The good news of free salvation was simply told in word and song; and besides those who were personally spoken to, it was noticeable that a large number listened attentively, and went on their way with thoughtful looks on their faces. May the seed have found good soil in their hearts. A serious accident which had taken place in the afternoon—a brake having been overturned while driving downhill from the Downs, and all its twenty-five occupants seriously injured, one dying within an hour—had made an unusually deep impression on the minds of the people, and was turned to good account in the preaching of the week.

On Wednesday morning the weather was of the most beautiful description; and, while the crowds of racing men and sight-seers were flocking into the town by every avenue of approach, the band of soul-seekers gathered for a time of prayer in the Mission Hall. Under the presidency of Lieutenant-Colonel Phayre a gracious time of refreshing was experienced; and as soon as was judged practicable, a large group made their way to the racecourse. On arriving there it was found that, under the operation of a new rule, all tipsters and betting agents had been excluded from the Course itself, and that hawking and selling had been forbidden. The speaking and singing were thus rendered much more effective; and as testimony, exhortation, and Gospel song succeeded one another in rapid succession there were many listeners for longer or shorter periods. Men well versed in the use of the Word of God, and with long experience in dealing with the careless, in most telling fashion, and by the Divine blessing the messages proved effectual unto salvation. Among other widely known voices which were heard were those of Colonel F. W. Major, Mr. Cockrem, Mr. H. W. Maynard, Lieut.-Colonel Roberts, Mr. Charles Cook, Lieut.-Colonel Acklom, and Mr. F. L. Nott.

DROVE HOME THEIR LESSONS

A prominent tent was that of the RACE-COURSE MISSION, where Mr. Heatley (St. James' Hall, Royal Road, Kennington Park) and Mr. W. Hodson were supported by a band of workers. Large numbers of the Marked Testament and of the publications of the Scripture Gift Mission were being judiciously used for evangelistic purposes at every point on the Course. When we visited the tent it was being placed at the disposal of the members of the police force, for whom lunch was provided in order to save them from the necessity of entering the drinking booths. Good use was also made of the opportunity afforded for testimony and hymn singing. The men appreciated the privilege highly, but insisted on making a collection as a token of gratitude. This money is, however, sent by the Mission in their name as a donation to the Police Orphanage.

As the course became crowded the workers were mustered, and a united service was held until the bell rang for the first race; and as the afternoon went on advantage was taken of the various intervals. Attractive text-cards, with little lavender bags attached, were being handed out by lady workers

AMONG THE CARRIAGES.

In the evening at six o'clock a large company of minstrels who had been entertaining the crowds accepted an invitation to tea, and an interesting Gospel meeting was held with them.

It was deeply interesting to watch individual workers by different methods commending the Saviour to those who knew Him not. Tract distributors were meeting with thanks much oftener than refusals. Others, with empty hands, were readily finding opportunities for conversation, the results of which seemed to be generally of a satisfactory nature. In striking contrast to the signboards of bookmakers and stallkeepers Mr. William Day's banner stood out conspicuously in the sunshine calling the attention of the crowds to solemn questions about death and eternity. For the eighth time Mr. Bob Johnson witnessed a good confession where he was previously known as a minstrel.

After the long streams of vehicles had passed through the town on their homeward journey, the streets were thronged with loiterers; and afforded an excellent field for meetings, a number of which were held at different points. As a result of the drinking which had been indulged in, the crowds were more noisy, but once and again the hearts of the labourers were made glad by the assurance that the Word of the Lord was not returning to Him void, but was accomplishing that whereto He had sent it.

A typical incident which arose out of the work done by the O.A.M. at Epsom Spring Races was narrated by Colonel Major. A man was observed to be listening attentively while Rev. Norman Bennet (Church Parochial Missions Society) told the story of his work among the troops in South Africa, at the same time presenting the Gospel in vivid fashion. Noticing the man's evident interest, Colonel Major went round to him, and inquired in a friendly way whether he understood the Gospel. "Oh yes," was the answer, "I think I do; and I am going home to pray about it."

A copy of one of the Gospels was presented, and then followed up with earnest advice. "I am glad that you understand the need and the remedy; but there is a better way than going home to pray about it. I think from what you say you have been praying about the matter a good deal already. Suppose you were to accept Christ here and now. The Gift of God was prepared for you nearly 1900 years ago, and, therefore, all you can possibly do is to accept. You took a Gospel just now from me—a perfect stranger—without hesitation, and never thought of offering to pay anything for it. Is it not possible for you also to trust God who made you and me, and gave us his Son as a gift?"

The light appeared to break on the man's mind. "I will," he said.

"I WILL TAKE HIM NOW."

"Then," was the advice, "the best thing you can do is to go away from this place. We are here to witness for God, but a racecourse is not the place for you." He went straight away home; and when, after a few weeks, Colonel Major wrote to ask whether he had really and finally made the great decision, he answered, "You will be delighted to learn that I accepted the unspeakable Gift of God on Epsom Racecourse, and that I have been living in the fear of the Lord ever since." A second letter received later showed that he was still making progress.

A few days ago the colonel went to call on his correspondent, and was received with open arms. The man said to him, "Until I went to Epsom Races, I was like a block of marble or granite, out of which someone was trying to cut a piece of sculpture, but everything was incomplete about it. The address I heard, and the words you spoke, led to the finishing of the sculpture; and now I am rejoicing in Jesus. He is mine." He promised to pray during the week that at least one other man should be converted on this occasion; and Colonel Major was convinced from his own experience that these particular prayers had been offered, heard and answered.

"The crux of Christian work in the future will lie in our dealing with open-air work," said one friend whose experience extends over many years as well as over different parts of the world. "The people who will not go to a church or meeting must be followed to their own haunts." On this assumption, and no other is possible, the work at such places as Epsom Racecourse is of the first importance. There the opportunity among people whom it seems to be impossible to reach otherwise is practically unlimited. In some respects, too, the audiences are appreciative. Such remarks as, "Very well done," and "I like to hear that," were to be heard when the singing was going on; along with, "You have the right way of it," "That's quite true," and many more of the same tenor during the speaking. And we may feel quite sure that, in addition to the fruit visible at the time, the Holy Spirit will cause another part of the seed to take root and spring up afterwards. While gambling seemed to be going on everywhere, and sporting men were always in evidence, it must be remembered that the great majority of the people present know little and care little about either. It is simply the occasion to them of an annual holiday. Good humour prevails, and because they are away from work and business they are susceptible to anything in the way of kindness or interest shown in them.

Brighton Albion Hill Home.—Since the founding of this Home, some forty years ago, 2,358 girls have been received and trained for service. Ladies who have engaged girls from the Home are constantly applying to the committee for others. During last year thirty-one girls were admitted, and seventeen were sent out to situations. The laundry industry showed an increase upon the two previous years. There is a debt, due to the carrying out of repairs to the building at a cost of £500. Copies of the annual report and other information may be obtained from the hon. superintendent, Mrs. R. C. Macdonald.

Friedenheim Hospital.

FRIEDENHEIM is truly a "Home of Peace." It is impossible to visit this beneficent institution without being impressed by the fact that although the majority of the inmates lie in various stages of suffering, waiting for the death-summons, the atmosphere of the hospital is one of profound peace.

It is now more than fifteen years since Miss Davidson commenced her admirable work, and since its removal in 1892 from Mildmay Park to Upper Avenue Road, Swiss Cottage, N.W., more than 1,000 homeless and dying patients have been received and cared for

IN THEIR LAST DAYS.

Most of them were discharged from the general hospitals as unfit for further treatment because of the hopeless nature of their maladies, and the majority would, doubtless, have passed away in their poor lodgings, not only with totally inadequate means of relief, but, as in cases of consumption, with danger to those about them.

The annual meeting was held on Thursday afternoon last, in the hall of the Blind School, an adjoining institution, and was attended by a large and sympathic audience. Mr. J. Herbert Tritton presided. The report showed that the year has been a very busy one. A hundred and seventy inmates have been treated, including thirty-one who were in the Home at the end of the previous year. Ninety-nine of these have died; thirty-seven have been discharged—one or two really well, a few greatly benefited, and others only to die among their own people—while thirty-four remained in the institution. Friedenheim, it must be remembered, is the outcome of necessity. The general hospitals cannot overtake the enormous amount of work required of them for cure, and it is therefore impossible to expect that cases beyond their power to aid can be allowed to occupy beds so urgently needed for those who might be benefited. The workhouse infirmaries, too, are full; and, at best, supply a sad ending-place for respectable persons who, only from misfortune and illness, are reduced to accept State relief.

Miss Davidson thinks the saddest cases that come under her care are in the men's ward. To quote her words: "It is so terrible to see them stricken down with weakness, especially young ones, of whom we have many. We had two young husbands for a time, and it was most touching—their devotion to their wives and little ones. They were and their only care was leaving them to battle with the world; but even that care was lightened, and before they were taken they seemed more than comforted by the thought that they were in the keeping of the Father of the fatherless, and the God of the widow."

BOTH BRIGHT CHRISTIANS,

The chief topic dwelt upon in the meeting was the need for a new house of residence for the nurses. There is ample room in the beautiful grounds of Friedenheim for such an erection. The strain upon mind and heart in caring for the dying is, of necessity, very great, and it is necessary that the nurses should, when released from duty, enjoy their leisure in an atmosphere apart from the hospital and away from the wards. The claims of the new undertaking were forcibly advocated by the Earl of Stamford, Dr. A. T. Schofield, Mr. T. A. Denny, Rev. S. A. Selwyn, and Dr. Pearce Gould. It was stated that, in order to meet the cost of the house, and of other alterations and improvements, and to place the finances upon a satisfactory basis, a sum of £10,000 is wanted. The essentially spiritual nature of the work was also clearly shown.

Subsequent to the meeting the hospital was inspected by a large number of friends, and the highest satisfaction was expressed with the arrangements made to meet the spiritual and physical needs of the patients. The institution gives many evidences of wise and skilful management, and in view of its decidedly religious character, should command the hearty support of Christian people.

772

The Houses of Rest.

AT the annual meeting in connection with the Houses of Rest held on Friday afternoon last, Miss Mason was once again able to give an encouraging account of her efforts in the interests of tired and aged workers in the Lord's vineyard.

The gathering was held, as usual, in the Parish Room adjoining the Finchley Road Home, which was filled by a large assembly of friends and supporters of the institutions.

Miss Mason, in the course of a vivid account of the experiences of the past year, stated that 300 workers had been received at St. John's Wood, and 570 at Eastbourne. There is scarcely a denomination or a department of Christian service which is not represented among those who have spent a season of quiet in one of the institutions.

MANY A DEVOTED TOILER

would have been lost to aggressive Christian effort but for the timely shelter, aid, and encouragement that has been given. The "Help the Workers" Fund has again been the means of providing the necessary travelling and other expenses to the needy.

In that part of St. John's Wood House which is used as a permanent home for aged Christian workers, each inmate has her own good-sized bed-sitting-room, and has no rent or firing or renewals of furniture or household requisites to provide. For all these comforts Miss Mason is continually receiving expressions of gratitude, especially for the permission to "keep up good fires in cold weather." Although this home is entirely separated from the House of Rest, the inmates have access by a private entrance to attend the evening prayers aud the meetings in the Pillar Room without any inconvenience—a privilege which is highly valued by most of them.

Mr. T. A. Denny, who presided, congratulated Miss Mason on the character of her work in caring for the sick and weary, and endeavouring to restore the health of those who have fallen in the fight. By faith and devotion a glorious work has been accomplished, and the Houses serve their purpose admirably.

Speaking with an intimate knowledge of the work, Rev. F. S. Webster, who followed, referred to the over-strain from which many workers suffer in these taxing times. Breakdowns are frequent, and it is a grand thing for those who are to have such resting-places as those provided by Miss Mason.

WEARY IN THE LORD'S WORK

In a vigorous utterance, Rev. Dr. Monro Gibson said that nothing is more needed than witness for the living Christ, not argument but testimony—"Ye are my witnesses." The reports of the Houses of Rest have always borne witness to the Lord's goodness. In spite of difficulties they have been consistently bright and hopeful, and this year's report, especially, is a witness that the Lord Jesus is faithful and true.

The inter-denominational character of the work was emphasized by Rev. W. H. Griffith Thomas, who spoke of three words — Work, Rest, and Edification—as the basis of a brief but helpful address. The Houses provide aids to rest of body, soul, and mind—rest in the MEDITATION OF GOD'S WORD.

Mr. Griffith Thomas heartily commended the work to the sympathy of Christians.

The unique place which the Houses hold in the affections of God's people was justified by Pastor W. Fuller Gooch. All are equally welcomed because they belong to Christ. Miss Mason recognizes that members of the household of faith have a prior claim upon our sympathy.

Other speakers were Colonel Oldham, who took the chair when Mr. Denny left to fulfil another appointment, and Rev. A. W. Evans, assistant pastor to Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Christ Church, who spoke of the work as "saturated with prayer."

Persecution in Limerick.

THE work of Dr. Long, the medical missionary of the Irish Church Missions in the city of Limerick, is being carried on in circumstances which call for the active and prayerful sympathy of all earnest Christian people.

It will be remembered that a few months ago the city magistrates refused to convict some of the rioters who had been engaged in mobbing Dr. Long and his wife. The encouragement thus given to the lawless has recently borne fruit in very violent scenes in which Protestant patients, whose only crime consists in seeking Dr. Long's ministrations, have been terrorized by howling mobs, and have had their windows broken and their lives made miserable.

In one case a Protestant family thus bombarded were warned by the police that it would not be safe to venture out of their dwelling. The consequence is that the head of the house, a poor labouring man, has lost his employment. The mission nurse on visiting this family was violently struck on the back of the head by a Roman Catholic woman, and Dr. Long has frequently been struck by missiles.

The question will naturally be asked: Why do not the priests restrain their people? The answer is that not only do they not do so, but, in the recent troubles especially, they have been personal participators in the outrageous demonstrations which have taken place. During Dr. Long's visit to the room of a Protestant patient, one of the local priests entered the dwelling, and abused the doctor in unmeasured language; and on other occasions it has been the presence of the priests and their denunciation of the doctor that has roused and inflamed the wrath of the mob. The police are now doing more than before to cope with the lawlessness, but they have far too long allowed unruly crowds to assemble.

The priests here rule, and the nature of their rule is only too apparent. Meanwhile, the blind and misguided Romanists who compose the mob are affording a striking proof of the urgent necessity which exists for the mission work carried on amongst them. Our readers' prayers are earnestly asked on behalf of Dr. Long and his work, as well as for those who oppose and persecute.

Dr. Barnardo.

DEAR SIR,—Dr. Barnardo is ill, and has for some time now been removed from the active guidance of the work of his life! Surely this fact will call forth deep sympathy, not only for him, but also for his great work, which must sorely need the energy and devotion he has so long given to it.

His removal would be a national calamity. May he be comforted at this time. Surely the Christian Church throughout the land will see to it that the work of his life shall not suffer financially by his temporary removal from it. I enclose my mite, and trust his thousands of friends throughout the country may do the same.

Leonard K. Shaw.

Manchester.

[We have just heard that Dr. Barnardo, who has gone to Bad Nauheim, in Germany, for special treatment for his heart affection, is slowly, but it is hoped surely, deriving advantage from the treatment. The latest tidings are, in fact, quite encouraging, and Dr. Barnardo hopes to be permitted to return to London for his annual festival on July 6.—Ed.]

The Walworth Creche.—The sixth annual report of this institution, which does excellent work in a crowded district, relates a falling off in the average yearly income, but by rigid economy the year closed with a small balance in hand (£1 9s. 8d.), "owing no man anything." Two pence only is the charge for taking care of an infant for twelve hours, and for supplying good and nourishing food. It is the only institution of its kind in the neighbourhood. A nucleus of £5 is on deposit towards the cost of larger premises when more prosperous days come and give encouragement to extend the benefits of the Crêche. The urgent need for such helpful work is abundantly manifest in a locality where mother as well as father has to become a wage-earner. The hon. superintendent is Mrs. F. Kinghorne, of 26, Dagmar Road, Camberwell.

The Y.M.C.A. Anniversary.

"FOUNDERS' DAY" was observed at the Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. on Thursday last, when the noon meeting was appropriately made the occasion of thanksgiving for the blessing which has attended the operations of the organization in many lands.

The chair was occupied by the founder himself, the venerable Sir GEO. WILLIAMS, who, in spite of physical weakness, was able to sound a note of fervent praise, and to encourage his hearers to press forward in their labours.

Mr. W. R. LANE, who followed, gave a suggestive talk on Zech. iv. 10, "Who hath despised the day of small things?" The speaker drew some helpful lessons from the perseverance of the enthusiastic Jews who rebuilt the temple, and, coming to modern days, spoke of the labours, in "the day of small things," of the group of business young men who, on June 6, 1844, initiated the work of the Y.M.C.A. In some words of personal experience Mr. Lane described how he was himself led out into Christian service, on leaving the Army, by a convert of the late Mr. Hull, of the Stafford Rooms Association.

Mr. CHARLES COOK told how, thirty-four years ago, he sought and found the Lord at Stafford Rooms. It is within half a mile of that place that Mr. Cook has for so many years witnessed for Christ in the Hyde Park open-air services. Mr. HENRY VARLEY, who followed, said that he had come into contact with the Y.M.C.A. work in many of the world's chief cities, and must speak in terms of high admiration of its spiritual, far-reaching operations.

The excellent results of the work among the Swiss young men were next spoken of; after which Mr. M. H. HODDER, so long a pillar of the Association, said that he became a member fifty-four years since, and still finds joy in taking active part in duties of guidance and arrangement. Rev. JOHN WILSON, of Woolwich, gave a vivid description of a visit which he paid, as a young man, to an evangelistic meeting held by the Association at Alloa, which led to his conversion. Pastor GEO. TURNER added an appreciative word, telling how he made his first effort as a public speaker in connection with the Y.M.C.A., and Mr. R. C. MORGAN, in closing, referred to the magnitude and vigour of the American Associations.

The Y.M.C.A.

IN connection with the City of Dublin Association, open-air work has been started, in order to reach the outlying districts and villages, by means of a "Cycle Mission Band." There has been much cause for thanksgiving at some of the villages visited.

The twenty-second anniversary of the Adelaide Y.M.C.A. was recently celebrated in the Jubilee Exhibition Building. A public meeting took place afterwards, when the Bishop of Adelaide presided.

The twenty-eighth annual meeting of "Hazelwood," the Y.M.C.A. Home of Rest and Recreation for commercial young men, situate at Ryde, was held at Exeter Hall, on June 6, and was made the occasion of a pleasant and happy re-union of former visitors to the Home. A large number of friends assembled and gave a hearty welcome to the honoured president, Sir George Williams, and to Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Morphey, who superintend the Home. The most cheering feature of the gathering was the testimony borne by a number of young men to the godly influence which pervades the Home, and the spiritual help which they had received during their visits to "Hazelwood." An effort is to be made to heat the long corridors during the winter, and so add to the comfort of those who, through ill-health, are in residence during the cold weather.

The Summer Conference of the North Midland Division of Y.M.C.A.'s was held at Scarborough on Wednesday, June 5. The chief items on the programme were—(1) A discussion on "The Inner Work of the Association," opened by Mr. C. J. Dymond, Hon. Secretary at Newcastle-on-Tyne; and (2) two addresses by Ven. Archdeacon Madden, of Liverpool. The subject of the evening address was, "The Social Evils of the Day," in dealing with which the speaker had the assistance of Mr. Haley, of Wakefield, and Mr. Joshua Rowntree, of Scarborough. In the course of the Conference, Mr. Robert McCann, the District Travelling Secretary, presented an encouraging report of the present condition and future prospects of the Division.

Welsh Notes.

THE annual meetings of the Welsh Christian Endeavour Union take place on June 18, 19, 20, at Bridgend, Glamorganshire. Several prominent ministers and laymen will take part in the proceedings. The Conference sermon will be preached by Rev. James Owen, Swansea.

An innovation amongst the religious bodies of the Principality will be the self-denial week, which the Calvinistic Methodists purpose holding some time this year on behalf of their forward movement. It is to be hoped that this special effort will not only be financially successful, but will also result in spiritual benefit to the denomination.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes is strongly in favour of one Synod for Welsh Wesleyanism. He considers that the existence, as at present, of two utterly disproportionate synods makes it impossible to secure the unity, hearty co-operation, and national influence of the Welsh Wesleyan churches as a whole. He further declares that the true centre of Welsh Wesleyan Methodism must be the National Assembly which impartially represents the whole of Wales.

The annual meeting of the North Wales Baptist College took place on Wednesday, June 5, at Bangor, when a satisfactory report of the year's work was presented by the Principal. It was decided to carry out the suggested extension of the College premises. In moving the adoption of the report, Alderman Richard Cory (of Cardiff) advised the students to beware of higher Biblical criticism and modern German theological arguments, which he feared had honeycombed many of the professors of their colleges in England.

The Welsh Good Templars held their thirtieth anniversary this year at Bootle, Liverpool, under the presidency of the Grand Chief Templar of Wales, Rev. R. Evans, Llanwrtyd. The report of the Executive Committee showed an increase of 11,000 members in the Order during the year. The district temples were urged to approach the various religious bodies with a view to securing their support in the extension of Good Templary. Several public meetings were also held in Bootle and the surrounding district.

Scottish Notes.

WHILE reporting the total loss of houses, furnishings, musical instruments, books, and all other property, the Mission to the Chinese Blind is able to announce that Messrs. Murray and Cheesman are making a new start at Peking. Six or seven of the blind men survived the massacre, as well as several sighted helpers; and every nerve is being strained to lose no time in once more building up this work.

Last week the churches of Lochee opened their combined series of open-air services. The first took place on High Street, in presence of one of the largest gatherings that ever assembled in Lochee. Rev. William Wright (parish church) presided, and was supported by Rev. D. Thom, Rev. Hugh D. Morton, Rev. A. C. Abel, Rev. John Bissett, Rev. William Clelland, and others.

A number of Galashiels residents having been favourably impressed with the working of the Gothenburg system, and the success which has attended it wherever it has been adopted, have initiated a movement for the introduction of the system in the town. At a meeting held a few days ago, Mr. John Scott, of Gala, presided. A committee was appointed for the purpose of considering the propriety of forming a small company to open a public-house, the profits, after paying interest on capital, to be applied for the benefit of the community.

Speaking last week at Dundee, Mrs. Bramwell Booth took occasion to remove a misconception which existed, she believed, in connection with their work in the Industrial Home and Hotel for women. It had been said that the two sets of people whom it contained were mixed, and that the lower classes contaminated the more respectable. On the contrary she could assure the public that the two classes were kept quite separate, and that if there was any influence it was all in the direction of lifting the lower to the higher grade. Unfortunately, the enterprise had not been so well taken up as had been expected in Dundee. Scotch working women, she was told, were "canny." But she was glad to say that the numbers were going up. Perhaps their most interesting work was the Prison Gate Home, which was distinct and separate from the hotel. Eighty women had passed through the former during the year, 352 had been met at the gate of prisons, and 200 had been assisted in one way or another. Chief Constable Dewar testified to the good work which the officers of the Salvation Army were doing among the women passing through the police courts, of whom last year there were no fewer than 800.

Irish Notes.

AN important conference under the auspices of the Church of Ireland Temperance Society has been held at Clones, Dean Tottenham presiding, when addresses were also delivered by Rev. A. Elliott and others. Resolutions dealing with the sale of drink to children, and the best means of coping with the drink traffic, were passed.

At Carnmoney, near Belfast, a company has been formed and a public-house taken over to be worked on the Gothenburg system. The manager is paid a fixed salary and a commission on non-intoxicants, and all profits after paying 5 per cent. are to be devoted to the benefit of the community.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church has been in session in Belfast during the week, and got through a large amount of work. Rev. Professor Heron, D.D., of the Assembly's College, Belfast, was Moderator; and the fact that according to the Census the Presbyterian Church in Ireland declined during the last ten years by only 1,480 or 0·3 per cent., while the Roman Catholic declined 237,279 or 6·7 per cent., and the Episcopalians 20,718 or 3·5 per cent., was very gratifying. Only eleven ministers died during the year, a number much below the average of recent years, and the total amount raised for all purposes was £211,410 17s. 8d. Each of the five Presbyteries outside Ulster showed an increase in the number of its families, Cork coming next to Belfast with 18 per cent. There were 86,747 Presbyterian pupils in National schools, and their congregational debt was £105,000. The Assembly passed a resolution against the establishment of a sectarian university in Ireland.

Oxford Letter.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

OXFORD is doing much for the lads through the Church Lads' Brigade. On Whit-Monday, preparatory to a day's outing, some 170 lads met in St. Giles' Church to listen to an address by Rev. H. Gibbon, of the Oxford Pastorate. They then went to Wytham Park and spent the day in manœuvres. The zeal of the lads shows that the Churches are meeting a real need, and when it is remembered that each company has its own Bible class, one cannot but be truly thankful for the movement.

The venerable Rector of St. Aldate's sets an excellent example to many a younger man by his energy and forethought. As hon. sec. of the Bible Society he has already arranged the annual meeting for October 24, and this week urges, in the pages of the local papers, all friends of the Society to book the date, quoting the following words from the late Archbishop Benson:—"The Church must work for the Bible Society with her whole heart and soul! Out of seventy languages used in the Missions of the S.P.G. and C.M.S. they are entirely dependent on the Bible Society for sixty."

The new rector of St. Ebbes, Rev. P. W. G. Filleul, has issued a pastoral letter to the people, in which he invites co-operation. Mr. Filleul comes to us with a great reputation for hard and successful work. He will find plenty of scope at St. Ebbes, and we pray his ministry may be a great force for good among us. He begins his ministry on Sunday.

"Our own missionary," Rev. H. Elwin, of Fourah Bay College, Sierra Leone, has been paying us a visit. Some six years ago Mr. Elwin was curate of St. Peter-le-Bailey, where he ministered to the blessing of many; he then went out as Vice-Principal to the above College. His stay in Oxford has, we trust, been full of mutual help. Speaking for his many friends, it has been a great joy to see, face to face, one round whom so much prayerful interest has gathered. Mr. Elwin returns shortly to West Africa, and in the meantime is to be married to a lady who has already been much used in work among children. On Monday, Oxford Gleaners made Mr. Elwin a wedding present, and "sent him on his way" assured of the deep interest of many hearts.

Intolerance in Russia.—The persecution of the Stundists in Russia continues. A newspaper correspondent at Odessa reports that sixteen persons have just been sentenced to varying terms of imprisonment for holding a religious service in a private house. The police found the company engaged in prayer, with an open Bible on the table. The householder said they had met as Christians and believers in the Gospel, to pray and hear the Bible read in accordance with the Acts of the Apostles; but it was enough when the Court was satisfied that they were Stundists. Many Christian friends in this country will learn with something akin to dismay that Count Bobrynsky has just been arrested, and sent off at only four hours' notice to Kola, a wretched Lapp village on the Arctic Ocean. To a petition from the Count's mother, the Minister of the Interior replied, "Tell the Countess that I am acting in virtue of special powers from the Czar, and will brook interference from no one."

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

* I want to interest my* elder "Young People" every week in what Mr. Meyer writes on the Christian Endeavour Topic. Parents will also find the S.S. Lesson Notes suggestive and helpful for Sunday talks with their young folk. See next page.)

"Flowers."

WE have had "sowing" and "growing"; now let us have a little talk about "blowing," or flowering. "All a-blowing and a-growing" is a street cry we often hear; but how little those who sell the flowers know about them. The beautiful flowers are a special sign of God's goodness and love. "He hath made everything beautiful in its time" (Eccles. iii. 11). They would have answered their purpose if they had not been so lovely. And then how lavishly they grow, everywhere in nooks and corners where no one sees them, the ground is covered with wild flowers.

They all speak of their Maker, each flower "after its kind." There is order and regularity and plan even in the variety of flowers, and there are 80,000 or 90,000 different kinds at least. Some are found in one country and some in another; but all, when examined, are equally beautiful, and, like all God's works, the more you examine and magnify the more wonders you find. Put a rose leaf and a piece of satin under a microscope, and mark the difference between God's work and man's!

There are flowers peculiar to every month, and flowers which open so regularly at each hour of the day that you could make a clock with them if you planted them all round a flower bed. One flower opens at four in the morning and closes at noon, and the country folks call it "John go to bed at noon"; farmers boys in some parts, not having watches, go home to dinner when they see this flower close.

You see, too, there is a likeness between us and some flowers. They, too, have a skeleton with flesh and bones; they live, and breathe, and have a fluid circulating in them, and are covered with a skin, and they need food and sleep. Are we like the flowers, beautiful and fragrant and useful? But you must not think that the flowers were only made for us; oh no, there are some other little people who need the flowers, and use them much more than we do. I mean the insects; they could not do without the flowers, nor the flowers without them. Why some flowers even eat insects, and the latter get honey, &c., from the former, and carry the pollen from flower to flower. As some insects come out in the night, there are flowers for them, which do likewise, and these are nearly all white, and have a strong scent, so that their little visitors may easily find out where they are. It is a wonderful story all about the flowers, but I must not tell you any more, as I want to go to the Bible and see what it says about them.

Palestine, the Bible Land, is, in springtime after the early rain, robed with flowers; they run up the mountains, fill the valleys, peep out of the crevices, appear on the barest boulders, and make the most desolate places blooming, as if to advertise to all how much the Lord cares for this country and clothes it with elegance (Hos. xiv. 5-7). And yet, only two flowers are mentioned by name in the Bible—the rose and the lily. The wild rose in Isa. xxxv. 1, and the rose of Sharon, which is more like our narcissus, in Sol. Song ii. 1. Lilies of different kinds are spoken of in Sol. Song, the lilies of the valley, the tall lilies which tower above the thorn bushes, the lilies that grow among the grass; six times mentioned in this one little poem. The lilies which our Lord Jesus told us to "consider" (Matt. vi. 28) were most likely the fine scarlet flowers so abundant in Galilee. Remember the lesson He taught from these wild flowers.

We read that the Golden Candlestick, the Brazen Sea, and the wood-work of the Temple were all ornamented with carved flowers (Ex. xxv. 31, 33; 1 Kings vi. 18-vii. 26). The Psalmist and the Apostle Peter each teach us a lesson from the flowers, which, though so beautiful, last only such a little while; when we see them fade, we are to remember how our lives are soon passing away (Psa. ciii. 15; 1 Peter i. 24). And the Apostle James teaches us from the quickly fading flowers how all the glory and grandeur which riches bring to men may soon be gone, therefore the wisdom of putting our trust in the everlasting God, who is always the same (James i. 10, 11). Now, my dear young friends, I have given you a great deal to think about when you are gathering the flowers, and I hope you will be encouraged to try and learn more about them.

I. God's kindness in giving them.
II. God's care in clothing them.
III. The shortness of life and uncertainty of riches.

Keswick. E. J. Banks.

"The Christian" Bible Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 282).

1. Say in which verses the questions given below occur.

2. From the other chapters given, select a verse to form an answer to each of the several questions, and write it out.

a. Do not my words do good to him that walketh uprightly? (Micah ii., answer Psa. cxix.)

b. What hath the Lord spoken? (Jer. xxiii., answer Matt. vii.)

c. Show me now thy way, that I may know Thee. (Ex. xxxiii., answer John xiv.)

d. What doth the Lord require of thee? (Micah vi., answer Phil. ii.)

e. Shall we give, or shall we not give? (Mark xii., (answer Matt. x.)

f. Which way shall we go? (2 Kings iii., answer James i.)

g. Shall He live again? (Job xiv., answer John xi.)

h. What wilt Thou give me? (Gen. xv., answer Rev. ii.)

[Children under ten do any 2; under thirteen, any 4; under seventeen any 4.]

QUARTERLY PRIZE COMPETITION.

The Prize Questions at the end of this month will be set from the following Books:—

Divisions I. and II. Genesis (such portions as are covered by Hebrews xi. 1-22).

Divisions III. and IV. Leviticus. Chapters i.-xi. and Hebrews.

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (281).

1. The people among themselves (Mark vii. 37).
2. Paul to the Philippian Christians (Phil. iv. 13).
3. God to his people through Isaiah (Isa. xliv. 24).
4. The Samaritan woman to Jesus (John iv. 25).
5. Peter to Jesus (John xxi. 17).
6. Paul to the Thessalonian Christians (1 Thes. v. 21).
7. Paul to the Ephesian Christians (Eph. v. 20).
8. Paul to the Corinthian Christians (1 Cor. x. 33).
9. Peter to Cornelius and his company (Acts x. 39).
10. His disciples to Jesus (John xvi. 30).
11. Jesus to the father of the deaf and dumb boy (Mark ix. 23).
12. Jesus to his disciples (Matt. xxviii. 20).
13. Paul to the elders of the Church at Ephesus (Acts xx. 35).
14. Paul to the Corinthian Christians (2 Cor. iv. 15).
15. Paul to the Christians in Rome (Rom. viii. 28).
16. Jesus to the people generally (Matt. xi. 27).

281—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Douglas Anderson-Berry*, Ernest and R. Aldwinckle, Ethel Alford*.

B—Ethel Bailey, Emily Bridgewater*, Millicent Buckingham, Annie Blaikie, Gertrude Bush, Herbert Braddon*, Violette Birney, Mabel Baker*, Ella Berryman, Evelyn* and Ileene* Barstow, May Bligh*, Alison and Monica* Bailey, Clarence Bass, Reginald Bristow, Robert Bushby, Mabel* and Hilda* Barstow, Marion Boyle.

C—Daisy Clarke, Josephine* and Elma* Cheal, Stanley and Percy Chappell, Hannah Chapman, May*, Willie and Ida* Cullen, Hilda Cook, Mabel Campe, Gussie Clark, Ruth Collis, Ida* and M.* Cole, Gladys Clark, Kitty Cope*.

D—Violet and Kitty Donaldson, Polognia Daws, Ralph* and Dorothy* Daintree, Ethel Dancy*, Nellie* and Willie Dowsett, Stanley Drew, Tom Dunn*.

E—Olive and Leonard Ewin.

F—Kitty Fausset, Harry Flashman, Charles and Frank Freegard, Ethel Fowler, Vincent* Olive and Mabel Fleet.

G—Margaret Gorrie, Cicely* and Gladys* Gibson, Margaret Guillaume*, Grace Goldsmith, Mary Gover, George Goodall.

H—Violet Hatch*, Elsie Hanson*, Ina Hemmel*, Hetty Hill, Willie Hooper, Harry Hodgkinson, Dorothy Havergal-Shaw.

I—Elsie Irvine, Nellie Irving*.

J—Winifred* and Hilda* Jeffery, Linda Jones*, Alfred Johnson.

K—Lionel Kepple*, Annie Kingsford*.

L—John Leigh*, Cecilia Lichtenstein*, Gladys Lee, Mary and Sidney Law, Beatrice Le Mesurier.

M—Dorothy and Charlie McMullin, Doris and Winifred* Martin, Mildred Morgan*, Amy Munday, Edith and Aldie Margetts, Mollie, J., Geoffrey, Winifred, and Sidney Martin, Nora and A. Marshall, Barbara Maconchy, Arthur, Nellie, Lewis* and Grace Morice, Harvey Moore, Mabel Morris*, May Mills, Dorothy Morgan.*

N—Valerie and Eleanor Noel, Daisy Nicholas, Blanche Norcock.

P—Enid and Kathleen Pincott, Dora Phillimore, Evelyn Primrose Pechey*, Leslie and Cyril Partridge, K.* and E.* Pasley, Katie, Leonard, Winnie and Walter Picknell, Ruth Pledger, William and Lizzie Porter.

R—Gussie and Marion Roach, Marion Richards*, Marjorie, Edward and Madeleine Rainey.

S—Whately Smith, Margery Smart, Christine Soans*, David and S. Soltau, Betty Stocks*, Frances Stileman, Amy Simmons, Constance Sherbrooke.

T—Frank Tomkins, Theodora Thorn, Vincent Taylor, Dudley Toye*.

W—Nora and Ellie Wyatt, Freda Watts*, Mansfield White, Cecile and Phillis Wright, Bertram Webb, Stephen Wilson, Katie Welch, Fanny Wheeler, Ruth Warren*, Greta Watson*, Annie and Sarah Wood, Florry Wilde, Edith* and Edward Wheeler, Agatha Ward.

280—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Margery Ashdown, Mabel Ashwell*.

B—Dorothy Butcher, Susette*, Helen, and Mary* Beck, Gladys and Marjorie Batting, Louise Betts*, Mabel Baker, Clara Brown*, Beatrice Brouard, Aline Bazett*, Marianne and Evelyn Butlin, Frances Burnett*, James Barker, S. Boxer, Leonard Browne, Aleen Byres-Leake, Nelly Bayford*, Maud Bunn, Dorothy*, Gordon, and Harold Berry, James and Gordon Bryant, Lucienne Brabandes, Ernestine Bühl*, Massy and Conyers Baker.

C—Dorothy Cooper, Ernest* and Annie* Cole, David,* Henry* and John* Colville, Jessie*, Maggie* and Walter* Carter, George Crawford*, Percy and Stanley Chappell, George Cary, Duncan and Hyde Campbell, Dorothy Clarke, Alfred Cocking, Alice Cady, Hannah Chapman*, Beryl and Gladys Calvert, A. Colenso Josephine and Elma* Cheal.

D—May Darroll*, Gladys and H. Davis, Marie Denizot, George, Hilda, Elizabeth and C. Drayson, Kittie Donaldson-Selby, Nessie and Ion Dunn, Marjory Dyke, Violet Davidson.

F—Hyacinth FitzSimons, Ethel Fowler, Kitty Fausset, Frank and Charles Freegard, Eva and Mabel* Fletcher, Phylis Fry, Lewis, Meg and Agnes Fullerton, Laura Finch, Jeanne Faucon, Louise Filhol*, Gwendolen, Eirene and May Fennel, F. and Aileen* Figgis.

G—Winnie Grove, Aimée Guilbert, George Goodall, Edith Grieve*, Henry Goulding, Evelyn* and Grace* Gulston, Mary Glass, Dorothy Green*, May Glover, Margery, Colin and George Graham, Brown, Stuart, Dorothy, Edith and Jack Gray, Constance Gabbett*, Elsie*, Margie* and Isabel* Goudge.

H—Nellie Hatchett, Elsie Hibbs*, Winifred, Henry and Edith* Harvey, Violet Holford*, Ella Hake*, Kathleen and D. Heckford, Elsie Hill*, Sandy and May, Handasyde, Georgette Hoffmann, Clarice Herivel*.

I—Ami and Isabel* Inglis, Daisy Iredell.

J—Lawrence and Lizzie Johnstone.

K—Margaret Kinnaird, Dorothy*, Grace, Philippa and Cecilia* Kerr, Jeanie Kyle, Susie Keen*.

L—Edith and Harry Lowe, Alice Lee*, Dorrie and Mary Lynn.

M—Alice* and Maisie* Mackenzie, Marjorie Martin, William* and Isabella* Morrice, Margie Marston, Dora Muir*, Mary, Daniel, Dorothy*, and Margaret* Morris, Ella, Joy*, and Margaret* MacFadzean, Dorothy Morgan, Margaret Macdonald, Charlie* Jessie, and Alex. Morrison, Philip Martin, John* and Ella* MacMurray, Arthur MacLeod Johnson*, Charlotte Millar*, Dorothy, Leonard, and Winnie Mace, Daisie Mackenzie, Connie Murfin*, Harvey Moore, Margaret McDougall.

N—Hilda and Gerald Nicholls, Edith Nash*.

O—Maude* and Eva* Oakes, Louisa O'Brien.

P—Myrtle Perry*, Christine and Mary Pearson, Enid and Kathleen Pincott, Isabel* and Gladys* Phipps, Clarice, Geoffrey and Percy Peach, Margery Pibel, Evelyn Primrose-Pechey*, Cyril and Leslie Partridge, Jessie, Eddie, Connie, Ada and Willie Palmer, Ruth Pledger, Lizzie and William Porter, Laura Percy, May Panes.

R—Elmina*, Jessie* and Cecily* Roe, Hope and Olive* Robinson, Mary Rolland, Maggie Russell.

S—Poppie Stidolph, Constance, H. and Edgar Schaeffer, Raymond, William and Augustus Simpkin, Frankie Sellwood, Dollie Salt and Lucy and Helen* Stalker, Nannie Sturrock*, Florence, Ellen and Effie Simpson, Stanley W. Smith*, Hugh* and Agnes* Shields, Flora Smith*, Lily and Ellen Scriven, Violet*, Evelyn* and Gladys* Shaw, Lydia Shirley, Germaine Schumann, Mary de Spiganovics*, Reginald Skinner.

T—Carleton Tufnell, Evelyn Tracey*, Margaret Tweedy, Florence Tomlinson, Willie Thomas*, Winifred Trotter, Madge and Doris Twite, Charlie and Flossie* Thomson.

U—Eva Usher*.

W—Dorothy Woodforde*, Gladys, Elsie* and Lilian* Willoughby, Ella and Alexander Watt, Charles and Kathleen* Wingrave, Leonard Wall, Ernest, Kenrick and Queenie Wakeford, Nellie* and Rachel* Wilson, Freda Watts*, William and Stewart Watson, Pringle Wilson*, Nora and Ellie Wyatt, Dorothy White, Rachel*, Georgina, James and Sarah Wilson, Violet* and Louisa* Walker.

FOREIGN LIST.

No. 274—Mattie (Umhlali), Huldah Krige* (Stellenbosch) Minnie, Cuckoo, and Flo Lister (King William's Town). No. 276—Ivan, Rotha, Lottie, and Eric St. George (Ontario). No. 277—Dora Wallace* (Ontario). No. 278—Kate*, Ina, and Nettie Thomson (Bulgaria). No. 279—Ina*, Nettie*, Katie*, and Will* Thomson, Phyllis Boyd (Malta).

Personal.

Many thanks for flowers received during the week. They have been much appreciated wherever sent.

Jeanie Kyle.—I am glad to recognise your name again, and hope you will be able to continue. The "second list" includes those received from Scotland and Ireland by first post on Thursday morning.

Gladys Lee.—As you are under ten years, you belong to Division I.

Frances Burnett.—You may remain in your old division till the end of this quarter.

Sydney Robertson.—I am sorry you are unable to send your "Searcher" regularly, but hope you will continue as long as you can.

Uncle Tom.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. J. Spiers, Hamilton, to June 16. Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Broughty Ferry to June 21; Ballater, June 23; Braemar, June 30; Surbiton, July 7. Mr. Hutchinson, Pe shore, June 17-21; Cranleigh, June 22-23; Southfleet, June 29-30; Kingston-on-Thames, July 1; Thornton Hill, near Croydon, July 5; Donhead, Salisbury, July 7; Mr. R. T. Archibald, Edinburgh, to June 17; Sheffield, June 28; Leeds, June 29. Mr. E. T. M. Dennes, Redhill, June 21. Rev. A. G. Dodderidge, Croydon, June 22-24; Hampstead, June 26; Tooting, June 29-July 1. Mr. Phillips Welch, St. John's, Isleworth, June 15. Mr. E. Clark, with Caravan, Lavendon, Olney, Bucks. Mr. L. H. Ingram, with Caravan, in Kent. Mr. David Clarke, with Caravan, at Great Bardfield, Essex. Messrs. T. Page and Wilson, with Caravan at Horley.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending June 22.

Sun. June 16	Acts	x.	1-16	Thurs. June 20	Acts	xi.	19-30
Mon., „ 17	„	x.	17-33	Fri., „ 21	„	xii.	1-12
Tues., „ 18	„	x.	34-48	Sat., „ 22	„	xii.	13-25
Wed., „ 19	„	xi.	1-18

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.—According to the Daily News, the Norfolk County School, which stands about midway between Dereham and Fakenham, has been bought privately by a gentleman, whose name has not been disclosed, but who intends to present it to Dr. Barnardo. On Thursday morning last a party of 101 young girls left St. Pancras for Liverpool, whence they sailed in the evening in the Allan liner Tunisian as emigrants for Canada, under the auspices of the National Waifs' Association (Dr. Barnardo's Homes). This party, the second for the current year, brings up the total number of emigrants sent out by the Homes since they began their emigration work to 11,947. The great majority of these young people have been placed out in the Dominion, where the Association has three emigration centres and a large Industrial farm. Up to the present less than two in a hundred of the emigrants have disappointed the hopes with which they were sent out. Last year 931 young people, in all, were emigrated by the Association.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, June 16.

REVERENCE FOR SACRED THINGS (Exodus iii. 1-6).

FOR forty years Moses had lived in the heart of Egypt. Brought up as the son of Pharaoh's daughter at the Court, the highest teaching that the colleges could give, the Civil Service and the Army, were all within his reach. Stephen tells us that he was mighty in words and deeds. It may be that he was eloquent in those days. Secular history tells us of the prowess with which he led the troops against the Ethiopians. These circumstances generated a spirit of self-assertion and of masterful leadership, which had to be humbled to the dust before he could be the instrument of the Divine will. Those who shall serve God in the world must not be devoid of force of character, but their whole nature must be subordinate to the will and power of God. In order to the breaking down of the strong nature, and with a view to making him wholly dependent upon the unseen and Divine, God took him away into the lonely places of the desert, where, through long days and months, he had little else to occupy his mind than the care of sheep. With the mighty dome of heaven above him, with the intense silence of the desert around him, broken only by the occasional rush of sand down a mountain side, the musical hour-glass of the desert, and with the quiet, gentle creatures present with him, withdrawn from the busy world, his soul could firmly take and safely keep the impress of eternity.

For ages before his time Horeb had been known as the Mount of God. Its sublimity and majesty had disposed the hearts of men to regard it as in a special sense the footstool of Deity. One day a wonderful sight struck the gaze of Moses. A low ordinary acacia bush of the desert stood wrapt in flame hard by the track he was pursuing. With the shepherd's eye that notices everything, he remarked that it did not burn down to the ground, but that the foliage and branches were not consumed. The fire was its own fuel. It needed nothing that the bush could give to sustain its ruddy light. This fact arrested him, and assured him that God was there. He turned aside to see. Let us more often turn aside. The commonest things may have most of the Divine in them, if only we look deep enough. Let us cultivate a spirit of holy curiosity. Let us not be content with the outward alone, but let us penetrate to the heart of things. Mrs. Browning tells us that every common common bush is aflame with God, but only he who sees takes off his shoes.

In the Free Church Assembly Hall in Edinburgh, a week or two ago, I saw the emblem of the burning bush behind the Moderator's Chair, with the words "It was not consumed," in Latin beneath it. Always the bush has been the symbol of the Church in the midst of fiery persecution, and yet no twig of it lost, but this is not the truest rendering of the emblem. There can be no doubt that the fire that shone was not that of persecution or suffering, but a Shekinah presence of God; and is it not beautiful to note that God needs nothing from us to make Him love us, or pity us, but that his gracious presence trembles in lambent flame around us, asking nothing but giving everything, expecting no return, but with both hands bestowing unnumbered mercies, repelled and refused, and yet returning to offer its gifts.

Notice God's double knock—Moses, Moses; it is one of eight such in Scripture—and the exhortation to uncover his feet. There was the outward sign of reverence, which becomes the renewed nature of the holy soul. It is not enough for us to entertain great thoughts of God, let us show them by the reverence of our demeanour. God is in heaven and we on the earth, let us not be rash and hasty in our speech. Let us refrain from the wandering eye and the wandering thought. Let there be that detachment from things and people around us that we may be able to stay our souls more absolutely upon God. Let those who surround us feel that there is something quickening and elevating in our very behaviour, when we approach the footstool of God. Alas! the spirit of reverence seems to have fled from our earth. Once, woods and rivers, mountains and valleys, seemed full of God, and man was disposed everywhere to act as priest, but those days are fled.

Our Lord quoted the sixth verse as a proof of immortality. God could not call Himself the God of the dead patriarchs. If He was still their God they were living at the time He spoke; and He lives to-day, and they live in Him, and all those who depart live ever in Him. He is the Resurrection and the Life. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

A Society at Guildford, when taking the topic, "Practise Christianity," organized an egg service. The members all brought eggs, on which were written texts of Scripture. One hundred and ninety eggs were afterwards distributed by the members of the Sunshine Committee among the most needy cases in the town.

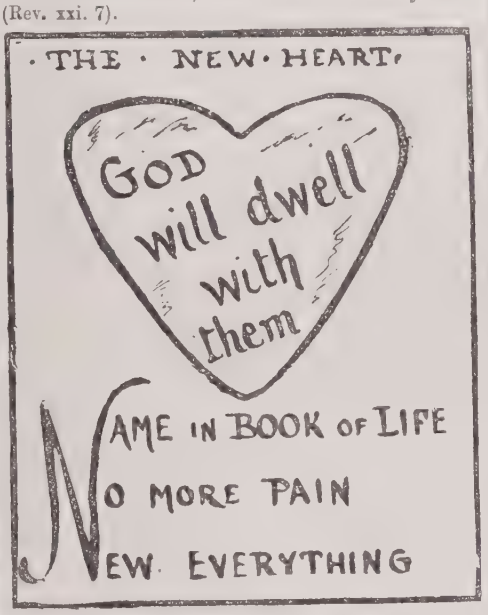
The largest Junior Society in the world is that in Siloam Methodist Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, which has 400 members. The girls are divided into companies, A B and C, and the boys into companies, one, two, and three, with captains to keep the records of each company. They have a "cradle" roll waiting for admission into the Junior Society, and a reserve company in waiting for promotion into the Senior Society.

International S.S. Lesson.

June 23, 1901.

A NEW HEAVEN AND A NEW EARTH (Rev. xxi. 1-7).

"He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God, and he shall be my son" (Rev. xxi. 7).



Key to Blackboard Plan.—The new heart brings the God of heaven down to dwell in it (Golden Text—2 Cor. vi. 16; Isa. lvii. 15). God in the heart means—Name in the Lamb's Book of Life; heaven, where there shall be no more pain; and "all things new" (5).

This is more a lesson on looking forward as to what shall be rather than what is now; and yet the new life must be begun now, and we must begin to prepare if we are to take part in the heavenly life to come.

Everything will be fresh (1, 2).
Everything will be different (4).
Everything will be pure and holy (27).

To inherit all these new things we must go through (6), viz., be thirsty for the Water of Life now; (7) fight the battle of life now; get our names written in the book of life now (27).

Study some of the "new" things that will help us to prepare for this heavenly city. A new heart (Ezek. xxxvi. 26). Be a new creature in Christ; put on the new man (Col. iii. 10). Living up to the new commandment (John xiii. 34). Taking up the new song (Psa. xl. 3).

Our bodies are called "temples of God." Illustrations of God dwelling with us are given, by the Tabernacle in the midst of the Israelites, with the Holy Presence visible over it. The pillar of fire and cloud, leading and guiding the children of Israel. "Abide in Me and I in you." Life of the vine running into the branches. "We will make our abode." "I will come in." All these tell of an indwelling God.

The Golden Text says: "He that overcometh." This is one condition upon which God makes all things "new" to the Christian. The overcoming begins here. Study also in Rev. ii. 7, 11, 17, 26; iii. 5, 12, 21; they are all rewards for faithful service and faithful fighting against the world, the flesh, and the devil.

The holy city (2) is more fully described in the whole of chapters xxi. and xxii. Those who will not be found there (8, 27). Note all the "no more" (4); The Gates (13) open, north, south, east, west; to all the world.

The glorious light (23).

The sacrificed Lamb for the sin of the world (22), &c.

Will you be there? Shall I?

Howard Street Gospel Mission, Wandsworth.—The twenty-eighth annual meeting of the Howard Street Gospel Mission Sunday and Ragged School, Wandsworth Road, S.W., was held on May 22, the chair being occupied by Mr. W. Baxter. The report was an encouraging one, showing that 500 meetings had been held in the hall, with 165 in the open air. Over 1,200 tracts had been distributed to houses and in the streets. The superintendent is Mr. John Soames, 94, Grantham Road, Clapham Road, S.W.

American Notes.

A SUNDAY or two ago an Italian Roman Catholic priest, named Teodosio Zotto, publicly renounced the Church, and read a copy of his letter of withdrawal written to a bishop in Italy, before an immense congregation in the Italian Evangelical Church in Brooklyn. During the last week or two several other priests have visited Christ's Mission for conference with Father O'Connor as to their future.

Summer activities of the churches in this city are to be general this year. The reasons are that there are more than a dozen big financial schemes on hand, and at least one general revival movement. Fewer New York ministers, and, for that matter, ministers of all cities, are going abroad than usual. Northfield, Chautauqua, and other resorts are to get them instead. Surprisingly large numbers are going to the Christian Endeavour Conference in Cincinnati and the Epworth League Convention in San Francisco in July, the California bookings from this city alone already reaching nearly 300.

A Chicago press despatch of last Friday said:—"Mrs. Lilian M. N. Stevens, National President of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, who has returned to Evanston after a tour through the South, is satisfied with the results of the abolition of the canteen. 'If army officers,' she said, 'would only present statistics showing the amount of disorder at military posts while the canteen was open as carefully as they have shown up these disorders since the abolition of the canteen, their reports would lose much of their impressiveness.' The Women's Christian Temperance Union has made investigation at several army posts, and is thoroughly satisfied with the results of the abolition of the canteen."

From Boston comes a statement that the local Jews interested in the Zionist movement were greatly encouraged last week to continue their work by the receipt of a cable despatch from the committee, who recently had an audience with the Sultan of Turkey. Dr. Theodore Herzl, who, with representatives of the Rothchilds and other banking houses, approached the Sultan, had cabled to Prof. Richard Gottheil, president of the American Federation of Zionists: "I, Wolfson, and Marmereck had audience with the Sultan. We ask special effort to collect federation tax and to sell shares." The federation tax referred to in the message is the tax paid by each local Zionist society to the general fund for the propagation of the cause. The shares are the shares of the Jewish Colonial Trust, a bank with 10,000,000 dols. capital, which is to be established in London. Many thousands of these shares had been sold in Boston and throughout the world before this news was received.

Ratcliff Strangers' Rest.

FRIENDS will be glad to know that the Lord has been giving much blessing among the sailors lately. There was the usual Bank Holiday tea on Whit-Monday, May 27, and in the evening meetings in English, German, and Swedish were held. At each meeting there was definite blessing.

After the tea one man went up to a lady worker and said, "Do you remember speaking to me in Wells Street a few months ago when I had been drinking? You asked me to come to the meeting in the evening. So I came, and when it was over I went home and gave my heart to the Lord." With beaming face he said, "It has been a new life ever since, and I have been longing to come back and tell you." Before leaving he gave a thank-offering to help any distressed seaman, and left £6 to be taken care of for him, with the remark that before it always went in drink.

It is also very cheering to see the men after their conversion spending their time in trying to get their shipmates to the meetings, and to lead them to Christ. Again and again the men say on leaving, "This place has become more than a home to me; I shall never forget the happy days I have spent here."

Sailors' bags, magazines, aad Gospel literature are greatly needed. The Hon. Sec., Dr. Andrew Neatby, will be pleased to send specimen bags, or reports, on application to him at 163, St. George's Street, E.

Old Ford Out-and-Out Mission.—For eight years the Out-and-Out Mission (275, Old Ford Road, E.) has been at work among the 40,000 inhabitants of Old Ford, of whom it is estimated that not more than four per cent. are in the habit of entering places of worship. The effort is quite undenominational, being carried on voluntarily by working men and women in the evenings. Considerable difficulty has been experienced in meeting the expenses, amounting to about £200 annually; and at present the hall is in great need of repair and painting. Mr. R. J. Sambridge, Harley House, Bow, E., is the leader of the Mission.

Tent Work.

The London Campaign.

THE London Tent Campaign continues to make excellent progress. The work is being actively carried on at Dartford, Fulham, Stratford, Kilburn, Clapton, and Brixton, and is shortly to be commenced at other centres. Widespread interest has been aroused, and large audiences have come together.

During the past week some remarkable revival scenes have been witnessed in the large tent erected on a piece of vacant ground on the High Road, Lower Clapton, opposite Linscott Road. On Thursday last the vast tabernacle was nearly filled, and but few people left before the end of the meeting. That such an assembly should listen to simple testimonies, and a Gospel address full of plain-spoken truth, speaks volumes for the plans and methods of the Campaign Committee. Here were representatives of many classes, including the highly respectable local tradesman; the neatly attired shop-assistant, spending her "evening out;" the rough-and-ready working man, in fustian; the Church member, seeking opportunities of usefulness in winning souls; and the budding hooligan from Hackney Wick and the Lea Marshes, full of energy and mischief.

WITH EVIDENT EAGERNESS

The service was most effective, Mr. Leonard Weaver, who was in charge, receiving powerful help from the Stratford Conference Hall Male Choir. The striking experiences of some of these worthy brethren are admirably adapted to impress in an evangelistic service. With clear, ringing words, several of them related the circumstances which led to their conversion, and with a pathos that deeply moved many in the audience, spoke of the glorious results of the change, both in their own lives and in the circumstances of the loved ones at home. The story told by the brother who, years ago, entered at Stratford in a state of intoxication, and who was sobered and brought to the Lord on that occasion, was alternately terrible and humorous—but the humour was that which is nearly akin to tears.

ONE OF MR. MOODY'S MEETINGS

Mr. Spencer Johnson sang "Where will you spend eternity?" with much feeling, and Mr. Weaver closed the first meeting with telling words of warning and invitation. During the after meeting about twenty persons pressed their way to the front in order to confess Christ, and many more signified their desire to be prayed for.

In the course of the meeting Miss Wallis gave a brief account of the work of the ladies' committees, which it is hoped to form at each centre for the spiritual help and encouragement of women converts.

Mr. Weaver's meetings closed on Friday, and on Saturday Mr. George Clarke began a mission. In order to arouse public attention still more, the local committee arranged a street procession. Some of the friends carried Chinese lanterns, and others rode bicycles which bore announcements of the campaign. On Sunday there were very large attendances and good meetings. Mrs. Tetley is the soloist, and Mr. James Gracie has the general direction of the musical arrangements.

At Stratford, the Brothers Frank and Bewley Weaver have conducted the meetings. The gathering for men only, on Sunday afternoon last, was fairly large, and in the evening many seekers were dealt with.

Mr. William Grove reports glorious times at Fulham last week; the attendances increased night by night until, on the Thursday evening, the tent was filled. There were some remarkable cases of blessing, including a number of drunkards, both men and women. On Sunday Rev. J. T. Vine preached solemnly on "The Great White Throne" to a large and attentive congregation.

The campaign at Dartford has been brought to a conclusion amid expressions of regret. Messrs. Leonard Weaver and William Grove took part. On Saturday evening last there was a large gathering of converts and friends, at a testimony meeting. On Sunday there were two large meetings. In the afternoon Mr. Weaver gave a stirring address to young converts on "the Value of the Atonement." At night there was a splendid congregation, and a goodly number of decisions. The announcement of the termination of the mission brought forth cries from all parts of "Come back soon!" A praise and testimony meeting on Monday last was the concluding gathering at this centre.

Mr. J. Sabee sends particulars of the work at Kilburn (Willesden Lane), where the congregations were not so large as the workers had hoped. There has been, however, a good proportion of seekers. The meetings are growing in interest, and it is believed that the attendances will be largely increased. Messrs. R. S. Bradbrook and J. Bennet Anderson have told forth the Gospel story with freshness and power. On Friday last, Mr. Bradbrook gave a clear and forcible address, which was blessed to several persons. One woman in particular was deeply affected. She was quite broken down, but was soon rejoicing in the Great Deliverer and went home praising God. The afternoon service for children was also very encouraging, and a number of young people were helped in the inquiry room.

United Mission at Newport, Salop.

A United Tent Mission, conducted by Miss Reginald Radcliffe and others, is in progress at Newport, Salop. The opening services on June 2 were most encouraging, the tent being filled to overflowing. Miss Radcliffe's many friends will hear with regret that while being driven in a dogcart towards Newport on June 4 she was thrown from the vehicle, owing to the horse stumbling. Miss Radcliffe was much shaken and her face cut and bruised. In spite of this occurrence, however, she hopes to be able to continue the Mission during the present week.

Rev. F. C. Spurr is leaving England on June 25 for a visit to Palestine, and will not be back until end of August. No letters will be forwarded.

Temperance at Grimsby.—The returns for drunkenness in the Borough of Grimsby for twelve months show the wisdom of Lord Heneage in not allowing any public-houses in the Wellow Weelsby ward, which is on his estate. The total cases for the whole borough were 581. There are six wards. The number of cases in the Wellow Weelsby ward, which is by no means the most thickly populated, was only eleven.

White Slaves.—It is very desirable that steps should be taken to bring about the inclusion of laundries within the new Factory and Workshop Act. Some of the statements in the report recently made by the Women's Trade Union League in regard to the condition of the workers in some of these establishments is simply appalling. In one case a dozen children, aged from eight to eleven, were kept at work from 7 a.m. to 10 p.m., and women were employed for nearly fifteen hours a day, including Sundays.

Among the Blind of Belfast.—The association which is known as the Belfast Society for Home Mission Work Among the Blind, ministers to the needs of a pathetic community. Miss Isles continues her labours as Bible woman, and during last year paid 2,298 visits, aiding and comforting the afflicted. The Society's gifts of money are principally devoted to the relief of blind old men and women. Many an aged father and mother, ending their days in the home of a son or daughter, have a wonderful sense of independence derived from the allowance of a few shillings a week. The number of blind with whom the Society is in touch now reaches 350, including the Home inmates and those in the Union. The Home is in every sense fully realizing the aim of its founder. The attendance at the weekly meetings is taxing the accommodation to the utmost. A men's reading room has been started, a Christian Endeavour Society organized, and every endeavour is made to relieve the monotony of the lives of the afflicted ones. The president, Mrs. R. B. Pim, Urry, Knockbreda Park, Belfast, will be happy to have the opportunity of communicating with friends interested in the welfare of the blind in Ireland.

About Books.

IN DEFENCE OF BIBLICAL REVELATION.

A WORK of peculiar interest to students has been given to the world in Lines of Defence of the Biblical Revelation. By D. S. Margoliouth, M.A., Laudian Professor of Arabic in the University of Oxford. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) The author has made for himself a unique position as a critic of the critics; and this work testifies to his varied learning and logical acumen.

In the opening chapter on "The Bible of the Gentiles," Mr. Margoliouth conducts several studies, with special reference to the light afforded by the Septuagint version. The Song of Solomon is specialised, and it is contended that this book of the Old Testament presented to the Jew of the year 300 B.C., or thereabouts, much the same appearance as it presents to one of us. We must, therefore, deny the post-exilian origin of any performances in classical Hebrew, and thus restore the bulk of Scripture to pre-exilian times. Mr. Margoliouth gives us a very suggestive study as to the mutual relation of the apocryphal books Wisdom of Solomon and Ecclesiasticus, and investigates their influence upon the LXX. He finds that the Wisdom of Solomon was utilized by the LXX. translator of Isaiah, who is thus shown to have done his work before 260 B.C. The Greek translation of Wisdom is therefore little later than 270 B.C., and the original Hebrew (for which a strong plea is put in) must be dated some generations earlier. This bears upon a large question. As the Pentateuch was known to the author of Wisdom, these considerations demand a revision of the hasty findings of modern analytical critics.

The volume is full of good things; but, as we have said, it is for students; and those who have not a fair familiarity with recent controversies, and a knowledge of the outstanding facts regarding the original texts and early versions of the Scriptures, will find the pages somewhat perplexing. Mr. Margoliouth assails the theories of a split, or divided, Isaiah, and advances cogent reasons and convincing arguments for the unity of the book which stands in the name of "the Evangelical prophet." He also gives us an erudite study of the book of Job, discussing difficulties that have exercised scholars for generations past. Other chapters deal with the canonicity of Daniel and the dates of the Psalms.

"The Bible of the Jews" is a valuable paper, as is also "The Calendar of the Synagogue." Finally, "The Principles of Criticism" are considered. The Arabic tongue is shown to solve many difficulties, Professor Margoliouth holding that it furnishes the most reliable help in the understanding of Hebrew. The author of this work not only has command of essential facts bearing on controversies that involve much for the faith of the Gospel, but he has a pertinacity and boldness that have already stood him in good stead, and will, we trust, embolden him to continue his research and pursue his work of instructing the religious public.

Poker work or pyrography is an art capable of large application in decorative undertakings. The curious and others will find a clear statement of the elements in A Handbook of Pyrography, by Mrs. Maud Maude, with illustrations by William Freeman. (1s. 6d. net. Dawbarn & Ward.)

The Five Great Offerings and Their Law; or, "The Divine Programme of the Redeemer and his Redeemed," by E. M. S. We are glad to see a second edition of this book, of which we spoke highly on its first appearance. It is dedicated by Mrs. Synge, the author, to her father, Rev. E. B. Elliott, author of the Horæ Apocalypticæ. It is preceded by a commendatory letter of Professor H. C. G. Moule, and has a preface by Rev. Dr. J. Elder Cumming. It is a valuable contribution to the literature of the Offerings, and deserves a place in the library of every Bible student. (3s. 6d. Marshall Bros.)

Those who know Mr. Charles Edwards' earlier volumes of aids for speakers and teachers will give a cordial welcome to Pictures of Christian Life and Service (9d. and 1s. Morgan & Scott), which places at the disposal of others the results of much earnest and careful study of the Word of God. We warmly commend the book to those in search of further equipment for Christian service. The studies are both varied and interesting, including Christian Life, Fellowship, Duties, Joy, Testimony, Influence, Watchfulness Fruitfulness, Progress, Service, Power, and Hope; and are followed by a number of outline addresses on practical topics. The little volume abounds in apt illustration and apposite Scripture reference

STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE,

CLAPHAM ROAD, LONDON, S.W.
FOUNDED BY C. H. SPURGEON.

ANNUAL FESTIVAL

FOUNDER'S DAY,
THURSDAY, June 20th, 1901.

Afternoon Meeting at 3.30—
Chairman: W. S. CAINE, Esq., M.P.
Speakers: Rev. H. WOFFINDIN, M.A., Rev. R. CYNON LEWIS, and Rev. J. BRADFORD.

Evening Meeting at 6.30—
Chairman: F. F. BELSEY, Esq., J.P.
Speakers: Rev. GEORGE MARTIN, Rev. A. T. KINNINGS, Rev. E. HENDERSON, and Rev. E. H. ELLIS.

The President and Vice-President,
THOMAS SPURGEON and CHARLES SPURGEON,
Will take part in each Meeting.

Singing, Musical Drill, and Handbell Ringing by the Orphan Children.
An Exhibition of Moving Photographs from the Egyptian Hall.
The GREENWICH POLICE BAND will Play at Intervals.
Refreshments throughout the day. Illumination of Grounds.
Admission, SIXPENCE. Gates open from 2.30.

 We shall be glad if our friends who are unable to be present will kindly forward their contributions on or before the day, addressed to The Treasurer, c/o The Secretary, Mr. F. G. LADDS, The Orphanage, Clapham Road, London, S.W.

THE MILDMAY
ANNUAL CONFERENCE

will (God willing) be held in the CONFERENCE HALL, MILDMAY PARK, N.,
On June 25, 26, and 27, 1901.

SUBJECTS for Morning and Evening Meetings: God in Creation—God in Revelation—God in Manifestation.

AFTERNOON MEETINGS on Behalf of The Jews, The Lepers, Roman Catholics, South America, Africa, The Z.B. and M.M., The L.M.S., The London and Paris City Missions, Dr. Barnardo's Homes, The Young Abstainers' Union, The W.P.U. and P. Alliance, The C.P.A., The Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A., The Bible League; also Bible Readings.

Several Railway Companies have agreed to issue Return Tickets to London at Reduced Fares to those who purpose attending the Conference. A "certificate" is necessary for each person, and these "certificates" can only be obtained from the Secretary of the Mildmay Conference, at the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, London, N.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL UNION.
AN EXCURSION

WILL TAKE PLACE ON SATURDAY, JUNE 15th, 1901,
TO CLACTON-ON-SEA

TO CELEBRATE THE ANNIVERSARY OF THE OPENING OF THE Passmore Edwards Holiday Home.

The Train leaves Liverpool Street (G.E.R.) at 10 a.m., returning from Clacton at 7 p.m.

RETURN RAILWAY FARES—
ADULTS: First Class, 9s.; Third Class, 4s. 6d.
CHILDREN: „ 5s.; „ 3s.

THE HOME WILL BE OPENED FOR INSPECTION AFTER 3 O'CLOCK.

Tickets can be obtained at The Sunday School Union, 55 and 56, Old Bailey, and 57 and 59, Ludgate Hill; Stanesby Library, 179, Sloane Street, S.W.; and West London Auxiliary Depot, 133, Edgware Road, W.

Telegraphic Address: "ALMSFOLK, LONDON."
FRIENDS OF ARMENIA
47, Victoria Street, Westminster, S.W.

President: The LADY FREDERICK CAVENDISH.
Vice-Presidents: HON. MRS. FRASER and MRS. ALFRED BOOTH.
Chairman of Committee: E. WRIGHT BROOKS, ESQ.
Treas.: HECTOR MUNRO FERGUSON, ESQ. Sec.: MISS E. CANTLOW

WANTED, AS SOON AS POSSIBLE, £500 to start a Rug Industry in Armenia, which will render the Orphan Girls of one Region SELF-SUPPORTING.

And thus remove them from the Relief Funds, by which they have been supported since their fathers were killed.

Goods made by the Widows and Orphans are always on view a the above address.

DONATIONS on behalf of the above may be forwarded through HECTOR MUNRO FERGUSON, Esq., Hon. Treasurer, "Friends of Armenia," 47, Victoria Street, Westminster, S.W.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland

This Society continues to Spread the Word of God in the homes of the people, and never found a more open door, but funds are much needed to extend the Work.

Contributions will be thankfully received at the Offices, 27, Lower Pembroke Street, Dublin; or 9, Paternoster Row, London; and at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN

REV. J. O. GAGE DOUGHERTY, M.A.,
Secretary and Treasurer;
or CAPT. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE,
Hon. Secretary.

EVERYONE INTERESTED IN MISSIONARY WORK OR TRAVEL SHOULD VISIT THE

Livingstone Exhibition

(An Exhibition of everything connected with the Health and Comfort of Missionaries and Travellers), TO BE HELD IN THE Westminster Town Hall,
CAXTON STREET, S.W.
(Two minutes from St. James's Park Station and Victoria Street),
From JUNE 18—21, 1901.

Open each day at ELEVEN.
Admission ONE SHILLING.
(Missionaries, Missionary Students, and Nurses in uniform, Half-price.)

There will be a valuable Loan Collection of Livingstone Relics, including the famous Inscription on Livingstone's Tree, kindly lent by the Royal Geographical Society.

A Special Course of Lectures will be delivered on the Preservation of Health in Tropical Climates.

Further particulars may be obtained from DR. HARFORD-BATTERSBY, Secretary of Livingstone College (Incorporated 1900), 133, Salisbury Square, E.C., who will also gratefully acknowledge Contributions to the Livingstone Memorial Fund, for the Purchase and Equipment of the new premises of Livingstone College. The sum of £3,500 is still required, and it is hoped that this may be fully subscribed on the present occasion.

"A THOUGHT FOR A DAY." A SET OF FIVE VOLUMES IN A NEAT CASE.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

OUR DAILY HOMILY.

EXPOSITIONS OF SELECTED PASSAGES FROM EVERY CHAPTER OF THE BIBLE.

COMPLETE IN FIVE VOLUMES IN CASE.

May be had in any of the undermentioned styles:—

STYLE 1. PRICE 5/- NET. Post Free, 5s. 5d.
Five vols., attractively bound in cloth, with gold letterings: enclosed in a neat cloth case to match.

STYLE 2. PRICE 6/6 NET. Post Free, 6/11.
Five vols., in cloth boards, library style, with gold letterings: in neat cloth case to match.

STYLE 3. PRICE 8/6 NET. Post Free, 9s.
Five vols., tastefully bound in cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges and letterings: in a neat cloth case.

STYLE 4. PRICE 10/6 NET. Post Free, 10/11.
Five vols., bound in maroon leather, round corners, gilt edges; and in a leather case to match. A very handsome set.

The "F. B. Meyer" Library of Devotional Volumes.

TITLES.

Christian Living: Counsels concerning the Christian Life.
The Shepherd Psalm: Meditations on the 23rd Psalm.
The Present Tenses of the Blessed Life.
Saved and Kept: Counsels to Young Believers and Christian Endeavourers.
Key-Words of the Inner Life: Studies in the Epistle to the Ephesians.
The Future Tenses of the Blessed Life.
The Psalms: Notes and Readings.

SEVEN BOOKS, each in Library Style, and enclosed in a CLOTH CASE, 7/- NET.
or 9/6 NET
in Superior Bindings.
(BOTH CARRIAGE EXTRA.

The "F. B. Meyer" Library of Expository Works.

The FIVE VOLUMES, each Bound in Library Style, and enclosed in a SLIP CASE,
10/- NET.
(POSTAGE 8D. EXTRA.)

TITLES.

Christ in Isaiah: A Series of Expositions.
The Way into the Holiest: Expositions of the Epistle to the Hebrews.
The Life and Light of Men: Expositions of John i.—xii.
Love to the Uttermost: Expositions of John xiii.—xxi.
Tried by Fire: Expositions of the First Epistle of Peter.

NOTE.—Combinations of any of Rev. F. B. Meyer's Volumes at 2/6 (Scripture Biographies or Expository Works), may be had, enclosed in Neat Cloth Case, as follows:—

Any THREE VOLUMES, 6/-; Any FOUR VOLUMES, 8/-;
Any FIVE VOLUMES, 10/-; Any SIX VOLUMES, 12/-;
CASE INCLUDED. CARRIAGE EXTRA. PRICES NET.

The Combined "F. B. Meyer" Library.

CONTAINS 22 VOLUMES

Including Mr. MEYER'S TWO AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL WORKS:

Reveries and Realities: Life and Work in London; and The Bells of Is: Voices of Human Need and Sorrow.

The TWENTY-TWO VOLUMES, enclosed in OAK CASE, 37/6 or in Superior Bindings, 47/6

(Prices are NET and Carriage is extra.)

LONDON: MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER BUILDINGS, E.C.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller.

Death of Rev. George Everard.

BY the death of Rev. George Everard, on Friday, one of the most prolific and influential authors of evangelical literature has been removed. As a clergyman of the Church of England, he was diligent in religious effort and fervent in spirit, serving the Lord with cheerfulness and godly fear. Few men have written with greater force against corrupt doctrine, or given wiser counsels to meet the needs of all classes and conditions of people. It was in 1846, while engaged in business pursuits in Manchester, Mr. Everard found the power of a new life in Christ, and without delay gave himself to the Gospel ministry. His first charge was at Ramsgate; subsequently he laboured at Marylebone and Hastings, and in 1858 was appointed to the vicarage of Framsden, Suffolk, which he held for ten years. From 1868 to 1884 he was vicar of St. Mark's, Wolverhampton, and was privileged to see many encouraging results of an arduous ministry. He afterwards held charges at Dover, Southport, and Teston (Maidstone), bearing to the last a faithful testimony for Christ and his Gospel. Outside parochial duty Mr. Everard conducted missions in various parts of the country; but it is by the work of his pen he will be best remembered. Considering the large circulation attained by some of his writings, he was a clergyman with the world for his parish. He wrote hundreds of tracts and small books, and they were used of God in leading many souls to Christ.

Y.W.C.A.

THE new Y.W.C.A. Home and Institute at Hampstead were opened on Thursday last. The premises consist of two houses situate in Kemplay Road, one of which is to accommodate permanent boarders, while the other will be used as a Holiday Home for young women in need of rest and fresh air. Both the houses are bright and comfortable.

The proceedings at the opening commenced with a short dedicatory service conducted by Rev. G. S. Streatfeild, vicar of Christ Church, Hampstead, in which Archdeacon Brook Deedes, vicar of Hampstead, and Rev. J. Gillies, Presbyterian minister, took part. The Dowager Countess of Erroll declared the institutions open, and during the meeting some interesting particulars of the world-wide operations of the Y.W.C.A. were given by the Hon. Gertrude Kinnaird.

Particulars respecting accommodation in the Homes should be addressed to Miss Collier, Queen Victoria Home, 6, Kemplay Road, Hampstead, N.W.

The Welcome Home, Canning Town.—The rally of the "Christian Lifeboat Crew" at Miss Child's Welcome Home for Sailors, Canning Town, E., on Tuesday, June 4, was an occasion of much encouragement. Strong testimony was borne against the evils of the traffic in strong drink, and, after some helpful words from Miss Child, an instructive address was given by Mr. Spurgeon, and several members of the "Crew" testified.

Convention in the Isle of Dogs.—A very helpful Convention was held at Christ Church, Poplar, on June 3-8, in preparation for a mission promised by Rev. Canon Hay Aitken. The vicar, Rev. C. S. Coldwell, presided, and among the speakers were Revs. F. S. Webster, W. Ostle (vicar of St. Bartholomew's Hospital), W. Darlow Sarjeant, A. F. Marrs (St. James-the-Less, Bethnal Green), and F. B. Meyer. Addresses full of spiritual life and power were given, and fervent prayers were offered for the salvation of souls and the strengthening of believers. A union of hearts was promoted which promises abundant fruit. The room was full every evening.

Friendless Girls in Liverpool.—Prior to the year 1892 there was no Home or Institute in Liverpool to aid friendless but respectable girls. The crying need for a means of protecting and training such girls pressed its claim upon a well-known benefactress, who was led to institute the Bethesda Mission and Social Work for Friendless Girls. During the eight years which have elapsed since then, 2,400 girls have been saved, trained, and helped. Unfortunately the work is burdened by a heavy debt, and new comers have to be refused admission. The need is for extending rather than lessening effort on behalf of the friendless. The hon. secretary is Rev. A. Price, Training Homes, Netherfield Road South, Liverpool.

Evangelistic.

Vale Mission Hall, Guernsey.

A SERIES of special services, conducted by Mr. Bartley Angel, have been brought to a close here The Mission has greatly benefited by these services. The Word has been preached, Sunday after Sunday, with power. We believe that a great many of the unsaved have been aroused, and God's children have been greatly stirred. The Evangelist's brother, Mr. Joseph Angel, assisted in the closing services. Altogether the Mission has been one of great blessing.

Peter M. Vaudin, Hon. Superintendent.

Mr. Charrington's Work.

During May Mr. Charles Inglis conducted the services in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile End Road, E. He is no stranger to Mr. Charrington's work, as he has preached annually for the mission for the past twenty-nine years. This fact alone is surely a cause for much praise. The many years of wear and tear has not had the effect of weakening his power, and to-day he is as strong as ever in the proclamation of the Gospel. Then he brings all these years' experience to bear upon his efforts for Christ. Notwithstanding that for over 9,000 consecutive nights the Truth of God has been declared in the same place, the grand old Gospel has again proved the power of God unto salvation to many. Its efficacy and hold upon the people continues unabated. The meetings were wonderfully sustained, while night after night the inquiry room was used for those seeking Christ.

Among Bedfordshire Villages.

For some years past Mr. Frank Penfold has conducted evangelistic work of an undenominational character among the villages around Bedford, reaching the people by means of house-to-house visitation and open-air and indoor meetings. As a result a goodly number of converts have been won for Christ. These have been linked on to evangelical places of worship. Mr. Penfold has, therefore, laboured for all the churches. The unconventionality of the methods accounts for much of the interest aroused, especially among the poor. The missioner often gathers the village school children together, teaches them Gospel hymns, and speaks to them of the Lord Jesus. He also calls upon the old people and the sick and afflicted, reading from the Bible and praying with them. A feature which has had excellent results is that of starting out early in the morning and conducting family prayer in as many cottages as possible, always making some homely comments upon the Scripture, and endeavouring to lead sinners to decision. Large and enthusiastic meetings in connection with the work were held last week at Bedford. Some of the local ministers expressed their cordial sympathy, and encouraging addresses were given by Mr. W. Willett, of Brighton, and other friends.

At the Glasgow Exhibition.

Rev. John McNeill has begun a series of Sabbath evening services in St. Andrew's Hall specially intended for Exhibition visitors and attendants. Last week, on the opening night, the fame of the preacher brought together a huge audience, many having to content themselves with standing room.

On the following day a series of noonday services was opened in St. George's Parish Church, Buchanan Street. The bills contained the announcement that the meetings are for visitors to the Exhibition and business men. At ten minutes before the hour of opening things did not look promising, the number of people inside being very small. The day was beautiful. Visitors to the Exhibition from surrounding towns are not in great force on Mondays as a rule, and of those who did come some no doubt said, "Why should we go into a church when we have come here to see the great show?" A business man whispered in our ear that the meetings are scarcely known as yet. When Mr. McNeill came in a fairly decent congregation had gathered, which increased to nearly 400, mostly men. Hymn No. 305 in "Songs and Solos," "Look, ye saints, the sight is glorious," having been sung, the preacher led in prayer, a thing he seldom did in his last great series of business men's meetings, and as he prayed, we were drawn out in soul.

Before beginning his address, Mr. McNeill said: "I am glad to say we are having a good beginning. I remember the chill that went over my heart the first time I went into this pulpit at the beginning of the business men's meetings a year past in winter; and you all know to what they grew. This is not a good hour for business men. There are ten men free between one and two, for every one that is free between twelve and one. All business men are welcome, but the meetings are especially for Exhibition visitors." The address was on Matthew xi. 1-19, which he divided into three sections according to the parenthetical marks, giving a picturesque and striking comment on each section.

Open-air services are to be conducted on the Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays of each week, at the outside of Finnieston United Free Church. Should the weather prove unfavourable the meetings will be taken inside.

During June and July Mr. J. J. Sims is to conduct special Exhibition services. His Sunday evening services are to be held in the Queen's Rooms; and on week nights he will preach in the open air. Mr. W. Thomson has begun a month's mission in Cranstonhill, not far distant from the Exhibition grounds.

A meeting for the spiritual encouragement of those who were influenced by the Simultaneous Mission was held recently at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. Among the speakers were Rev. J. Tolefree Parr, Gipsy Smith (fresh from a fruitful mission at St. Heliers, Jersey), and Mr. W. R. Lane. There was a very large attendance.

Evangelists' Engagements.

 This column is intended for Missions of some days' duration, not for engagements of a single day.

Mrs. Baeyertz.—Till June 17, Gt. Wakering; July 7-22, Brynn, near Wigan.

Mr. John Coates and Mr. George Bentley.—Till June 24, Mitcheldean, with large Gospel Tent.

Mr. W. Collard.—June 15, 16, Hope Mission, Merton; 19, Lincoln; July 7-22, Tent Mission, Long Ditton.

Mr. Geo. Clarke.—Lower Clapton, till June 23.

Mr. W. D. Dunn.—Till June 28, Dundee; July 6-20, Larbert; July 28, Aberdeen.

Mr. John Elliott.—June 16, Gospel Hall, St. Marychurch; 23, Gerston Hall, Paignton.

Mr. James S. Harrison.—During June, St. Giles' Christian Mission, Sundays only.

Mr. John Hawkins.—June 15-July 1, Parkstone Quay Tent Mission.

Rev. J. Jameson.—June 15-24, Hawes, Wensleydale.

Mr. Bob Johnson.—Till June 20, Exeter; 23-30, Leeds.

Mr. Newton Jones.—June 16, Norwood; 22-July 2, Haverhill District Mission.

Mr. Chas. Inglis.—Till June 15, the Tent, Fulham; 17-22, the Tent, Kilburn.

Mr. W. R. Lane.—Till June 17, Mountain Ash, South Wales.

Mr. Herbert Leng and City Policemen, Baptist Church, Stroud Green, June 16; Memorial Hall, London Street, Bethnal Green, June 23.

Mr. James Sprunt.—During June, Kensal Rise Tabernacle, except 16, Cecil Hall, Enfield Town.

Mr. R. Spragg.—During June, Martock and surrounding villages, with tent.

Gipsy Smith.—Aug. 31-Sept. 9, Truro.

Mr. Henry Thorne.—During June, Edinboro' Castle, Limehouse.

Mr. J. Weedon.—Till end of August, Tent Missions Evangelization Society.

London Tent Campaign.—Tents are now erected in the following districts:—Stratford, West Ham Lane; Fulham, Lillie Road; Kilburn, Willesden Lane; Clapton, Lower Clapton Road, close to the Congress Hall; Brixton, Canterbury Road; Woolwich, Woolwich Common (opening June 15).

Messrs. J. Bennett-Anderson and R. S. Bradbrook.—Kilburn Tent till June 14; Brixton Tent, from June 15.

Requests for Prayer.

For a three days' convention at Ipswich, June 19-21; speaker, Rev. Robert Middleton, of Norwich.

For a fifteen days' tent mission at Banstead, June 16-30, conducted by Messrs. Huxtable and Dymock.

For a mission to be held at Seaham Harbour, June 16-23, for deepening of spiritual life; missioners, Messrs. Lewis and Birkett.

Notices.

Applicants for Tracts.—Rev. J. W. Atkinson, Claremont Cawley Road, London, N.E.; Mr. A. W. Slade, 80, Hawksley Road, Stoke Newington, London, N.; Mr. Charles E. Medlicott, 15, Spencer Road, Loraine Road, Holloway, N.; Mr. F. J. Gibson, Chapel Street, Camelford, Cornwall; Mr. H. Hall, 40, Birley Street, Shaftesbury Park Estate, Lavender Hill, London, S.W. (for young men and women); Mr. Thomas Marsh, Lodd, Iroquois County, Illinois, U.S.A.; Miss F. Warner, Y.W.C.A., Mildmay House, Hastings; Miss Tibbetts, 317, Tudor Road, Leicester; Mr. S. A. Fox, 18, Cromwell Street, Nottingham (open-air work); Miss Kate Pryor, village missionary, Wootton, Beds.; Mr. G. H. Clist, 28, Orchard Gardens, Teignmouth; Mr. F. Woolley, Kent Bible Carriage Mission, Home of Rest, Whitstable; Mr. J. Brett, Star Mission Room, Newton St. Faiths, Norwich; Mr. Edward Brown, 4, Hall Street, Dalton-in-Furness.

Communications Received with Thanks.—C.B. F.M. C.G. J.M. J.W.B. Miss T. W.T. T.E.H. G.H.P. C.P. F.C.S. E.M.H. A.E.W. J.H. S.S. W.H. J.G.K. M.C. W.N. E.H.K. C.C. A.H.S. C.A.G. K.H. J.E.M. W.H.S. L.B. J.D.P. and L.H. A.R.H. G.P.R. S.D.J.L. K.P. Miss R. S.A.F. F.W. E.P.F. J.P. G.J.J. F.S. G.R. C.P. E.M.T. R.C. D.H. P.W.J.D. J.G. H.T.W. G.R. C.K. M.D. J.F.R. T.L. M.C.O. F.T. W.B. W.N. J.H. B.J. M.J.V. A.H.C. J.D.K. A.C. W.A.E. P.M.V. W.H.S. T.C.U. F.C.S. G.J.W. C.S.C. G.F. A.E.W. A.C. J.F.W. F.J.G. G.H.C. K.P. L.R.F. B.H. A.C. C.C. E.M.D. E.B. W.A.L. J.F.H.B. H.C. A.B. E. and F. G.R.W. T.H.A. J.T.W.R. F.C.S. J.W.A. C.M. M.H. W.F. F.K. J.L. J.B. J.C.

Bohemia.—Rev. J. D. Kilburn has recently visited the Free Reformed Churches of Eastern Bohemia. In Skalitz Mr. Kilburn held a two days' conference with the pastors, which was an occasion of much spiritual blessing.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

Fighting Famine. It is gratifying to observe that the feeling of national responsibility in regard to the spiritual and temporal welfare of the millions under British rule in India is steadily deepening. The formation a few days ago of an influential "Indian Famine Union" points to the development of a healthy public opinion, and very happy results may reasonably be anticipated from its labours. Including many able men, practically familiar with all the details of life and administration in India, the association is in a position to insist upon attention to its suggestions, and if it is supported by the Christian public, as doubtless it will be, there is no reason why it should not enforce the needed better organization of the Famine staff and improved legislation in matters affecting irrigation, the cultivation of the soil, and the labourer.

Indian Natives and Christ. Dr. Welldon, the Bishop of Calcutta, who is home on a short furlough, has been speaking very plainly concerning the situation in India. The secular instruction offered by our Government to the natives has had the effect of divorcing them from their native beliefs, and also, unfortunately, from what little morality was attached to those beliefs. As nothing has been put in the place of the discarded positions, there remains, for many a Hindoo, simply atheism; and, as Dr. Welldon says, when the Indian atheist, trained on European methods, feels his power, there will be a speedy revolt against an imperial power which is anything but loved. There is an unparalleled opportunity in India at the present moment for missionary work on a new and enlarged scale. None of the Indian religions are regarded, even by their adherents, as world religions. The field is open to the Christian missionary as never before. The question Dr. Welldon asks is, Will the Church understand the new situation and rise to the occasion? He protests, as we have often done, against the policy so openly pursued in India amongst the British, of contempt for the "niggers" and of cynical criticism of missionary effort. Frequently the greatest hindrance in the way of Christian work in India is the presence of callous and godless Englishmen, whom the natives regard as Christians, and whom they hate. St. Paul's words, in Ephes. ii. 14, as regards the effect of the Faith on the ancient world is equally true of the modern. Christ alone can break down the wall of partition between the races of mankind.

The Moorish Mission. The sole object of the Moorish Mission to London appears to be that of offering congratulations to King Edward upon his accession; and it seems likely that our visitors will depart from these shores without one word being said to them concerning the reforms so urgently demanded in their own benighted country. A contemporary gives a vivid picture of Morocco, contrasting its poverty with the pastimes of its ruler. The young Sultan, only twenty-three years of age, occupies his time entirely in the pursuit of pleasure. European games have been imported into his Court, and with these he is absorbed. Meanwhile the prisons are full of unjustly-detained victims; the internal resources of the country lie undeveloped, and civilization is rigorously excluded from Moorish life. If only the Sultan could be reached and advised, and even compelled to alter his method, then a catastrophe, which will otherwise come, might be avoided. Far better for the reforms to come internally than for jealous rival European Powers to risk war over this corner of North Africa. Meanwhile, it must not be forgotten that missionaries have been in Morocco for nearly twenty years, and to their efforts many ameliorations have been due.

Jews and Palestine. We are following the Jewish Zionist movement with deep interest. Only a short time ago it seemed as if it were doomed to perish, on account of the uncompromising hostility of the Sultan of Turkey towards it. Now, however, the Sultan seems to have completely turned round, and to have placed in the way of Dr. Herzl every facility for the accomplishment of his purpose. It is a remarkable thing that some of the leaders of the movement are not, strictly speaking, devout men. Events move so quickly nowadays that we are liable to be distracted by the movements themselves from the sources that direct them. Students of the Word of God will watch this new phase of Zionism with increasing interest; for they alone know the secret forces which are directing events towards the Divine goal.

Anti-Semitism. Comparatively few people in this country, we imagine, have any idea of the strength of the Anti-Jewish virus which is found in France. Several newspapers exist solely for the purpose of attacking Jews; and one of these, at least, has an enormous circulation throughout the whole country. An "Anti-Jewish Catechism" has been recently published, in which extremely violent statements are made, supported by alleged quotations from great writers and leaders, of whom Martin Luther is one. The craft of this latest move is apparent to all. These things will help to explain the reason for the riots in Algiers and elsewhere. Atheists and Jesuits join forces in this unholy war. It is one of the many battering rams being used to damage the Republic, and an important item in the list of events now transpiring in France.

A Dangerous Bill. The Education Bill, which the Government have announced their intention to push through Parliament before the end of the Session, removes all the present safeguards which prevent sectarian and privately managed schools, primary and secondary, from being endowed from the rates. It makes it possible for non-representative committees, "packed in the interests of clericalism and of private schools," to endow sectarian schools, and even to endow High Anglican and Roman Catholic boarding schools, which reject a conscience clause. It would be well for the friends of religious liberty to wake up to these facts without delay, and see that the freedom which was won at so dear a price is not taken away before the nation is aware.

Childhood Without God. The Sunday-School Chronicle has a timely article under this heading upon the need of teaching children a definite religious faith. Stern facts are driving leaders of religious thought to examine the present methods of dealing with the young, and it is well that we are all called upon to face the situation. We would emphasize the word "definite," for therein lies the crux of the matter. We do not regard as "definite" teaching the vague statements so often conveyed to the young that there is a God, that He is good and kind, and that we must be good. Children very early demand the reason for all things submitted to them, and, "as they are able to bear it," the great, distinctive truths of the Gospel should be put before them. But if this teaching is to leave its impression deeply upon the mind, it must be undertaken at home as well as at Sunday-school. Of the 168 hours in each week, the child is at Sunday-school, at most, two hours. It is clear then that if the teaching and example given during the 166 hours counterbalance what is accomplished in the two hours, the latter has but little chance. Do even professedly Christian parents sufficiently realize their great responsibility to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord?

Militarism Among the Young. The growing custom of inviting distinguished soldiers to distribute the prizes at school annual prize days is one that is not calculated to keep down the military sentiment at a time when the rising generation is already deeply infected by it. Boys are peculiarly sensitive to the emotion of hero-worship, and a successful soldier is always a great man to them. It is scarcely wise to strengthen this youthful tendency, by giving a prominent place to those who have distinguished themselves on the field of war. The future of the country depends entirely on the pursuit of a peaceful and friendly policy. Militarism among the young is a most dangerous spirit at all times. Just at present it is specially undesirable to do anything, however indirect, to foster it.

Devoutness during Worship. The lack of devotion, not to say decorum, manifested in many congregations during public prayer, is a growing slight upon the institution of common worship. We heard recently of a certain choir whose position is rather conspicuous, of which twenty-two members were taking stock of the congregation while the minister was praying. It is quite certain that though posture does not guarantee devoutness, it may be a real help or a great hindrance to it. It is not easy to pray with all the heart while the senses are open to outside sights and extraneous sounds. A return to reverence is greatly needed in the public ministrations and hearing of the Word.

Wanted—More Religious Courtesy. The relations between Church and Dissent would speedily improve if Archdeacon Sinclair's advice were taken to heart by many of his fellow clergy.

The following passage appeared in the report of a recent sermon by him :—

Far from uselessly trying to keep our Nonconforming brethren in the background, it should be our delight to take every opportunity of sharing our work with them and showing them respect and attention. From time to time we hear of unhappy and unworthy instances of annoyance, coldness, disdain and presumption. The leading Methodists declare that the position of their body towards the National Church has been greatly altered by the intolerance of too many of the new school of young presbyters in the country villages. That is the sad old policy of exasperation. If that policy is still pursued, who can wonder if the consequences are hostility? Why should such people expect the Nonconformists to be so much more Christian in their forbearance than themselves? Nothing is more touching than the friendly gratitude with which acts of kindness and courtesy are always welcomed by the Nonconformists. It puts us to shame because the courtesy is not so general and customary as to be, in the way we might have hoped, a matter of course.

In vivid contrast with this, stands the attitude of those represented by the Church Times, which bitterly complains of the Bishop of Llandaff for having joined with some Nonconformists in officiating at the funeral of the late Principal Viriamu Jones, of Cardiff University College.

Truckling to Rome.

The Home Office has issued a return showing the oaths touching religion which are taken by the various European sovereigns. As this document doubtless will be given wide circulation by the friends and emissaries of Rome, it is well to bear in mind that such an appeal to foreign practice has no real bearing upon the question affecting England. The circumstances are entirely different, the vital difference being that this is a Protestant country. As a leading daily contemporary has said :

We ourselves, long after our separation from the Roman communion, when practically the whole nation was devoted to the National Church, had the misfortune to see a Sovereign ascend the throne, who, being a Roman Catholic himself, made no secret of his intention to restore the Romish worship in the country, contrary to the rooted belief of five-sixths of his subjects. . . . The danger which menaced us in 1688 may not be likely to recur, but the memory of it is deeply impressed upon the minds of the English people . . . and any tampering with the Oath as it now stands would seem to them in the nature of a concession to a religious communion which they dread and abhor, and as the beginning of a general settlement that could only be regarded with the deepest suspicion and distrust.

Whence Came the Priest?

The late Sir Walter Besant, in an article written some years ago on "Books that Have Influenced Me," claimed that the book which has influenced the minds of Englishmen more than any other outside the covers of the Bible is the "Pilgrim's Progress," and that while it survives two or three great truths will remain deeply burned into the English mind. "The first is the personal responsibility of each man, the next is that they do not want, and cannot have, a priest." He goes on to say :—

I confess that the discovery, by later reading, that the so-called Christian priest is a personage borrowed from surrounding superstition, and that the great ecclesiastical structure is entirely built by human hands, filled me with only a deeper gratitude to John Bunyan.

It is said that the "Pilgrim's Progress" is far less known among the rising generation than among those that have preceded. Does this account for the alarming recrudescence of priestcraft among the intelligent classes of this country?

The Pope and the Bible.

A Roman Catholic, writing in The Guardian, throws some instructive light on the attitude of the Pope towards the circulation of the Holy Scriptures. The original texts, as well as Oriental versions and all Latin translations by non-Catholics, even though faithfully rendered, may only be read by students of theology and Biblical criticism, on condition that they do not impugn any Catholic dogma in preface or gloss. All versions in the vernacular are ipso facto condemned, unless approved by the Holy See, and furnished with careful glosses ; and they are absolutely forbidden if issued by Bible Societies. The official reason is thus given :

Experience has made manifest that if the lection of the Bible in the vulgar tongue is permitted without discrimination, it turns, through the temerity of men, more to their detriment than their advantage.

If for "the detriment of men" we read the "disadvantage of the Romish Church," we shall realize the true inwardness of this prohibition. A free Bible means Romanism on the wane. Therefore the Pope greatly fears it.

The Return from Rationalism.

Professor Harnack's book on "The Essence of Christianity," in which a subtle tone of Rationalism underlies an exposition of the Faith, which has been very favourably reviewed in theological circles in this country, has come under the condemnation of representative Protestants in his own land. At the annual conference of the Protestant clergy of Prussia, assembled in Berlin, a resolution was passed affirming the book to be "a relapse to the superficial attitude of an antiquated Rationalism," and that "by thrusting what according to Scripture and history is the essential part of Christianity into the background" Harnack does justice neither to the "intelligent appreciation of history nor to the necessities of mankind." The Conference closed the discussion by

Testifying with the reformers and the believers of all time who have spoken by the power of the Spirit, that Christ, the Son of God, in indissoluble connection with the Gospel in the Word of God, must remain the central point of Christianity; and the confession of the conference remains "I believe in Jesus Christ, God's only Son, our Lord."

This brief confession, which carries the whole body of Reformed theology with it, is in a high degree reassuring. The German pastors know the Gospel if the professors do not.

Priest versus Jesuit.

It is a noteworthy fact that the most bitter opponents of the Romish methods continue to be found within the pale of Rome. The recently-published remarkable history of the Jesuits in England from 1580 to 1773 by Father Taunton is another striking illustration of the anomaly. Writing as a priest, with a strong hatred of Protestantism, he nevertheless brings string after string of grave accusations against that Order now so powerful at the Vatican, and he does not hesitate to charge them, upon a firm basis of historical facts, with shameful acts, and still more discreditable defences of their unholy deeds. Yet the Jesuit Order, with its black list of crimes, is spreading apace in Great Britain, and day by day widening its boundaries, while men sleep who ought to be awake to the spiritual interests of the people.

Rural Temperance Reform.

The Times has an excellent leading article upon the experiment being made by Lord Grey to deal with the temperance question in rural districts. Our contemporary points out the double difficulty which obstructs the progress of temperance in the more remote places. First, there is the brewer, holding tied houses. His sole interest is to sell as much beer as possible—a work in which his dependent landlord may be relied upon to assist him. Second, there is the fact that the public-house is, for a certain class, the great social centre where contemporary topics are discussed. The problem is, how to preserve the character of the latter, free from the spirit of the former. Lord Grey is seeking to solve this difficulty by providing houses in which temperance drinks are pressed in preference to alcoholic liquors, the latter being also supplied. Of course this can only be done where houses are free from the control of the brewer. It is the tied house system that is such an unmitigated curse, since it directly encourages excessive drinking. For this provisional measure of reform we can only wish Lord Grey and his friends all success. It is operating for good wherever it has been established. But to benefit the country at large it must be removed from private hands and be enforced by the State. The country will yet awaken to the fact that it has been guilty of abnormal folly in putting its morals at the mercy of the brewer, whom in every way it supports.

"Verbal Thimble-Rigging."

There are few things more misleading than the manipulation of great historic words and names in the interests of heretical and bizarre doctrines. To employ a great name, which has definite historical and doctrinal associations, for the purpose of labelling any and every wild-brained scheme, is what Horace Smith called "verbal thimble-rigging." At present we are afflicted with several heresies which are extensively advertised as "Christian," but which have scarcely a thing in common with the faith of Christ. His divinity is carefully rejected, his doctrine is mutilated, his words deliberately altered and paraphrased, and the residuum is mixed with a compound of bad philosophy and spiritualism—the whole passing to the world as "Christian." If people are burning to be original, it is a pity that they cannot take upon themselves the full responsibility of their teaching without sheltering themselves under the sacred name of our Lord. A man has no more right to label his peculiar notions "Christian"—since that name has a definite historical meaning—than he has to designate as "Euclid" any fanciful geometry of his own invention.

Business without God.

A few days ago there appeared in one of the chief financial city papers a suggestive article, headed, "Consols and Cataclysms," in which the writer, a business man, explained, without meaning to do so, why men of the world are heedless concerning eternal things. The appearance of the new star suggested writing the article, in the course of which the writer admits that the business world gives little heed to new stars or to natural forces around us, and he goes on to justify the position thus :—

But, after all, the carelessness with which the business world regards the play of the stupendous natural forces all around it is probably based upon a very good appreciation of its own helplessness in the matter. If there is some astral body travelling in our direction, which must certainly crush us out of existence in fifty years from date, we do not know why there should be any change in the price of Consols. The interest on Consols will be regularly paid until the near approach of the said astral body makes things so hot for us that cheques curl up, and gold is impossible to handle.

So far as the article itself is concerned it is a simple statement of fact ; but its omissions are so remarkable. When "the cheques curl up," what about the immortal man who used to handle them? What about the life beyond this doomed earth? When men measure everything according to the fleeting standard of human affairs, it is no wonder that eternal realities are unreal to them.

Born of Water and the Spirit.

EXCEPT a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God" (John iii. 5).

"I indeed have baptized you with water: but He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost" (Mark i. 8).

"For John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence" (Acts i. 5).

"Both stages of the washing away of the former life, the death and destruction of the old man, and the attainment of a new breath of life, are expressed in the mysterious formula, 'water and Spirit.'"

Stier's "Words of the Lord Jesus."

"As to the birth by water and by the Spirit, the two things are the expository equivalent of being born again; two ways of denoting and describing it, or two parts of it thus described. Two parts of it, we think, as repentance and faith are both included in conversion. To the meaning of the expressions, those annotators and interpreters have guided us best who find the key of the exposition in the ministry of John, and especially in his words, 'I baptize with water; but He shall baptize with the Holy Ghost.'"

Dr. John Edmond, in "Exposition of the Gospel of John."

THE HERALD AND THE KING.

1. Our subject has reference to the Kingdom of God.

2. John and Jesus both came preaching this Kingdom—John the herald, Jesus the King.

3. John's testimony was, "All flesh is grass; the grass withereth." Jesus testified, "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." John mourned of abounding sin; Jesus preached of superabounding grace (Matt. xi. 17).

4. John baptized in water; his mightier Successor baptized in the Holy Spirit (Mark i. 8; John i. 31-33; Acts i. 5).

The closing verses of John ii. form an important introduction to our subject:

Now when He was in Jerusalem at the Passover, in the feast day, many believed in his name, when they saw the miracles which He did. But Jesus did not commit Himself unto them, because He knew all men, and needed not that any should testify of man; for He knew what was in man (John ii. 23, 25).

The Lord Jesus came as Man, that man in Him might die. The fulness of the time had come for God to execute judgment upon all that "was in man." Therefore, Jesus would not, could not, "commit Himself unto them, for He knew what was in man." Observe the emphatic repetition of this word: "He knew what was in man." "There was a man of the Pharisees named Nicodemus." He was essentially a representative person. He was a man—a member of the race whom Jesus could not trust, because He knew what was in man. He knew men to be "alienated from the life of God by the ignorance that was in them" (Eph. iv. 18). Nicodemus was "of the Pharisees"—that type of men, who, rejecting the counsel of God against themselves, refuse to confess the sin and ignorance in them, and take their stand upon their own righteousness. He was, withal, a ruler of the Jews—a man of rank and eminence in that nation which was God's vineyard and his pleasant plant, whither He had now come in fashion as a Man, and from which He "looked for judgment, but behold! oppression; for righteousness, but behold! a cry"—"Crucify Him." Not that Nicodemus was a representative and typical Pharisee, but a man of the Pharisees—the healing of whose pharisaism had already begun; for the man had touched the border of the garment of the Son of God, and virtue had already begun to go forth, in answer to the faith which believed with the heart and confessed with the mouth, that this poor and lowly Nazarene is known to be a Teacher sent from God, because He works the works of God.

TEACHER AND SCHOLAR.

What a study for man are these two men, thus met by night—the man Nicodemus, and the Man Christ Jesus. The former, whom four thousand years of history had failed to teach the corrupting quality of sin, that terrible seed which, once sown in the soil of human nature, had brought forth, in every individual of the race, fruit only unto death; the latter, the holy, harmless, undefiled Confessor of this depravity of man, come, at God's set time, to endure the fearful wages due to sin, that He, through death, might quicken with his own eternal life the dead in trespasses and sins.

Mark them well: man and his Maker—the creature and his Creator. Influenced by fear of man, Nicodemus seeks the cover of the friendly night to shield him from his fellows' view. And yet, representative as he is of man at his best estate and altogether vanity, he comes, unconsciously yet irresistibly, drawn by the Father to the Son. Oh! the grace, that begins so gently, bowing itself to the darkness, that the dark one may be led to light; stooping to the wise man, who has to become a fool that he may be wise!

"Rabbi, we know." His first words show that Nicodemus knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know. The very thing he knew proved his ignorance as to who and what the Teacher really was. It had not yet been revealed to him that the Man whom he was acknowledging as a Teacher sent from God was the true God and eternal life.

How shall the heavenly Teacher teach this learned scholar? First of all, by humbling him. "The lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down; and Jehovah alone shall be exalted in that day," when the mysteries of the Kingdom are revealed to a soul or to a world. The first words of the Teacher cut down at a stroke all the high imagination of his pupil: "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." Whatever the natural man may see, the Kingdom of God is only visible to the new creature.

"THE NATURAL MAN KNOWETH NOT."

Nothing is so remote from the spirit of a new-born babe as that word, "we know." The desire to know brought in the curse. The tree of knowledge bore the forbidden fruit. "Vain man would be wise, though he be born as a wild ass's colt." No form of words could be devised—no truth could be expressed—so fitted to bring Nicodemus to a right state of heart, as that in which Jesus met his assertion and acknowledgment, "We know that Thou art a Teacher come from God."

But this is a hard saying for this man of the Pharisees, and he asks, "How can these things be?" Without satisfying his doubts as yet, the "Wonderful Counsellor" informs him of the manner of the birth, and of the entry into the Kingdom of God. And He gives the reason why: because "that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." We understand flesh here (as in so many other passages) as another word for fallen human nature, which cannot enter into the Kingdom of God. That which is born of the flesh cannot enter; there must be a new creature born of the Spirit to inherit the Kingdom of God. The new wine must have new bottles: the old garment must be replaced by one altogether new.

THE TWO STAGES OF REGENERATION.

But the Kingdom is for man, and man is born of the flesh; how, then, can he enter? He must first get rid of the hindrance, and then be endowed with the qualification. Thus the second birth has two stages. There are not two births—one of water and another of the Spirit—but the birth from above has two periods. First, the flesh, born of the flesh, must die; and secondly, there must be the new life imparted. We are not wise enough to answer Nicodemus' question, "How can these things be?" but we see it around us in creation, everywhere: "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." Every insect which was once a grub, but died out of its worm-condition, and passed through its chrysalis-tomb into its new and joyous life, bears upon its painted wings, to men whose eyes are open to read the lesson, "Ye must be born again." And we see the same great truth in the resurrection for which we wait. This body of humiliation lies down in death, and by the quickening Spirit is fashioned like unto the glorious body of the Lord. "That which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die."

Now these two stages answer to the respective ministries of John and Jesus, and are described by both under the same terms—water and the Spirit. Compare Mark i. 8; Acts i. 5; with John iii. 5:—

"I indeed have baptized you with water: but He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost" (Mark i. 8).

"For John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence" (Acts i. 5).

"Jesus answered, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God" (John iii. 5).

DEATH THE WAY TO LIFE.

Here, in John iii. 5, it is as though Jesus had said, "You come and tell me, 'We know that Thou art a Teacher come from God;' but before you can truly know anything of Me or the Kingdom which I preach, you must become a fool that you may be wise; you must die that you may live. All this knowledge of yours is worse than valueless—it is defiled; and it is so because you are in your own nature unclean. Therefore, before you can enter into the Kingdom of God, you must die to all this natural wisdom, to everything that you inherit from Adam; die as a confessed and condemned sinner (because 'the wages of sin is death'), and you must then be born again by the operation of the Holy Spirit."

John came preparing the way of the Lord by declaring the people to be sinners against God—demanding the confession of sin from them—requiring them to go down into those waters of symbolic death, thus showing that they acquiesced in the judgment of God respecting them, and acknowledging that all they deserved at his hands was death. When they were brought to this, the way of the Lord was prepared; the people were in a true position; now He could deal with them in grace, and confer upon them the blessing with which his hands were full—even eternal life.

PAST PURIFYING.

But the Pharisees, and all the high and lofty ones who had rejected the counsel of God against themselves, had to be brought down from their self-righteous eminence; they were not even in the road to the Kingdom; they who enter thither must pass through the narrow gate of death, and there the Conqueror of Death meets them and quickens them with his own everlasting life. The Jews' idea, on the contrary, was all about purifying (verse 25). John answers them, just as his Lord had met Nicodemus, by telling them that they were past purifying. All things—once given into Adam's hand, and forfeited by him—the Father hath given into the hands of his beloved Son; he that believeth on the Son hath life, and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life (verses 35, 36). They wanted to purify what God had condemned as utterly corrupt. (The second part of this chapter—from verse 22—is John's corroboration of the declaration of Jesus, and affords an instructive supplement to his interview with Nicodemus.)

CONCLUSION.

We conclude then that to be born of water and the Spirit is to pass through the two stages of regeneration marked by the ministries of John the Baptist and the Lord Jesus. John "baptized in water unto repentance;" "they were baptized of John in Jordan, confessing their sins." Jesus baptized them in the Holy Spirit and fire, that they might become his witnesses (Matt. iii. 5, 6, 11; Acts i. 5, 8).

The revelation which the Lord Jesus made to Nicodemus, and makes to us in these simple yet comprehensive words, is, that except a man confesses himself a sinner, repents toward God, and yields up self, with all its wisdom and strength, to death; and except he be made a partaker of the Divine nature by union with the Son of God, through the operation of the Holy Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God.

M.

The Epistle of James.

By Rev. T. A. GURNEY, M.A., LL.B., Swanage.

V.—The End of Sin and the Goal of Grace.

THE subject of the following verses might be described as the Story of a Sin: Its Suggestion, Conception, Birth, Maturity, and Offspring. It is in striking contrast to the Story of a Sin as we are furnished with it by some modern novelists. And in nothing more so than its intense moral clearness. There are no half conceptions, no confusions of the moral issue by fascinating environments, no appeals ad misericordiam, no limitations of universal moral law here. We have the natural history of sin in its normal, its fatally certain progress, and if anything in the world is clear it is that we are following out Natural Law here as much as when we mark its operation in the physical sphere. Reason, Instinct, and Experience confirm the picture as true.

The first terrible feature is Man's Self-Deception. "It is from God I am tempted." The actual words indeed imply the intervention of means, but affirm that God is at least the remote cause of such temptations (Gen. iii. 12; Jonah iv. 9; Matt. xxv. 24-5; Romans iii. 7). We often hear the same excuse to-day: "My inherited nature;" "My unnatural conditions of life;" "My business surroundings; "My pressing family needs;" "All these things are against me." The heathen knew the same excuse. "But I am not guilty," says Agamemnon, in Homer's Iliad, excusing himself for his injustice towards Achilles, "but Zeus and Fate, and Vengeance walking in darkness." "What," says a guilty character in one of the plays of Terence, "if any god willed this thing?" Such deception springs from distrust of God and ignorance of his nature. It converts his universal moral law into an ever-shifting and subjective standard capable of a sliding scale to suit individualism. James' answer is:

ALMOST INDEFINITE ELASTICITY,

(I.) God never tempts, for He himself is untemptable of evil (13). Alford translates "unversed in things evil," but we must take it in its stronger sense. This was one of the names for God most frequently in use among the early Christians: "The Untemptable One." No constraint can draw Him towards such a contradiction of his nature. And on that account, passing into the range of actual experience in each individual case, it will be found that "He tempteth no man."

(II.) Temptation arises from the evil within our own hearts (14). At the very moment when the sinner is charging God foolishly, he is harbouring in his bosom the harlot-temptress, Lust, to whom he

YIELDS WITH SUCH FATAL EFFECT.

It is Solomon's warning repeated (Prov. vi.). Two pictures describe the debasing character of man's fall. He is "drawn away" out of his repose and safety behind the barrier of God's law or Christian habit, like a fish by bait; then "enticed" to swallow eagerly the snare, to accept the noose, to yield passively to the captivating delights of sense. Each word emphasizes the involuntariness, the shamefulness of the choice made as beneath man's freedom and intelligence. (Same word, 2 Pet. ii. 14.) It is, in fact, the victory of Desire ("a word always used in the New Testament with the underlying idea of evil"—Mayor) over Freewill. Man's weakness is thus the second feature of this passage.

And Man's Ruin is the last. (III.) Desire, yielded to, gives birth to sin (15). The guilty connection once established is maintained. Desire keeps her greedy spell over the conquered man. The offspring of that guilty union, Sin, grows. The mind becomes familiarized with her presence. She even becomes at last loved for her own sake. Then, in the awful climax, she works her revenge upon her guilty parent. Thus, in Shakespeare's King Lear, Gloucester, the unnatural father, loses his eyes at the instance of Edmund, and so

"THE WHEEL IS COME FULL CIRCLE."

(IV.) Sin herself, becoming the rival of Desire, fascinating in spite of her hideousness, goads her prey with the very promptings of Hell. By an unnatural and horrible union, when "come to maturity," she in turn brings forth death (apokuei. 15) (cp. Rom. i. 24-32). This victory of Lust and Sin finds many illustrations. Joseph's whole fate turned upon an hour's resistance to it. Samson's strength fell before the seductions of Delilah, as David's "in the matter of Uriah the Hittite." Poetry and Fable alike utter the same warning. Vivien the harlot, in Tennyson's Idylls, steals Merlin's wisdom, and leaves him spellbound in the forest, "lost to life and use and fame and name." Atalanta loses her race through stooping down to pick up three golden apples. Circe, "the daughter of the sun," turns her human victims into "grovelling swine." The "Tuscan mariners," carrying off Bacchus, god of wine, are changed into dolphins. Milton has no more terrible picture in his Paradise Lost than this ghastly union (II., 745, &c.). By contrast, turn to

A BRIGHTER PICTURE.

"Flesh and blood," says Menachoth, "seduce from the ways of life to the ways of death; God draws from the ways of death to the ways of life." With Him is no such darkness. He is "the Father of luminaries." The word is astronomical. He is the Personal, Transcendent, Self-revealing Source of all good, and of good only. The true light was ever coming, was ever immanent, in the world which He had made. He never left or leaves his creature to return to darkness. "Every good kind of giving, and every perfect boon, is from Him." He is the Sun of all other suns, the Self-Sufficient, Self-Sustained, Self-Imparting Life, from whom all forms of life are derived; the Immortal, Inexhaustible Fountain of being; the World-Father, not needing creation, yet going forth from Himself in love that He may gather up unto Himself as goal the creatures who are the extension of his fulness.

O MAN, CAN YOU SIN

against such a God and such a destiny? His light has no "parallax"; it appears the same from whatever point of view regarded. There is "no overshadowing of mutability" (Mayor). "I am the Lord, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed." There is no equation of time; He is "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever." There is no eclipse. "God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all." There is no dreary winter solstice; that light shineth "more and more unto the perfect day."

And we are his creatures by a miraculous, a "monstrous" birth (same word as in verse 15), begotten not by passion, but by the will of God, the "first fruits," not of death, but of a young, regenerate creation. Let us live, James adds, as those who know this (i. 19, R.V.), using our lips in his praise. An old Arab was forbidden, by jealous royal decree, to praise his benefactor, the Vizier Bermekee (Spurgeon's "Treasury of David"), whom his Sultan for very jealousy had put to death. But he still persisted. The Sultan at length summoned him before him. He saw that threats were of no avail to stop him. So he gave the man his sceptre, with the words, "Bermekee never offered you a gift like that." The old man raised his hands in thankfulness, and exclaimed at once: "This also cometh from Bermekee." No Second Cause can conceal the gifts of the Father of Lights. "This also cometh from the Lord of Hosts, which is wonderful in counsel and excellent in wisdom" (Isa. xxviii. 29).

The Mildmay Conference.

PROGRAMME OF MEETINGS.

TUESDAY, JUNE 25.

ROOM No. 4, 7 a.m., Prayer Meeting, Mr. James E. Mathieson (in the chair). Large Hall, 11 a.m., GOD IN CREATION—Lord Polwarth (chairman), Rev. W. H. Griffith-Thomas, Rev. D. M. MacIntyre. Large Hall, 3 p.m., Missions to the Jews—General Sir W. Stirling, K.C.B. (chairman), Rev. F. L. Denman (London Society), Pastor W. Fuller Gooch, Revs. John Wilkinson and S. Wilkinson (Mildmay Mission). Large Hall, 4 p.m., Prayer Meeting for Israel—Mr. James E. Mathieson (chairman). Room No. 4, 3 p.m., Bible Reading, "The Earthly Home of Man"—Dr. Walter Kidd. Room No. 5, 3 p.m., The Bible League—Dr. Robert Anderson, C.B. (chairman), Rev. J. B. Barraclough, Mr. A. H. Carter, (Assistant Secretary). Room No. 5, 4.15 p.m., Mission Work in South America—Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, D.D. (chairman), Mr. J. L. Jarrett (Peru), Mr. Hodge (Buenos Ayres). Room No. 6, 3 p.m., Soldiers' Homes in Ireland and India—Mr. T. A. Denny (chairman), Miss Sandes, Major Gamble (from the Front). South Tent, 3 p.m., Z.B. and M.M. Jubilee Meeting—Mr. W. H. Seagram (chairman), Miss Weatherley (Lahore), Miss Fallon (Allahabad), Rev. Isaac F. Row. South Tent, 4.15 p.m., Medical Missions—Dr. W. Gauld (chairman), Dr. L. Hertslet (Mildmay), Dr. Edith Brown (Ludhiana), Dr. R. Elliott (C.M.S.). Mulberry Tree, 3 p.m., Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A.—Mr. J. H. Tritton (chairman), Mr. Oldham and Dr. Williamson (Lahore), Mr. Pringle (Bombay), the Hon. Emily Kinnaird, Miss Rees, Mrs. Cumming (India), Mr. and Mrs. Oatts. Mulberry Tree, 4.15 p.m., Irish Church Missions to Roman Catholics - Rev. F. W. Ainley (chairman), Rev. Stanley J. Hersee (Association Secretary). Large Hall, 7 p.m., GOD IN CREATION—Lord Polwarth (chairman), Rev. W. Y. Fullerton, Rev. D. J. Stather Hunt.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26.

Room No. 4, 7 a.m., Prayer Meeting—the Hon. R. Moreton (chairman). Large Hall, 11 a.m., GOD IN REVELATION—Lord Polwarth (chairman), Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, D.D., Rev. Thomas Lancaster. Large Hall, 3 p.m., Missionary Meeting—The Bishop of Sierra Leone (chairman), Dr. G. P. Smith, L.M.S. (Tien-tsin), Mr. Green, C.I.M. (Personal deliverance in China), Mr. Spencer Walton, S.A.G.M., Rev. C. W. Stileman, C.M.S. (Persia). Room No. 4, 3 p.m., Bible Reading—"The Relation of the Incarnate to the Written Word,"—Rev. W.H. Griffith-Thomas (chairman). Room No. 5, 3 p.m., Missions to Lepers in India and the East—Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson (chairman), Rev. G. M. Bullock, L.M.S. (Almora, India), Mr. John Jackson (lately returned from India). South Tent, 3 p.m., Army Scripture Readers' Society—Lieut.-General Hon. B. M. Ward (chairman), Col. Van Someren, Readers Wood and Ewing (South Africa). South Tent, 4.15 p.m., International Christian Police Association—Mr. T. A. Denny (chairman), Miss C. Gurney, Members of the Police Force. Mulberry Tree, 3 p.m., Waif and Stray Children for Christ—Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe (chairman), Miss Bessie Code, Rev. Canon Girdlestone, Dr. T. J. Barnardo. Mulberry Tree, 4.15 p.m., Young Abstainers' Union—Rev. W. R. Mowll (chairman), Mrs. Servanté. Large Hall, 7 p.m., GOD IN REVELATION—Lord Polwarth (chairman), Rev. E. W. Moore, Rev. J. Gregory Mantle.

THURSDAY, JUNE 27.

Room No. 4, 7 a.m., Prayer Meeting—Mr. Edward Trotter (chairman). Large Hall, 11 a.m., GOD IN MANIFESTATION—Lord Polwarth (chairman), Rev. S. A. Selwyn, Rev. H. B. Macartney; 3 p.m., United Communion - Rev. D. M. MacIntyre (chairman). After the Communion, the following:—Room No. 4, Bible Reading, "Manifestations of Christ to Men"—Rev. E. W. Moore. Room No. 5, Poona and Indian Village Mission - Mr. Chas. F. Reeve. Room No. 6, Parents' Prayer Meeting—Rev. D. B. Hankin (chairman). South Tent, Women's Protestant Union and Protestant Alliance—Mrs. Arbuthnot (presiding), Mrs. Augustus Spencer, Mr. Brett. Mulberry Tree, Paris and London City Mission—Mr. F. A. Bevan (chairman), Pasteur Van der Beken, Mr. W. J. Lockie, Mr. W. Prentice (coalies), Mr. Crozier (gas workers). Large Hall, 7 p.m., GOD IN MANIFESTATION—Lord Polwarth (chairman), Rev. John Wilkinson, Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, June 23. Mark xvi.

IN the dim light the women brave the dangers of an Eastern city and make for the grave. O my soul, how often thou hast sought the Saviour where He was no longer to be found, in the grave of old experiences, or of dead and empty rites; and how often thou hast cherished fears for which there was on occasion, as thou hast discovered presently!

In the grave, where Christ had lain, a young man was sitting on the right side, arrayed in a glistening robe; so out of death life comes, and one result of the Saviour's Resurrection has been that myriads of noble youth, clothed in garments of purity, have gone forth like the dewdrops of the morning sparkling on the bosom of the earth. God's angels are always young. We who are the children of the Resurrection, in the life of Eternity, will grow always younger, as here our bodies are ever growing older. In our own life how often have we found that what seemed to be the close of all our hopes has been the beginning of a new epoch. One generation passes but another comes; one age finishes but another opens. The ministry of Galilee and Jerusalem is at an end, but the Spirit of the Master in the Acts of the Apostles goes forth to new victories.

Who can estimate the myriads of souls that have been helped by the closing verses of this Gospel? Here is the mighty power of faith, the signs that follow its simplicity and purity; demons cannot resist it, serpents are rendered innocuous, and healing streams from its touch. Let us keep our eyes fixed on the Risen Christ sitting at the right hand of God. Let us dare to believe that He is ever working by our side, and confirming our words (Hebrews ii. 4).

MONDAY, June 24. Luke i.

As we open this chapter, we feel the breath of a new age. It reminds us of the land birds, and branches of trees, that made Columbus realize that a new continent was at hand. Evidently there were many who feared the Lord, and spoke often one to another, uncontaminated by licentiousness, and by the misrule that filled the land with anarchy. These were the quiet in the land who were looking for the redemption of Israel. There were Zacharias and his wife Elisabeth, both righteous before the Lord and blameless; there was Mary the Virgin, who was counted worthy of the highest honour that could be placed on womanhood, and whose soul was so full of Scripture that when she presently burst into song her words were the mosaic of Old Testament writing; and there were the neighbours and kinsfolk of Elisabeth, who magnified God's mercy as they rejoiced with her, and laid the marvels associated with the Baptist's birth in their heart. Such were some of a simple, earnest, godly remnant, who were on the outlook for the King who was to come suddenly to his Temple.

Let us ask that the Holy Ghost may come upon us, and that the power of the Most High may overshadow us, that out of our union with the Eternal, holy things, words, and deeds may also be born from us.

TUESDAY, June 25. Luke ii.

The manger bed and its precious Occupant are among the most cherished memories of our childhood; but as we grow older we turn with adoring wonder to the spot where the Infant Light first shone, which was destined to fill the world with its glow. The shepherds are there, with their rustic wonder; angels are not far away, with their "Glory to God in the highest;" and aged saints, like Simeon and Anna, welcome the Lord's Christ. To whichever class you belong, you will find yourself welcome here.

The growth of the Child is quite compatible with his Divine nature, for He laid the attributes of the Godhead aside that He might develop along the ordinary human standard, so that (sin excepted) there might be no phase in human development of which He was not personally conscious. The story of the Temple is specially beautiful, because it reveals such a perfect understanding between Him and Mary. He wondered that she could have lost Him. The stress surely is on the word, "Wist ye not?" as though He said that his mother and He had lived in such close companionship, and so read each other's hearts, that she ought to have no doubt at all as to the reason why He was missing from her sight. She might have known that only one thing could make Him independent, and that was his Father's business. Let us seek that our Father's business may absorb us, and that to do his will may become the one guiding star of life.

The Babe Christ passes into the growing Boy. Let us not spend our days before the Madonna and her Child, nor even at the Cross, but unto his full maturity in the resurrection life.

WEDNESDAY, June 26. Luke iii.

The hour of the beginning of the Baptist's ministry was so important, that it needed the hands of an emperor, a governor, two high priests, and three tetrarchs to point it. And the Evangelist, by this enumeration of Gentile rulers, may have wished to prove that the sceptre had already departed from Judah, and a lawgiver from between his feet. The chosen land was torn to pieces by the Roman eagles.

The word of God came upon the Baptist, as when God spake to Moses from the flaming bush, or appeared to Elijah on Horeb, sending him back to his unfinished task; and John obeyed. Emerging from his wilderness retreat, clad in his strange attire, spare in figure, his features sharp and worn with fasting, he moved down the Jordan valley like an apparition. Crowds gathered around him. The great cities and towns emptied themselves into the Jordan valley. Judæa, Samaria, and distant Galilee felt the tremor of that strange voice, and even the youth of Gennesaret left their fishing-nets to sit at his feet. So widespread was the movement that it sent ripples even into the royal palace, awaking the curiosity, and even the conscience, of Herod himself. It was a genuine revival of religion. Oh that we might live to see such another!

We are told that the time of his appearance was the Sabbath year, when field-work was suspended, and men had comparative leisure. John was young, but he asked nothing of the world. His tone was positive and his energy tremendous. The sledge-hammer in full swing would aptly be his symbol. He knew no rank, no party. He was the king of all. He spake no word to please, and kept back no word for fear. Above all, the Spirit of the Lord God was upon him, the spirit and power of Elijah.

But how abashed he was before Jesus! When he beheld Him, his whole manner changed. The voice that had swept the world like a whirlwind sank to whispers. But Jesus re-assured him. "It becometh us"—you and Me. He must do the Father's will. He must enter the fold by the door the porter opened. He must, symbolically, at least identify Himself with man.

THURSDAY, June 27. Luke iv.

As the waters of Jordan bisect the Holy Land, so does our Lord's baptism bisect the holy life. Jesus took with Him into the wilderness our manhood, a perfect humanity of flesh and blood, a real body made in all points like unto his brethren, for He elected to fight that fight, not by the use of the attributes of Deity, but as Son of Man. Where the first Adam fell, there the Second must stand. In each case the first temptation circled around food; but for Adam the fruit of the tree was a luxury, whilst to Jesus food was almost a necessity after his prolonged fast. But Jesus stood, resolutely determined that He would not step outside the circle of his Father's will and appointment. He would take the way of the Cross, from the first subordinating his own choice to that of his Father.

Notice that the Spirit of God was "upon" Him, that He was full of the Spirit, that He returned in the power of the Spirit; and in the grace of the Anointing, which He had received, our Lord wrought his life-work. It was evident that till He had received this, He would not attempt the life-work that awaited Him. Ah, how foolish are we, who essay to perform his works without that special qualification for which even He waited, and which He waits to bestow on us. Was this not his first request as He entered the glory, "Father, give to Me the fulness of the Spirit in my ascended glorified Nature, that I may do for my Church as was done to Me when I stood on the threshold of my work"?

From the sixteenth verse we have the Gospel of the Jubilee, as it has been called. Seizing on the imagery of the gladdest festival of Hebrew life, Jesus likened Himself to one of the priests, who, with trumpet of silver, proclaimed "the acceptable year of the Lord." Next, we have an account of how the Lord began to give practical effect to his message. Here is the narrative of how He spent one of his Sabbaths—specimen of many others.

FRIDAY, June 28. Luke v.

When Peter and his companions had their memorable interview with Jesus by the Jordan, they were designated to the apostolate—here they were appointed. It would appear that they did not accompany Him to Nazareth, but fell back into secular life. In the early morning, after the busy Sabbath described in the last chapter, our Lord seems to have sought the quiet of the sea-shore, possibly to find a still hour for devotion, or perhaps to see how his friends had fared with their all-night fishing. But He soon had to beat a retreat from the swirling crowd, in Peter's boat.

When He had finished his public exhortation, He turned to give his future apostles a private lesson. First, He must be recognised as Master. The tone in which He bade them let down their nets was much more peremptory than that in which He requested them to push a little out of land. Peter and the rest must learn, though his request is in the teeth of all previous experience, that they must literally obey. Next, he must learn that whenever he goes truly into partnership with his Master, he must be prepared to cultivate the partnership of others. Lastly, he must recognise the lavishness with which the Master repays the smallest service rendered to Him or his cause. Let us follow Him, that He may make us fishers of men. He is Master in that art.

The cleansing of the leper, the healing of the paralysed and the forgiveness of his sins, the call of Matthew, and the discourse in his home to the publicans and sinners there, the withdrawal into the desert place for prayer—are glimpses into the Master's heart, nay, into the depth of Heaven, for this is the everlasting life of God. All this happens to-day, happened yesterday, and will happen to-morrow.

SATURDAY, June 29. Luke vi.

The Sabbath was the Lord's chosen opportunity for doing his good deeds. He must needs break down the barrier with which the formalists of the time had fenced it from the blessed service which it was meant to perform to man generally. He taught us that it was lawful to do good on the Sabbath, and that He is the Lord of the Sabbath day.

What a marvellous picture is that of the crowds gathering around the Master, pressing to derive healing virtue from his person. Oh, that we might see such a gathering of sin-sick souls around Him still! Yet, perhaps under the covert of unpenetrable secrecy, they are stealing up to Him, as the centuries pass, to a much greater extent than we realize. One day we shall know that the elect souls that have touched Him for healing are a multitude that no man can number.

This version of the Sermon on the Mount differs from that of Matthew only as each views the great discourse from his own standpoint. By one it is viewed as the manifesto of the King, by the other as the proclamation of the Man to men. Here is the secret of blessedness, and here also is the draught-sketch of a life of abounding and prodigal blessing, overflowing with mercy and loving-kindness. We are to love our enemies until they become friends, to give with unstinting measure, to give good treasure from our own heart's store, to resemble the Father who, without consideration of gratitude or character, gives his sun and shower, his best gifts to the children of men.

Other Lands.

Famine-Proof Villages.*

By Rev. JAMES WELLS, D.D.

FRIDAY, February 8, 1901.—Yesterday and to-day I have visited three agricultural settlements, which Mr. Andrew has founded within the last seven years. They have changed the jungle into fruitful fields and luxurious gardens. The aim is to foster a Christian community, distinguished for industry and independence. Several such efforts have failed, but these seem to possess many elements of success. The peasants have fixity of tenure, fair rents, and the possibility of bettering their position. Everything that might pauperize is rigidly excluded. The aim is to elevate them in the position which naturally belongs to them, not to take them out of it. The centre of each village is a simple building which is both school and church. They call it

A PRAYER HALL.

From it there stretches a wide street fringed with overshadowing banana trees. On each side are native houses of thatch and mud, built and owned by the people. For rent they pay one-third of the produce. Many friends have volunteered help, and thus many wells have been sunk. One recent visitor presented a well, and also an American Aermotor. It has just been erected, and I had the honour of turning it on. By its side stands the old-fashioned picotta, the lever by which the water was painfully raised—a happy symbol of the new order displacing the old. Such wells make the villages famine-proof. There is plenty of sub-soil water, and the longer a well is used the fuller it becomes, because the little underground ducts or channels by which the water reaches the well are enlarged by use, whereas they are choked up by disuse. At least this natural law prevails everywhere in the spiritual world.

Each village has a garden which is the property of the mission, and comes near one's ideal of tropical vegetation. I saw the villagers just as they are, for we made a surprise visit (a "surprising visit" the natives called it). I did what I could to encourage them as Christians, as farmers, and as the pioneers in a great experiment which might bring help to thousands of

INDIA'S POOR PEASANTS.

A few successful models would induce many Greathearts to plant such settlements elsewhere. What India needs is a thrifty, independent Christian peasantry. The cultivators of the soil, since the dawn of history, have been a crushed, spiritless race. It seemed to me that these villagers were much more intelligent, erect, energetic, and capable of laughter than their neighbours. The improvement in the farmers was as noticeable as the improvement in their farms. The Gospel was written with the plough on their fields, as it was written on their faces in the pleasing manifestations of a higher humanity. We may believe that the reason is because they have been delivered from the life-long, age-long fears of the landlord, the money-lender, the invader, and countless demons, and because at last hope has been born in their breasts. Every Christian visitor will most heartily wish success to such practical endeavours to make a Christian of the Hindu, and a man of the ryot.

The frequent recurrence of devastating famines in India has led to the formation of a provisional committee for the purpose of organizing an "Indian Famine Union." The objects are defined by Mr. Leonard H. Courtney, chairman of the committee, as follows:—"Our special object is to investigate the causes of Indian famines, and to promote all possible means of prevention. . . . There are in this country many persons, retired officers, civil and military, engineers, business men, and missionaries, who have special experience of India, who sympathize with the Indian people, and have spare time at their disposal. Our object is to good will, and leisure for organized work, so as to bring practical aid to the Government of India in tracing the causes of these recurring calamities and in devising means of prevention. We are also anxious to obtain help and advice from the leading authorities in economic science with a view to dealing on sound principles with the difficult problems involved in safeguarding a vast and scattered agricultural population.

UTILIZE THIS EXPERIENCE,

"The first point is to ascertain in detail the present condition of the Indian cultivator and the origin of his difficulties, and this can only be done by a special inquiry conducted under the orders of the Government of India. An exact diagnosis of the patient must precede the application of remedies. We therefore propose to begin our work by moving the Secretary of State to grant this special inquiry. We then propose to form sub-committees to inquire into and report upon the various suggested remedies —e.g., irrigation, agricultural banks, village industries, reafforestation, migration, grain storage, export duties on grain, technical education, arbitration courts, administrative reforms—already before the public, in order that the Government of India may have the support of an enlightened and organized public opinion in dealing with the problem of famine prevention as distinguished from famine relief."

* Extracted from Across India (Kennedy, Roberton, & Co., Limited, Glasgow), an interesting account in diary form of a recent visit to India, in the course of which visits were paid to a large number of mission stations.

793

The Opium Crime.

DEAR SIR,—I ask leave to call the attention of your readers to the new number of "National Righteousness,"* which produces ample evidence of the present position of the traffic in opium, drawn from public official documents; and extracts from three recently published and authoritative books which have been called forth by the woeful events of last year in the Far East; the authors of these volumes are—Sir Robert Hart, Bart., Inspector-General of Chinese Customs and Posts, who entered the consular service forty-seven years ago; Chang-Chih-Tung, Viceroy of Hupeh and Hunan; and Mr. Chester Holcombe, for many years Interpreter, Secretary of Legation, and Acting Minister of the United States in Pekin.

I venture to beseech thousands of your readers to spend if it were but a few shillings each in the purchase and distribution of the magazine I have named, and thus help to re-awaken the national conscience to the enormity of our crime against China, and the urgent necessity for abandonment of the unholy opium trade.

In any new commercial treaty with China, is it too much to hope that public opinion (which has, alas, gone to sleep) might be stirred, as it was some ten years ago, to demand that no pressure should be put upon China to admit the the destructive drug?—Yours sincerely,

James E. Mathieson.

* June, 1901. Price 1d. Morgan and Scott, Publishers.

A Sierra Leone Hospital.—The annual report of the Princess Christian Cottage Hospital, Sierra Leone, tells of much progress during the year. The influence of the hospital is felt throughout the district and on the west coast. It is under the Bishop of Sierra Leone, but is entirely undenominational. The sick poor of every creed are received, treated for their ailments, and told the Gospel message. Last year no fewer that 267 in-patients and 5,600 out-patients were dealt with. The staff consists of a medical missionary, doctor, and three Sisters—all English—and three native nurses, who are trained under them. Just now there is urgent need for the services of another English lady, fully qualified as a nurse, desiring to engage in missionary labour. Copies of the annual report, and all information, may be obtained from Mrs. Gandy, Central Hill, Upper Norwood, S.E.

A Corner of Belgium.

DURING the past nine years an interesting work has been in progress at Ougrèe, near Liège. It was founded by two factory workers, formerly Roman Catholics, who had been brought to a knowledge of the Gospel of Christ. Since 1893 it has been under the care of Pastor Brogniez, who finds abundant opportunity for his devotion and energy in the district, which within a radius of less than three miles has a population of 70,000, the majority of them miners and factory hands, almost entirely Roman Catholics.

Though in a denominational sense classed as Baptist, the work proceeds on lines that are essentially evangelistic, and since it was founded nearly two hundred persons have been brought to a knowledge of the Saviour, and have confessed his name by baptism. Himself a convert from Romanism, M. Brogniez is admirably suited for his sphere; and while his high character is attested by Dr. Grattan Guinness, who has followed his career since he was a student at Harley College, his pastoral work has the warm commendation of (among others) Rev. Aimé Cadot, of Chauny, Aisne, France, who is president of an association with which the Ougrèe Church is affiliated.

At the present time Pastor Brogniez and his wife are on a brief visit to England, seeking opportunities of interesting Christian friends in the affairs of their struggling little church. There is need for help, as the chapel in which the Gospel is preached is on the point of collapse through structural weakness. Moreover, it is necessary to enlarge the building, also to erect a Mission Hall in which to lodge other important agencies in connection with the work. M. Brogniez would be glad, while in London, to address meetings on Gospel effort in Belgium. Letters may be sent to him at Harley House, Bow, E.

In Northern Spain.

REFERRING to the translation of a Romanist's account of the work at Marin, which we recently published, Mr. Sidney Turrall writes that the number of baptized believers in that town is 120, and that some 150 more, young and old, attend the services, while a league away there is another church of eighty baptized members. During the last nine months, in spite of the increased activity of the Romanists in opening rival schools and clubs, conversion has been professed by more than fifty, chiefly young people, an especially healthy feature.

One member has seven converted children, six of them married to believers, and of the forty grandchildren most of the elder ones are the Lord's, as well as three of the great-grandchildren. There is more of the gift of preaching among the members than the instances cited, and four villages are regularly visited by Spanish brethren. Lengthy probation is required before admission to membership, and a case of return to Rome is almost unknown. Thus in the hard soils described by the Spanish writer, with its noxious weeds, the harvest has been greater even than he supposed.

The Bible in Syria.

IN the course of a circular addressed to the friends of the John Wilson and Alexander Melville Memorial Schools, Baakleen, Lebanon, Syria, Mr. Doolittle writes: "Of the 239 non-Christians in Schools in the Deir-il-Kamr district, almost all are Druzes. What is wanted now on Lebanon are missionaries to live true, consistent, earnest Christian lives among the people.

"Educational work has, in general, progressed favourably; but last year Baakleen schools had to contend with disease and inadequate teaching force. An efficient head teacher is needed. Baakleen is a large town composed almost entirely of Druzes, and the presence of several English ladies gives a much-needed stimulus to the work. They conduct a dispensary and hospital, the moral and spiritual results of which cannot be tabulated in cold statistics. Their house-to-house visitation and Bible work are an inestimable aid to the educational work of the schools. The work of our dispensary has gone on steadily. We draw our patients from 100 villages and hamlets. The greatest number come from a neighbouring valley, twelve miles in length, whose malaria is generally rife during the autumn months. During 1900 there were 3,407 attendances, out of which 1,840 were new cases. The hospital was open for nine months, during which fifty-two patients were admitted."

Bible Lands Missions.

THE annual meeting of the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society, held on Tuesday, June 4, in the Exeter Hall Parlour, afforded a happy opportunity of welcoming home Rev. W. A. Essery, hon. sec., on his return from a visit to Palestine and the East.

A brief report of the Society's operations was given by Mr. A. Habershon, in the course of which regret was expressed that owing to a diminished income some grants had of necessity been curtailed. Mr. W. H. Seagram, who presided, spoke in terms of warm encouragement of the efforts put forth to evangelize the Bible lands, a work which must always have a peculiar claim upon the sympathy and support of Christian people.

Rev. W. A. Essery, who followed, gave a vivid account of his recent mission, which was undertaken, he explained, primarily to obtain some rest, and also to note the progress of the Gospel cause. It was evident to him that the assistance given by the Society has been the means of upholding and extending a great deal of good work. Dealing with Egypt, Mr. Essery spoke of the many developments of the missions of the American United Presbyterian Church, which has 215 stations with 6,300 communicant members, forty-nine missionaries, fifty Egyptian pastors and preachers, and forty-eight other native workers. The educational system is carried out with great thoroughness, being an important department. Each day school opens with a religious service, while in the classes for both older and younger scholars the fundamental truths of Christianity are taught. The Sunday schools, too, are well organized, and have 8,000 attendants, representative of various forms of religious belief. In one school alone, 100 out of 300 children are of Moslem parentage. In the training college at Assiout there are 619 men and youths. A boarding school for girls has 260 scholars. The students are selected from the village population; they live in the plainest way, and evince a keen desire for knowledge. The missionaries seek to raise up a native ministry, and their Theological College at Cairo is making excellent progress. In the same city the efforts of lady workers to reach the Moslem women have been blessed, and a Bible class meets regularly.

BIBLICAL INSTRUCTION

A further instance of the way in which Mohammedans are being reached was a gathering attended by Mr. Essery, in which 200 men, half of them followers of Islam, were listening intently to a powerful Gospel address from a converted Mohammedan sheikh. God is indeed planting a spiritual church in Egypt.

In the Holy Land Mr. Essery visited the Hebron School for Moslem Girls, the English Hospital at Jaffa, and Miss Arnot's school in the same city, at all of which good progress is being made. In Syria progress is likewise being made in the missions under the direction of the American Presbyterian Board. The printing press is particularly useful. Bibles are prepared and distributed in large numbers, and one order has just been received for no fewer than 50,000 Scriptures. The Protestant College at Beirût, under its esteemed president, the venerable Dr. Bliss, has now 500 students, including many Moslems, all of whom take part in

DAILY CHRISTIAN WORSHIP.

A good account was also given of the British Syrian schools, and also of the Training Institute at Sidon, where Dr. Ford is earnestly demonstrating how usefully industrial missions may serve the cause of evangelism. The speaker concluded by advocating a concentration of effort in the Lebanon district, which is the freest part of the Sultan's dominions, and where many villages are pleading for mission schools.

An interesting feature of the meeting was the presentation to Mr. Essery of an illuminated address, expressing gratitude for the many years of work which he has devoted to the interests of the Society.

Medical Missions in Rome.

IN her report for 1900, Mrs. Wall refers with gratitude to having been enabled to alleviate somewhat the acute suffering of those who, owing to the inundations and intense cold during the past winter, were driven out of their homes. These had no place to shelter in at night but the public dormitory, where the crush was so great that, in order to be admitted at 5.30 in the afternoon, applicants had to be at the door at 1 p.m.

Among many interesting incidents, some illustrate the growing importance of a medical mission as an Evangelistic agency.

THE TRUE FRIEND FOUND.

Domenica Sabatini heard the Gospel for the first time at the Medical Mission, Borgo Pio. Her heart was touched. She not only began to frequent the other meetings, but sent her children to the Sunday school. House visitation followed. Both she and her husband were converted, and joined the Church last Easter. Their children are growing up in the knowledge and fear of the Lord. One day, when for some reason the hall was not opened for the mothers' meeting, Domenica invited them all to her house, and, to the surprise of the neighbourhood, the meeting was held there. She has lost friends on account of the Gospel, but knowing her Saviour, she confesses to have found the true and only Friend in Christ Jesus.

Another woman, named de Santis, also heard the Gospel on a visit to the Piazza Vittorio Medical Mission. Impressed by what she had heard she persuaded her husband, much prejudiced against the Protestants, to accompany her to the evening meeting. In both their hearts the Lord began to work, and the woman asked Mrs. Wall to come and see her at her home that she might instruct her more fully in the Gospel. Since her conversion de Santis has suffered much at the hands of petty persecutors, but has remained firm in her faith, and through her testimony others have sent their children to the Sunday school. Her husband, formerly driven by want of work to try to drown his misery in vice with low companions, is now transformed into another man, and is by the grace of God an example of morality and affection towards his family.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

thrives well. A few Sundays ago four of the little scholars arrived out of breath, but flushed with victory. The priest had stopped them on the way to take them off to the Roman Catholic Church; but Giovanni, aged five, spoke up bravely to the priest, and said, "No, indeed, we are going to the Sunday school." And then they ran. Yes, there is hope in the rising generation.

One little girl, whose parents were persuaded to take her away from the Protestants, was sent to the nuns' school. Every day, however, she visited the mission school to kiss Mrs. Wall. A short time ago she became unwell, and was obliged to stay in bed for a few days. During her illness she would speak of nothing but of returning to her old school. So one Friday the mother went and asked Mrs. Wall whether she would take back the child. "Yes, on the coming Monday," was the reply. But the little one had no idea of waiting till Monday. Happy and bright at finding herself once more in her old school, she went to her accustomed place and would not budge again. She now attends the Thursday sewing classes and the Sunday school, and repeats at home the verses and hymns she has learnt.

Candida Scupa attended the meetings, a poor blind woman. Born again, she exercised the faith of which Jesus had said that it would remove mountains, and the Lord honoured her by granting her request. She received back her sight for a time. Lorenzo was a rag and paper gatherer, living in misery and poverty, but rejoicing in the Lord from the time he had found Him. Once during his last illness when a glass of water was brought to him, he said; "They brought the Lord Jesus vinegar to drink, and He was the Son of God, while to me, a poor sinner, they bring this beautiful water."

Schwifat Mission Schools.

WE have been much cheered by a visit from Rev. W. A. Essery, hon. secretary of the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society, who has been visiting the different mission stations in Syria. He came to us on May 1. It was the night for our week service, and Mr. Essery kindly gave the address, which was translated by Pastor Said. We had a large attendance, and the people were most attentive.

On the following morning the children of both boys' and girls' schools were assembled, numbering 100, and Mr. Essery gave them a suitable address, and read them a hymn, which he wished them to copy and learn. When the meeting broke up I asked him to examine the classes in Scripture, which he did. The two first classes were able to answer in English, one on the Acts and St. Paul's Epistles, and the other on the Tabernacle and its typical teaching. The three younger classes were examined in Arabic, and their answers translated, one on the Life of our Lord, another on the Kings of Israel, and the little ones on the Lives of the Patriarchs. When they assembled in the schoolroom, twelve of the first class repeated the hymn which they had learned. Mr. Essery was very pleased to find that they had mastered it so quickly. In the afternoon an address was given in the boys' school. If friends only knew how much isolated workers are cheered by such visits, I am sure we should have more of them.

Louisa Procter.

South Africa General Mission.

WE are making a very great endeavour to meet the needs of our soldiers now in the field, and of those who will be stationed in South Africa after the war is over, probably some 50,000 to 60,000. With that object in view we are endeavouring to interest friends, so that the £14,000 necessary to build the suggested new Homes may be forthcoming, of which about £4,000 has already been either given or promised.

We have aggressive work going on amongst the men at the present time stationed at Cape Town, Wynberg, Johannesburg, Pretoria, and Pietermaritzburg, and much blessing is attending the work.

This mail has brought a letter very urgently asking for good literature, Testaments, and notepaper, &c., to be sent out on a very large scale; we have opened a fund with special reference to this need, and presently we hope to be in a position to dispatch a considerable quantity.

Arthur Mercer, Secretary.
17, Homefield Road, Wimbledon, S.W.

American Notes.

THE Prohibition Convention for the State of Iowa, held at Des Moines a few days ago, passed a resolution expressing admiration for the work of Mrs. Carrie Nation, and endorsing her methods.

On the motion of Dr. Freeman, of Buffalo, N.Y., the Presbyterian General Assembly sitting at Philadelphia last week declared war on cigarettes. This action was taken on the recommendation of the committee on temperance, the declaration being in the following terms:—"Inasmuch as the cigarette habit among the young people of our country has reached such alarming proportions as to demand decisive action on the part of our General Assembly, we recommend that our permanent committee be directed to call the attention of our churches to this great evil, and to urge them to use their utmost endeavours to counteract the same." Roger Martin.
New York.

Continental Y.M.C.A.'s.—We have received a letter from a young man, belonging to a Midland county, who has been living for some years on the Continent, expressing regret that he was not sooner brought into touch with the Y.M.C.A. Through being introduced to the Brussels secretary, he has now found "a real home from home;" and is anxious that young men who intend leaving home should be aware of the advantages to be obtained in this way. We commend the matter to the attention of the friends of such travellers, and would earnestly advise that they should be provided with the addresses of Associations in the towns to which they are going, or that the secretaries should be advised of the addresses of young men settling in their districts.

China Inland Mission.

THE thirty-fifth anniversary of the China Inland Mission was the occasion of a large and deeply-interesting gathering, held in Mildmay Conference Hall on Tuesday afternoon of last week. Missionaries and their friends came together from all parts of the country, and with chastened spirits heard from the lips of leaders an account of the Lord's doings in China during the terrible months of last summer and autumn.

The key-note of the proceedings was struck by Sir George Williams (chairman), as he referred in terms of the deepest affection to the friends who were called away. "God has said to them, 'Come up higher.' Now you would like to change places with them, but you must not. They have been honoured with perpetual honour in the execution of their work. Since the soldier of King Edward sacrifices himself freely, we who belong to the King of kings must be ready for any eventuality. We did not expect such a sudden calamity to overtake our brothers and sisters, but nevertheless the Lord reigneth. Some were and they have received it. Others have to endure yet; and this spirit of self-sacrifice, of consecration, of holy devotion must be spread yet more and more."

READY FOR THE HONOUR,

Being unable to be present on account of weak health, Rev. J. Hudson Taylor sent a letter expressing his deep regret, and explaining the circumstances under which after a short visit to England he found it necessary to retire to the quieter life abroad. We quote the following paragraphs from his message:—

What a year we have passed through since the last annual meetings! Never have we had more cause to praise God, and never has your fellowship in prayer been more needed or the great concert of prayer been more signally answered. But for the earnest prayers of God's people in many lands all missionaries inland might have been cut off, and many thousands more of native Christians might have suffered martyrdom. We cannot but feel, too, that the way in which bereaved workers and their friends have been sustained and enabled to glorify God in their deep affliction, has been a very manifest answer to the cry of many burdened, sympathizing hearts.

We thank you, too, most sincerely for your loving gifts, especially of money and clothing for those who lost their earthly all, and for the feeding of the impoverished native Christians, who after robbery and the destruction of their homes, have suffered likewise from the famine in North China. Shall we not together praise Him for the marvellous way in which many were preserved, while escaping? What but the power of God could have delivered them from sunstroke and pestilence, could have kept them alive through hunger and nakedness, making even their enemies confess that they could not kill them, that God must be for them. And to-day, while we praise God for his sparing mercies, we think of the many who a year ago were serving God in China, but to-day are wearing the martyr's crown; they honoured the Lord below, and together with their darling little ones, passed into the Master's presence. Can we but feel thankful that we have been associated with them? And are we not strengthened in faith by the way in which they, and others exposed to similar dangers, were sustained in the hour of their extremity? He for whom they suffered is indeed worthy—worthy of the joy brought to Him by their faithfulness unto death, worthy of all that it has cost to those who survive, and to those who are bereaved.

Let us pray that God will reopen the doors which have been temporarily closed, and many new doors likewise; and will succour and abundantly bless the native Christians who remain, and bring multitudes yet unsaved to the feet of the Saviour, to experience the efficacy of his precious blood and the power of his dying love. And let us pray that God will raise up faithful and gifted men and women to fill the many vacant places. Then, too, shall we not all aspire to show our readiness for some new self-denial to send workers to the field, and to rebuild the destroyed Mission premises?

In presenting the annual report, Mr. F. Marcus Wood explained that the number of names removed from the missionary roll was sixty-six, fifty-eight of the members having suffered martyrdom, three having died from natural causes, and five having resigned, while twenty children have also attained the martyr's crown. "Other societies have suffered, but we have suffered more than all."

The financial statement showed that the income for the year from all sources had been £53,365 4s. 10d., being an increase over that of 1899 by £168 2s. 0d.; and the faithfulness of God was gratefully acknowledged, as He has continued month by month to supply every want. "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us, and even in this year of special strain we have had all that we actually needed." Before the troubles broke out in June, twenty-one new workers had been sent out, and twenty-nine had returned after furlough. It had been found impossible to make up any complete return of the numbers of persons received into the church by baptism, but statistics actually received enumerated over 400 such cases.

Of the contributions sent in for the relief of famine and distress in the disturbed provinces, the workers at Shanghai had been enabled to use about 6,000 taels through the native elders; and now a telegram had been received showing that three missionaries were,

REV. J. HUDSON TAYLOR.

WITH THE PERMISSION OF THE OFFICIALS, about to leave Peking for the furtherance of this work.

Among the band of missionaries gathered on the platform, the first to speak was Miss F. M. Williams, who reminded her hearers of the different circumstances under which she came home for furlough in 1894; and related the steps which had led up to the opening of a mission station at Sin-t'ien-tsi, in Sz-ch'uen, when there were no Christians in the district. In 1895 there were eighteen members, and last year, when the missionaries left by instructions of the Consul—though all was quiet in the neighbourhood—the membership was forty-seven, with twenty catechumens, about as many showing an interest in spiritual things, and a school of twenty boys. Recalling several objects for which, when last at home, she asked friends to pray specially, Miss Williams told how clear answers had come; and assured them that "those who pray are as really sharers in the blessing as those who see it with their eyes."

High testimony was borne to the zeal of the native Christians, who are all workers. "We have cause to praise God for what He is doing among the little village lads. God has touched the hearts of several of the young people, and they are walking up to their light. One boy was the means of so reaching his family that six of them are now members and several catechumens. In four other instances idols have been burned through the influence of the school boys."

Describing the itinerating work begun in Honan in 1875, Mr. F. S. Joyce recalled the many years during which it was a hard pioneering effort; but said that afterwards the progress had been marvellous. The nine converts of 1884 had grown to fifty-one in 1891, and last year before the storm burst the number was 618. Referring to the needs of the province, he said that of the 109 walled cities 100 had never been occupied.

Throughout the meeting many touching references were made to the way in which the

CHILDREN ENTERED INTO THE SPIRIT of the terrible time of suffering, and Miss Jessie Gregg devoted her address mainly to telling the story of one of the youngest of the martyrs, little Vera Green, who, when just five years of age, was called home. The little one had been able to understand, in a marvellous way, the fact that they were suffering for Jesus' sake, and had shown repeatedly how fully her heart was drawn out to the Saviour. Then, as their sufferings drew to a close, they had the added pain of seeing her droop and die. With deep feeling Miss Gregg sang a hymn, the lesson of which has been burned into her soul during the weeks of trial:

The way of the Cross means sacrifice.

Special interest was aroused when Rev. A. R. Saunders testified that, dark as the experience in China had been, the greatest trial of the faith of the missionaries was since they came home, and arose on the question of going back again being faced. Few, he said, could realize what it meant to go back to the places where they suffered; but they had yielded themselves to the will of God, and are ready to return when He opens up the way.

A second large meeting took place in the evening, when Mr. Theodore Howard presided, and the same spirit of prayer and waiting upon God which had characterized the proceedings of the afternoon. Dr. William Wilson confined himself to the medical side of the work, and gave an interesting account of a new dispensary which had been fully equipped and was just about to be opened when the summons to leave was received. Incidentally he told how he was led at the beginning of his career, through the advice of Mr. Hudson Taylor, to qualify as a medical man. Mr. and Mrs. C. H. S. Green threw much light on the story of the Lord's dealing during their flight with their children and Miss Gregg from the station of Huolo, until they were relieved by European troops. Addresses were also given by Miss Marchbank and Mr. Albert Lutley.

China and Opium.—In a minute passed at the yearly meeting of the Society of Friends, we read: "From the evidence now open to the civilized world, it appears to be a grave question whether the Anglo-Indian opium traffic to China, has not resulted in as much misery to, and wreckage of human lives, as the African slave trade against which our fathers laboured so faithfully. At the time when some re-adjustment of the relations between Great Britain and China is probable, we feel it our duty to protest anew against the continuation of such a demoralizing trade. Two years ago the Prime Minister of this country declared it to be its true policy, 'to maintain the Chinese empire, to prevent it falling into ruins, and to invite it into paths of reform.' We greatly long for our country that it may yet seize the occasion, to set a noble example of reform by cleansing its hands of all complicity in the opium trade, and so encouraging the Chinese people to do everything in their power to free themselves from the opium vice."

Rev. Owen Evans, D.D.

THE WELSH TABERNACLE, KING'S CROSS.

THE subject of our present sketch has been a conspicuous and familiar figure in Welsh Evangelical life for many years. For over fifty years he has laboured diligently "in season and out of season" as "a good soldier of Jesus Christ" in the ranks of Welsh Congregationalism.

As Dr. Evans is typical of the ministers in Welsh Church life in the latter half of the nineteenth century, who, under the blessing of God, have made Wales morally and religiously what it is to-day, we have pleasure in outlining his career and character. There is no man living who has worked harder, and who deserves better of his countrymen, than he, and the handsome National Jubilee Testimonial, amounting to £930, presented to him on Monday evening last week, is but an expression of the esteem and love in which Dr. Evans is held by those who have come under his influence, and of the tribute which Christian people will accord in the long run to those who are prepared to make sacrifices for the public good.

Owen Evans was born at Penybontfawr, in Montgomeryshire, in November, 1829. His parents kept a wool factory in the village. Owen was the eldest of eight children, seven sons and a daughter. Three of these sons are now serving in the ministry of the Gospel. Like Augustine, Wesley, Cobden, and Garfield, he was blessed with a good mother. She was remarkable for her cleanliness, strenuousness, and godliness. On his mother's side, his ancestors for generations were godly people. On the paternal side, there was one name of considerable literary celebrity—Mr. John Phillips, Portmadoc—better known as Tegidon. As Owen was the eldest of the family he had, when very young, to assist his father in the factory. The hours were long, especially in winter time. Needless to say, this was before the days of factory legislation, and the eight hours' agitation was not even dreamed of. While still a mere child, his taste for reading was strong. He eagerly devoured all the books and periodicals to which he had access, most of which were religious. Like David Livingstone, he read by snatches as he plied the loom.

What little education he had in these early days he received under Ieuan Gwynedd, a celebrated Welsh poet and patriot. He was only privileged to be under his tuition for a few months, when between nine and ten years old. At the early age of ten he was received into church fellowship. From a child he was remarkable for his earnestness, and was intensely desirous to be a minister of the Gospel. He threw himself most ardently into Church work, and never missed being present either at the "society" or fellowship meeting, where the good old saints of his early years met together to relate their religious experiences, declaring what God had done for their souls. It was in such meetings as these, where the brethren and sisters came together according to Apostolic fashion, one having a psalm, another a doctrine, another a tongue, another a revelation, and another an interpretation, that the soul of the lad was nourished and his heart kindled. In those days the Temperance Revival swept over the churches of Wales, and the youth received great inspiration from it. It is recorded that he addressed a large gathering in his native village on this important question when only eleven years of age. He has been a faithful and consistent total abstainer from that day to this.

Soon after this, his parents removed to Llanfyllin. Here he came under the magnetic influence of a minister of great power and force of character, Rev. David Morgan. This man was physically, intellectually and spiritually, a giant, a king of men, an untiring worker, of considerable repute as a theologian and preacher, the historian of Nonconformity at that period.

Owen Evans was only sixteen years old when he preached his first sermon, based on Luke vii. 40-47—The Parable of the Two Debtors. This first effort took place at a farm-house, where a Sunday-school was held, and sermons occasionally delivered. Between 1849-50 he kept a day-school at Rhydymain, in the old Congregational Chapel, preaching on Sundays wherever his services were required. One who remembers those days writes :—

> I recollect Mr. Evans at this period representing the Congregationalists in an annual Temperance Festival at Dolgelly, and one shrewd deacon, in reviewing the speeches of the day, remarked that that young man, if spared, would certainly make his mark in the religious world; and his prophecy has been fulfilled to the letter.

From Photograph by Messrs. Russell & Sons, 17, Baker Street, London, W.

It is gratefully acknowledged that religious life in Wales has been considerably deepened and strengthened by his services, both in the pulpit and the press.

Dr. Evans was ordained at Berea and Penmynydd (Anglesey) on Whit-Monday, 1851. Last Whitsuntide Dr. Evans officiated at "Jubilee Services" in the churches where fifty years ago he was ordained. He was pastor of Maentwrog and Utica (Merioneth) from 1854-57; Fetter Lane, London, from 1857-63; Wrexham, from 1863-67; and Llanbrynmair, from 1867-1881. Llanbrynmair is a sphere of great usefulness. It is an historic church, formed in 1646. In Dr. Evans' time there were six branches connected with the central church. These were situated at long distances from each other. Most people have little idea of the amount of work which a large country pastorate, having six or seven branches, entails. But his work was not confined to this neighbourhood. He served largely the churches of his own denomination throughout Wales. He was in constant request at special services in the small towns and villages.

In 1881, Dr. Evans received a second call to Fetter Lane Church, which he accepted. Very soon the church, under the efficient leadership of the pastor, removed to the more spacious building at King's Cross, now known as the Welsh Tabernacle. The members of the church at King's Cross, in the beautifully framed address presented to Dr. Evans on June 10, have shown their appreciation of his able leadership in the following words :—

> Both you and we have much cause for gratitude for the large measure of peace, co-operation, and activity which has existed during the period of your ministry. When you undertook the pastorate the second time, nearly twenty years ago, there was £1,100 debt remaining on our church at Fetter Lane, and £100 was added for renovation. But not long after your arrival that debt was completely wiped away. Twelve years ago we removed to our present large and commodious building, which, including all, cost considerably over £7,000. The whole of that debt has been swept away years ago.

The address also goes on to say that the church has doubled in membership, and that the number of hearers has considerably increased since Dr. Evans' advent to London.

How are we to account for the influence of this man? The chief answer is, the utter transparency and simplicity of his character. Those who know him most intimately can bear witness to this. On all occasions, public and private, at funerals or weddings, "the man of God" is conspicuous. In an article to a Welsh monthly, written at the request of the editor, the late Dr. Herber Evans, some years ago on "How I do my work," he writes :—

> The first thing I do after entering my study every morning is to read a portion of the Bible, and that as a sinner and not as a preacher. I then bow my knees, and ask God, through his Spirit, to enlighten my understanding and assist me in the day's work.

Here we have the secret of the man's influence. To him the ministry is not a mere profession. It is the daily consecration of heart and life and spirit to the service of Christ.

Dr. Evans has been a diligent and painstaking student of the Word of God. Perhaps there is no more conspicuous example in the Welsh ministry of simple devotedness to his calling. He has not been tempted to journalism, nor to lecturing, nor to social and political questions. His time and strength have been given to theological and Biblical exposition. He has throughout his ministry taken a great delight in preaching series of sermons from time to time, and the result has been that he has enriched the literature of Wales by the publication of some of them. When we remind the reader that the following books have been written by Dr. Evans, it will be seen at once where his strength lies :—"The Miracles of Jesus" (1868); "The Parables of Christ" (1873); "Hours with Jesus, or the Person and Life of Christ," 2 vols. (1882); "The Women of Scripture" (1886); "Last Words of Jesus Christ" (1887); "The Sacrifices" (1889); "Sermons" (1899); besides short expositions of Proverbs and Hosea, as well as innumerable biographical and theological contributions to the Welsh magazines. It is not too much to say that Dr. Evans was the first to popularize theology in Welsh literature. His books have had a marvellous circulation throughout Wales and wherever Welshmen migrate, and are regarded as classics. Ministers and clergymen, theological students of all denominations, quarrymen, miners, colliers, and farmers, have been charmed and fascinated by his books.

It should be added that Dr. Evans' books and preaching are evangelical to the core. He has read widely, and is thoroughly conversant with the theological and Biblical literature of the day; but his principal studies have been on the vital questions of religion. In every sphere in which he has laboured he has proved himself to be "a worker who needeth not to be ashamed"; and the churches which have enjoyed his ministry have been left in an improved position. He knows the value of time and method. With the care of large pastorates, such as Llanbrynmair and London, he would never have been able to accomplish the work he did were it not that he had schooled himself to regular and methodical habits. His faithfulness and thorough conscientiousness as a pastor will be acknowledged by all who know him. The church at King's Cross has nearly 700 members in fellowship.

But above and beyond all, Dr. Evans has had a unique pulpit influence. By universal consent among his own countrymen, he stands as a preacher in the front rank. In the fullest sense he is a preacher of the Gospel. His favourite texts are from John's Gospel and Epistles, and his most powerful sermons are filled with the spirit which permeated the beloved Apostle.

Dr. Evans has now retired from the active pastorate of the Welsh Tabernacle, but his ministry in the Gospel of Jesus Christ will, we trust, continue for many years. It has been well said that the transitional moments in the life of a good man are like locks in the stream of time; they lift the boat to a new level, and send it forth, the same boat on the same stream, still to swim on up towards the springs among the hills. It has been so with the subject of this sketch. Each pastorate has been a larger and more extensive sphere for influence and work. And now he goes forth into the larger ministry as the servant of all the churches of his native land. He will be at their beck and call, and from a rich heart and a varied experience he will give to his countrymen the results of his ripest years.

As a link between this generation and the past, Dr. Evans possesses many of the characteristics of the great race of Welsh preachers of the last century. Among these are intellectual robustness, untiring energy, deep fervour, great natural eloquence, and intense spiritual power. With Paul he might have said: "For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." Evangelical preaching liberated Wales from the thraldom of apathy, indifference, and worldliness, in the eighteenth century; and that same Gospel, if continued to be preached in the twentieth century, can alone save it from other forms of evil which are threatening Evangelical life in the present day.

Bible Flower Mission.—Mrs. W. W. Turton, the Secretary of this Mission, writes from 110, Cannon Street, E.C.: "I am most anxious to see the existing liabilities cleared off. I am thankful to report that three additional lady helpers have recently joined our ranks, who hope to come up to the depôt regularly after the summer. There is a great decrease in the supplies of spring flowers arriving just now. Two thousand lavender bags and ornamented text cards were forwarded for distribution on Epsom Racecourse. We must remind our friends that the season for collecting grasses has come round, and, as the crop prospect is not very hopeful, we trust they will make every effort to secure a good quantity."

802

Guildford Convention.

MISSIONARY MEETINGS.

We give a few notes of the addresses delivered at the Missionary Meetings of the Guildford Convention. Dr. Edith Brown, of the Punjaub, spoke of the Medical Mission under her superintendence, and described the training of educated Indian Christian girls for this work. There are now sixteen in training as doctors, seventeen as nurses, and a like number as dispensers, who are all Christians. A patient, having been treated in the hospital, carried home with her the story of the Great Physician who died for sin-sick souls, and blazed abroad the good news of "Jesus and the resurrection." Soon afterwards the father of the girl who had been successfully treated came a hundred miles, and said to the workers, "My daughter says you say your God is alive. Tell me about Him." "Truly we have what they need, a living Saviour," said Dr. Brown.

Miss Wellington, from Thonon, Savoy, told of a remarkable work among the Roman Catholics there. It had been asked by some, "Why disturb their faith and make bad Protestants out of good Catholics?" But such inquirers know nothing of the real state of affairs. The people themselves say, "the more scrupulous we are, the more miserable we are"; and again, "our religion is not one of real piety or worship, but a religion of money, and we know it."

The Bishop of Mombasa (East Africa) spoke of his travelling hundreds of miles on foot, planning out new stations, and acquiring land and buildings. He spoke of six new large districts recently acquired in German East Africa, and the willingness of the natives everywhere to welcome the missionary. One chief had gone three days' journey to meet him, and asked,

"WON'T YOU COME AND TEACH US?"

Six chiefs having heard of a missionary who was labouring some distance off, sent for him, having in the meantime erected a suitable building for preaching in. This was a "bait" to get a missionary; and it is now getting quite common for the unevangelized tribes who have heard something of the Gospel of Christ to build a preaching place, and set apart a portion of the land, in the hopes that the nearest missionary would make arrangements that someone should be sent to tell them the good news. "Everything promises well," said the Bishop in closing. "They have seen the military man who has shot them down; they have seen the African trader—the Arab—who makes slaves of them; they have also seen the English merchant, who will pay for what he can sell for a profit; but now they have seen the missionary who wants nothing from them, who gives his labour and his love, and this has won them."

Mr. R. L. Hodge told of labours in Bolivia, quoting Mr. Hudson Taylor's saying, "Romanism is ten times darker than heathenism." The people were taught by the priests that Protestants pray to the devil, and cry, 'Holy Satan, hear us for Martin Luther's sake;' and that their book, the Bible, teaches that Jesus had seven heads." The friends in Bolivia were hoping, by the aid of a new printing press, to spread the Gospel throughout the land. The need of this is evidenced by the wholesale attempts by the priests to bring the native Indians under the thraldom of Rome. These poor people are driven into the towns from the forests, laid on their backs, rum and salt forced into their mouths, and thus hundreds are reported as converted to Rome. This is the testimony of one who has seen the modus operandi.

Mr. Spencer Walton, lately returned from South Africa, gave a most interesting account of work in pointing Boer and Briton in their dying moments to the living Christ, and of the work in general among the Zulus, and in Swaziland and Amatongaland.

Mr. Pope, of North Africa Mission, spoke briefly on work in Algiers and Algeria where there are 50,000 Jews and no missionaries, and where witchcraft, sorcery, and spiritualism are rampant. A splendid instance of the conversion of an anarchist, who had been driven out of Italy by reason of his wickedness, was related by Mr. Pope, who also was able to tell of the same man after some time having gone to South America, to labour as an evangelist.

Miss Beaumont, of India, spoke of her labours among the women. Specially pathetic was the story of the needs of the widows, the deserted wives, and others who were groping after light in the intense darkness. "Alas!" said one poor lady, "I have been to nearly every shrine in India; I have given thousands of rupees, but I am as I was." "And your sins are not gone?" asked an inquirer of her. "No, they are as heavy as ever." This poor burdened one was by the Spirit of God led to Christ, and her life is dedicated to the Lord who has so blessed her.

Mr. C. H. S. Green, of North China, told to a sympathising audience of his seven-fold deliverance out of the hands of the Boxers, which evoked expressions of praise from many hearts. Finally, Mr. Jackson gave an account of journeyings in India, visiting the stations of the Mission to Lepers. C. C.

Arts & Crafts in Spitalfields.

A NEW HOLIDAY HOME.

On Wednesday afternoon Lady Alice Ashley—wife of the eldest surviving son of the seventh Earl of Shaftesbury, who was unavoidably absent—opened an Industrial Exhibition in connection with the King Edward Ragged Schools, Institute and Mission, Albert Street, Spitalfields. The various exhibits were the work of local amateurs, the articles being made at home, or on the school premises. The aim is to teach girls plain and fancy needlework, so that they shall be competent to make their own dresses, which, to poor persons, means a saving of half the cost. Cooking, as it has to be done under difficulties, is also taught, as well as other useful arts. Boys learn carpentry, fretwork, cabinet-making, and other arts, and their productions showed that a high standard of excellence was attained.

The neighbourhood is now a densely-crowded area, although there are persons still living who remember to have seen the last meadow of Spitalfields. Even as late as the time of the Reformation the Spital was an open-air preaching-station which rivalled Paul's Cross in importance. Then among the poor people are still found descendants of the Huguenot silk-weavers who fled from France and took refuge there 200 years ago. The ragged-school was commenced in a very small way in the early forties, and now there are two great stations, with very large Sunday-schools and other agencies which extend their influence to thousands of the very poor. At the opening ceremony of the Exhibition, Mr. Charles Montague, the honorary secretary and superintendent, explained that thirty-six years ago the managers of the schools met to consider means counteract the pernicious influence of penny gaffs and low amusements, which meant ruin to the young people.

At first prizes were offered for work done at home; but as this did not quite answer, classes with teachers were started. The exhibits shown had been made on the school premises, and he thought that they reflected the greatest possible credit on the makers, some of whom were pupils in the Sunday-schools. There were men now occupying good positions in the provinces, who had received their first instruction in their classes. So was it also with the girls. After Lady Alice Ashley had declared the Exhibition open, Lady Templemore, eldest daughter of the late Lord Shaftesbury, opened a sale of work in an adjoining gymnasium. This was in aid of a holiday home which is to be erected at Sandon, Essex. The home to be erected will be the best of its kind. One friend has given £1,000 to the building fund, others £100, £50, or smaller sums. The teachers' contributions amount to £100, and even poor women are denying themselves in order to give something.

The "Newer Criticism."

BEING deeply impressed by the seriousness of present attacks on the New Testament, and the Deity of our Lord, the council of the Bible League arranged a special conference on the subject, held at Exeter Hall last Friday. After reading John iii. 1-16, the Chairman (Rev. F. S. Webster) began by showing the necessity of an understanding of the relation between faith and revelation, and the part reason has to play in that relationship. When Nicodemus came, probably hoping for an interesting discussion, or for an opportunity to display his knowledge and dialectical skill, Christ did not reason with him, but appealed to his faith.

The Lord came with the authority of his own witness and knowledge, and expected Nicodemus to believe, because He made the statements without explanation. So all through we are dependent on revelation, which deals with the things beyond the sphere of reason. There are many things in daily life which pass our understanding. The trees are covered with leaves, and soon will be laden with fruit, but the wisest savant in Europe cannot explain what takes place in a village orchard every year. Human reason asks, "How can these things be?" Experience tells us these things are.

How have the words which Christ spoke reached us? Are they to be depended on? Are they infallible? Are they so inspired that there is no room left for any mistake? The Church from the earliest ages has given a certain "Yes" to these questions. It has not been left to the errant memory of fallen men to preserve the words, or to convey impressions which would vary according to individual personality. The same Spirit who guided and controlled holy men of old who recorded the words of the Lord Jesus watched over their transmission to us. As He gave the words of God so we have them preserved,

WITHOUT TAINT OR LOSS OR IMPERFECTION.

Pastor Fuller Gooch explained at the outset that controversy regarding the Word of God has entered upon a somewhat new phase; but said those who have followed with care the progress of the Higher Criticism of the Old Testament cannot be surprised at the "Newer Criticism" of the New Testament having come to the front. While some have accepted too readily as incontrovertible the assertions of Old Testament critics, thinking that if the New Testament were left as the basis of faith all would be safe, that position is quite untenable. The Christ of the New Testament has most distinctly asserted that the Old Testament Scriptures are of God; and He goes if these Scriptures are proved to be other than the veritable revelation of God.

In an exhaustive discussion of the subject, Mr. Gooch dealt with—(1) The character of the Newer Criticism. (a) It is saturated with unbelief. Its fathers were Baur, Strauss, Renan, Voltaire, Bolingbroke, Tom Paine, who long ago made precisely the same statements that are being made to-day. The points most vital and essential to salvation are being ruthlessly attacked, and the foundations of them swept away. (b) The statements are not based upon scientific fact or any proved statement. They are hypothetical in the extreme. It is said that there are many discrepancies in the New Testament narrative, but we shall find them yield to patient faith and prayerful investigation. (c) The criticism leads to confusion and darkness rather than to light. The critics are not constructing something better for us than that which they are attempting to destroy; and the more we study their statements the more we shall see that they themselves are in utter darkness as to the mind and will of God. (d) If the New Testament books are not trustworthy they are the most infamous and criminal fraud ever perpetrated on mankind. Yet the Christians who immediately followed the apostolic age, and who transmitted the books to us, were men who proved that they would rather die than lie.

(2) To the question, "What are we to do?" the answer was given: (a) let us give good heed to

WHAT THE NEW TESTAMENT SAYS OF ITSELF.

Remember the New Testament writers continually distinguish between tradition and Scripture truth; and the very writers warn their readers against the things which the critics tell us are in the New Testament by wholesale; (b) The old facts are being minimized in a way not fair, just, or right to the basis on which they rest. The early fathers appeal to all the books of Scripture as Divine, and distinguish between them and all later writings. What is at the root of this "Newer Criticism?" Is it a desire to glorify God? It is awfully mistaken in its results if it is.

Rev. Trevor Fielder dealt with the widespread idea that those who believe in verbal inspiration lay themselves open to a charge of blind credulity; showing that that is not what God demands, but a reasonable appreciation of his majesty and goodness, and as we believe we follow on to know the Lord better. Among other speakers who followed were—Mr. Hugh D. Brown, Rev. John Tuckwell, Rev. W. R. Mowll, Rev. Dr. Gritton, Mr. W. H. Seagram, Mr. Henry Varley, and Mr. W. J. Lockie.

"Primitives" in Conference.

THE eighty-second Conference of the Primitive Methodists assembled on Wednesday morning of last week in the Nether Congregational Chapel, Sheffield, kindly lent for the occasion. Rev. Joseph Odell, the retiring President, conducted the service of prayer and praise which preceded the session for business.

There were two nominations for the Presidency—Revs. H. B. Kendall, B.A., of London, and T. Mitchell, of Leeds. The ballot gave 120 votes to the former and 60 to the latter. For the Vice-Presidency, two laymen were proposed—Mr. Robert Foster, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and Mr. C. H. Leach, Barrister-at-Law, of Darlington; 147 votes were cast in Mr. Foster's favour, and 32 for Mr. Leach. Rev. John Welford, of Woodley (Secretary of the Manchester College), was selected for the Secretaryship out of five candidates. His assistant is Rev. R. W. Keightley, of Grimsby.

Hearty thanks were accorded to Rev. Joseph Odell for the magnificent service he had rendered during his Presidency, to Alderman Adam Adams, J.P., of Lowestoft, who, as Vice-President, had so willingly travelled throughout the Connexion to preach and preside in the various circuits; and to Rev. Robert Jones, of West Bromwich, who wrote the journal of the last Conference.

Two of the Connexional officers finishing their terms at this Conference received the thanks of the assembly—Rev. H. B. Kendall, B.A., for his nine years' editorship of the magazines, and Rev. John Gair, for his five years' governorship of Elmfield College.

The President and Vice-President were publicly inducted in the afternoon of the opening day. Mr. Kendall had a remarkable genealogy to disclose. For eighty-two years his family has been identified with the Primitive Methodist body. His father and five of his uncles were ministers; the former was the President of the Conference in the year 1881, and for the first time the Connexion has the son of a President as President. While rejoicing in the past, and in the methods which had won success, he pleaded for the Spirit which giveth life. They should but should, as the fathers did, adapt means to the great end. They needed "the dynamic forces," so that they might have "a present-tense religion."

NOT BE THE SLAVES OF FORMS,

The Vice-President delivered an equally felicitous speech, acknowledging his indebtedness to his parents and to the Sunday school. Mr. Foster, who has been a local preacher for fifty-three years, is one of the best-read laymen in the North of England, and has been the friend of the President for nearly forty years.

In the evening the President delivered the Hartley Lecture on "Christ's Kingdom and Church in the Nineteenth Century," in the John Street Church, before a crowded audience.

On Thursday matters affecting ministers were dealt with. There were several applications for superannuation, the average age of the applicants being sixty-one, and the average term of ministerial service forty years.

An exciting discussion arose on the proposal to withdraw from Ireland. The missions there have been very costly and comparatively fruitless. The last Conference made certain proposals to the Belfast Circuits which have been only partially complied with. Mr. Thomas Lawrence, of Leicester (treasurer of the African Missionary Fund), moved the resolution of withdrawal, Mr. J. Brearley, of Silsden, being the seconder. An amendment was submitted in favour of continuance on aggressive lines, which after a long debate was carried by eighty-one votes to fifty-six.

On Friday the Conference completed the first draft of the stations of the ministers. A difficulty arose in the filling of two vacancies in the permanent membership of the Conference. The understanding had hitherto been that superannuation was a disqualification for ministerial applicants. The Connexional solicitor (Mr. E. C. Rawlings), however, showed that the Deed Poll, which is the legal instrument of the Connexion, did not specify superannuation as one of the barriers. By a very close vote a supernumerary minister, Rev. Thomas Whitehead, was appointed to the ministerial vacancy, and Mr. William Allison, of King's Cross Station, London, who has been a member since 1830, was chosen to the lay vacancy. A pleasant change came in the evening, when the delegates and their hosts and hostesses were received at the Mappin Art Gallery by Mr. Edwin Richmond (President of the Sheffield Evangelical Free Church Council), and Mrs. Richmond.

On Saturday, by an enthusiastic vote, Rev. Joseph Ritson, of Paisley, was elected to the Editorship, and Rev. G. F. Fawcett, of Harrogate, was appointed to the Principalship of Elmfield College.

The thanks of the Conference were given to Rev. W. E. Crombie for his twelve years' secretaryship of the orphanage, Rev. J. Fletcher Porter being chosen as his successor.

Dublin Believers' Meetings.

THE annual Believers' Meetings (which have proved such a blessing to many of God's people in days gone by) were held at Merrion Hall, Dublin, last week, for three days, and were times of great spiritual refreshment. At the preliminary prayer meeting on Monday evening, a loving message was read from Mr. Robert C. Chapman, of Barnstaple (now in his ninety-ninth year).

Brethren from England, Scotland, and Ireland spoke. The hearty fellowship and loving spirit shown was much appreciated by all. The subjects brought forward at the afternoon conferences on the first and second days, were:—"How may we bring up our families for God?" and "How is the Church to be edified?" Both were very helpful. On the third day, afternoon and evening, accounts of the Lord's work abroad were given by brethren recently returned from the Straits Settlements, Spain, Iceland, and Australia, as well as of medical mission work in Dublin. In the evening we were much interested by accounts from Mr. David Baron of work among the Jews, and by Mr. E. H. Broadbent of evangelistic work in Eastern Europe. O.

From Slum to Country Home.—Since the year 1882 the Children's Fresh Air Mission has been seeking to brighten the prosaic lives of poor little ones in the area of the Holborn Union. The Mission brings together the little children of a great city who pine for fresh air and a glimpse of rural life, and country cottagers who are willing to board and look after them for two or three weeks in the summer. The cottagers enter into the work with hearty goodwill, and the difficulties incidental to all organizations are reduced to a minimum. Last year 3,124 poor and ailing children were benefited, and since the Mission was founded over 45,000 little ones have enjoyed a holiday in the country. Nearly one-fourth of the cost is borne by the parents, and any pauperising effect is thus avoided. The secretary is Miss Rowley, of St. Peter's Schools, Onslow Street, Clerkenwell Road, E.C.

St. Giles' Christian Mission.

THE record of the St. Giles' Christian Mission for the past year is full of hope and cheer for those who are stirred by the condition of the criminal classes. In round numbers, 500 friendless juvenile offenders were admitted into the Boys' Homes, 20,000 free breakfasts were supplied to discharged prisoners, and 6,000 men fresh from gaol, characterless but promising to do better, were assisted with employment and tools.

The annual meeting, held at the Mansion House on Friday afternoon last, aroused the sympathy of a large audience. Alderman T. Vesey Strong, who presided, dwelt on the value of the preventive measures of the Mission. To keep a boy out of prison is to make him dread the idea of ever being sent to one; to put him into prison is to kill the dread; and it is satisfactory to know that many judges and magistrates avail themselves of the resources of the Homes upon juveniles who commit offences for which their environment is largely to blame. The speaker quoted a valuable testimony from Mr. Jesse Collings (Under Secretary at the Home Office), who spoke in high terms of "the help the Mission has rendered to discharged prisoners, thereby often saving them from relapse into crime, and giving them a fresh start in an honest career." Proceeding, Alderman Strong emphasized the belief of the workers that "the soul of reformation is the reformation of the soul." Some 4,000 Gospel services are conducted annually, and during last year all the ex-prisoners who were entertained to breakfast at centres close to the metropolitan gaols heard the Word of God read and expounded.

RATHER THAN IMPOSE SENTENCES

Mr. William Wheatley, the esteemed superintendent, showed that 90 per cent. of the cases prove satisfactory. He thanked the many employers of labour who have assisted the Mission by accepting ex-prisoners as workmen, and, referring to the relief work among the families of men who are serving terms of penal servitude, pointed out that, in many instances, the wives have been enabled to obtain respectable situations in domestic service, while the children have been sheltered and trained at the country homes at Maldon. In conclusion, Mr. Wheatley briefly described the many departments of Samaritan work which have sprung up in connection with the Mission.

Dr. Robert Anderson, the next speaker, felt it a duty to take the earliest opportunity, after vacating his position as director of the Criminal Investigation Department, to thank Mr. Wheatley for MUCH VALUABLE HELP.

There is a resemblance, the speaker went on to point out, between the problem of crime and that of disease. The successes attained by medical science of late years are traceable to direct application in matters of detail. So, in the work of curing social disease there must be direct effort to deal with the individual, in order to help him over the gulf that yawns between the prison gate and a place of honesty, and of respect in the estimation of the community. To show that such effort is consistently put forth by the Mission, Dr. Anderson related an instance in which he had referred to the Mission a lady who was anxious to help a certain convict. The lady subsequently wrote in terms of deep thankfulness, recognising the blessing that attended Mr. Wheatley's labours in the case. In offering his tribute of praise, Dr. Anderson said that he was following the example of his predecessors at Scotland Yard, Sir Howard Vincent and Mr. Munro, both of whom left on record valuable testimony to the usefulness of the work.

After some encouraging words from Sir Howard Vincent, Mr. W. R. McConnell, chairman of the London County Sessions, who has to deal with cases representing one-fifth of the indictable offences committed in England, said that again and again, even in instances of a most discouraging character, Mr. Wheatley has accepted men discharged on their own recognisances, and of all so accepted only two per cent. were subsequently brought up for judgment. Other speakers were the Hon. Claude Hay, M.P., and Mr. Alfred J. Reynolds, who told of a woman drunkard with 150 convictions to her name, who has been started in work as an itinerant flower vendor by Mr. Wheatley, and who is doing well. Lieut.-Col. Rotton showed the terrible need especially of some of the older men helped by the Mission, and a few words from Mr. Frank Bevan, who spoke of the work as "one of the most useful agencies for the reclamation of the criminal classes," terminated this inspiriting gathering.

A REMARKABLE STORY

The Stockwell Orphanage.

IN his day the late C. H. Spurgeon was wont to feel much joy and satisfaction in meeting the friends and supporters of the Stockwell Orphanage on his birthday. Had he lived, the great preacher would now have been aged sixty-seven. June 20 is the date of this year's annual gathering; but on the day before, being the actual date of Mr. Spurgeon's birthday, a smaller number of friends assembled in the grounds, and the children went through a full rehearsal of the interesting programme for the following day. The annual report opens with a statement concerning the year's work by Mr. Thomas Spurgeon, in the course of which he says:—

"The hand of God is upon us for good. We can have no doubt of that; and, oh, how delightful is any labour on which his blessing manifestly rests! We have not, in consequence, been spared all sorrow. Three dear little ones have been summoned from us, and we sustained a very serious loss by the home-going of so faithful and capable a helper as Miss Good, the matron of our Seaside House. Moreover, our head-master, Rev. V. G. Charlesworth, has been laid aside, and is, though greatly better, still scarcely himself. These and smaller clouds have crossed our sky, and while they were passing the temperature was distinctly affected; nevertheless, our inmost heart kept warm with trust and love. During the year our family has increased by thirty-two, that is to say, there have been only eighty-three dismissions as against 115 admissions."

As regards the admissions, the managers emphasize the fact that while making their selection "the greatest need has the loudest voice." The total of the admissions is now 2,338 fatherless children, and it is added that these were "without exception in real jeopardy, ere we took them in tow, and brought them to their snug moorings at Stockwell. Moreover, our service to these enabled some 'other little ships' to weather the storm."

The religious profession of the parents of those admitted shows that the Established Church supplied 937, while 613 were Baptist, 235 Congregational, 182 Wesleyan, and 33 Presbyterian, other denominations being represented by smaller numbers. The medical officer reports that "ordinary ailments, incidental to childhood, have not been in excess of former years, and, while we have had to deal with numerous cases of measles and mumps, we have been spared the danger of a general epidemic." The religious training of the children is well looked after. "The earnest efforts of the matrons and teachers are supplemented by the labours of a godly band of Sunday-school teachers." The income for the year was £14,622, the expenditure £13,301, so that £1,000 was transferred to the Foundation Fund.

Twenty-five Years' Tent Evangelization.—The Gospel tent work in London and suburbs, under the direction of Mr. John Wooldridge, 19, Grove Road, Bow, E., continues to receive the sympathy and support of Christian friends. The results of the efforts made to reach the non-churchgoers are most encouraging. Hundreds have been gathered in, and led to live pure and godly lives. The visitation of the homes of the poor is an important feature of the Mission, and a means by which many have been brought to realize the hopelessness of a life which has not recognized the claims of Christ.

Mrs. Meredith's Institutions.

MAINTAINED for thirty-six years with a happy combination of spirituality and skilful management, Mrs. Meredith's institutions for the reclamation of female prisoners and the care of their children, continue to record admirable results.

At the annual meeting, held at the Conference Hall, Clapham Road, on Thursday last, many interesting facts in connection with the past year's work were related by Rev. G. W. Keeley, who, dealing at the outset with the Princess Mary Village Homes, showed that a sound, practical education is given to the little ones.

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION

is an important part of their training, and the number of those who subsequently fall away from righteous paths is calculated at less than four per cent. Turning to the work of the Prison Mission, Mr. Keeley said that 204 women, received direct from gaol, were helped to start life afresh under new and encouraging circumstances. They have laboured in the laundry or at slipper-making, and Mr. Keeley reminded his hearers that after work hours they are free, since they do not live on the premises, but have respectable lodgings procured for them in the neighbourhood. By their good conduct the women justify the confidence thus placed in them, and, little by little, as regular methods of life, useful occupations, and spiritual instruction begin to tell, many of them come to realize higher ideals, and so become "conquerors at last."

Dr. Robert Anderson, who presided, said that while Assistant-Commissioner of Metropolitan Police, he had, so far as he was able, given the work his official support, and one of his last acts was to recommend it to his successor, and also to the Home Secretary. Dealing with the general question of the relation of Christianity to philanthropic effort, and with the contention of occasional critics that the workers should lay aside their religion when engaging in operations for the social well-being of the community, Dr. Anderson pointed out the unreasonableness of such a position. It is asking Christians to set aside their Christianity when dealing with circumstances in which they know that it alone can bring about a successful issue. True, it is the duty of the nation to provide help for penitent criminals who desire to take their place among honest, wage-earning people, but it is the which actually makes such provision. Taking even the view that is so common in these vulgar days, the work "pays." The public should realize that the work of dealing with criminals means expense in any case. Either philanthropies must be supported in their works of prevention and rescue, or the police must be paid to catch the offenders and the prisons maintained to cage them. Dr. Anderson concluded with a vigorous appeal for a greater measure of support for Mrs. Meredith's Mission.

QUIET WORK OF CHRISTIAN PHILANTHROPY

Rev. A. W. Baldwin, chaplain of Wormwood Scrubbs Prison, also spoke in high terms of the institutions, which have done a vast amount of good work. Mr. Baldwin sends many cases to Mrs. Meredith, and recognizes the thoroughness of the work. He rejoiced, especially, in the Princess Mary Homes, in which the little children, rescued, in many instances from terrible surroundings, are brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. "Such work," said Mr. Baldwin in conclusion, "is worth untold gold to the country."

Hassett Road Mission, Hackney.—The report for 1900 of the evangelistic agencies which centre in the Hassett Road Mission cannot fail to appeal to all who have at heart the need for aggressive Christian work in Hackney. Besides the numerous services held in the Mission Hall, the homes of the poor and public-houses are systematically visited, open-air meetings are conducted, with an extensive distribution of tracts. The preaching of the Gospel has been effectual in winning many souls. The missionary is Mr. C. Garner, 313, Victoria Park Road, N.E.

George Yard Mission.

"GOD buries his workmen, but carries on his work." George Yard Mission has lost the leadership of its venerable and devoted founder, the much-loved George Holland; but all the varied departments of this remarkable Mission are being maintained with the old-time thoroughness under the direction of the new superintendent, Colonel Robert Hayne.

The forty-seventh anniversary meeting was held on Tuesday, June 11, in the large hall of the Mission in Whitechapel Road, E. It was natural, of course, that a deep sense of loss should rest upon this, the first, annual gathering but there was also a feeling of deep satisfaction with the progress made during the year. Special reference was made by Colonel Hayne to the créche, which is so popular with the poor mothers of the East End who have to go out to daily work. In the evangelistic services, which are attended chiefly by the poor of the district, thousands of people have come under the sound of the Gospel. The Bible classes, for men and women respectively, are also well attended, while the young men's meeting has been re-organized, and affords many tokens of encouragement. The evening classes for boys, which gain much from the oversight of Lady and Miss Beatrice Macnaghten, are also prospering. A satisfactory account was given, too, of the day schools, which continue to earn golden opinions in official quarters. Among other departments which deserve notice are a service for Jews (in Yiddish), industrial classes for rough lads, lessons in cookery, and a sewing class for little girls.

SINCE MR. HOLLAND'S HOME-CALL;

The Marquis of Northampton, speaking from the chair, referred to the noble characteristics of George Holland, and spoke in support of a memorial fund, to be devoted to a much-needed extension of the mission premises.

An interesting function followed, when Lady Hope distributed rewards in domestic service, to young women connected with the Mission. Lady Hope addressed some touching words of spiritual appeal to the recipients.

FOR FAITHFUL CONDUCT

Mr. T. A. Denny, Colonel Morton, Mr. John Kirk, and other friends spoke in cordial terms of all the efforts put forth to reach and influence the masses, and Lord Radstock in a reminiscent address, pictured the terrible condition of Whitechapel forty-five years since, when Mr. Holland was busily toiling among the thieves' kitchens and low lodging houses of an area notorious for its squalor and evil associations. The speaker added telling words of testimony to the character of the work.

There was much in the meeting to encourage and stimulate, and friends of the Mission may look for development and extension on sound Evangelical lines under the skilful guidance of Colonel Hayne.

The Lord's Return.

PROBABLY there is not such another scene to be witnessed in London at a mid-week service as that at Highgate Road Chapel, where, on Wednesday evenings, Rev. James Stephens, M.A., the beloved pastor of the church, is giving a series of special addresses on the second coming of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Last Wednesday the area of the chapel was filled with an earnest and attentive company, who seemed literally to hang upon the words which fell from this devoted servant of God, as he unfolded from the Word of God the things which should be hereafter. Nor were those present members of the church simply. There were many strange faces amongst the company, disclosing the fact that the Word of God in its deeper teachings has still attractive force to draw together Christians of all communions. Not a few of those present were busy with note book and pencil, thus seeking, so far as possible, to keep some record of these memorable addresses.

Mr. Stephens began this course of study last month, and his plan is steadily to advance week by week, without undue haste, so that every point and detail shall be perfectly clear before the mind. W. L. T.

Christian Evidence Society.

THE annual meeting of the Christian Evidence Society, held at Sion College, Victoria Embankment, on Thursday, though not largely attended, was marked by deep interest. Gratifying and encouraging proof of the valuable service rendered by the Society's agents in defence of Christianity are received from far and near. Besides single lectures, courses of sermons and addresses are delivered at numerous centres in the metropolis and the provinces. The discourses to men only have been largely attended. Lecturing in parks and open spaces is a significant and one of the most trying phases of the Society's operations. Many testimonies to its value and interest are received. A scheme of study and examination for the lecturers is arranged, and found to be of singular usefulness in preparing and educating them for their work. Interviews and correspondence with sceptics and their anxious friends also have a place in the Society's operations.

The Bishop of Kensington, in directing the proceedings, welcomed the broad platform of the Society. The need for such efforts to counteract the cannot be doubted. Few people realize how far-reaching is the influence of unbelief. It is to be found not only in our parks and workshops, for it is distressing to find how many among church-going men regard with profound distrust the whole basis upon which Christianity rests. In order to defend the religion of Jesus Christ there must be united effort, and thorough organization; but above all the spiritual qualification of those who seek to refute error and advance truth must not be overlooked.

EVIL EFFECTS OF UNBELIEF,

Much sympathy was felt for the Bishop of Calcutta who, in the course of his address, showed signs of the physical weakness from which he has lately suffered. He confessed that he had often been struck with the mistaken manner in which the opponents of Christianity regard it. True religion must, of necessity, present certain difficulties, because it deals with the relation of man to God, the finite to the infinite. But the difficulties of belief are fewer than the difficulties of unbelief.

THE RELIGIOUS PROBLEM

is simplifying itself, and it is now a question of Christianity or nothing. In India not one of the religions was regarded by its adherents as likely to become a world religion. Christianity is the only religion that aspires to universality. The day of silencing objections to Christianity by authority is past. No attempt must be made to hinder the progress of human inquiry. The true way to meet opposition is superior learning, and the power of irresistible thought and knowledge, for the true evidence for Christianity is not so much combative as constructive.

An impassioned address was given by Dr. G. S. Barrett, of Norwich, who spoke strongly of the need for opposing the view of certain members of the school of higher critics in their interpretation of Scripture. He emphasized the fact that mere protests are not sufficient, there must be argument, based on deep piety and learning. Mr. Percy W. Bunting followed, and in the course of thoughtful and practical remarks spoke in hopeful terms of the prospects of the Society. Christian evidence grows with the intellectual development of man and his setting forth in thought and life to others the results of his spiritual experience.

Professor Redford, in paying a tribute to the life of the lamented secretary, referred to Mr. Waterman's twenty-four years' unfailing devotion to the interests of the Society.

Worship at Sea.—On the application of the Missions to Seamen, the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge has just made a grant of £150 for the supplying of books, to be used in a special effort to promote public worship on board merchant vessels. This will, however, be only a beginning, supplying one ship in every 200 sailing under the British flag.

To Promote Public Morality.

A KEEN sense of the need for such an organization as the National Vigilance Association has ensured for its efforts the warm support of an ever-widening circle of friends both at home and abroad. At its sixteenth annual meeting on Wednesday of last week at Westminster Town Hall the service rendered to the cause of public morality was fully recognised. The endeavours of the Committee to suppress the publication of obscene books and pictures have borne fruit. Within the last few weeks several offenders have been prosecuted by the Association, their unlawful stock of books and photographs destroyed, and themselves heavily fined. In some cases the chairman of the Middlesex Sessions insisted, under threat of imprisonment, on the delinquents paying the expenses of the prosecution, though the Association had not asked for costs. The suppression of cheap periodicals which contain immodest print has been pursued with persistent vigour.

Another subject which is exercising many minds is that of mutoscopes, scattered throughout large towns, and constantly presenting lewd representations to boys and girls. In its efforts to bring about the abolition of the White Slave traffic the Association has received the support of every European Power. The movement has made immense progress during the year, and is on the eve of important development. It is intended to hold a in 1902, and in preparation for this a Conference is to be held next October at Amsterdam, at which all the National Committees are to be represented.

SECOND INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS

In taking the chair, the Earl of Aberdeen claimed that the Society was, on judicious lines, performing a work of patriotism, religion, and humanity. It is a sacred and noble service which seeks to bring within the power of the law those who trade upon the weakness and frailties of others. Referring to the efforts which are being made to suppress the white slave traffic, Mr. Augustine Birrell maintained that it was of the utmost importance that there should be a combination of European jurisdiction if they were to grapple successfully with so serious and

SO INHUMAN A CRIME.

Until the nations act together honestly and whole-heartedly, it will never be suppressed. Europe is anxious to deal effectually with the terrible existing state of things, and it remains for our own Government to show that they, too, are in earnest. He heartily supported the holding of an international conference, and the promulgation of a code of universal obligation.

The Earl of Stamford spoke in appreciative terms of the Society's object in protecting girls going abroad or coming to England, and rejoiced that its work is being organized in the capitals of Europe. The Hon. Mrs. Talbot dealt with the preventive features of the Society's operations, the results of which have yielded every encouragement. In the course of an impressive address, Mr. P. W. Bunting urged the need for improvement of the present law under which the cases brought forward by the Association are tried. It is desirable that offences against public decency should be put under Summary Jurisdiction Acts. To these defects of the law the Society is now giving its attention.

Other speakers included Mr. T. A. Denny, Mrs. Ormiston Chant, and Lord Braye.

Senghenydd.—With painful interest we spent part of last Monday with our friend, Mr. Wintle, of Pontymoile, at Senghenydd, the scene of the recent terrible explosion by which eighty-three breadwinners lost their lives. We visited some of the bereaved, and may have saddening particulars to give next week; but in the meantime there is great need of some kindly help for the widows and orphaned children of the deceased. These for the most part were not colliers receiving high wages, but men employed in repairing the pit. Any contributions may be sent to our care, or to Mr. Wintle, Bethany, Pontymoile, Pontypool, Mon. R. C. M.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

* I want to interest my* elder "Young People" every week in what Mr. Meyer writes on the Christian Endeavour Topic. Parents will also find the S.S. Lesson Notes suggestive and helpful for Sunday talks with their young folk. See next page.)

Candle Sermon.*

[An Exercise for Parents and Children. Some of the articles referred to will be easily obtainable, others can be supplied in imagination. Parents will no doubt be able to amplify the lessons suggested.]

Text: "Ye are the light of the world" (Matt. v. 14).

MATERIAL needed: One tin biscuit box deep enough to cover the candles when lighted, some white and coloured candles of various sizes, a piece of magnesium wire, a piece of money, some thin tapers, and a moist sponge with which to put out the candles at the close of the exercise.

Ask all the children to repeat your text after you. Jesus said, "Ye are the light of the world." Talk a little about physical light, then lead on to mental light, as where the child sees a truth; thence go to a spiritual light, and say that we will to-day illustrate by these candles the way in which we may be the spiritual light of the world.

I. Place a plain white candle in position on the table. No light. Why? Because it is not lighted. Light the candle. Now it burns. We are of no use unless we give light—the light that Christ speaks of when He says, "Ye are the light of the world." That is what Christians are for, to give light to the world.

II. Now exhibit some coloured candles. Light them. Call attention to the fact that they give no more light than the plain candles. Does their colour or beauty help them? No. For purposes of light-giving they are no better than others. Moral: Fine clothes, elegant houses, money, do not take the place of light-giving. If we give no light they are really hindrances. We must beware how we take pride in any such things.

III. Now light the smaller candles, and a taper or two. See, they give light, too. Moral: Let no one say, "I am too little, or too young; if I was like my mother or teacher, I would shine; but it is no use, I am too small." Shine as much as you can. That is all God asks of you.

IV. All this time a very large candle—say eighteen inches long—has been standing in a candlestick at your side, unlighted. So far you have said nothing about it. Now call attention to it. Show that the little burning tapers are of more use than the big unlighted candle. An unlighted candle, however big, is useless. So an unconverted man, however old or learned, is of no use to God, or to his fellow men. He must first give light. "Let your light shine," said Jesus.

V. Now take a little burning taper, and with it light the big candle. See, the little taper lighted the large candle! Yes, so it is. By God's grace little children can often lead their parents to God.

VI. Take a small lighted candle in your hand, and hold a piece of money in front of it. Can you see the light well? No, it is obscured. Why? Because the coin was too near it. So, if the love of money gathers around the Christian's heart and his light grows dim, the Sunday school languishes, foreign missions die out, church debts are not paid. "The love of money is the root of all evil."

VII. Now take a piece of magnesium wire, about three inches long, and burn it. It will light up a large room brilliantly. It soon goes out. It is like a flash-light. So some people are flash-Christians. They burn very bright at revivals, but six weeks after, where are they? Backsliding. The light has gone out. How great that darkness! Better burn less brightly and more steadily.

VIII. But now I'll turn this biscuit-box over one of the candles and make it tight around the bottom, so that not one gleam of light can shine out. Now we'll all stop and sing, "Jesus bids us shine," and afterwards we'll see how the little candle, that isn't letting its light shine, gets along. After the song, lift the box. If air-tight, the candle has gone out. So with Christians, if they will not let their light shine, they themselves will die out.

IX. As each candle is lighted let it keep on burning. By this time you will have six or seven burning. Call attention to the fact that all were lighted from the first candle. Does that one lose light in consequence? Well, you need never be afraid to be a light to others, lest you should burn less brightly yourself. "There is that scattereth and yet increaseth."

X. Now ask all the children to repeat the verse, "I am the Light of the world." Jesus said this. Did any of these candles light themselves? No. All had to be lighted from outside. So with us, we must first go to Jesus to get light, for He is the Light of the world. Only after we have got light from Him can we give any light to others. Now, won't someone right here and now go to Him and ask Him for spiritual light? Close with an earnest appeal, and sing, "The Light of the world is Jesus."

* From Children's Meetings, a very useful book for teachers, containing a large variety of lesson-notes and suggestive outlines. (2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott.)

"The Christian" Bible Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 283).

1. Who shall shine as the stars, and how long will their light last? (Dan. xi.-xiii.).
2. What is said in the story of the Creation about the formation of light? (Genesis.)
3. How and where did the light lead the shepherds? (Matt. i.-iii.).
4. What is the character of the people in whose heart the light is sown? (Psa. xcv.-xcvii.).
5. Who is described as: (a) A light in darkness (Micah vi.-viii.); (b) a light to lighten the Gentiles (Luke i.-iii.); (c) the true light (John); (d) a bright and shining light? (John iv.-vi.).
6. Write out a verse proving that God's light in a life will never grow dim (Prov. iii.-v.).
7. What class of men will hate the light, and why? (John ii.-iv.).
8. What shall cause the light of our life to break forth as the morning? (Isa. lvii.-lix.).
9. Give Paul's advice to the "children of light," regarding (a) their attitude to those over them; (b) their thankfulness; (c) the Spirit; (d) watchfulness; (e) revenge (1 Thess. iv.-end.).
10. How can we prove that we are walking in the light by (a) our relation to God; (b) our conduct to men? (1 John i.-iii.).
11. On whom does the psalmist rely for the light of his life? (Psa. xvii.-xix.).
12. For what reason are we to let our light shine? (Matt. iv.-vi.).
13. Give the reason for the failure of the five virgins to get in to the feast (Matt. xxiv.-xxvi.).
14. Why is no earthly light needed in heaven? (Rev. xxi.-end.).
15. Whose light shall be extinguished? (Prov. xii.-xiv.).
16. What gives light to our lives? (Psa. cxix.).

[Children under ten do any 4; under thirteen, any 8; under seventeen, any 12.]

PRIZE COMPETITION.

Next Week.

I shall be glad if as many as possible will send me in their answers to No. 283 QUITE EARLY, on account of making the "Eligible List" for the Prize Competition as complete as possible.

Remember to give your full Address, as well as your name and age.

QUARTERLY PRIZE COMPETITION.

The Prize Questions next week will be set from the following Books:—

Divisions I. and II. (Children under ten and thirteen years). Genesis (such portions as are covered by Hebrews xi. 1-22).

Divisions III. and IV. (Those under fifteen and eighteen years). Leviticus i.-xi. and Hebrews.

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (282).

a. Micah ii. 7. Answer: Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path (Psa. cxix. 105).

b. Jer. xxiii. 35. Answer: All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them (Matt. vii. 12).

c. Ex. xxxiii. 13. Answer: Jesus saith, I am the way (John xiv. 6).

d. Micah vi. 8. Answer: Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus (Phil. ii. 5).

e. Mark xii. 15. Answer: Freely ye have received, freely give (Matt. x. 8).

f. 2 Kings iii. 8. Answer: If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God (James i. 5).

g. Job xiv. 14. Answer: Jesus said, I am the Resurrection and the Life; he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live (John xi. 25).

h. Gen. xv. 2. Answer: Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life (Rev. ii. 10).

No. 282—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Miriam and Olive Allam, Douglas Anderson-Berry*, Ralph and E. Aldwinckle, John Allan.

B—Cyril Baddeley, Gordon Bligh, Evelyn*, Ileene, Hilda* and Mabel Barstow, Emily Bridgewater, Robert Bushby*, Violette Birney, Barbara and Gwendoline Bourne, Ada Bratt*, Reginald Bristow, Clarence Bass, Herbert Braddon, Mabel Baker, Mary*, Susette* and Helen* Beck, Marion Boyle, Alison, Monica* and Ethel Bailey.

C—Josephine Cheal, Percy and Stanley Chappell, Willie, May* and Kathleen Cullen, Ida* and M.* Cole, Gladys and Gussie Clark, Anna Chanyen, Sophie Cohen, Dorothy Clarke*, Mabel Campe, George Cary, Lydia Cleary, George Cross, Margaret Cooper, Kittie Cope*

D—Violet and Kitty Donaldson-Selby, Nellie* and Willie Dowsett, Willie, Catherine, Grace and Emily* Dempster, Mai Davidson, Dorothy* and Ralph* Daintree, Marjory Dyke*, Rhoda Dunlop* Ethel Dancy*, Stanley Drew, Polognia Daws*, Tom Dunn*.

E—Esther and R. Everitt.

F—Arthur and Edward Foley, Mary Freeman, Mabel, Olive and Vincent Fleet, Harry Flashman, Winifred and Mildred Fooks, Percy Fitch.

G—Margaret Gorrie, Winifred Gardiner, Cicely*, Dorothy and Gladys Gibson, David Gardiner, Thomas Gilbert*, Cissy and Tom Garfit, Blaxflower Glover.

H—Sydney Hanford*, Dorothy, Ruth* and Ince Hunt, Kathleen and D. Heckford, Dorothy Havergal Shaw, Hetty Hill, Beatrice Hastings*, Nellie Hatchett, Ina Hemmel.*

I—Nellie Irving*, Edith Ibbott*.

J—Alfred Johnson, Amelia Jacobson*, Betty Jacobs, Winifred Jeffery*, Emily Jones, David Jameson*, Linda Jones*.

K—Annie Kingsford, Lionel Keppie*, Maurice Kalinsky*, Eva* and Max* Kalb, Lilian Kyme.

L—Beatrice Le Mesurier*, Gladys Lee, Georgina* and Cecilia* Lichtenstein, Sidney and May Law.

M—Mabel Morris*, N. and Alan Marshall, Sidney, John, Winifred, Mollie and Geoffrey Martin, Amy Munday, Edith and Aldie* Margetts, Irene Mabille*, May Mills, Arthur, Grace, Nellie and Lewis Morice, Dorothy Morgan*, Charlie and Dorothy McMullin.

N—Emily Norris, Valerie and Eleanor Noel Blanche Norcock.

O—Olive Oxley.

P—Lizzie and William Porter, Evelyn Primrose-Pechey*, Cyril Partridge, Ethel* and K.* Pasley, Enid and Kathleen Pincott, Dora Phillimore*, Dorothy Parker, Winnie, Katie, Walter and Leonard Pickneil.

R—Hilda and Alice Reid, Ada Renals*, Alice and Jessie Rickett, Gordon Remington, Marion Richards*, Kate Rosenbloom, Aileen and Marjorie Roberts, Gwendolen Ravenhill*, Marion and Gussie Roach.

S—Constance and H. Schaeffer, Marjorie Smith*, Constance Sherbrooke, Lily and Ellen Scriven, Esther* and Amy* Simmons, Christie Soans*, Whateley Smith, Mary Sowden, Betty Stocks*, Margery Smart*, Frances Stileman, Stanley and David Soltan, Flora Shadbolt.

T—Bertha Tranter, Carleton Tufnell, Archibald and Theodora Thorn, Vincent Taylor, Marion Tarry*, Olive Tritton*, Dudley Toye*, Frank Tomkins.

W—Theo, Mabel and Allan Wallis, Greta Watson*, Bertram Webb, Agatha Ward, Ellen Williams, Gertrude Williams*, Nellie* and Rachel* Wilson, Cecile and Phillis Wright, Annie and Sarah Wood, Florence Wilde, Nellie Whitney*, Ruth Warren, Fanny Wheeler, Freda Watts*, Leonard Wall, Mansfield White.

Y—M. and Gladys Young.

281—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Mabel Ashwell*, Irene Ashdown.

B—Louis Berthé, Massy and Conyers Baker, Maud Bunn Dorothy Berry*, Ernestine Buhl, Lucienne Brabandès, Gordon and James Bryant, Gwendoline and Barbara Bourne, Dorothy Butcher*, James Barker, Marianne and Evelyn Butlin, Frances Burnett*, Leonard Browne*, Helen*, Mary* and Susette* Beck, Beatrice Brouard.

C—Duncan* and Hyde* Campbell, Henry*, David* and John* Colville, George Crawford, Ernest and Annie Cole, Walter* and Maggie* Carter, Mabel Candlin*, Ethel Cumbers*, Lydia Cleary, Alfred Cocking, Gladys and Beryl Calvert, George Cary.

D—Marjory Dyke*, Willie, Emily*, Grace* and Catherine* Dempster, Marie Denizot, May Darroll*, Constance, Elizabeth and Hilda Drayson.

F—Hyacinth FitzSimons, Percy Fitch, Lewis, Meg and Agnes Fullarton, Jeanne Faucon, Louise Filhol, Mabel and Eva Fletcher, Elrene and May Fennell, F. Figgis.

G—Jack and Dorothy* Gray, E. and James Grieve, Evelyn and Grace* Gulston, Dorothy Green*, Dorothy Gibson, Elsie*, Isabel and Margie Goudge, Mary Glass, Geo., Margery and Colin Graham-Brown, Katie Green, Herry Goulding, Edward Gardiner.

H—Violet Holford*, Sydney Hanford*, Florence*, Francie*, Julyan* and Norman* Hoyte, Edith*, Winifred and Henry Harvey, James and John C.* Henderson, Mary Haines, May* and Sandy Handasyde, Nellie Hatchett, Theodora Hill, Annie Horstcraft, Beatrice Hastings*, May Hollis*, Ella Hake, Georgette Hoffman.

I—Daisy Irodell, Ami* and Isabel* Inglis.

J—David Jameson*, Lizzie Johnstone*, Emily Jones.

K—Margaret Kinnaird, A. Kay*, Philippa*, Cecilia, Dorothy* and Grace* Kerr.

L—Evelyn Lamb, Mary Lynn, Mildred Laidlaw, Arthur Llewellyn.

M—Margie Marston, Tom McGlone*, Marjorie Martin, Dora Muir*, Ella, Joy and Margaret McFadzean, Margaret Macdonald, Alexander*, Charlie* and Jessie* Morrison, Arthur MacLeod-Johnson*, John* and Ella* MacMurray, Margaret*, Dorothy* and Daniel Morris, Charlotte Millar*, Winnie, Dorothy and Leonard* Mace, Isabella* and William* Morrice, Daisie Mackenzie, Margaret McDougall, Godfrey, Alec and Evie Miller.

N—Hilda Nicholls*, Edith Nash*, Maude and Amy Nottage, Emily Norris.

O—Maude and Eva Oakes*.

P—Laura Percy, Jessie, Willie*, Ada* and Eddie Palmer, Myrtle Perry*, Christine Pearson*, Gladys* and Isabel* Phipps, Olive Pine-Coffin, Lucy and Mabel Pelham-Burn, Geoffrey, Percy and Clarice Peach.

Q—F. Quance*.

R—Maggie Reid, May Rodgers*, Hope Robinson, Jessie and Alice Ricketts, Cecily*, Jessie* and Elmina* Roe, Hilda and Alice Reid, Olive Robinson*.

S—Mary de Spiganovics*, Lydia Shirley, Dollie Salt*, Arthur Shand*, Hugh* and Agnes* Shields, Flora Smith*, Rita Sidky, Stanley B., Rider and Glanvill* Smith, Augustus, Raymond and William Simpkin, Kathleen Shepherd*, Stanley W. Smith*, Nannie Sturrock*, G.* and M. Spurgeon, Florence, Ellen, Effie* and John* Simpson, Eric Slater, Constance and Edgar Schaeffer, Flora Shadbolt, Rose Smith, Gladys*, Violet* and Evelyn* Shaw, Frankie Sellwood*.

T—Charlie and Flossie* Thomson, Evelyn Tracey, Reginald Thresh*, Willie Thomas*, Frank Thompson, Florence Tomlinson, Margaret Tweedy*.

U—Eva Usher.

W—Dorothy White, Mary Wilson, Violet* and Arthur Walker, Leonard Wall, Elsie*, Lilian and Gladys Willoughby, Ellen Williams, Charles and Kathleen Wingrave, Winnie Williams, Ronald Watson, Rachel* and Nellie* Wilson, William and Stewart Watson, Alexander and Ella Watt, Queenie, Kenrick and Ernest Wakeford, Pringle Wilson*, Helen Whitney*.

FOREIGN LIST.

No. 274—Amy Ramsay (Canada). No. 275—Geo[illegible]a Tollner, Mattie, Flo, Cuckoo and Minnie Lister (S. Africa). No. 277—Amy Ramsay, Frank* and Vera Sjöström, Eric, Rotha, Ivan and Lottie St. George (N. America). No. 278—Vera* and Frank* Sjöström (U.S.A.), Amy Ramsay, Dora Wallace* (Canada). No. 280—Phyllis Boyd (Malta), Nettie, Ina, Kate* and Will Thomson Bulgaria).

Personal.

Many thanks for flowers received during the week.

Mary Freeman.—I am glad to welcome you as a new "Searcher." May you find the study as interesting and useful as many others are doing.

L. B. (Villa Beau-Sejour, Nice).—You have sent your Searcher for the last two or three weeks without attaching your name.

Uncle Tom.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Broughty Ferry, to June 21; Ballater, June 23; Braemar, June 30; Surbiton, July 7. Mr. Hutchinson, Pe shore, to June 21; Cranleigh, June 22-23; Southfleet, June 29-30; Kingston-on-Thames, July 1; Thornton Hill, near Croydon, July 5; Donhead, Salisbury, July 7; Mr. R. T. Archibald, Sheffield, June 28; Leeds, June 29. Mr. E. T. M. Dennes, Redhill, June 21. Rev. A. G. Dodderidge, Croydon, June 22-24; Hampstead, June 26; Tooting, June 29-July 1. Mr. E. Clark, with Caravan, Lavendon, Olney, Bucks., to June 20; Bozeat, near Wellingborough, Northampton, from June 21. Mr. L. H. Ingram, with Caravan, Old Woking, Surrey. Mr. David Clarke, with Caravan, at Great Bardfield, Essex. Messrs. T. Page and Wilson, with Caravan, at Horley. Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with Caravan, Marlesford, Suffolk, June 23-26.

(Children's Scripture Union Notice on page 28.)

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, June 23.

HOW TEMPERANCE WOULD HELP TO TRANSFORM THE EARTH (Rev. xxi. 1-7).

A DISTINCTIVE feature in the vision of the new heaven and earth, which will one day take the place of the visible creation, is that there should be no more sea. The Hebrew race, unlike the English, was extremely timid of the sea. It was always the sign of rebellion and untamed power; its billows could not rest, they were ever casting up mire and dirt; it was the source of separation of families and nations, instead of being, as it is with us, the means of binding the earth together. Therefore, nothing seemed more desirable than that the sea should cease to exist. Whether we are to take this literally or not we cannot tell, until our eyes are opened to see what God has prepared. Probably, however, we must gather that whatever makes for rebellion, separation, and unrest, will be absent from that fair world for which we long and wait.

The Holy City comes down out of heaven from God. Like a star in the far distance it glides towards the waiting earth, but ah! how different from anything with which we have been accustomed. Its light is clear like crystal, undimmed by the smoke of huge chimneys or contagion of pestilence and plague. At the corners of its streets no public houses flaunt their sign, and curse its population: its quiet air is not made hideous by the screams of ill-treated women, or the cries of terrified children fleeing before some drink-maddened husband and father. No bacchanalian songs mingle with its pure and holy music. There are no armies of habitual drunkards, no graves of those cut down prematurely by intemperance and vice, no broken-hearted grief for those who were once manly and loving, but from whose heart that which was rarest and best has been destroyed. No cypresses line its streets, no funeral cortèges passes over its pavement, no sighs and tears are discernible amid its happy population; every eye flashes with joy, every face is wreathed in smiles, every form is beautiful to look upon, and the life of each is one long summer day of bliss.

In that glad day God will dwell with men, the light of his presence will make sun and moon needless, and as each tear-stained face, waking up from the sorrow of the world, presents itself to Him, with his own hand He will wipe away the tears.

One of the most majestic sentences in this book is that "Behold, I make all things new." He who said originally "I will create" says now "I will create afresh," and it may be that even now this work of creation is going forward. Underneath the hoarding and scaffolding the true building is rising; beneath the wounds and bruises new flesh is forming; in the thick layer of ice and snow the flowers of spring are beginning to rear themselves from their winter sleep.

We may be quite sure that God will never be thwarted by Satan; that however much has been done to upset the Divine intention, the Almighty will ultimately reverse the fall, and bring our world into the happy condition which He intended from the first, that it might be the home of holy and obedient spirits.

It is a fair vision, young brothers and sisters, which awaits us down the glade of time, and perhaps not very far away, but God asks us to co-operate with Him in bringing it about. We are, as the Apostle Peter tells us, to "hasten the coming of the day of God" (2 Pet. iii. 12, R.V. marg). We may do this by becoming new creatures in Jesus Christ, by daily praying "thy kingdom come," and partly also by putting out of our lives all fellowship with the drink traffic, which more than anything else is retarding the coming of the Divine Ideal. Even here on earth, and in our mortal life, we may do a great deal towards bringing about a better state of things. Though as yet the New Jerusalem has not come down we may do much to build one up, or at least to bring the cities and towns in which we live into closer conformity with the Divine Ideal. There is nothing so absolutely important for us as to get a glimpse of God's conception, and then to rest neither night nor day, and to count no sacrifice or hardship too great that we may do our share in securing it. Sign the pledge of total abstinence, that you may have no complicity with the work of the enemy and destroyer.

F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

It is wonderful to hear of the Convention of Chinese Endeavourers held at Yu-yiao. Twenty-one Societies were represented by nearly 200 delegates. In spite of chronic poverty and the widespread distress caused by recent disturbances and famine, 427 Endeavourers contributed over £22!

* * *

A somewhat novel but practical step has been taken by the Christian Endeavourers of the Livingstone Avenue Baptist Church, New Brunswick, N.J., in establishing a nursery in the Endeavour Room, where babies and infants will be cared for by ladies belonging to the church, while mothers attend the services.

* * *

There has been lately a wonderful example of Prison Endeavour in Nebraska. The State Penitentiary was recently destroyed by fire, and, as might be expected, the prison officials had a good deal of anxiety in connection with attempted escapes. Afterwards the warders testified that the eighty convicts, who had become members of the Christian Endeavour Society, were the bulwarks of the Penitentiary, and by their ready submission to discipline, quiet demeanour and prompt helpfulness, they prevented what might have been a serious outbreak.

* * *

The annual Japanese Convention has just been held at Tokyo. Out of seventy Societies known to exist within the Japanese Empire, forty were represented at the meetings by delegates, and ten others by letters and telegrams. Among the inspiring reports given was that of the Okayama Union. Twelve months it had only one Society with one member, a girl; now it has ten Societies, with a joint membership of 167 active and thirty-two associate members. The Society of one has now eleven active and fourteen associate members, with ten baptisms during the twelve months.

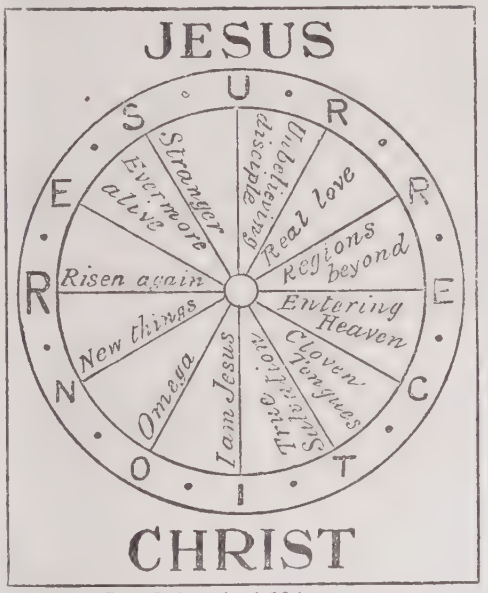
International S.S. Lesson.

June 30, 1901.

REVIEW.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"God hath both raised up the Lord, and will also raise up us by his own power" (1 Cor. vi. 14).

If we spell the word "Resurrection," we can take one letter for each lesson this quarter, and learn one thing about Jesus Christ for each letter (see Golden Text).



R (Luke xxiv. 1-12.)

Risen again.—The angel said, "He is not here. He is risen." Find all the witnesses to the Resurrection.

E (John xx. 11-18.)

Evermore alive.—Not risen for a few days, but for ever and for ever. Try to realize what "evermore," "eternity," from "everlasting to everlasting," mean.

S (Luke xxiv. 13-35.)

Stranger (see v. 18).—How often is Jesus treated as a stranger instead of as a loving friend. How do you treat Him?

U (John xx. 19-29.)

Unbelieving disciple.—Full of doubts, one of thousands to-day who will not believe in the true Son of God.

R (John xxi. 15-22.)

Real love.—Jesus asks us the same question as He did Peter, and his text for real love is that we do something for Him. "Feed My lambs."

R (Matt. xxviii. 16-20.)

Regions beyond.—Christ would have every creature of every nation know what we, in our Christian England, know about Him and his great salvation.

E (Luke xxiv. 44-53; Acts i. 1-11.)

Entering heaven.—The day came when Jesus had to leave his disciples, and return to his heavenly home, but He is coming again.

C (Acts ii. 1-11.)

Cloven tongues.—The promise of the Father; the Comforter; the gift of the Holy Ghost; look up other names for the Holy Spirit.

T (Heb. ix. 11-28.)

True salvation.—The little word "once" gives us the key to true salvation (see vv. 12, 26, 27, 28).

I (Acts xxii. 6-16.)

"I am Jesus."—The same Jesus. Jesus guiding a wayward man and bringing the wanderer to know Himself.

O (Rev. i. 9-20.)

Omega and Alpha.—Two wonderful names of our Saviour. Carry them out in their meaning, showing how Christ is the beginning and ending of all our redemption.

N (Rev. xxi. 1-7.)

New things.—To enjoy these new things we must begin now to live the new life in the risen Saviour by having a new heart.

The Y.W.C.A.

MISS AGNES HILL'S RETURN.

UNDER the presidency of the Dowager Countess Erroll, a largely-attended meeting to welcome Miss Agnes Hill, travelling secretary for the World's Y.W.C.A. in India, and six other lady workers from India, was (through the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Denny) held on Tuesday last at 11, Bryanston Square.

Lady Erroll expressed the debt of gratitude which was felt for the arduous labours undertaken, and the hope that a period of rest would give renewed strength for future service.

Mr. Crayden Edmunds, of the Bible Society in Calcutta, testified from personal experience of the value of the work done, and of the difficulties which had to be encountered, claiming sympathy and prayers for those engaged in it.

Miss Agnes Hill, in a most interesting address, described the work carried on by the sixteen helpers, which supplemented missionary effort, and provided opportunities of Christian service by English ladies. She pleaded earnestly for additional workers, and for association buildings in at least the great centres—Calcutta, Madras, Colombo, and Rangoon.

The Hon. Mrs. Waller gave a cordial invitation to join the "Union for Prayer and Help for India;" and the Bishop of Calcutta spoke in high terms of commendation and sympathy of the noble work of the Y.W.C.A. in India, and of the magnificent opportunity for Christian service there by English ladies, which can never be accomplished by men, emphasising the claims of the wives of the 73,000 soldiers, the numerical total of the British Army in India.

"ALL THE WORLD" JOTTINGS.

Adelaide, South Australia.—The Lady Colton Memorial Institute has now been opened. His Honour the Chief Justice, Sir Samuel Way, performed the ceremony, declaring the Institute open "To the glory of God, and to the honour of our worthy late President, for the benefit of the girls and women of Adelaide."

Cape Town.—The two new workers who were so sorely needed, have been found. One was already on the spot, and the other, Miss Welch, has started for Africa. We are glad to add that Miss Horswell has just been appointed Secretary at Durban. Thus this pressing need has been removed, and we may confidently expect great blessings to follow on the appointment of these two secretaries.

Kandy, Ceylon.—The membership of this branch now numbers eighty, many new members having lately been enrolled. This branch of the Y.W.C.A. needs a room of its own in which to hold meetings, so that its usefulness may be extended.

Japan stands to-day as the only nation of civilization in which there is no Association. Not because one would spread a name or an organization for its own sake, but because there is every reason to believe that the spirit of Christian helpfulness, the methods of plain practicality, and the four-fold features set forth in the object of the Constitution have been a strong factor in the development of Christian womanhood in other lands, its place in Japan is earnestly desired.

Vernham Dean Mission.—The first anniversary of the work, began at Vernham Dean a year ago in the Mission Hall erected by Mrs. Sydney Watson ("A Village Maiden's Career"), was held recently. Mrs. Watson gave an interesting report, every item of which was stamped "What hath God wrought." A number of remarkable conversions had taken place; more than a hundred total abstinence pledges had been taken, a Christian Endeavour Society of over sixty active members was flourishing, while the branch work at Buttermere was equally encouraging. A loyal tribute was paid to the Evangelization Society for the help given at times during the year. An ever-increasing field of work opens up before the leaders of this mission, and the prayers and sympathy of readers are asked for it.

Cambridge Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

ANOTHER Easter Term, and with it another academic year, has drawn to a close. Hundreds of men now leave the University and go into the world with all the extra responsibilities which are attached to a University career.

Amongst the University preachers this term the most distinguished were the Bishops of Ripon and London and the Dean of Canterbury. The Bishop of Ripon not only preached before the University, but also addressed a meeting of the Inter-Collegiate Christian Union in Holy Trinity Church, and on the next day gave a short address on Sermon Preparation in Ridley Hall. For this purpose Ridley Hall was thrown open to any members of the University who were looking forward to ordination. The large number that responded showed clearly that such lectures are appreciated, and we cannot help thinking it would be a step in the right direction were many more arranged in the future.

The Bishop of London, in his sermon before the University, pleaded for more men for Holy Orders, and in doing so he dealt with the difficulties which apparently face men in a most masterly way.

Dean Farrar, though lacking the fire he possessed when he was last here, yet spoke with great directness of aim from the text, "Be sure your sin will find you out." To hear these three preachers the University Church was crowded with undergrads in a way which is very seldom seen now.

Ridley Hall has had a prosperous term, and its members have done well in Bishops' examinations. Islington C. M. College, having had the Gospeller at the London Trinity Ordination for ten consecutive years, has had this year to give place to a member of Ridley Hall. Twenty-five men are expected to be in residence at Ridley this Long Vacation term.

Keswick Convention.

JULY 22 TO 27, 1901.

AS many missionaries to the heathen desire to attend the Keswick Convention this year, a special fund is being raised to assist them in their expenses.

Contributions towards this important object will be gratefully received and acknowledged by Albert A. Head ("Keswick Convention"), Corrie Lodge, Wimbledon, S.W. An early response to this appeal is requested, so as to give time for the needful arrangements.

Missionaries desiring assistance, will oblige by writing, enclosing a stamped envelope with full address, to Mrs. Albert A. Head ("Keswick Convention"), Corrie Lodge, Wimbledon, S.W. The fund raised is to aid missionaries to the heathen only. Others desiring to attend can write to Mr. John Postlethwaite, Eskin Place, Keswick, who will give information as to accommodation. Meals can be obtained at the refreshment rooms, at reasonable rates; but in neither case at the cost of the fund beforenamed. ROBERT WILSON.

Broughton Grange, Cockermouth.

The special train arrangements have now been completed, and the Preparatory Letter is ready. Mr. J. T. Budd will gladly forward a copy for threepence in stamps. His address is, Rockville, 23, Pembroke Crescent, Hove, Brighton.

The Monthly Tract Society.

THE annual meeting of the above Society (the conduct of which was recently handed over to the trustees of the Stirling Tract Enterprise) was held at Exeter Hall a few days ago.

Mr. John MacFarlane, secretary, explained that the object of the Society is to bring the subject of personal religion before the middle and upper classes by sending selected tracts to them through the post. During the past year thousands of copies of these publications have been posted to the graduates and under-graduates of Oxford and Cambridge Universities, to the boys of Eton, Harrow, and Winchester, to lawyers in Edinburgh, to sailors and soldiers, and, in fact, to people in all parts of the world. The grants of the Stirling Tract Enterprise last year ran up to a total of nearly 9,500,000 of copies. The receipts for the past year amounted to £674 15s. 10d., and the payments to £917 13s: 2d. Mr. FRANK A. BEVAN, speaking from the chair, advocated the claims of the Society, and said that the upper class of society, to a great extent, remain in ignorance of the simple truths of the Gospel to the very end of life. The Society is Scriptural in its methods and in its objects, and is, moreover, undenominational. Other speakers who expressed their warm approval of the work included Mr. J. H. Lydall and Alderman Spicer.

Welsh Notes.

THE Baptists of Denbighshire, Flintshire, and Merionethshire, with those of Liverpool and Manchester, held a conference on Wednesday, June 12, at Llangollen. Resolutions were passed having reference to the Education Bill, and the sale of drink to children.

Some months ago we chronicled in these columns some of the gifts of temperance houses made by Lady Reade to certain villages in Anglesey. Another well-known Welsh lady has now taken a somewhat similar step by purchasing a hotel at Caersus, and converting it into a temperance establishment.

The General Assembly of the Welsh Wesleyan Methodists was held last week at Llanidloes. At the first session the new president—Rev. Hugh Jones, Bangor—delivered his inaugural address, subject, "The Twentieth Century Church and the Scriptures." The statistics of the denomination showed a membership of 21,732. In the North Wales district there are 267 Sunday schools and 22,226 scholars; in the South Wales district, 105 schools, attended by 7,265 scholars. Towards the Million Guineas Scheme, North Wales had promised £15,079, and South Wales £5,758.

Scottish Notes.

AT the annual meeting last week of the Dundee Institution for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb, under the presidency of ex-Bailie Doig, it was stated that the number of children boarded and educated at present was seventeen, nine of whom were provided for out of the revenue of the Institution.

The fourth annual Conference of the Dumbartonshire district of the Young Men's Christian Association and Fellowship Unions was held on Saturday, 8th inst., at Roseneath. Mr. W. Stewart (Roseneath) was elected president, Mr. J. L. Laidlaw (Helensburgh) secretary, and Mr. J. MacBride (Clydebank) treasurer.

A series of open-air temperance meetings have been held in Dundee, conducted by Mr. John M'Donald (U.F. Church Temperance Society), supported by Mr. William Blackwood and Mr. John Craig. All the meetings were large, the people listening with deep interest, and at times manifesting much enthusiasm over the truths advanced and the plans of amelioration proposed. Literature was distributed, and a number of pledge cards issued.

A friend of Mr. Quarrier's work among orphans and consumptives has just handed him a sum of £3,000, to be used at his discretion. This will provide for the erection of new stables which are much required, with accommodation for sixteen horses. As the same friend is anxious to see something of a national character done on behalf of epileptics, and is prepared to give towards such an object, Mr. Quarrier is inviting an expression of opinion on the part of other friends on the subject.

Last week the annual open-air service in commemoration of the stand made by the Covenanters at Rullion Green, the scene of the Pentland rising, was held at Flotterstone Haugh, close to the battlefield. Despite threatening weather, over 1,000 people, hailing from all parts of the county of Mid-Lothian, were present. The service was conducted by Rev. Archibald Holmes, Paisley, Moderator of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, who preached from Heb. vii. 25—"He is able to save."

The Million Pledges Crusade.

WE understand that at an important meeting of the Council of the Free Churches Twentieth Century Temperance Crusade, held a few days ago, under the presidency of Rev. F. B. Meyer, it was resolved to divide England into districts, and to place each of these under the direction of an agent, who should travel throughout it, meeting the leading temperance workers in the large towns, and arranging for a systematic campaign in the fall of the year.

We also learn that energetic preparations are on foot for an autumn campaign in London. It is proposed to hold meetings in some fifty centres, mostly on Saturday evenings, with the view of gathering the principal workers for practical conference, that the simultaneous movement at the end of November may be thoroughly well carried out. Mr. Meyer intimated that he was prepared to place his Saturday evenings at the disposal of the organizers.

Literature for Colonial Homes.—Mr. D. H. Hunter, of Lovedale, South Africa, is desirous of placing Christian periodicals and tracts in the hands of the many white families who occupy lonely farms and rarely come within sound of the Gospel from one year's end to another. The gifts of friends in England in aid of this service will be heartily appreciated.

The Y.M.C.A.

THE annual meeting of the Hackney Association was held on June 13 at the headquarters in Mare Street, N.E. Mr. J. E. Vanner presided over a large audience. The report, read by the secretary, Mr. F. L. Porter, showed the work to be in a healthy condition. The agencies at work include weekly Bible classes, prayer meetings, a P.S.A. for men, and many other useful departments of religious and educational effort. During the evening addresses were given by Mr. William McCall (president of the Shoreditch Association), Rev. W. Haslam Jones, and by three of the missionary members now home on furlough, viz., Messrs. Isaac Mason (China), B. J. Lower (Congo), and A. N. Salmon (Niger). It was announced that the Archbishop of Canterbury would address the members in St. Michael's Church, London Fields, on Sunday afternoon, July 14.

The annual report of the Calcutta Association tells of good progress. The religious work, especially in the latter part of the year, has been encouraging, and while the numbers attending meetings and Bible classes have been few, the interest has been good. The valuable and well-chosen site, costing 70,000 Rs., is now entirely free from debt, and there is a substantial sum in the bank. In the college branch there has been no abatement in the attendances and the number of religious meetings and Bible classes, while the opportunities for personal dealing have been more than could be met. Many students and assistants in public offices take advantage of the daily non-Christian Bible classes. At the Bhowanipur branch two religious meetings have been held regularly throughout the year, one for Christian students and the other for non-Christian. The latter of these has averaged between thirty and forty attendants.

His Majesty the King despatched on the 13th inst., through Sir Dighton Probyn, a message of sympathy and encouragement to the Jubilee Convention of American Associations then in session at Boston, Mass. The German Emperor likewise sent hearty congratulations to the assembly, with the wish that the international brotherhood might further flourish and increase. He also expressed his satisfaction at seeing German Associations active in the same endeavour and partaking fraternally in the solemn gathering, and hoped that the American associations will also in future train for their great Fatherland citizens sound in body and soul and of earnest convictions, their lives standing on the only unmovable foundation—the name of Christ, a name which is above every name.

Coincident with the opening of the American Conference at Boston on June 11, the Noon Meeting at the Aldersgate Street Association, E.C., was addressed by Mr. E. D. Ingersoll, formerly a member of the American International Staff, but now resident in London. While thanking God for the wonderful progress that the American Associations have made during the fifty years of their existence, Mr. Ingersoll specially emphasized the fact that much of their effectiveness of the work has resulted from the outspoken criticism which, in its earlier days, it received from business men and others interested in young men. Mr. Ingersoll's own work has been connected with the railway department from almost the inception of that side of Association enterprise, and there is every reason for thankfulness for the work which has been accomplished, and for the appreciation in which the Associations are held to-day by railway men generally throughout the North American Continent.

Blackheath Conference.—The annual conference on the Lord's Second Coming was held at Alexandra Hall on Wednesday and Thursday last week, and was well attended. These meetings were held each day. On Wednesday Mr. W. H. Seagram presided, and during the morning session addresses were delivered by Dr. R. McKilliam on "The Hope of the Church," Rev. M. Bergmann on "The Hope of Israel," and by Mr. James Sprunt on "The Hope of Creation." In the afternoon a paper was read by Rev. T. Graham on "The Promise to the Overcomer in Philadelphia," after which time was given for questions and answers. The evening meeting was addressed by Rev. H. C. Sturdy, on "The Coronation of the King," and by Mr. Brunton, on "The Coming of the Lord in Contrast to the Day of the Lord." On Thursday morning and afternoon Lieut.-Colonel Roberts presided, and addresses were delivered by Mr. James Sprunt on "Expectancy, Activity, and Stability in View of the Lord's Coming;" by Rev. I. Levinson, on "Israel's Expectation;" Rev. S. Wilkinson, on "The Prophecy of Joel;" and by Rev. Fuller Gooch, on "The Bow in the Cloud." Mr. Edward Trotter presided over the last meeting, the addresses being delivered by Rev. F. L. Denman on "Signs among the Jews," and Rev. T. George on "The Coming of the Lord, as Taught in the Epistles to the Thessalonians."

Tent Work.

The London Tent Campaign.

DURING the past week Mr. George Clarke has been at the Clapton tent. At the first meeting the huge tent was crowded, and the missioner's earnest and thoughtful address was listened to with keen attention. There were many cases of decision. Mr. Cleeves Hooper writes:—"The meetings have been better attended, and of a deeply spiritual tone. Last Lord's Day evening, although the tent is seated for 2,000 persons, for all the people. The curtains of the tent had to be lifted so that those who were standing outside might hear."

ROOM COULD NOT BE FOUND

From Fulham, a friend writes: "It is with great joy that we are able to report increasing blessing in connection with the tent mission. It has now been in progress for three weeks, and although at first we had some 'hard ploughing,' we are now seeing the outcome. During the past week Mr. Charles Inglis has delivered powerful addresses, and night by night souls have come out on the Lord's side. On Wednesday of last week twenty persons were dealt with in the inquiry room. The solos by Miss Inglis were greatly appreciated.

"On Sunday morning last we held our first 'meeting for men,' conducted by the Brothers Weaver, when some 250 men were present, and the power of God was felt. There were a number of seekers. In the evening the tent was so crowded that it became necessary to close the gates leading into the ground. At the close there were more surrenders to Christ. One remarkable case here is that of a local bill-poster, reputed one of the worst drunkards in the district. He had been to the morning meeting, and was greatly moved, promising to come again in the evening and bring his wife. We had the joy of seeing them come out and start in the right path together." The Weaver Brothers continue at Fulham until to-morrow (Friday) evening.

The meetings at Stratford have also been times of revival blessing. Describing last week's gatherings, Mr. G. E. Stallworthy writes: "We have had

A TIME OF POWER.

Many have professed to pass from death unto life. During the week backsliders, too, have been impressed, particularly on the evening when Mr. Bewley Weaver preached from the words Mark xvi. 7: 'And Peter.' On the Sunday evening people began to gather two hours before the time announced for commencing. A large number of anxious souls were dealt with." On Sunday morning last Mr. J. B. Wookey spoke to about 700 men in the morning. It was an impressive and helpful gathering.

The work at Kilburn has been greatly owned and blessed, night by night, the local secretary and other workers bravely seconding the efforts of the evangelists. During the past two weeks Messrs. J. Bennett Anderson and R. S. Bradbrook have been the means of much blessing to the Christians, as well as to the unsaved.

Miss Lottie Tubb, who has sung the Gospel impressively, also proved herself a sympathetic and efficient worker among the anxious, leading many into the inquiry room, and having the joy of pointing them to the Saviour. The last night of the evangelists' stay was a most blessed experience, many for whom prayer had long been made being brought to contrition.

One of the largest tents, seating 2,000 people, has been erected on Woolwich Common, in the centre of the great military depôt, surrounded by quite 10,000 troops, chiefly the Royal Artillery and Army Service Corps. A large number of Christians, from all the churches in the district, gathered on Saturday last to the opening service, which was to be devoted specially to prayer. The meeting was conducted by Mr. William Grove, and all present seemed to be full of hope and bright anticipation for the month's mission. On Sunday the services were very full of cheer and blessing. In the afternoon, notwithstanding a thunderstorm, a large number of Christians again assembled. Mr. Wookey gave a helpful address on the words "The love of Christ constraineth us." At night the people began to enter the tent at 7 p.m., though the meeting was announced for 8. The tent was full, and crowds were standing round. After Mr. Wookey's searching appeal from the words "Without hope," quite a number rose for prayer, and in the after-meeting between twenty and thirty men and women and several young people professed to accept Christ as their Saviour. Prayer is asked that the mission may be the means of reaching the thousands of young men in the garrison. Mr. Leonard Weaver and Mr. William Grove are continuing the work.

Tents are now erected in the following districts:—Fulham, Lillie Road; Kilburn, Willesden Lane; Clapton, Lower Clapton Road, close to the Congress Hall; Brixton, Canterbury Road; Woolwich, Woolwich Common.

The Evangelization Society.

Every week the Evangelization Society is becoming increasingly busy with its tent work. At the present time about forty-five tents in connection with this organization are in the field, of which seven are finding a sphere of usefulness in Scotland, four in the extreme North of England, ten in the Midland Counties (including Lancashire), eight in the West of England, four in the East, and eleven in London and the neighbourhood.

Although some of these tents are of large seating capacity, adapted to town populations, numbers of people cannot gain admittance to them on the Lord's Day, but stand in interested groups around, eagerly listening to the Word preached; whilst in many of the country villages it is a common thing to see a tent—holding between 200 and 300—crowded to its utmost capacity by those who have come from far and near

TO HEAR THE GOSPEL MESSAGE.

Not a week passes without testimony reaching the office of the Society of many being brought to a saving knowledge of the truth, and it is deeply interesting to hear of abiding fruit, the result of missions in previous years.

A correspondent, writing of a tent mission in one of the eastern counties, says:—

"The evangelist has had the joy of seeing the results of last year's work in this village. Specially has he been blessed to the young men, and it has done our hearts good to see them rally round their friend in the tent."

In some cases an annexe has been added to the tents, in which forty or fifty people can gather together for prayer, before or after the meeting, and these annexes have great value in affording an opportunity for the preacher to meet anxious inquirers. They also afford a little extra seating capacity, while the meeting is in progress.

A gentleman, who has arranged several missions, says:—"I have been much pleased with the evangelist. He has preached the Gospel so simply that a child could understand it. The blessing has been great, some twenty souls have professed conversion, and Christians have been greatly helped."

A clergyman writes:—"The evangelist's earnest and humble spirit, and his faithful and clear delivery of God's message touched many hearts, and we thank God for sending us the tent and preacher. May God bless your society more and more with such true-hearted servants of our blessed Master."

From the Midlands:—"The tent mission is surpassing all our expectations, and the Lord is blessing abundantly. Night by night men and women are being led to Christ, amongst them and the change is apparent to all. Some of those who at first bitterly opposed have been won for Christ, and the evangelist's work is telling in the district. The present mission, spiritually, is the most fruitful I have ever known in connection with the tent. We give thanks to God."

SOME OF THE MOST DEGRADED,

Tent Work in America.

Large numbers of visitors are being attracted to the city of Buffalo by the Pan-American Exposition which is being held there. In view of the opportunities presented for evangelistic work, a number of Christian people have combined to erect and maintain a tent during the five coming months of the Exposition. The opening service took place on June 2, and was full of blessing. On the platform were Revs. Henry Ward, F. S. Fitch, F. L. Kahler, and the editor of the New York Evangelist. The tent is lighted by electricity, and is well and conveniently fitted for public comfort. That it is amply secured against dampness and all vicissitudes of the weather, the dry flooring after seven consecutive days of rain amply attested.

Mr. W. D. Dunn writes: "We are having splendid times in a tent at Dundee. There has been quickening among the Lord's people, and not a few of the unconverted are coming out for Christ. We go on for another fortnight, and shall be glad of the prayers of your readers."

At Woodford, Essex, Mr. Goudie has just closed a fruitful five weeks' mission, which was arranged by the Y.M.C.A. The meetings were largely attended, and many have passed from death unto life through the faithful preaching of the Gospel. The Bible readings were very much appreciated.

Aged Christian Blind.

THE twenty-first annual meeting of the Homes for Aged Christian Blind Men and Women, Crouch Hill, was regarded as a "Coming of age" gathering, and congratulations or thanks were offered to Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bright, on account of their services as honorary superintendents during the whole period. Some time ago it was decided that this occasion should be taken advantage of for raising an additional £1,000 for the sustentation fund, which would then amount to £3,000. Half the amount desired, or £500, has already been raised.

The report and the superintendent's statement showed that the general operations were going on satisfactorily. In 1880 a start was made by a small donation, and the taking in of one inmate, aged seventy-seven, who in her day had been a governess. Since then 292 had been received, of whom 100 had died. There are now 101 in the institution, while ninety-one have returned to their friends, or have been sent to various infirmaries on account of mental or malignant illness. Most of those who have been received have

OUTLIVED ALL THEIR RELATIVES.

During the year there have been eight deaths, their places being filled by others who have long been waiting for admission.

During the twenty-one years upwards of £50,000 has been received on account of the work, nearly a quarter of which has been expended in six freehold houses, one being a House of Rest at Southend. Christians belonging to various Evangelical denominations visit the blind people and read or sing to them. Sunday and week-night services are also conducted by ministers of various denominations, and these are a means of edification and of blessing. There are likewise educational classes which are attended by blind persons from neighbouring workhouses, &c. Others besides the Crouch Hill inmates are allowed to go to the House of Rest at Southend.

Vivisection.—We understand that on Hospital Sunday Rev. F. B. Meyer announced that the whole of the collections contributed by his congregation would be sent to institutions in which vivisection is not practised. At the great meeting of men in the afternoon the question of the disposal of their contributions was formally put; and it is noteworthy that the entire audience, with much enthusiasm, resolved that not one penny should be given to hospitals in which vivisection is practised.

The Late Mrs. Gerald R. Coultas.

As we briefly recorded in a recent issue, the death of this lady evangelist took place after a long and painful illness. For a number of years Mr. and Mrs. Coultas have laboured together with much self-denial and devotion in connection with the Gospel Tent Mission at Barry Dock, and it was owing to the strain of her numerous duties that the health of Mrs. Coultas gave way and led to the serious illness which terminated in her death. Soon after her conversion, at the age of ten, she manifested a deep concern for the spiritual welfare of her less fortunate sisters, and many who are now enjoying the blessings of Christian discipleship owe their awakening to the devotion and consistency of her life. The funeral was attended by a large number of sorrowing friends, and the loving esteem in which Mrs. Coultas was held also found expression at the impressive memorial services.

Livingstone Exhibition.

THE second Livingstone (or Travellers' Health) Exhibition, organized by Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby, is being held at the Westminster Town Hall. It continues open until to-morrow (Friday). It is of a two-fold character. Upstairs is an accumulation of Livingstone relics, including a portion of the tree under which the famous traveller's heart was buried; his Bibles, journals, pistols, medals, and binoculars, and other interesting articles. In the main hall will be found a varied assortment of goods calculated to contribute towards the traveller's convenience and comfort, including beds, folding boats, filters, foods, tents, medicine chests, surgical dressings, and woollen clothing. The exhibition has been arranged in connection with the Travellers' Health Bureau, which is the department of Livingstone College dealing with general health questions, and it is hoped that it will be successful in stimulating an interest in the study of health questions among those who are concerned in life and health abroad.

Personalia.

A graceful compliment is being paid by the University of Glasgow to Miss AGNES WESTON, in the bestowal on her of the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws (LL.D.). "The sailors' friend" has well earned the gratitude and thanks of the British people, and the circle of friends who will be interested in this honour is very wide indeed.

Rev. DENNIS OSBORNE, of Poona, has had an interview with his Excellency Lord Northcote, Governor of Bombay, in the course of which his Excellency gratefully acknowledged the aid sent to starving natives by Christian people at home, and expressed his deep sympathy with Mr. Osborne's efforts to secure support for the thousands of famine orphans who are chargeable to various missionary societies and institutions.

The seventieth anniversary has just been celebrated of the birth of Pastor VON BODELSCHWINGH, widely known among Christian workers as the director of the "Bethel" Institution at Bielefeld, in Westphalia. The institution for epileptics alone has now 1,700, and the annual expenditure, received entirely from voluntary contributions, exceeds a million marks. The motto of all is, "The need is never greater than the Helper."

Rev. F. B. MEYER has accepted an invitation from the Conference of Syrian Christians to spend ten days in the Lebanon. It is expected that there will be a large gathering of Christian workers to meet him from all parts of Syria and Palestine. Mrs. Meyer will accompany him. It is unfortunate that the necessity of starting early will somewhat curtail Mr. Meyer's stay at the Convention at Keswick. Many will pray that great blessing may attend this undertaking by Mr. Meyer.

COMMUNICATIONS RECEIVED WITH THANKS.—A.F.W. H.A.B. N.S.T. G.S.M. J.W. W.C. C.F.E.D. H.M. S.D. Mrs. B. T.L.C. E.M. W.C. A.K. T.F. S.B. G.W. L.E.T. H.G. and S.—H.S.C. F.S. F.W.L. T.R.T. A.W.B. G.F. Mrs. H. J.M. J.B. C.C. B.C.P.W. W.C. J.W.G. C.J.S. E.A.T. T.E.H. J.E.M. C.K. E.E.T. P.S.B. A.F.L. M.C. W.L.T. G.O.M. J.S. E.J.M. W.O. W.B. G.F. G.H.A. M.S. J.S.C. J.M. A.T. W.D.G. A.H.C. G.R.C. J.L.N. B.M. A.A.H. J.W. T.H.A. J.J. W. W.F. W.B. P.E. P.S.G. F.L.B. M.S.R. S.B. W.C. A.R.C. A.E. J.B.B. G.M.K. H.J. W.J.I. J.K. F.L.H. A.W.V.H. G.H.P. J.H. T.W.W. T.O. F.I.B. R.W. J.G.B. S.A.F. J. McF. F.C. R.A. W.F. E.A.J. C.L.C. F.L. A.W. J.McC. M.A.L. S.T. Mrs. M. Baron F. J.F. M.H. T.C.U. C.J. F.C.S. J.E. W.P. G.C. A.S.M. D.J.T. N.J. W.J.T. J.A.G. A.M.M. M.H.A. J.B.H. A.C. J.P. J.G.B. E.J.B.

Evangelistic.

Mr. Sankey at Waterbury, Conn.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey's first visit to Waterbury will be long remembered by those who gathered in the Second Congregational Church, on June 6, to hear him sing, and speak of his labours as a co-worker of Mr. D. L. Moody. The Waterbury Republican says:—"Mr. Sankey is apparently as active as ever, and his voice certainly has lost none of its force. He sang three Gospel songs, two of them made famous by him, and gave his audience a description of his journeys in Egypt and the Holy Land." The large edifice was filled with an immense crowd of expectant people.

The Gospel in the Villages.

For some years past it has been my privilege to render service in the Gospel about this season in a village mission room at Bolney, Sussex. It has been a real joy to observe how the Lord has blessed and sustained the kind friend who many years ago had it laid upon his heart to lay out a fund reserved for a "rainy day" in the equipment of an "upper" room over his workshop, and here the Lord has given Mr. Haslett the joy of seeing many of his fellow-villagers come to the light, and yielding by lips and life a testimony to his name. The preachers and helpers are entirely honorary.

The room having become very crowded for some time past, Mr. Haslet was offered an iron room, with all the necessary fittings, holding about 200 adults, all in good condition, for £120, and which a few friends have enabled him to secure. This is now being erected, but fellowship would be welcomed towards the somewhat heavy items of removing and rebuilding. Mr. Arthur Dann, Manor House, Hurstpierpoint, Sussex, is acting as treasurer, and would gladly acknowledge any assistance sent him. The absence of Evangelical teaching in these Mid-Sussex villages constitutes a real claim upon all who love the Gospel. Prayer would be valued for this true servant of the Master, Mr. Haslett, whose whole-hearted service is entirely voluntary. W. C.

Large and interested congregations were assembled on Sunday last at the Mission Hall, Clarendon Villas, Hove. Mr. HENRY VARLEY was the preacher, and the crowded gatherings showed an interest in his unexpected but welcome visit. Quite a number of those present on the two occasions when after meetings were held confessed their reception of the Word of Life.

Protestant mission work has been carried on recently with good effect in the parish of Mitcheldean, by Mr. SAMUEL BRADFIELD, evangelist in charge of the Bishop Hooper Protestant van, who has had some fruitful meetings among the people. The services in the parish church are extremely "high," and Mr. Bradfield's addresses have done much good in their proclamation of Evangelical truth.

Evangelists' Engagements.

 This column is intended for Missions of some days' duration, not for engagements of a single day.

MRS. BAEYERTZ.—July 7-22, Brynn, near Wigan.

MR. JOHN COATES and MR. GEORGE BENTLEY.—Till June 24, Mitcheldean, with large Gospel Tent.

MR. W. COLLARD.—July 7-22, Tent Mission, Long Ditton.

MR. GEO. CLARKE.—Lower Clapton, till June 23.

MR. W. D. DUNN.—Till June 28, Dundee; July 6-20, Larbert; July 28, Aberdeen.

MR. JOHN ELLIOTT.—June 30, Gospel Hall, Fore Street, St. Marychurch, Torquay.

MR. JAMES S. HARRISON.—During June, St. Giles' Christian Mission, Sundays only.

MR. JOHN HAWKINS.—Till July 1, Parkstone Quay Tent Mission.

REV. J. JAMESON.—Till June 24, Hawes, Wensleydale; 29-July 4, Harden, near Bingley.

MR. BOB JOHNSON.—June 23-30, Leeds.

MR. NEWTON JONES.—June 22-July 2, Haverhill District Mission.

MR. CHAS. INGLIS.—Till June 22, Kilburn Tent; 24-28, Brixton Tent.

MR. HERBERT LENG and City Policemen, Memorial Hall, London Street, Bethnal Green, June 23.

MR. JAMES SPRUNT.—During June, Kensal Rise Tabernacle.

MR. R. SPRAGG.—During June, Martock and surrounding villages, with tent.

GIPSY SMITH.—Aug. 31-Sept. 9, Truro.

MR. HENRY THORNE.—During June, Edinboro' Castle, Limehouse.

MR. HENRY VARLEY.—June 23, at 11 and 7, Clarendon Mission Hall, Hove.

MR. J. WEEDON.—Till end of August, Tent Missions, Evangelization Society.

APPLICANTS FOR TRACTS.—Mr. Arthur King, Brickhouse End, Berden, Essex; Mr. Walton Claydon, 39, Granham Road, Rotherhithe New Road, S.E.; Mr. E. E. Tressider, 116, Lansdowne Road, London Fields, N.E.; Mr. G. Jordan, 20, Kinmel Street, Birkenhead; Sergeant-Major Moss, Wesleyan Soldiers' Home, Grosvenor Road, Aldershot; Mr. S. A. Fox, 13, Cromwell Street, Nottingham; Mr. Albert E. Sewell, c/o Rev. J. L. Brooks, the Training College, Lingfield, Surrey; Mr. Albert Nott, 24, Goldsmith Street, Newton Street, High Holborn, W.C.; J. Riches, 7, Lambert Street, Southchurch Road, Southend.

Among the Churches.

The Wesleyan Local Preachers' Mutual Aid Association annual meetings have been held at Liverpool. Alderman T. Snape, J.P., was elected to the presidency.

Dr. Silas Mead, principal of Harley College, Bow, is about to return to Australia. He is to be succeeded by Rev. Forbes Jackson, M.A., of King's Road Baptist Church, Reading.

Over 97,000 guineas have been promised to the Twentieth Century Fund in connection with the Methodist Free Churches. Efforts are being made to raise another 3,000 guineas before the Conference assembles next month at Redruth.

The Wesleyan Chapel Committee has sanctioned the erection of thirty new places of worship in various parts of the country at an estimated expenditure of £72,500. Included with these is the Seamen's Home at Poplar, the outlay on which is £13,600.

The Bishop of Norwich, in his visitation charge, deplored the growing secularisation of the Sabbath. Amongst the affluent classes Sunday schools and Bible classes are being emptied, because hundreds of young people left the towns and villages on bicycles. He warned the clergy to point out the evils of this practice in sermons.

In connection with the Wesleyan Church at Deal, the need of a suitable room for the Sunday school, for week-evening services and other gatherings, for the Wesleyan Royal Marines, and for Christian work generally, has long been felt, and to meet this need Wesley Hall has been built on an excellent site adjoining the church, at a cost of £1,250.

Among the societies which benefit by the will of the late Mrs. Elizabeth Taylor, of Exeter, are the following:—Ashley Down Orphanages, £3,000; the C.M.S. the Bible Society, the Church Pastoral Aid Society, the London Jews' Society, each £2,000; the Blind Pension Society, the School for Indigent Blind, and the Devon and Exeter Hospital, each £1,000.

The annual conference of the Yorkshire Evangelical Union was held recently at York. Rev. W. Odom, vicar of Heeley, and president for the year, took the chair. Mr. Odom's opening address was a vindication of the principles, position, and work of Evangelical Churchmen. The Dean-designate of Peterborough, Mr. Eugene Stock, and others took part.

The Bishop of Peterborough held his primary visitation of the diocese at Peterborough Cathedral on June 12. In the course of his charge the Bishop said there is "too much tendency in the present day to cultivate muscular Christianity, to pay too much attention to football and cricket clubs, concerts, bazaars, and picnics, which are threatening to interfere with the sacred part of a clergyman's calling."

Canon Bardsley, vicar of Huddersfield—who for some time has been staying in Switzerland for the benefit of his health—has addressed to the members of his congregation a circular in which he announces his intention to resign the living. This decision he has made in persuance of his previously intimated resolve not to continue to hold the vicarage if he felt unequal to the duties after a lengthened period of rest.

Opening services in connection with the new Congregational church at Oakleigh Park, Middlesex, were held on June 11. Rev. Dr. Forsyth preached a spiritual discourse from the words, "What mean ye by these stones?" At a public meeting held in the evening, Mr. W. H. Brown, Chairman of the London Congregational Union, presided, being supported by Revs. W. Hardy Harwood, D. Burford Hooke, and others.

The Wesley Guild has gained 10,000 new members during the year, and 166 branch guilds have been started. There are now 85,000 members in Great Britain and 1,296 Guilds. These encouraging statistics were reported at a meeting of the Guild Central Council in London this week. Five years ago the work became an integral part of the constitution of Wesleyans.

The second portion of the Church House, Westminster—the new west block—is rapidly approaching completion, and it will be finished and ready for occupation at the end of next July. The principal room in this new block is the Hoare Memorial, which will be the permanent hall for the House of Laymen.

The Bishop of Liverpool was present recently at the laying of the foundation-stone of a new Mission Hall for the parish of St. Ambrose's, Everton, and in the course of a helpful address spoke of the value of mission buildings. If given his choice, he would sooner begin with a Mission Hall than with a church; and thought that with this Hall as a centre the Church workers of the parish will do three times as much good in the future as compared with the past.

General Booth addressed a large meeting at the Congress Hall, Lower Clapton, on Monday evening last, on "The Lesson of My Life, as illustrated by the Social and Spiritual Operations of the Salvation Army." Many interesting statistics and particulars of the Army's present position were given. The organization now has over 7,200 separate societies, with 14,000 officers and 40,000 lay officers; 609 social institutions, with 1,700 officers; a labour bureau, giving employment to 6,800 people; 109 rescue homes, 72 workshops and factories, and 13 farm colonies.

For over fifty years the Primitive Methodists of Hawkesbury Upton have maintained numerous evangelistic agencies in their small chapel, with many tokens of Divine favour. The Sunday School, Total Abstinence Society, and the Band of Hope are so flourishing that the work is seriously hampered by the inadequate accommodation. To meet the emergency it is proposed to renovate the chapel, and erect a building to serve the purpose of lecture hall and schoolroom. As the inhabitants are almost entirely agricultural labourers, the cost of the undertaking (£350) is felt to be beyond their power to raise without the aid of friends. The treasurer is Mr. Charles Coates, Hawkesbury Upton, Chippenham, Wiltshire.

Fallen Asleep.

Ashford Congregational Church has lost one of its oldest members by the death of Miss SLIMMAN, who was in Church membership for half a century, and since 1853 a Sunday' school worker.—Mr. RICHARD STONE, deacon of thirty years standing at Union Chapel, Islington.—The Methodist Free Church has just lost one of its oldest ministers by the death of Rev. AQUILA KEENE. More than sixty years have gone since he was set apart, in 1839, to circuit work in Worcester. Later on he laboured in some of the most important circuits in the North of England.—Rev. EDWARD T. HIGGENS, a missionary of the C.M.S in Ceylon. He had only been home a few months, failing health having compelled his retirement. He was held in great affection and veneration by the Tamil and Singhalese congregations, amongst whom he had laboured for many years, as well as by the English.—Councillor KEAY, of Middlesbrough, who took an important part in the establishment of Trinity Presbyterian Church, Middlesbrough.—Rev. JOHN ATKINSON, one of the senior ministers in the Congregational body. For some years Mr. Atkinson had resided with his son, Rev. J. W. Atkinson, and he took an active interest in the work of Latimer Chapel, in the Mile End Road. Among the charges held by Mr. Atkinson were those of Wardour Street Church, Soho; and Crown Street, Ipswich.—Rev. GRIFFITH JONES, who for twenty-one years was minister of the Laugharne Church, South Wales, and who for the last fourteen years held the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church, Walpu, N.Z., passed away April 30, in his sixty-ninth year.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

Home Training. As a timely contribution to the consideration of the apparent loss of parental control, we would call attention to the republication of the papers on Home Training recently contributed to our columns by Rev. E. Griffith Jones. The booklet—The Ostrich, The Hothouse, and The Nest (1d.; 6s. 3d. per 100; post free 6s. 10d. Morgan and Scott)—will be found of special value in emphasizing aspects of the subject liable to be overlooked. After pointing out methods which are no methods, but really amount to neglect, with certain common mistakes, the author strikes a note of hope and encouragement, showing to parents how they may effectually bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

"Give peace in our time, O Lord." Many, we are sure, will agree with us that the time has come for Christian people to meet in public for united prayer that the wasting war in South Africa may be brought to an end. No doubt much earnest prayer is ascending to God; but for such a great calamity as is now being mourned, there should be a coming together on some such scale as was the case when disaster was befalling our arms. Of course, merely political sentiment should find no place in the matter; all Christians, whatever their personal views, should unite in crying to God that He may be pleased to intervene, and cause both sides to find a way whereby may be terminated the suicidal conflict which is bringing so much misery upon ourselves and upon South Africa.

A National Sunday-School Mission. One of the most important movements ever undertaken by the Sunday-School Union is now in course of preparation. During the first three months of next year, it is proposed to hold a great National Mission for the young people of this country. It is expected that every Sunday-school in the land will take part in it. The grand object of the effort is, in the words of Mr. Carey Bonner—> the bringing of the young to Christ, and we also hope that by its means, a great stimulus may be given to Sunday-school workers and teachers generally, by bringing them face to face with the supreme aim of Sunday-school work—winning young life for God.

It is evident that the recent revelation concerning the religious state of the young people who have passed through Sunday-schools is bearing good fruit. Through our failures God designs to draw us to Himself, and to make us ask ourselves, "Why could not we cast out" the demon? And it will be a grand thing if all teachers are led to examine both themselves and their methods, to see if there be any reason in them why Sunday-school work is not more effective. The coming effort will be, if possible, even more important than the Simultaneous Mission of this past winter; for it deals with life in its most hopeful stage. We commend the movement to the constant prayers of all our readers.

The Church's Week Night Programme. Our contemporary, The Examiner, is publishing a series of articles dealing with the vexed question of the Church's week night programme. The writers must be congratulated upon their brave and sane attempt to solve a difficult problem. We are glad that so uncompromising a note as the following is struck:—

> No spiritually-minded Church could ever attempt to win people to religion by means of entertainments, or cricket clubs, social evenings, or science lectures. It would be a fatal error to attempt to substitute the concert for the Cross. No good would come of compromising the message of the Gospel, to meet the desires of a pleasure-loving age. Such a policy would be to debase the coinage of the Kingdom of God.

Starting from this foundation, the plea is urgently set forth that the whole man should be cared for by the Church, and that young Christians should be so bound to the Church that they will not be tempted to seek their recreations in foreign places. In a word, what is needed is to Christianize the whole of life. The ideal set forth by these writers is very high, but if it could be carried out in practice it would do much to arrest the deplorable drift which is so saddening a feature of modern church life. To all that these special articles advocate we would add a crowning note, i.e., that the ultimate work of a church is to produce missionaries of one kind or another, and any scheme for developing the complete life of young Christians is imperfect unless it has at the end of it this object.

Congregational Music. At the recent annual Nonconformist Choir Festival at the Crystal Palace, the adjudicators stated that the standard of musical rendering in our churches is steadily improving in quality. This is as it should be; but a note of warning should be sounded against the tendency on the part of choirs in some of our places of worship to develop a standard too high for the congregations to follow with any comfort. The habit in such churches is for the choir to usurp the place of the members of the congregation, who gradually tend to fall silent and listen when they ought to be joining in the worship. It should never be forgotten that choirs exist for the sake of the congregation, and not vice versâ. They are for the inspiration of the worshippers, whose praise should never be done by proxy. However good a high quality of choral music may be, it is a bad thing to cultivate a style that prevents the ordinary worshipper from taking part in the service of praise.

The Heresy or "Christian" Science. It is commonly supposed that the "Christian" Scientists content themselves with denying the reality of pain. But they do more than this. Their most serious offence against the faith whose name they stole in order to float their heresy into public favour, is to deny the reality of sin. The Divine sacrifice, which has brought home to such countless millions the sense of peace and reconciliation, is to them an illusion. The rapid extension of this deplorable "creed" in this country, since its importation from America, makes it needful that Christian people should know what it really means. Let us be sure of this—if "Christian" science prevails, the Christianity of Christ and his apostles has had its day—for the time. It is the most subtle attack on New Testament theology seen in this generation.

The "Dowie" Revelation. Some months ago we expressed our conviction as to the real nature of the Dowie movement. The latest event more than justifies what we then said. According to despatches received from America "Dr." Dowie has completed his evolution, and has now definitely announced himself as a re-incarnation of Elijah and John the Baptist. We can guess what the next thing will be. Similar pretensions have been made more than once in the world's history, and they have always followed a definite route. The Chicago correspondent of a London daily wires that Dr. Dowie now appears in public habited as a traditional angel—wings and all. It is all very grotesque and even blasphemous, and it is amazing that anyone can be prevailed upon to believe in it. We mention the matter here, because within the last fortnight we have heard of several earnest workers who have renounced everything to follow this ignis fatuus. The spirits are always to be tried—and the smallest amount of common sense is sufficient to try some of them!

Jewish Blindness. A very significant article upon our Lord from a Jewish point of view appears in the pages of a contemporary. It is notable for two things: first, an entire absence of the hostility and hatred which have so often characterized Jewish writings concerning our Saviour; and secondly, a note of surprising admiration for his person. Indeed, in parts it is almost a panegyric upon Him:—

> His name as helper of the poor, as sympathising friend of the fallen, as brother of every fellow sufferer, as lover of man and redeemer of woman, has become the inspiration, the symbol, and the watchword for the world's greatest achievements in the field of benevolence. The very sign of the cross has lent a new meaning, a holier pathos, to suffering, sickness, and sin, so as to offer new practical solutions for the great problems of evil, which fill the human heart with new joys of self-sacrificing love.

Yet, side by side with this tribute, we have remarks about "myths" and "contradictions." It is sadly curious to notice the way in which the great question is avoided. The work of Christ in the Church is thus accounted for:—

> The Christian Church, with the larger means at her disposal, (has) created these institutions of charity and redeeming love, that accomplished wondrous things.

The writer does not attempt to explain how it was that the Church, when it had no "larger means," accomplished what it did. Blindness is still over Israel, but some light has come to enable a Rabbi to speak of our Lord as this Rabbi does.

"Lord, who is my neighbour?" The proposal to select October 27 as a Sunday upon which preachers in the places of worship in London will draw the attention of their hearers to the circumstances and surroundings of the working-class population in the metropolis might, with advantage, be taken up in other large centres of life and labour. The pulpit should be potential in social as in spiritual life; and in lifting up his voice against the evils of overcrowding, of starvation wages, and of temptations to drink and vice, the preacher is preparing the way of the Lord. Unfortunately these things are not peculiar to London. In every large town they are rampant, and the duty of awakening and fostering a healthy public opinion in regard to them is a pressing and solemn one. Jesus said, indeed, "the poor ye have always with you," but He did not say the starving, and those whose surroundings of disease and vice and drink destroy the soul.

The Duty of Rest. In the hurry and rush of modern life it is doubly essential that there should be pauses and breaks in the strain of endeavour and toil; intervals for deep and still inhalations of the strength which cometh from above. In the fierce struggle for existence, the feverish competition of business, the physical needs of the body, as well as the spiritual needs of the soul, are apt to be overlooked. Men forget or ignore the fact that Christ Himself commanded his disciples to come out of the crowd, to leave the routine and excitement of the town life, and to "rest awhile" in the quiet "desert place." They were to have time to think. The thirsting soul was to be refreshed as well as the weary body, so Jesus went before them and led the way to the oasis. He said, not "Go ye," but "Come ye," and the labourers, heavy laden, went after Him, as the tired sheep follow the guiding shepherd, and they found the promised peace.

Criticism or Christ. Those who are tampering with the teachings of the leaders of the so-called "higher criticism," will do well to recognise that there is an inevitable position before them. To discredit the Bible is to discredit Christ, for Jesus himself constantly quoted the books of the Old Testament—Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, Samuel, the Books of the Kings, Chronicles, the Psalms, Proverbs, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Daniel, Hosea, Jonah, Malachi, and others, were all used by Him in his teachings. Luke tells us, too, that He interpreted to them all the Scriptures; and the manifestation of Moses and Elijah upon the Mount of Transfiguration added another testimony to the law and the prophets. To doubt the veracity of the inspired Word of God is, therefore, to doubt the veracity of Christ. There is no escape from that difficulty.

Meetings in Public-Houses. It is eminently satisfactory to find the Friendly Societies beginning to recognise the evils consequent upon their meetings being held in public-houses. Naturally the publican who provides rent-free rooms expects to receive an equivalent from the consumption of drink, and the results are obvious. The Foresters have already ordered that their Women's and Juvenile Branches shall not meet in any licensed premises, and, as it follows that the surroundings which are considered unhealthy for the women and young people must be deleterious to the men, it is to be hoped that the prohibition will soon be further extended. The publican's trade is too potent a factor in the death-rate, for the benevolent societies that give relief to the widow and the orphan to be even indirectly connected with it.

The Hauteur of High Anglicanism. The hauteur of the High Anglican could not be displayed in a more offensive manner than in the reprimand given last week in the Church Times to Dr. Wace for allowing a sermon to be delivered in his church, and a collection taken, for the "Protestant Reformation Society." Its reasons for so doing are, that some of the members of the Society are not members of the Church of England, that collections in aid of the same object are made in some dissenting chapels, and that the agent of the Society has actually lectured in a Baptist place of worship. This makes Nonconformity a great crime, and Protestantism only little less heinous. Romanism, on the other hand, is scarcely even a venial offence, and the fact that the above Society circulates a list of publications, such as "The Crisis in the Church," Mr. Walsh's "Secret History of the Oxford Movement," "The Romeward Movement in the Church of England," and "The Ritualists," makes it, according to the Church Times, a serious offence to uphold the Society. It adds that under no pretence of decency could Dr. Wace lend his church for such a purpose!

The Responsibilities of Wealth. There are cheering signs that, with the threatened concentration of the world's wealth in the hands of the few, a fresh sense of its opportunities and responsibilities seems to be spreading among our millionaires. We have just had a signal proof of the good use to which riches can be put, in Mr. Carnegie's gift of £2,000,000 to the Scotch Universities. Later still, Mr. Foster Higgins, another American millionare, has preached a suggestive theory of the true relations of employers and employed. This is not Socialism, which will destroy all inequalities in the possession of wealth, but a closer co-operation, and deeper sense of corporate unity between masters and employés. He writes:—

> My own personal plan would be to say to my workers, "I require your services for a fixed period of at least five years. If you leave me before the end of five years you will receive only your ordinary market wage, and are entitled to no more. If you remain, I will meet you at the end of five years and show you what the combined efforts of my capital and your labour have produced, and we will divide it fairly."

This would help at least to do away with the wide gap now existing between employers and employed, which is one of the most perilous aspects of modern industry.

A New Danger. There is an evil, which is a reasoned, deliberate thing, stalking in the press as the latest theory of the true relations between men and women. The great bugbear of those who teach it, is the marriage-bond. "Free love is now explicitly advocated by teachers who claim to be more Christian than the Church." As the public mind grows accustomed to being shocked, these teachers, cautious at first, put forward their propaganda with ever-increasing boldness. The latest movement is the formation of an organization at Cincinnati for carrying on the campaign against marriage in the Pan-American Exposition, and having sown the seed there to proceed throughout the great cities of the United States. Clearly it is an announcement of Satan's law in "Paradise Lost," "Evil, be thou my good!" History clearly proves that the New Testament law is, in the long run, the only one that exalts either nations or individuals. Civilization, uncontrolled by higher sanctions, and unguided by Christian ideals, is doomed in the end to perish. And though the new apostles of libertinism may claim that sin is followed by no punishment, it is no less clear that the man, and, still more, the woman, of impure life loses something more precious than life itself. All the first elements of character perish; the moral sense is coarsened, hardened, stultified; the spirit is enslaved under the tyranny of the flesh; and St. Paul's law of the higher nature is reversed.

Profanity and the Law. A curious incident at Sunderland illustrates the difficulty, and at the same time the importance, of safeguarding public morals by law. At a Local Government Board inquiry, the Rural Council applied for power to suppress bad language in the public streets. In the borough, foul language is a punishable offence, but in the rural district it is not; and according to the evidence of several police officers, it is the regular custom for people to start profane swearing and disgusting language directly they cross the boundaries. One officer stated that it was quite common for persons to cross over from the side of the street which is in the borough, to the other which is outside it, in order to give vent to foul language. Which shows that, while it is impossible to make men pure by Act of Parliament, it is at least possible, as it is certainly necessary, to make them desist from contaminating public morals by indulgence in a demoralizing vice.

The Future of China. Now that the Powers are actually evacuating China, the question of the future of that troubled country is an anxiety not only to the missionary but to all the world. It is impossible, now that the impact of Western civilization has actually come upon that slow-moving people the Chinese, for them to fall back contentedly into their old ways. The recent past cannot be expunged from the history of the country, nor the new forces ignored or crushed. Sun-Yet-Sen, the Chinese reformer, claims indeed that China is ripe for the very latest developments in social and political life; and he is returning from California to his native land with the intention of starting a revolution which will bring the present dynasty to an end, and initiate a Chinese Republic on the American model. However this may turn out, it is pretty clear that troublous times are ahead of China, and that the prayers of God's people should go up night and day for the conversion of the Chinese, so that with the poison of Western civilization they may also have its antidote.

"Society" Gambling. Mr. Clement Scott, in the Free Lance, draws a vivid picture of the extraordinary gambling vice which is eating into society like a virulent cancer. He declares that one particular gambling game is almost the sole justification for the existence of most of the "smart" women's clubs in London; while "a good two-thirds of the dinner parties and supper parties in certain sets are given that this game may be played afterwards, and the guests go home with their morning's milk." The writer goes on to make this surprising declaration concerning the game in question:—

> As it has taught many a woman the perilous delights of gambling, it has also shown many a woman the way to the pawnshop who never thought to see the inside of those doors. I could lay my hand at Church Parade, at Ranelagh, or Hurlingham, or the Opera, on a dozen women of unassailed rank and high title whose best jewels are reposing in the safe of some Jewish pawnbroker or moneylender. They have good paste substitutes, and few people are the wiser.

In the train of this comes unpaid tradesmen's bills, that is a wrong done to others; and physical, mental and moral wreckage, that is a wrong done to oneself and to God. No legislation can touch this sort of thing. It is a vice that can defy all laws. Only one thing can cleanse a society cursed in this way—Fire—the fire of grace or the fire of judgment.

The Resurrection.

By Dr. ROBERT ANDERSON, C.B.

IN the religion of Christendom the incarnation and death of Christ are everything. The Virgin's Child, the heaven-sent Teacher, and the Jesus of Calvary completely fill the spiritual vision of the faithful. But in the cluster of great truths which constitute the Divine revelation of Christianity, the Resurrection holds the central place. Apart from it the incarnation and the ministry would lose all their significance, the crucifixion would be but a martyrdom, and the cross a symbol of the victory of death over life. By the Resurrection it was that the Crucified One was "declared to be the Son of God with power," the great truth on which the Christian's faith is founded, and to which his hope is anchored.

That Christ died for our sins is the Gospel of the Christian religion regarded as a human cult. The Gospel of Christianity goes on to declare that "He rose again the third day according to the Scriptures" (1 Cor. xv. 4). And to show the immeasurable importance of the added words, the Holy Spirit testifies that if Christ be not raised our faith is vain, we are yet in our sins. If this were a mere human utterance it might well be deemed profane, as tending to make little of his death. But the teaching of Scripture is clear. He was "delivered for our offences, and raised again for our justification" (Rom. iv. 25). And this Gospel brings peace and joy to the sinner who believes—peace and joy as his portion here and now—"peace with God," and joy "in hope of the glory of God." In contrast with this, the gospel of the crucifix teaches its votaries to live in uncertainty, depending on the ministry of priests, and to die in fear of purgatorial flames. This is WHAT ROMAN THEOLOGY HAS COME TO!

"The Christian religion" has yet another aspect. Alexandria was long the rival of Rome, and the Greek school of theology might have gained the ascendancy had not baptismally regenerated Pagan Emperors enforced the teaching of the West by penal laws.

But neither school had the truth of the New Creation. According to both the mission of Christ was intended to restore mankind—or, as Augustine taught, a small, favoured section of the race—to the position lost by Adam's sin. While the Cross was the characteristic truth of the Western Church, the Incarnation loomed great in the teaching of Alexandria. The faults of the rival systems were due, not to positive error, but to defective truth, and to failure to maintain the balance of truth as Scripture unfolds it. Alexandria was more Christian in spirit than Rome; and while "the historic Church" and "the gospel of the crucifix" are the baneful legacy of the West, from the East we have derived "the gospel of humanity," and "the fatherhood of God"! But in contrast with all this, Christianity not only reveals to us that heaven is open to the sinner in virtue of the death of Christ, but it also teaches us that that death is the Divine judgment upon Adam and his world. Bethlehem and Calvary are not, as some would tell us, a splendid testimony to human worth, but a transcendent manifestation of Divine love to a race hopelessly ruined, depraved, and lost. "The gospel of humanity," like "the gospel of the crucifix," is but a half truth; and half truths are sometimes as dangerous as error. "The Gospel of the Grace of God," which is the Gospel of the Resurrection, stands out in contrast with both.

"The fact of the resurrection and ascension of our Lord is an evidence of the completion and acceptance of his work, and as a pledge of the resurrection of his people, is mentioned in the Epistles alone more than fifty times." But even this will fail to produce an adequate appreciation of the place these doctrines hold in the teaching of the New Testament, if the typology of the Old is ignored. Every human religion, and the religion of Christendom is no exception to the rule, is designed to propitiate the Deity, or in some way to gain his favour. But Judaism—the only divine religion the world has ever known, for Christianity is not in that sense a "religion," but a revelation and a faith—was the divinely-ordered service of a redeemed and happy people rejoicing in the blessings of redemption. Human religion is always full of gloom, but the sacred year of the Jews was a calendar of feasts. The divine religion had, indeed, its day of expiation, in which the devout were enjoined to afflict their souls. But even that was made the basis of a festival in which all were bidden to "rejoice before the Lord."

But what has all this to do with the truth of the Resurrection? It is in language borrowed from these types that the doctrines of the New Testament are given us. Every Jewish festival was connected with the harvest. And of which the Resurrection is both the expression and the earnest. Just as the Feast of Tabernacles followed, and was based upon, the great national sin-offering, so was it also with the feast of Passover and the Paschal Supper—itself a memorial of the redemption in Egypt.

THE HARVEST TYPIFIED THE NEW CREATION,

The sacred year began with Passover, which fell at the ripening of their earliest grain crop. The festival lasted for a week, and one of its special features was the offering of the firstfruits. A single sheaf of the ripened grain was to be cut and carried to the temple, and there to be waved before the Lord. It was the firstfruits of the harvest.* When all the grain harvest had been garnered, the feast of Pentecost was celebrated, and the Feast of Tabernacles was the great "harvest home," which crowned the year, when the trees of the field had yielded all the fruits which formed so large a portion of the national wealth.

To follow the line of typical teaching which runs throughout all this, would lead me far beyond the limits of space allotted to me. Here I can deal only with the sheaf of the firstfruits. Its acceptance by Jehovah was a pledge and proof, not only that redemption was accomplished, but that all the harvest was assured and divinely blest. And that sheaf represented Christ in resurrection as the Firstbegotten of the dead, the Head of the New Creation. For He must have pre-eminence in all things. "Christ the firstfruits; afterward they that are Christ's, at his coming"—this is the Divine order. Scripture clearly teaches that the words, "Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten Thee," refer, not to the nativity, but to the Resurrection. The empty tomb, and not the manger of Bethlehem, is the earthly symbol of the great birth upon which Christianity is founded. Were it not for Bethlehem there could be no Calvary; but, apart from the Resurrection, Calvary were but a stupendous disaster, of which the Cross would be for all time the emblem.

"If Christ be not raised," Scripture expressly declares, "your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins." And in view of the fact of the Resurrection we boldly argue that our faith is not vain, we are not in our sins. To attain assurance of this, is the goal towards which the great majority of those who profess and call themselves Christians are struggling. Immunity from punishment, deliverance from the penalties of sin—in a word, not going to hell—is

THE POPULAR CONCEPTION OF SALVATION.

But the Christian has far higher thoughts of the work of Christ. Not even the doctrine of substitution will satisfy him, for this is but one aspect of the far greater truth. It is his joy to know that he is one with Him who died and rose again. And his acceptance is not in Adam restored in virtue of that death, but in Christ as Head of the New Creation. Old things are passed away; all things are become new. And, therefore, "if any man be in Christ he is a new creature."

And the wave-sheaf was but the firstfruits of the harvest. Our oneness with Him begins with his death, but it does not end with his resurrection. The believer shall be like Him who died and rose again. "We know that we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is."

But here let us pause, lest the recoil from the gospel of the crucifix should throw us off the line of truth. "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." But let us not forget,

THE RESURRECTION LIES BETWEEN THE TWO.

"Sudden death, sudden glory," is an epigram which represents a system of doctrine that is always popular. But is it Scriptural? The reserve which Holy Writ maintains respecting the intermediate state forbids all dogmatism on a subject so full of mystery. But our Lord's words to the dying thief seem to me clearly to warrant the belief that that mysterious sleep is consistent with conscious enjoyment of his presence. And if the inspired apostle did not cherish that belief, his language to the Corinthians and the Philippians seems scarcely intelligible. But further than this we may not go. When we speak of glory, or of the activities of service, before the day of full redemption—the day of the coming of the Lord—we allow our thoughts to be swayed by sentiment in a sphere where Scripture should control them absolutely.

The Christian can triumph over death. But it is a triumph of faith achieved in presence of stern facts to the reality of which both our reason and our senses bear signal testimony. In itself death is utterly horrible and hateful; and those who cannot see beyond it may well shrink back in terror, and seek to conceal its loathsomeness beneath bright trappings and wreaths of flowers. But the Christian, in the power of faith in his risen and glorified Lord, can dare to face the facts, and, with full realization of their repulsiveness and horror, calmly to utter the redemption challenge, "O Death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

* The law enjoined that the first sheaf of the harvest should be cut and carried to the Temple "on the morrow after the Sabbath" in Passover week (see Lev. xxiii. 10, 11; and also Deut. xxi. 10, which proves that the day was intended to be a working day). But in Ezra's revival apparently the Jews, misreading the law, took "the Sabbath" to mean the feast-day. And thus it came about that on that Sabbath Day, during which the Lord was lying in the grave, they were celebrating a rite which typified his resurrection from the dead. The true day of the firstfruits was always the first day of the week, the day of the new creation. I have dealt with this in "The Buddha of Christendom" (p. 182), and more fully in "The Coming Prince" (ch. ix.). The matter has entirely escaped the notice of theologians.

Midnight Meeting Movement.—Sir George Williams gave his annual strawberry feast to the young women of the Strand and locality last Thursday night. The workers on the occasion represented nearly every evangelical denomination, and worked with a good will. Though the numbers present were smaller than in former years, every girl was sober, and listened with great attention to the earnest words addressed to them by Mr. Drysdale and Miss Tavender.

Y.M.C.A. Conference.

THE first British Conference of the Young Men's Christian Association in the New Century is taking place this week in Oxford, and the University City has given a most hearty reception to the young men, of all ages, who have gathered from all parts of the United Kingdom.

Oxford is fortunate in its Y.M.C.A. premises, a fine modern building, specially planned for Association work, and well equipped in every way, having been erected ten years ago, and the advantage of this step is evidenced by the existence of a vigorous Association, which is a decided power in the city.

This year, as last, the Conference proper was preceded by a gathering of honorary secretaries. At Newcastle, last June, this Conference was arranged as an experiment, and it more than fulfilled all the expectations of its promoters. This year the membership was in advance of last Conference, and the interest was well sustained throughout the proceedings.

The first session opened on Monday evening in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, a cordial greeting being given to the delegates by Mr. Councillor Salter, Mr. E. Beaumont, President of the Oxford Association, and Mr. Robinson Souttar. The subject of "Present-day Aspects of Y.M.C.A. Work," was introduced by Mr. E. W. Young, of East Grinstead. One point which was strongly emphasized was the increasing competition that Associations have to meet from similar organizations in connection with the Churches. In the discussion which followed, it was pointed out that the Y.M.C.A.'s chief sphere of operations should be among the vast numbers of young men altogether outside of Church life and influence.

Another point in Mr. Young's paper was that the membership rule should be relaxed. Almost every successive speaker deprecated this, and it was good to note that there was a strong determination to uphold the "converted membership" basis of the Association. Considerable discussion centred round the question of social and recreative agencies. Mr. Young's contention was that this aspect of the work must have more attention, and that an Association which runs only a Bible class and a prayer meeting is not worth maintaining. Those who shared this view were in a hopeless minority; and while the "fourfold" programme was endorsed as desirable and even obligatory wherever possible, it was felt that in small centres the Association would do well to concentrate all its energies on the spiritual work.

A pleasing incident of this first session was the hearty reception given to a Dutch delegate from an Association in London. The Conference resumed on Tuesday morning, and after devotional exercises Mr. R. Y. Howie spoke of "Essentials in Association Work." The title of our Society, he said, indicates four essentials: The work must be fresh and vigorous, remembering it is for the Young. It must be Manly, embracing all agencies that will stimulate a pure manhood. It must be social—the word Association implies companionship, and real brotherliness is a most important essential. Above all, the work must be Christian in its spirit, methods, aims—everything. A good discussion followed.

The Conference then considered "The Best Means of Securing an Active Membership." Mr. Beavan, of Abergavenny, opened the subject, and said there could be no active membership without an active executive. Therefore, be careful to get live men on the Committee; their influence would be felt throughout the Association. Mr. Arnold, of Norwich, created some amusement by suggesting that a small financial deficit would stimulate the activity of the members; but it was felt that the deficit had better not be too large. A great number of delegates contributed to the debate.

In the afternoon a series of practical topics were dealt with, including "Office Work of an Hon. Sec.," "Junior Sections," "Sunday Evening Social Hour," "Old Boys' Clubs," "Secretarial Correspondence," "Missionary Auxiliaries," &c. A meeting for the transaction of business brought a most successful Conference to a conclusion.

Later in the afternoon the delegates, with those who had arrived for the general Conference, attended a garden party given by Sir Wm. and Lady Markby in the grounds of Balliol College; and in the evening the official reception of the Conference by the Mayor of Oxford took place in the Town Hall.

All Hail the Power of Jesu's Name!

"King of kings, and Lord of lords."—Rev. xix. 16.

E. Perronet. (Diadem. C.M.) Arr. by T. G. Richards.
1. All hail the power of Je - su's name! Let an - gels pros-trate fall, Let an - gels pros - trate fall; Bring forth the roy - al
And crown..... Him,
And crown Him, crown Him, crown Him, crown Him, and di - a - dem And crown..... Him,
And crown Him, crown Him, crown Him, crown..... crown Him, crown Him, crown Him, crown Him Lord of all, crown Him, crown Him, crown..... Him, And crown Him Lord of all.
..... Him, And crown Him Lord of all.

Copyright. Copies may be obtained from I. Jones, Stationers' Hall, Treherbert.

This congregational setting of "All hail the power of Jesu's name," has for some time been very popular in the Principality. During Mr. Lane's recent mission at Mountain Ash, it was sung with thrilling effect.

The June issue of "All the World" contains a fully illustrated review of the work of the Salvation Army in other lands for 1900-1901. The principal article is by Commissioner Howard on "Our Work in India." The summary shows that forty-six countries and colonies are occupied, and that thirty-one languages are used at the services held.

Oxford Letter.

OXFORD'S summer term has ended, and already most of the men have gone down, except those who are still in the Schools. Most of the honours' lists have yet to come out, so that for a few weeks we shall have men coming and going. The Bishop of London was the preacher at the University Church on the last Sunday of term, and preached to a crowded congregation. His subject was "Faith in Christ." Dr. Winnington-Ingram urged that the great barrier to faith was the many interests that were in life, and often interests which, in themselves, are harmless, but which become counter-attractions unless carefully watched. He pleaded for the dedication of the young life to the service of God, and contended that every single day spent out of communion with the Lord Jesus Christ is creating a flaw in the character which may never be repaired.

Mansfield College held its annual meeting on Wednesday week, and the proceedings commenced with a devotional service in the Chapel, conducted by Rev. W. B. Selbie. Dr. A. Mackennal presided at the meeting afterwards, and Dr. Forsyth, of Cambridge, was present among others. Dr. Fairbairn pleaded that of all the interests in education none were more honourable than those connected with theological learning. He said that if ever there was a day when the churches need to be enlightened it is now. The principles of Christ should be applied both to society and the State, to personal and to national conduct.

Dr. Paget preached his farewell sermon as Dean of Christ Church on Sunday. Taking as his text Genesis xxviii. 16, 17, he dwelt on the sense of God's presence which is needed in loneliness, in weakness, and in the sense of uncertainty with regard to the future. Jacob was brought to recognise in his dream how close God was to him, and how much He cared for him. He found himself encompassed, watched, tended by the Almighty. The Bishop-elect developed this thought, and showed how it is brought home to men to-day—a call to work. The experience of life in its many forms will often wake men up to a sense that God is present, watching and working, while we know it not. The sermon was intensely spiritual throughout.

The Bishop of Calcutta spoke in Magdalen Hall on Sunday evening in aid of the Oxford and Cambridge Hostel at Allahabad. His speech was a powerful plea for the Gospel in India. He would not admit that the British Government in India had been an unqualified success. He thanked God for the law, order, and justice which had been ensured, but he contended that the educational system left no choice to the natives but Christianity or atheism. Secular as it was, it yet destroyed native beliefs, and with them often such morality as these beliefs inculcated. It was, therefore, a matter of urgent vital importance that the natives should be brought into the spirit and atmosphere of Christianity. It was in Christianity that the East and West, widely parted as they were, were most likely to find their meeting-ground.

Dartford Memorial Hall.—The eleventh anniversary of the opening of the Kent Martyrs Memorial Hall and Institute, Dartford, was held a few days ago. General Sir William Stirling presided, and, among others, was supported by Rev. J. B. Barraclough, who, in the course of his remarks, said their heartfelt thanks ought to go forth to God for the success which had attended the work carried on there. During the eleven years, no fewer than 1,224 young men had passed through the Young Men's Bible Class, and there were now as many as 235 connected with it. There are at present 250 scholars in the Sunday-school; there is also the Lads' Bible Class, Juveniles' Protestant Mission, as well as other agencies at work.

The Epistle of James.

By Rev. T. A. GURNEY, M.A., LL.B., Swanage.

VI.—The Law by which we are about to be judged (i. 21-7).

THE Shintoists of Japan have as the central object of their faith a metal mirror in the great Temple of their Sun-goddess, which they say was set apart by her with the words: "Look upon this mirror as my spirit; keep it in the same house and on the same floor with yourself, and worship it as if you were worshipping my actual presence." James holds up the mirror of the Word to our hearts, not for our worship indeed, but for our reverent and earnest regard as the utterance of the Spirit of God. From sinful indulgence and strifeful zeal he calls us, laying aside all filthiness and "ebullition of malice," to receive it as the "implanted Word," with meekness which yields to its might. The message of God is not something to talk about and fight about, but to embrace within and manifest in our actions. But how can we "receive" it, for it to become thus rooted in the heart?

I. There must be earnest investigation, for it is to result in a perpetual "becoming" (v. 22, lit.), not leaving us where we were before. It will, implanted, be a living principle, fructifying like seed in the soil. It will make your life a "poem" and yourself a poet (poiētēs), a "maker" of fact in the true sense, a "doer of work." Six times this word occurs in the New Testament; four of these are in this Epistle (i. 22, 23, 25; iv. 11). Abiding result, eternal fact, true character, construction on Divine lines, the making of man—these, not antiquarian research, historic information, or interesting biography, are its aims.

THE MERE IDLE HEARER is like the attendant at a lecture who forgets to take notes (Mayor). Though he perceives his own self for a moment, he deceives his own self for a lifetime. He blinds his mind by sophistical false reasoning (Huther), that mere hearing is sufficient. The portrait of the "hearer of forgetfulness" is vividly drawn by James. It emphasizes the folly of a mere cursory glance, and the necessity for earnest investigation. "If any man be a hearer of the Word, and not a doer, he is like unto a man beholding the face of his nature in a mirror"—the metal mirror of the ancients, sometimes of silver, more frequently of copper or tin, giving an image partly "obscured" (1 Cor. xiii. 12).

HE COMMITS THREE TERRIBLE MISTAKES.

"He beheld himself for a moment." The tense is Aorist. The act was complete in itself and it did not last long. That glance gave him the diagnosis of his real condition. The mirror spoke unwelcome truth. And he turned hastily away. "O coward conscience, how dost thou afflict me!" Indifference, as with Agrippa, or fear, as with Felix, made him "draw back unto perdition." A second mistake follows: "He is gone away." The tense is now perfect. It defines present abiding condition resulting from action which is past. He not only goes away from the mirror, but he stays away. He steadily averts his gaze. He drowns the transitory impression. He will not even entertain the ideal to which he does not mean to rise. So a third result follows, "He straightway forgot" (Aorist), completely, finally, almost in a moment, though the mirror cried "Remember!" So character remained unreformed, Christ unrecognised, conscience inactive.

II. There must also be reverent submission to the Word, if it is to do us any good. "He that looketh into the perfect law, the law of liberty." The very word here translated "looketh" is the same as that used in John xx. 5, 11, of John, and, later, of Mary, stooping down and peering into the sepulchre where Jesus had lain. It recurs again with the same idea in 1 Peter i. 12, "which things the angels desire to stoop down and gaze into." It is, in contrast to the glance of the forgetful hearer, the glance of earnest inquiry, of reverent submission, of humble-minded faith. It demands effort. As a lecturer once said to his class of students at the beginning of each session, "Gentlemen, you must pay the price." You must sink your shaft if you would bring up God's ore. It calls for prostration of spirit. "Stooping down" means "bringing every thought into captivity to the obedience of Christ." "I will hear what the Lord will say concerning me." It is the glance which, in contrast to that of the preoccupied heart, transfixes the soul with

THE TRUE VISION OF ITSELF.

The verger of the beautiful church of St. Ouen, in Rouen, is wont, after showing you all the rest of the church in detail, to lead you, just as you are leaving, to an old font under the shadow of the great west doorway in an unconspicuous corner. Then, removing the canopy, he invites you to look down into the clear, still water. "You will see the whole church reflected there." The finest view in the old Normandy capital lies hidden in that font. The whole majestic church, in its rich decorative beauty, stands self-revealed. But you must stoop thus to see it. So with the written Word in its revelation of the Living and Eternal Word.

III. There must be intense concentration. Direction, intensity, purposiveness are implied in the Greek preposition (eis) which follows. It is just what we behold in John at the sepulchre. Each detail about the linen cloths was marked, and each detail marked was subservient to the discovery of the risen Lord, and the confirmation of faith in the glorious fact: "The Lord is risen indeed." (Cf. Acts xvii. 11, 12.)

IV. There must also be believing continuance, for the words are significantly added "and continueth therein." The Word is to be realized as "Law," as "the perfect law, the law of liberty." "I will remember thy precepts, for with them Thou hast quickened me."

ONLY TWO CLASSES ARE RECOGNISED.

The very difference in their contrast is itself full of meaning: "The hearer of forgetfulness," "the doer of work." (Cf. Matt. vii. 24-27.)

V. And there must be intelligent comprehension of its spirit and meaning (Micah vi. 8). "The doer of work" finds a second contrast. Now it is with the man "who thinks himself very religious," the "ritualist" as the word means, of that day. But noisy party spirit, externalism in religion, unhealthy introspective self-consciousness, are no marks, James reminds us, of the true student of the Word. Because it brings no true self-control or self-knowledge, such "religious observance is vain." The true ritualism (if we may claim the word as James does for a moment in a good sense) is the externalism of loving, humble service for others, the inwardness of a spiritual purity "unspotted by the world." "For," says Lactantius (Mayor), "the whole religion of Christians is to live without sin and without stain."

S.S.U. Excursion to Switzerland.—The Sunday School Union has issued its handbook to this year's Continental excursion, July 29—August 10. This year the party will have a twelve days' tour in Switzerland, visiting Lucerne, and proceeding over the magnificent Brunig Pass to Interlaken and Berne. Particulars may be had from the offices of the Sunday School Union, 56, Old Bailey, E.C.

The Lord's Return.

YEAR by year Christians of many shades of thought, but united in the belief and hope of the speedy return to earth of their ascended Lord, and the gathering together to Him of believers, assemble at the Clapham Conference Hall for a three-days' convention, for the quickening of faith and the deepening of their spiritual consciousness. Last week witnessed this annual event, and the gatherings were rich in Divine blessing and the constant manifestation of the Spirit's presence and power. The speakers of Tuesday morning were Revs. T. George and N. S. Taylor, whose addresses on and "The Signs of its Approach" were followed with earnest attention. "Christ dwelling in the heart by faith" was the subject of a telling discourse by Rev. J. J. Luce. In the evening the hall was well filled, and the gathering was manifestly a means of grace to many. Pastor W. Fuller Gooch spoke with much tenderness on "Christ's Tears over Jerusalem." Rev. N. S. Taylor followed with a thoughtful address on John the Baptist's exclamation, "Behold the Lamb of God!"

"THE ADVENT ITSELF"

It was an equally impressive gathering with which the proceedings of Wednesday began. Rev. F. Paynter, who presided, gave a luminous and helpful exposition of 1 John ii. 28, urging the need for steadfast confidence in the fulfilment of the promises of God's Word relative to the second coming of Christ. Appropriate and encouraging words were spoken by Lieut.-Colonel F. Roberts, on the privilege of the Christian attaining to the image of Jesus Christ; and Rev. J. J. Luce offered some pregnant and impressive remarks on the question of the psalmist, "Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord?" The need for purification of the heart was fervently enforced, and as the speaker pressed home the necessity for self-examination and heart searching, many were deeply moved, and rose to their feet, signifying their desire for complete abandonment to Christ.

In the afternoon Rev. F. Paynter again directed the proceedings, and briefly commented upon Isa. ii. 10. Rev. F. L. Denman dealt with the subject set down for consideration—

"THE DAY OF THE LORD."

In the course of a lucid address, he argued from Scripture that the words do not concern the children of God, but rather refer to that time which will commence when the Church of God is caught up to meet the Lord in the air. It is not a day of light, but darkness—a day of misery, gloom, and desolation. The day of the Lord differs from the day of Jesus Christ. It is the latter to which the Christian looks forward. Mr. Denman went on to make an affectionate appeal to his hearers not to be content with merely being ready for the returning Lord, but to seek with all earnestness to bring others into the kingdom of grace.

Lieut.-Col. Roberts was in the chair at the evening gathering, and touched upon the numerous signs indicating that the chronological prophecies concerning both Jew and Gentile are running out. Speaking on "The Calling of Israel," Rev. Marcus F. Bergmann, referred to the movement in all parts of the earth among Jews, and their anxiety to return to Jerusalem, while still an unbelieving race. The last address of the day was by Rev. E. Brewer, whose searching words will linger in the mind and cheer the heart of many a hearer. The burden of his message was "Be ye saved" (Isa. xlv. 22), and "Be ye holy" (1 Pet. i. 15). The first call is one to be addressed to men everywhere; and the second is an appeal to all who would overcome sin, and look away to Jesus for deliverance in order to attain to a life of practical holiness.

The meetings on Thursday were marked by the same spirit of waiting upon God. The Communion service in the afternoon was a memorable gathering, and was rendered more impressive by the address of Pastor Fuller Gooch, on "The Feast of Love, an earnest of the new wine in the Father's Kingdom."

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, June 30. Luke vii.

THE Gospels are leaves out of God's diary. The Son did nothing of Himself but what He saw the Father do, so that we may turn from the acts of our blessed Lord during his earthly life, and believe that they were made upon a divine pattern, which was being unfolded to his eye day by day. If that be so, what glimpses are given in this chapter into the demands which are perpetually pouring into the ear of God from all the world. Consider the volume of petition which is constantly being offered to the Almighty. Some of us have to deal with a large correspondence, and every morning the post pours on to our table letters from all the world, each with its separate request. But who can measure the infinite number of requests which are ever being strewn before the Eternal Throne! The master pleads for his servant; the widow for her child; the imprisoned herald of the Gospel sighs for freedom. Those who are diseased and plagued plead for themselves; children come with their childish petitions, and women laden with sin confess and seek forgiveness. What a world is ours, and what a volume of need calls for the Divine compassion!

In the Lord's miracles there was nothing set or artificial. He performed them with beautiful naturalness. His plan differed in each. It seemed as though He suited Himself with infinite tenderness to the special case presented to Him. There was no aiming at effect, no comparative effort; He seemed unconscious that He was doing anything marvellous, or even unusual; the words of power fell naturally from his lips, like leaves from the tree of life, carrying, as they fell, healing for the nations.

But everywhere faith was necessary, whether it were the centurion, or the woman that was a sinner; and in the case of the Baptist, the Lord was swift to suggest grounds for his faith, when it was wavering amid the stress of his heavy imprisonment.

MONDAY, July 1. Luke viii.

Hitherto our Lord had made Capernaum his centre; now He started on a circuit through the province of Galilee, going through its cities and villages in a systematic and almost leisurely way. His twelve disciples and many women accompanied Him, so that his progress must have been of more than ordinary importance. Presently He was back in Galilee again, and gathered his audience on the sea shore, whilst He sat in the pulpit boat.

In every crowd there are these four sorts of hearers, the hardened, like the trodden path; the impulsive, like the thin layer of earth upon the rock; those with the divided heart as when the thorns choked off the good seed; those who receive the word with joy and bring forth fruit with patience. How careful we should be to examine ourselves, to be quite sure that in neither of these respects we are missing the great blessing of salvation. It is good to ponder the eighteenth verse, especially coupling with it the assurance of the twenty-first, that those who pass from the hearing stage to the doing are welcomed into the inner circle of our Saviour's personal affection.

What a wonderful combination of miracles succeeds! Here is the demoniac, uncontrollable, raging, who at a word from Christ is transformed into a gentle, teachable man; here is the woman, who for twelve years had been suffering from ill-health, by a touch made perfectly whole; and here is the little daughter of the ruler of the synagogue, whose hand is taken by the Master as He bids her awake. Each represents a distinct type of character and need, and for each the appropriate word is spoken. Oh that each of us might go through the world in the footsteps of Christ, as far as possible seeking to meet the awful need which accosts us from young and old, from men and women, from rich and poor.

TUESDAY, July 2. Luke ix.

The Galilean ministry was drawing to a close, for the Light that had shone there was to move southward, "and set behind a cross and a grave." Before our Lord left those borders, however, He made one last effort for their salvation. Calling together the twelve, who had hitherto been apostles in name rather than in fact, He laid his plans before them. He divided the district into sections, and sent them out in pairs; and as their warrant, gave them no outward investiture, except the power to cast out demons. Nothing was to distract them from the great object of heralding the Kingdom of God.

From the fatigues of this mission, and the investigations of Herod, our Lord withdrew to a city on the N.E. shore of the Lake, where the much grass of a plain between city and shore accommodated the crowds that followed Him.

What a touching word is that in v. 11 (R.V.), "He welcomed them." Jesus, though penniless, became their host. Was not that a room in his Father's house? Can He not welcome and entertain thee and me? Are we not his apostles, into whose hands He will place the necessary supplies, for his guests?

Before He finally left Galilee for Jerusalem, the Master sought a brief, much-needed respite, and went northwards beyond the frontier. There He spent much time in prayer, and elicited from Peter that first Apostles' Creed. There He was encouraged by converse with Moses and Elijah; and above all, by his Father's voice. There, too, He girded Himself for the decease which he was to accomplish at Jerusalem. The closing paragraphs begin to trace the way of the cross—the way of shame and rejection, through which He was to obtain the power to shed the Fire of the Holy Spirit on the very villages that now rejected Him (Acts viii. 14, 15).

WEDNESDAY, July 3. Luke x.

The mission of the seventy looks like another and further appeal to the land He loved; and how triumphant their return! With faces flushed with pride, and hearts high with elation, the evangelists returned to Him with their reports. Even the demons were subject. The Master was not surprised. He had seen Satan fall as lightning from Heaven, as though the work done by these humble men had been the ounce-weight that had turned the scale against him. Is it not always so, that what we do on earth tells right through the universe of God?

Then, "in the same hour," it seemed as though the flood-gates of the Saviour's soul were burst open by his joy. He rejoiced that babe-like hearts could know the mind of God; that all things had been delivered to Him by the Father; and that He was permitted to reveal the Father to those who loved and obeyed Him. Oh that we may enter his joy and the blessedness of which He spake (v. 23).

The parable of the Good Samaritan evidently belongs to the Jerusalem ministry. It may have been suggested by the journey up from Jericho. Notice how the Master answered the inquiry, Who is my neighbour? He said in effect: "Anyone to whom you can render neighbourly help is your neighbour. Neighbourliness stands, not for what you may receive, but for what you can give; and it is often independent of formal religiousness. Those who are most prominent for this may be entirely destitute of that, whilst neighbourly love may be shown by those who are deemed aliens and outcasts by the religious world."

The Bethany idyll which follows, does so in natural order. By this time our Lord had reached the city, and Bethany was his home whilst there. Love must have its nest, and the special objects of its tender care. He who had welcomed the crowds, must Himself be welcomed.

THURSDAY, July 4. Luke xi.

Prayer with the Lord Jesus was habitual, the fragrant atmosphere in which He lived, moved, and had his being. It was a necessity of his life. As soon as the intrusive crowds withdrew, He would betake Himself to his favourite exercise. And it was the habitual prayerfulness of Jesus that made the Apostles long to be taught to pray. Surely example is the best method of teaching, and of preparing for the reception of our words. What an example is this of the power of unconscious influence. Jesus was in the act of prayer when He was anointed at his baptism; prayed, ere He called the Apostles; prayed, as He was transfigured; prayed in Gethsemane; prayed on the cross—and throughout his earthly life was constantly lifting up his eyes to heaven.

He teaches the importance of earnestness and importunity in prayer. Though the man in his picture was improvident in his household management, and untimely in waking his friend at midnight, he gained what he needed through his sheer audacity. But if a fallen man like ourselves will not upbraid, but supply by his thoughtfulness for his friend's lack of thought, how much more will our Heavenly Father supply our need, who are his poor friends, and who plead on behalf of our poor friends?

Then, again, the conflict with the Pharisees burst upon Him. They accused Him of collusion with Satan, asked of Him a sign, invited Him to dine that they might better accuse Him, and exposed themselves to the awful woes that dropped like burning coals from those pure and holy, but dispassionate lips.

FRIDAY, July 5. Luke xii.

The Father's care shines throughout this chapter; therefore fear not. He is in secret listening to every cry, detecting every unkind statement and tale, prepared to bring forth thy judgment as the light, and thy righteousness as the noon-day. Thou mayest be the odd sparrow, thrown into the bargain and not worth the care of the salesman, yet thou shalt not be forgotten by thy Father. And, whatever man may say or do concerning thee, thou shalt be confessed before the assembled angels as his own. Be not anxious as to framing thy defence, for the Spirit of God will give thee thy thoughts and words as they are required.

Notice the contrast between two kinds of men. The one is always caring for himself, pulling down his barns and building greater, the other casts all his anxiety from himself on to the Father. He is content to do what he may, as the providence of God indicates the path of daily duty; but he does not perform his labours for the remuneration they bring, but for the will of God, sure that all which is needed for soul and body will be provided by Him who gave him being. The Father knows all thy varied need; trust Him.

The Lord directs our hearts towards his coming, and bids us be ready, assuring us that there will be a sufficient reward for the service of every faithful disciple. Life has its awful sorrows—the baptism of pain, the division of the household, the opposition of the world—but it will have its compensations; wherefore be of good cheer.

SATURDAY, July 6. Luke xiii.

There are several great lessons to be learnt from this chapter. (1) Accidents are not punishments, and special suffering is not to be looked on or quoted as the sign of special sin. Instead of judging another, let each look at home.

(2) The Lord is ever looking for fruit. Year after year, with unwearied tenderness and eagerness, He turns aside the leaves, for the fruit that nestles beneath their protecting shadow.

(3) The Rest Day is not broken when good is being done to the bodies or souls of men. If the Pharisees would unbind an ox or ass, how much more should Jesus, the Lord of Life, unbind a woman from the thong of her disease!

(4) Do not despise small things, whether a germ of the leaven of evil, or a seed of the mustard plant of good. Let us beware of the tiny flakes of evil that float around us in the moral as in the physical realm.

(5) It is not enough to have the outward profession; we must have the inner heart of godliness, if we would pass muster at last.

(6) We are immortal till God sees that the work of our life is perfected.

(7) The heart of Jesus yearns to shelter men, as the wings of the mother bird to shelter her young. But, alas, that we possess and can exercise, the fatal power of refusal. F. B. M.

The Keswick Convention.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

FOR several months past Keswick has been preparing for its great annual event. The question is often asked, Will the Convention ever move its quarters? This certainly does not seem in contemplation, for the trustees have this year purchased a second large tent, and secured a new site at the end of the Blencathra Street extension, which has recently been railed round. All the halls in the town have also been engaged, as in previous years. "Keswick" is known the wide world round; and her messages have spread their influence in all lands. To remove the centre and involve a change of name, to say nothing of the lovely locality, would in a great measure spoil its charm.

The visitors, who arrive in thousands, perhaps seldom think of all the preparations that are needed for their entertainment or accommodation. Keswick itself has nearly doubled its size; this has proved at the same time an advantage and a disadvantage to its inhabitants. Many who lived in its "slums" (and even beautiful Keswick had these, some of which were quite unfit for human habitation) have removed to the new houses, hoping to recoup for the extra rent during the Convention fortnight. But owing to this increase in lodgings, Keswick is never now full in the season, and many apartments remain empty which before were always occupied.

At least three months before Convention, applications begin to pour in. One lady comes every spring time and engages many large houses, which she fills with those to whom the meetings are the greatest boon. It is increasingly the custom for visitors to come in parties, taking a large house between them, and many of these houses are engaged from year to year, in addition to those which from time to time are occupied with ministers, missionaries, Y.M. and Y.W.C.A. parties, &c.

Mr. Postlethwaite's agent goes round to every house to ascertain the accommodation and prices. There is scarcely a cottage where a guest-chamber is not prepared. Then, as applications come in, they are fitted as far as possible to the places. Intending visitors do well to apply to the Convention officers, but they must be prepared to accept what can be got for them; they should state their requirements, and what they are prepared to pay. The grand names given to small residences are often very misleading. The average price is £1 for a room with one bed, 30s. for one room with two beds, £2 for a sitting-room, including attendance and cooking.

Those of us who have watched the Convention from the first can only praise God for its progress and results. We well remember going to the first meetings held in a small tent near the vicarage, and hearing Canon Battersby tell of all the good he had received through the Oxford Conference. For several years the chief thought was to get what was called "the blessing;" but as men and women became truly converted, and their eyes were opened to see the power which might be theirs for help in their daily life, they could not rest content in selfish joy and peace. Hence arose the missionary meetings. Beginning with spontaneous gifts for sending out missionaries from Keswick, the movement has grown, till representatives from all missionary societies come to plead for the countries in which they are interested.

Efforts on behalf of the townspeople followed. Evangelistic services in the Tent and Market Place have been promoted by a band of workers, to attend which the visitors urge those who are entertaining them. Finding that the many still remained unreached, for the last few years the workers have divided into little bands, and visited each yard in the town, holding open-air services on the Sunday morning. The names of any who appear to be impressed, or are anxious, are handed in to a lady-resident, and followed up afterwards. In connection with this many pleasing incidents have occurred. Eternity alone will reveal the many and lasting blessings which have thus had their rise in the Keswick Convention.

The King's Declaration.

DEAR SIR,—The proposal to substitute some other words for "idolatrous" and "superstitious," which, while equally effectual for expressing the Protestant faith of the King, should be less repugnant to sincere Romanists, has been magnified in your columns out of all recognition.

For example, in your last issue I find these words—"They cannot have dreamed that at the end of 200 years or so, nominal Protestants would be found practically saying that it matters little or nothing whether the Sovereign be a puppet of the Pope of Rome, or a liberty-loving ruler of a free people." What a grotesque exaggeration this is! If a captain of a ship propose to its owner that the anchor would be more useful if the flukes were less bent, would the owner be just to charge him with wanting to go to sea without an anchor? Surely in religious matters we should try to represent each other as fairly as men do in the things of this world.

To return, then, to the question. Earnest Roman Catholics deny that they are idolaters. Ought the King to respect their feelings?

Now, what is idolatry? Is it not a denial of the true God, and the worship of a false god, under the form of some material symbol?

Glance even cursorily over any description of the religions of India for an idea of idol-worship as it is known to-day. Monsters of cruelty, ferocity, reproductive passions, fecundity, and destruction, portrayed with hideous ingenuity, and calculated to terrify, corrupt, or revolt the worshipper, are to be found in every part of India. The worshippers are idolaters. That is the proper and only term that describes them. Your correspondents seem to count it strange that anyone should object to the King's applying the same word to his Roman Catholic Christian subjects, many of whom are godly, earnest, and devout persons, and lovers and imitators of Christ.

Then as to "superstition." As the former word is derived from heathenism, so this comes from the most contemptible forms of human credulity. The Romanist says it is used in the Oath for the purpose of insult and contumely. Ought the King to respect his feelings, while publicly protesting his own unalterable faith? "Certainly not," say your correspondents, with a single exception or two: "Romanism is heathenism and contemptible superstition, and let the King call a spade a spade!"

To my mind, that may be a very good answer for militant Protestantism, whose instinct is controversy, protest, and negation, but heralds of God's glad tidings of pardon and peace will, I trust, unite with me in approving such slight changes in the King's public Declaration of his unbelief in Romanism as may remove a just cause of offence. The iron fist is nothing weakened by wearing a glove of silk, and good manners are especially becoming in a king.

Need I add I am in full accord with all the writers in their dread of Rome's encroachments, and as to the stern necessity of strengthening the bulwarks against her?—Yours,

GEO. F. TRENCH.

It is with great regret that we find ourselves at variance on this subject with one whom we have so long and so highly esteemed as our present correspondent. We think it necessary, however, to point out that our remarks last week were not made with reference to Mr. Trench's letter, but to the general attitude of the Press and of the nominal Protestants of the country.

It is scarcely correct to say that we have "magnified out of all recognition" the proposal to modify the King's Declaration. When discussing the proposal, we did indeed say that our Protestant ancestors "cannot have dreamed that, at the end of 200 years or so, nominal Protestants would be found practically saying that it matters little or nothing," &c. That many nominal Protestants maintain such an attitude of utter indifference is unquestionable, and is cause of the most serious apprehension at the present time, on the part as such as share Mr. Trench's "dread of Rome's encroachments," and agree with him as to "the stern necessity of strengthening the bulwarks against her."

The object of the Declaration is to ascertain the King's relation to Romanism. Why should Romanists claim to decide in what terms the Protestant position of the Sovereign is to be expressed? Surely they might well renounce any such responsibility. The Declaration is more than the phrases which compose it; and it is the Declaration itself that gives offence. By and by, at his Coronation, the King will make oath that "to the utmost of his power" he will "maintain the laws of God, the true profession of the Gospel, and the Protestant Reformed Religion established by law." Will there be another outcry then, on the pretext of "relieving" the conscience of the Sovereign, or "respecting the feelings" of Roman Catholics?

In maintaining the Protestant Reformed Religion the King will give assent to the following statements:—

The Romish doctrine concerning purgatory, pardons, worshipping and adoration, as well of images as of reliques, and also invocation of saints, is a fond thing vainly invented, and grounded upon no warranty of Scripture, but rather repugnant to the Word of God (Art. xxii.).

Transubstantiation (or the change of the substance of bread and wine) in the Supper of the Lord cannot be proved by Holy Writ; but it is repugnant to the plain words of Scripture, overthroweth the nature of a sacrament, and hath given occasion to many superstitions (Art. xxviii.).

The sacrifices of masses, in the which it was commonly said, that the priest did offer Christ for the quick and the dead, to have remission of pain or guilt, were blasphemous fables and dangerous deceits (Art. xxxi.).

The Bishop of Rome hath no jurisdiction in this realm of England (Art. xxxvii.).

That which is right in the Standards of the Church of England, cannot be wrong in the mouth of the King, who is its Supreme Governor. Respect for the feelings of subjects must not be advanced as a bar to the legitimate process of ascertaining the attitude of the King towards the Bishop of Rome. "Dread of Rome's encroachments, and the necessity of strengthening the bulwarks against her" should assuredly make us sober and vigilant at the present time. And, moreover, we must beware lest the appeal of Roman Catholic friends and neighbours be allowed to stand in the way of Christian fidelity. Why should a Romanist minority dictate in this matter? To listen to cries from such quarters were to cease Protestant witness as well as Evangelical zeal.

It is impossible to dissociate Romanism from idolatry and superstition to the extent which Mr. Trench seems disposed to do. For centuries past every generation has seen its exposure of the heathen elements which are embedded in the Papal system. Among recent works on the subject may be included "The Two Babylons," by Rev. Alex. Hislop. (5s. Partridge); and "The Church, the Churches, and the Mysteries," by G. H. Pember, M.A. (7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.)

As to "militant Protestantism," it is not greatly in evidence. For years past there has been only too much reason to deplore the general supineness and inactivity of Protestants. So far as it is Evangelical, Protestantism by no means deserves to be confused with "controversy, protest, and negation." In the columns of THE CHRISTIAN "God's glad tidings of pardon and peace" always have first place. For ourselves, we have little fear of excessive zeal on the part of Protestants. Verily it is time for such to awake!

In conclusion, if we were sure that our legislators shared Mr. Trench's "dread of Rome's encroachments" and his sense of "the stern necessity of strengthening the bulwarks against her" we should not have much fear as to the proposed modification of the terms of the Declaration. As things are, we repeat our conviction that in this business nothing can be done to satisfy Rome, for it is not Rome's intention to rest content with mere modification. Long ago (December, 1873) the Jesuit organ, Catholic Progress, delivered a sound Papal sentiment on the question:—"It is a barbarous law which hinders our gracious Sovereign from embracing the faith of her glorious predecessors if she wished to do so. . . . A Catholic will make as good a Chancellor as a Protestant. So, whatever we have got, we do not rest quite satisfied." No; the power which bans and blights all nations over which it secures sway, aims at dominating English politics, and it will not "rest quite satisfied" until it governs the Throne. Which consummation may God forbid!

Twilights.

THE trees I climbed,
With boy's ambition vain,
To stand aloft, calling the hills my own,
Round Derry, Donegal, and old Tyrone;
Those trees are changed, some fallen, few remain.

The friends first loved,
With love full oft the best
And most enduring, e'en despite the sneers
Of cynic sages flattering riper years—
Old friends, where are you? Many are at rest.

Old homes, old loves, are changed,
Our hearts grow chill;
Life-ties are broken; friends are strange or dead;
'Tis time to leave our wrecks for land ahead;
And near us, through the mist, lies Eden still.

The sum of bliss is God,
And God means good.
Him may we meet in Christ. He can instil
His life that every pulse renewed shall thrill
To Him, as to the summer winds the wood.

Earth's sun is setting,
But the greater light
That rules eternal day is up. 'Tis late;
Time has been wasted, but God's grace is great—
Sufficient! I shall trust Him through the night.

Donegal. J. K

831

Primitives in Conference at Sheffield.

CONFERENCE Sunday was a crowded day. Beginning at 6.30 a.m. with Communion services in the principal chapels of the city, there were meetings of one kind or another till nine at night. All the Primitive Methodist pulpits of the Sheffield circuits were supplied by delegates, and the majority of the pulpits of the other Free Churches were filled also. The camp meeting in the afternoon, on the cricket ground, was an enormous gathering. Altogether, the Sabbath was a glorious day.

The Conference resumed its business proceedings on Monday morning, Rev. H. B. Kendall, B.A., presiding. The days which have passed since his election to the chair have brought abundant evidence of the popularity of his preferment. Mr. Kendall has been in the ministry of the Church for thirty-seven years, having entered the ranks before he was twenty years of age. All the circuits in which he travelled were in the North of England. There he laboured side by side with some of the greatest ministers Primitive Methodism has produced. In all these stations he is esteemed and beloved. While stationed in the city of Durham he won the B.A. degree. Illness compelled him to cease from the active work. For the next six years of his life he was the governor of East Keswick College, near Leeds. This is an undenominational institution intended to train men for the admittance examinations of other colleges. During the last nine years Mr. Kendall has been the editor of the Connexion's literature. His published volumes have had very good sales. His Hartley Lecture at this Conference has been issued by the Book-room authorities.

The three foreign missionaries (Revs. William Chapman, who has spent six years in Mashukulumbweland; G. E. Wiles, of the Fernandian Bottlenose Mission; and N. Boocock, of Archibongville) were welcomed home, and accorded a most attentive hearing when they responded to the votes of greeting.

The General Missionary Secretary (Rev. R. W. Burnett) had the pleasure of intimating that on June 24 the largest missionary party which Primitive Methodism has ever equipped will be leaving Aliwal North for the Zambesi Mission. The party is made up of Revs. E. W. Smith and T. J. Raybould and their wives, an artisan missionary (Mr. Walter Hogg), and two native ministers and their wives. The journey before them is 1,500 miles. When the great railway is finished, the missionaries will be able to get within 100 miles of their locations.

The General Missionary Committee has had so many additional obligations during recent years that it was obliged to inform the Conference that unless the income is considerably increased it will be impossible to keep the expenditure within the limits of the revenue. The delegates and the visitors in the galleries were earnestly asked to do their utmost in the stations to incite to greater missionary liberality. It is understood that the Missionary Committee is considering the practicability of sending agents to Cape Town, Johannesburg, Port Elizabeth, and Durban. They are also to see what can be done for the new regimental depôts contemplated in the army scheme of the Government.

In the evening a great public meeting was held in the Albert Hall. The building was packed from floor to ceiling. Mr. W. P. Hartley, J.P. (Aintree), was in the chair, and the vice-chairman was Alderman H. E. Judson, of Oldham. Stirring speeches were delivered by Revs. R. W. Keightley and Joseph Odell, and Mr. Joshua Moseley, of Birmingham.

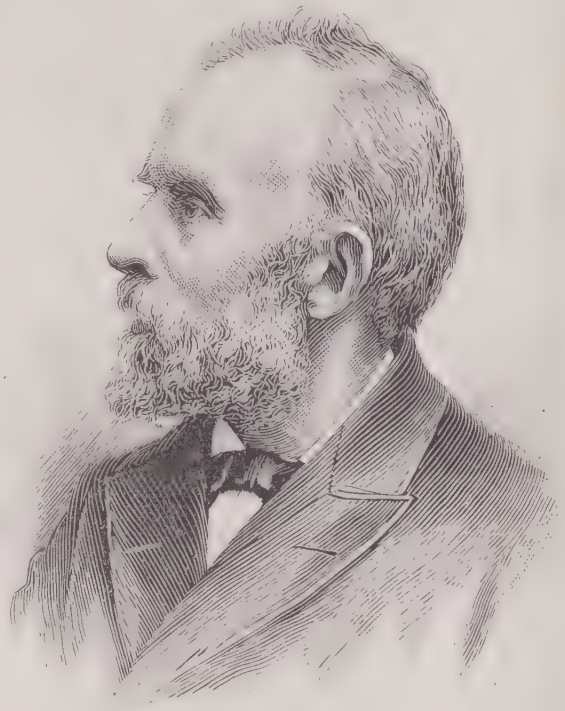
On Tuesday morning the report of the Church Extension Fund was presented by Rev. Thomas Mitchell; £7,000 have been contributed for the extension of the Connexion's work in the suburbs of large towns and watering-places. Mr. W. P. Hartley has given 25 per cent. on all subscriptions. So far, thirty-one extension projects have received the committee's approval and assistance.

Evidently the Aged Local Preachers' Fund is commending itself more and more to the Church. The income has increased from £737 to £890. The money in hand, however, is insufficient for all the claims.

Rev. George Parkin (Principal of the Manchester College) delivered an address to the memory of the ministers who had died during the year. In tender and chaste language he made mention of the characters and services of Revs. William Alderson, Reuben Barron, Matthew H. Barron, George Clark, Richard Clarke, William Dinnick, Frederick Harbourne, T. Hobson, David Kyles, James Macpherson, Alexander McKechnie, David S. Prosser, and Thomas H. Richards.

Presentations have been made to Rev. W. E. Crombie for his twelve years' devoted services to the Orphanage, to Dr. George Booth for editing the Sunday School Hymnal, and to Rev. Thomas Mitchell for the thoroughly efficient way in which he conducted the publishing house during his five years of office.

A business session was held in the evening,



REV. H. B. KENDALL.
From Photograph by Mr. J. H. Killick, 399, Holloway Road, N.

at which gratifying reports were presented of the Elmfield and Bourne Colleges and the Insurance Company. Rev. George Bennett had a report of increases to give in the Connexional Christian Endeavour work. There are now 1,429 societies, 37,033 active members, 32,914 of whom are members of the Church, and 11,161 associate members.

On Wednesday the departmental reports were presented. The Sunday-school schedules show 4,021 schools, 57,569 teachers, and 439,038 scholars. Rev. Robert Hind was able to announce that the Chapel Aid Association had increased its deposit account by £23,878, bringing the total to £260,325. This Association lends money to trustees at 3¾ per cent. Repayments during the year amounted to £27,490. In the home districts there have been seventy-one chapels built during the year, at a cost of £101,222 7s. 11d., towards which £61,392 0s. 9d. has been raised. There are now 4,304 chapels, which have cost £3,931,472. The debts amount to £1,020,210. In these there are 998,725 sittings, and 562,203 hearers.

A great Missionary Demonstration took place in the Conference Chapel at night. The chairman was the Treasurer of the African Fund (Mr. Thomas Lawrence, of Leicester), and the vice-chairman was Mr. John Coward, J.P. of Durham. The speakers were Revs. G. E. Wiles and N. Boocock—both missionaries on furlough—and Rev. John Smith, ex-missionary secretary.

On Thursday morning, educational affairs again occupied the attention of the Conference. It has long been known that many young Christians have found their association with Primitive Methodism a barrier to the teaching profession. The educational committee determined to find out how far that was the case. A series of questions were sent to all the societies. Replies have been received from 3,094 out of 4,816. In forty-five cases young people have been obliged to give up membership in Primitive Methodism either to become pupil-teachers, or to enter the training-colleges. A similar condition of things has been found in relation to the Wesleyan Methodists. Thirteen persons have been required to join the Wesleyan Methodist Church as a condition of admission to the Wesleyan Methodist Training Colleges.

A great many hours have been devoted to the stationing of preachers for next year. More men were wanted than both the college and Ministerial Candidates' Committees could supply. To fill the vacancies, with the utmost regret the Conference was compelled to bring men out of the College before their course there was completed. The greatest difficulty was experienced in fitting men to places and places to men.

The Conference has been characterised by perfect good feeling, and the arrangements made augur well for a prosperous year.

The Late Surgeon-General Dunbar.

THERE passed peacefully away on the 6th inst., at his residence in Clapham, Surgeon-General Dunbar. Like a shock of corn fully ripe, he was taken away in his eighty-sixth year, after a long, useful, and truly honourable life.

Born in Calcutta in 1815, educated in Scotland and Germany, he returned to India in 1837, having joined the Indian Medical Service. He rose gradually in his profession, till he was promoted to be Inspector-General of Hospitals in the Bengal Army. Having spent thirty-two years of his life in India, during which time there were many stirring scenes, the greatest being the Mutiny, he came home, retiring from the Service in 1868. While in the Service he was not only the medical man healing the body, but he was the sincere Christian, ever speaking and living for his Divine Lord and Master.

Dr. Dunbar, won by the Saviour's love in early life, was a man of high Christian character, of simple, devout faith, unobtrusive in his virtues and graces, a great lover of the truths of the Gospel, and most ardent for their faithful proclamation. He was generous almost to a fault in his support of all forms of religious work. Appeals came to him from many quarters, and he intelligently and conscientiously responded to them. His sympathies were not narrow, nor confined to any particular denomination, but were world-wide, ever flowing out to all true work wherever done.

He had a large heart of yearning pity and compassion for the heathen world, and prayerfully followed all missionary movements with the deepest possible interest. The Baptist Missionary Society, whose agents he had often met and honoured in India, and the China Inland Mission, had his special support.

He will be greatly missed among religious circles in Clapham, where he was much loved, and highly esteemed. His home for many years was the centre of Christian influence, and under his hospitable roof Societies of almost every name have presented their manifold claims. The tale of the poor and the needy ever touched the springs of his generous pity, and often did he make the widow's heart sing for joy. Having served his God and his country well, he has entered into his eternal rest. E. H.

Mildmay Conference.

OPENING MEETING.

AMONG the great Christian Conferences of the country that at Mildmay continues, in this its forty-fifth year, to hold a high place in the esteem of the people of God. This week a large company of old and new friends, gathered from many quarters to have a quiet time together, with hearts and minds set on the things belonging to the life which is hid with Christ in God. The general subject for the three-days' Conference was expressed as "Divine Beginnings for unending Human Need." On Sunday afternoon and evening special preparatory services were conducted by Rev. George Soltau, followed by a preliminary prayer meeting on Monday evening; and the motto for the week was graciously borne in on many hearts as the Lord granted liberty and utterance, with the assurance of a time of blessing fulfilled in rich measure in the days that followed: "Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, and to-day, yea, and for ever"—unto the ages (Heb. xiii. 8; R.V.).

GOD IN CREATION.

On Tuesday the early morning gathering for prayer was presided over by Mr. James E. Mathieson. The topic set down for the day was "God in Creation," and a deep sense of the Divine Majesty pervaded all the meetings, with the blessed thought that while "God is mighty," He "despiseth not any."

At eleven o'clock the chair was taken by Lord POLWARTH, and after a few moments of silent prayer, old memories came back as the familiar opening hymn was sung.

Holy, holy, holy! Lord God Almighty,
Early in the morning our song shall rise to Thee.

Rev. Dr. Barlow (Dean-elect of Peterborough) voiced the thanksgivings of the assembly for past realization of the presence and blessing of God, with deep yearnings on behalf of the world, the Church, and personal needs. Heb. i. was then read.

In his opening words the Chairman referred, in touching terms, to gaps in the ranks since last year, naming specially Rev. Charles Fox and Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor; and, addressing those who mourned for loved ones, reminded them that, while "we bow before the footstool, they surround the throne of God in the glory. We want to look from earth to heaven, from self to Christ. The great need of the present age is a fresh, deeper, mightier, and stronger sense of the truth of the risen Saviour. Our King never vacates the throne." Referring to the experience of the three disciples in the Mount, he pointed out that (1) they saw Jesus—God in Creation; (2) they heard a voice—God in Revelation; (3) they beheld the transfigured Lord—God in Manifestation.

REV. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS, who followed, said the keynote of the Conference, as of the Bible itself, is found in the first four words of Scripture, "In the beginning God." Some years ago the speaker was shown the interior of a Lancashire cotton mill, which he found occupied chiefly by machinery in motion. Nowhere, however, was there any sign of motive power. At length the mill owner said, "Now I will show you the one who does all the work," and led Mr. Griffith Thomas to the engine-room, where, unseen but powerful, and absolutely necessary to the activity of the whole, was the man who governed the motive power. So, in viewing nature in any aspect, we naturally look for a First Cause of all things, and the Bible explanation is that that cause is God.

First, we have the fact of creation—"in the beginning." Instead of arguing for the existence of the Divine Creator, one would rather, looking round at the marvels, animate and inanimate, that surround us on every hand, call on any opponent of Biblical truth to give a satisfactory reason for their existence. However far back we may go in tracing the origin of things, we have still to account for that origin. When brought into contact with the facts of life, agnosticism is either the resort of moral cowardice or the abode of helplessness. But we say, "In the beginning God." It is worthy of note, and can be clearly demonstrated, that none of the world's greatest leaders, whatever else they may have been, were atheists. Coming to the method of creation we have two theories—(a) direct creation; (b) evolution. To many non-Christian thinkers the word evolution appears to afford as much comfort as did the "blessed word Mesopotamia" to Dr. Chalmers' old lady hearer. But whether we accept the one theory or the other, the fact of creation remains, whatever method was followed.

REV. W. H. GRIFFITH THOMAS.

From Photograph by Mr. Sumner, 110, St. Aldates, Oxford.

REV. D. M. M'INTYRE.

From Photograph by Mr. Stuart, 120, Buchannan Street, Glasgow.

The crown of creation is man, with the marvellous attributes that characterize him. We think of his physical, his intellectual, and his moral nature, and say we are "fearfully and wonderfully made." As to his spiritual nature, it is restless until it rests in God. The essence of man's nature is his personal consciousness, his assertion of individuality; but we are not so vain as to suppose, on this account, that man himself is the highest of beings. No, rather the position pre-supposes a Divine personality, who breathed his spirit into man.

The glory of creation has in it the three elements—power, wisdom, and beauty. We observe the power that binds the universe together in harmony, the wisdom in many wonders of the realm of knowledge—in the instinct of animals, the force and subtlety of the atmosphere, or the faculties of the human eye. We see it for example in the insect called the stag-horned beetle, the male of which develops horns as long as its body, while the female has none. Yet, in grub form, the male digs a home in the ground twice as large as that which the female makes. And why? In order, clearly that there may be room for its beautiful horns to grow. Can the grub have reasoned out this necessity? No, the Creator implanted the wonderful instinct within it.

In conclusion, all things in creation are associated with the Lord Jesus Christ, from first to last (Heb. i. 2; Col. i. 16, &c.). We turn to Genesis, and it is "In the beginning God;" we turn to Matthew, and it is "Immanuel, God with us." Knowing this, we can hope and trust, and look forward to the better world, where we shall realize God first, God only, God over all, God all in all, God blessed for ever.

The second address was given by REV. DAVID M. M'INTYRE (GLASGOW).

"We have heard," he said, "that God in creation is God in Christ. Now a belief in the being of God is not the mere formal thing we sometimes imagine it to be. It is a very real thing to have a true faith in the existence of God, and all our being rises up to meet it. You remember how the great lesson the New Testament draws from the holy life and walk with God of Enoch, is that 'He that cometh to God must believe that He is, and that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him.'

"It is a serious and solemn thing to believe in God, because it is the God who is the Father of Jesus Christ that our hearts must find. It is not difficult to prove the being of a great First Cause, of a most free, intelligent, all-wise, and almighty power; but we want One who is more than the author of mathematics. We need God in Jesus Christ. When Edison was asked, 'Do you men of science believe there is a God?' he replied, 'We know there is.'

"The God of Creation is the Triune God, for the Trinity work harmoniously, and are not divided. 'In the beginning God.' 'And God said.' 'In the beginning was the Word.' 'And the Spirit of God was moving upon the face of the waters.' We can understand something of the blessed Trinity from our own experience. Jesus has brought us home, and to-day we are in the Father's House, with the kiss of peace on our brow. We know that Christ lives in us, and we know that the Holy Spirit 'maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered.'

"The early Christians used to say that they could have communion separately with the Father, the Son, and the Spirit; and, however that may be, we know that when we shall see Him we shall know Him as we are known. Melancthon, when dying, said: 'Now I shall see the Trinity; I want nothing now but heaven.'

"The Creator is God in Christ; Father, Son, and Spirit worked together in the making of the world: but it is expressly said, 'All things were made through Him, and apart from Him was not anything made that was made.' The Lord Jesus Christ is God's image and ideal, the First Born of all creation, the solution of all earth's mysteries, the master-key that unlocks every enigma, the harmony that brings into its sweep all the discords of life: Him first, Him last, Him in the midst, Him without end.

"Philosophers have always found it difficult to name an adequate reason why God should have made the world. The redemption of this world explains all creation. This earth is the theatre of Christ's redeeming work. Jesus Christ risen again is God's adequate motive for creation. It was the Spirit of Christ which was moving over the face of the waters.

"When Jesus Christ rose from his passion, and went home to God, and took the seven-sealed book out of his Father's hand, He took the title-deeds of the universe, and said: 'All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth.' When we pray, we do so 'for Jesus' sake,' because He has received the residue of the Spirit, and all the laws of nature find their harmony in the hand that was nailed to the Cross.

"God has been preparing the world for the revelation of Christ. I do not know what the method of creation was, I do not know that we shall ever understand it. We know that after all else, there was a hush upon nature, and man appeared, built up from the dust of the earth according to his human frame, made in the likeness of God in his mental and moral nature.

"John Howe has represented fallen man under the figure of a great temple, harmonious in structure, costly in adornment, but all moss-grown and ruined, and with a half-obliterated writing, 'Here God once dwelt.' Man was made to be the recipient of Christ. He who is seated upon the throne, to whom all judgment is consigned, is the Son of Man; but when we humble our hearts in penitence, and receive God's grace in truth, and are made new creatures, it is in Christ Jesus, for we are his workmanship, 'created unto good works.' 'I live, yet not I, but Christ.' Jesus Christ became the supreme point of the Apostle's personality. Yet he was not less himself. He only became himself when Christ became his life.

"The great glory of creation was the coming of a little Child, born into this wintry world, who won favour with God and man. He came to tell that God loved, and gave Himself, and would die for men. He offered Himself a Sacrifice for all. Then He went by the royal ascent higher and ever higher; and what changes took place in that glorified body of the crucified Christ we know not yet, but we shall know when we shall see Him as He is."

Helping our Soldiers.—Into the old county town of Brecon a stream of young fellows from the populous districts known as "the Hills" is constantly pouring. The attractions of a military life have a fascination for these adventurous youths that they cannot resist, and they enter the barracks at Brecon resolved "to follow the drum," with vague hopes that it will lead some day to a Victoria Cross and a substantial pension. In many cases these lads are followed by the prayers of parents living in a Christian home, and fathers and mothers have been glad to know that their boys have not left good influence altogether when they donned the red coat. At Brecon an excellent institution has been exerting its influence over these lads for some years, and the Soldiers' Home has been the scene of blessed decisions for the Master. In that harbour from temptation resolutions have been formed which changed the whole life; and long after, letters from India and Africa have told of the far-reaching power for good of the Soldiers' Home at Brecon. The ladies who conduct the Home visit in the town and among the women in the barracks. Funds are needed in aid of the Home, the hon. superintendent of which is Miss Wilkinson, The Watton, Brecon.

834

Believers' Conference at Devonshire House.

THE annual meetings for believers, held at Devonshire House, E.C., on Thursday and Friday last, were occasions of rich blessing to the many friends who assembled from far and near for prayer and fellowship with the Lord's servants in other lands.

Thursday afternoon was devoted to prayer, and in the evening labourers from the foreign field gave encouraging reports of the Lord's work, notably in India, China, and the Straits Settlements. On Friday morning a large assembly came together for prayer, and words of exhortation and instruction from a number of speakers. The first address in the afternoon was given by Mr. F. S. Arnot, who, in commenting on Acts xx. 19, brought out the lesson that true and that the Christian worker who is to exercise a right influence must be characterized by lowliness in all circumstances of life.

POWER LIES IN HUMILITY,

A number of friends followed with tidings of work abroad. Mr. T. D. W. Muir, of Detroit, spoke with the weight of long experience concerning the United States and Canada. Only about twenty years since the gathering of isolated believers into assemblies may be said to have commenced. The work has been largely of an evangelistic character. The Orilia district of Canada has proved a particularly fruitful field, and in the country reaching south and west from Chicago there is a cheering outlook, while from Hamilton, Canada, and also from Detroit and other centres labourers in the Gospel have gone forth and reaped abundant spiritual harvests.

Dr. Norman Case, who is shortly to return to China, has had many interesting experiences in the Shan-Tung province of that country, where he commenced operations from Wei-hai-wei. Some of the natives were brought to a saving knowledge of the truth, and the towns and villages of the interior were influenced in turn. In visitation, and especially by meetings the workers delivered the Gospel message, and in spite of the materialism and spiritual indifference of the people good progress was made. A conference, arranged for three days, but extended to twelve as the result of a snow storm, was largely devoted to Bible study, and the result was a remarkable stimulus to spiritual life.

IN THE PUBLIC MARKETS,

Work among Chinese settlers in Penang was described by Mr. D. W. Cooper. Romish priests have made great efforts to obtain adherents by letting plots of land at low rates on condition that the hirers attend mass. Among the men employed on the nutmeg and tapioca plantations, Mr. Cooper was able to visit and hold meetings, morning and night. After making money the Chinese usually return to their own land, and it is encouraging to find that some of them hold firmly to the faith.

Spain was represented by Mr. George Davis, who referred in cordial terms to the useful labours of other brethren, and, proceeding, spoke of a wonderful spirit of prayerfulness among the native converts. In the southern parts of the country, beyond the Sierra Morena, moral laxity is more or less general, but the converts have witnessed by consistent lives. There are large towns with populations of 40,000 and 50,000, however, in which there is no Christian testimony. No difficulty is experienced in obtaining halls or securing a hearing, but when the Gospel is accepted persecution invariably sets in, generally through the wives of employers of labour, who are under priestly influences.

The concluding address was given by Mr. Israel I. Aschkenasi, who gave a vivid description of work among the Jews in continental countries, particularly in the colony in Paris, and went on to speak of the operations at home, which are carried on from the centre in Commercial Street, E.

The evening gathering, which was still more largely attended, was addressed by Dr. Neatby, and other friends.

The Scattered People.

IT is a fact that cannot be denied, and should not be ignored, that there are thousands of Christian Israelites in this country living holy and consistent lives, who, but for the efforts of missions definitely to Jews, would be in spiritual darkness to this day. One of the most vigorous of the numerous agencies in the metropolis seeking to evangelize and gather the scattered race into the fold of Christ is the Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel. At its annual meeting on Friday, a large number of friends assembled at the new Mission House to learn of the continued blessing which has rested upon the work, and to cheer and encourage those who are toiling in the heart of London Jewry. The results of the year's labour of Revs. David Baron, and C. A. Schönberger, and their devoted band of workers, are sufficient to call forth for the hand of God has been upon his servants, and those they have sought to honour Him.

PRAISE AND THANKSGIVING,

Apart from those who have publicly confessed Christ, hundreds have heard the Gospel preached, and been brought under Christian influence. At four o'clock each day the reading-room is open, and in the autumn and winter months is usually full, sometimes crowded; in the spring and summer visitors are not so numerous. There are always two or more brethren present to answer questions and enter into conversation with those who desire, and many a son of Israel has had his prejudices against the name of Jesus removed, and his difficulties solved. Thousands of messages are posted to Jews, who would not be induced to enter a mission-hall. Much sympathy was expressed on Friday with Mr. Baron, who is somewhat indisposed, and it was not without great effort that he was able to take part in the meeting. Speaking from the chair, Mr. J. E. Mathieson pointed out that all the religions which have stood the test of time have come from the East, Christianity itself being the development and consummation of what was taught ages ago in Palestine. Both Jew and Gentile look forward with hope to the time when, through the spread of that religion, the whole world will be brought to accept the faith of Jesus Christ.

The financial statement, made by Mr. A. Boake, was of a satisfactory nature. To the building fund, £7,730 has been contributed. It is a notable fact, that never once in the course of erecting the mission house was a demand for payment made which the workers were unable to meet. In order to discharge current liabilities, £1,000 is required within the next month or two.

A deeply interesting address followed by Mr. Baron, who related his experiences during a recent TOUR THROUGH EASTERN EUROPE.

To numerous towns and villages in Poland, Galicia, and Hungary, visits were paid, and the Gospel preached, particularly to Jews. Intense interest was aroused, and it was no unusual occurrence for the visitors to be engaged till nearly midnight dealing with anxious inquirers after the meetings. The long railway journeys were turned to good account, and conversations with Jewish passengers, in one case two Rabbis, were not without impressive results.

Helpful and inspiriting words were spoken by Rev. Robert Graves Walker; and Pastor Frank White conveyed the prayerful sympathy of the flock over which he has presided for more than a quarter of a century. He emphasized the need for Christians making effort to take the Gospel to the Jews. Rev. J. G. Train added thoughtful and earnest words, urging the importance of remembering that salvation is (1) of the Jews, (2) to the Jew, (3) and for the Jew.

Another meeting was held in the evening, when Rev. C. A. Schönberger and a number of helpers gave interesting particulars of the year's work at the Mission House to a sympathetic and numerous company of friends. Both gatherings were marked by a spirit of prayerful interest in the needs of Israel.

Missionaries in Conference.

WHAT is to be done with the thousands of orphan children left homeless and destitute by the famine, who are now at the various mission stations? is a problem which is exercising the minds of many anxious workers in India, as well as of those at home who are responsible for their support. In view of this situation, it was a happy idea of the Industrial Missions Aid Society to invite missionaries in London to a conference on Friday to consider the best means by which the difficulty can be solved. A goodly number of missionaries and friends responded to the invitation, and the experiences related and compared, with the suggestions received, will doubtless be found bearing fruit in many fields of activity. The chair was occupied by Sir C. R. Lighton, who compared the progress of the Society with the stages through which an insect passes before it reaches maturity. Having got beyond the chrysalis state it needed now only a little outward help in order that it may be able to accomplish the end for which it was inaugurated. The Society seeks to assist foreign missions all over the world by initiating industries side by side with missionary work and providing the necessary capital and

EFFICIENT BUSINESS MANAGEMENT.

In the course of a deeply interesting and exhaustive paper, Mr. H. W. Fry outlined the history, scope, and operations of the Society, defended its principles, and urged its claims. Besides establishing a carpet-factory at Ahmednagar (in which nearly 200 natives are employed), it has taken over industrial work, consisting of carpentry, &c., formerly carried on by the Church Missionary Society, at Nasik; capital has also been provided for assisting industrial work at Cawnpore, Aligarh, and Peru. Operations on a large scale are shortly to commence at Freretown, East Africa, in connection with Bishop Peel's work, and also in Peru. Passing on to speak of the result of the famine in India, Mr. Fry referred to the 25,000 orphans who have turned to the missionary as their only friend. In a few years these must go out into the world, and they must be trained to earn their own living, and work must be provided for them. The directors have resolved to open a central office in Bombay, to initiate new industrial enterprises, to commence household industries in the villages in India, to enable natives to carry on work in their own homes, to purchase and ship to England the produce of the missionary industries, to open in London a depôt where missionary products of every kind can be sold, and to take steps to extend industrial effort in all parts of the mission field. An effort is being made to raise £10,000 in order that the difficulty of providing for the famine orphans may be overcome and the objects of the Society accomplished.

In the course of the conversation which followed Mr. Fry's paper, many features of mission activity were represented, and much useful information was given by those who have been engaged in both the general and industrial service of the foreign field. Speaking from twenty years' experience in India, Rev. James Smith, of the American Marathi Mission, bore striking testimony to the need for training in manual labour those who have been since their acceptance of the Christian faith results in their being deprived of the means of livelihood. People too readily affirm that the work of the missionary is only to preach the Gospel, but in addition to this it is necessary to adapt the means to the end, and he had resolved that no young man who came to his school should leave without having learnt a trade suitable to his gifts. He had found a greater growth in grace and a nobler manliness among the boys going out from the manual training than those from the literary side of the school. An employer of some of the boys in applying for more remarked, "They behave like gentlemen and work like coolies." The difficulty is to give employment, for all the avenues of labour which are open to a Brahmin or Mohammedan are closed to the young man who becomes a Christian. Looking forward, Mr. Smith spoke with hopefulness. He is satisfied that if industries can be organized on a larger scale the time is not far distant when he, with others, will be able to move to other spheres, leaving their stations in the hands of the native Christians.

WON FOR CHRIST,

Rev. A. R. Cávalier expressed his conviction that the means adopted by the Society would meet a pressing need in the mission field. It has been found possible to train natives to do work which will be appreciated in the country. A suggestion was made by Canon Ball that the Society should train and send out men capable of repairing the buildings at mission stations. In one distict, with forty churches and mission houses, and 100 schools, all repairs, except a little thatching, have to be done by non-Christians.

Some useful counsel was offered by Mr. G. W. Dods, a director of the London Missionary Society, as to the methods which should be employed. There is no reason why such undertakings should not succeed, and if a profit is made from the financial point of view, and men are fitted for a Christian career, the Society has done much towards solving the problem with which missionaries are confronted. From Sierra Leone, Mr. W. F. Lucia brought tidings of a remarkable work instituted by Bishop Ingham. The technical school was formerly for educational purposes; but the need arose for developments, and building and other trades were introduced, with the result that it is no unusual thing to have orders in hand amounting to £10,000 from the various missionary societies. Last year a profit of £350 was realized.

Others who took part in discussion included Mr. Ashton (Calcutta), Mr. Patrick (Peru), and Mr. J. G. Potter (Baptist Mission Society). A very helpful and instructive Conference closed with the unanimous adoption of a resolution recognising that the time is ripe for organized industrial effort in India on a large scale under expert direction, and heartily approving of the Society's proposals to supply this need. Friends desiring to communicate with the Secretary, Mr. W. H. J. Hatch, may address him at the office of the Society, 17, Paternoster Row, E.C.

Roman Catholic Blasphemy.

FRIENDS whose sympathies have been enlisted on behalf of Bishop Hartzell's work in Madeira will read with interest the following extract from a letter received from Mr. Smart. An account of the persecution of the two men referred to in the second paragraph was given in our issue of May 9.

"I had two good meetings again at Serra on Sunday. It was the day for the 'Holy Spirit' to go around the valley opposite our Mount Faith Mission. Several men in red cloaks, playing stringed instruments, came to the cottages with little red flags or sticks, and a saucer with the figure of a dove in it, and they collected money for the 'Holy Spirit.' Most of our people, having had their eyes thoroughly opened, were indignant and looked upon it as a great blasphemy. The Roman Catholics prepare for the reception of the men, sugar-cane brandy, sweets, and so forth. The money collected goes on Whit-Sunday partly to feed twelve poor people in a pavilion near the church, partly for the priest, and the balance is divided among the men who collect it. It is considered a great sin to reject the 'Holy Spirit,' and shut the door to it. The priest is going to send it to the four homes of our people who live in another valley, and says that if they refuse to entertain the 'Holy Spirit' he will use renewed efforts with their landlord to drive them off his land.

"The two men threatened before, and whose children you baptized, went to town and interviewed the count. He rejected their present of eggs and butter, and spoke roughly to them, but so far has not turned them out. They have gone through a terrible struggle, and have both been sick in bed, but are better, and came to our meetings yesterday."

Livingstone Exhibition.

THE Livingstone Exhibition held in January of last year was so well received by the missionary and other travelling public that Dr. Harford-Battersby—the able secretary and promoter—was led to arrange for another to be held last week. Again success has marked the effort. The Exhibition has grown out of the work of Livingstone College, which, as our readers are aware, has for eight years provided a course of instruction in the laws of health, and the simple treatment of disease for missionaries going abroad. During this period a considerable amount of practical information has been gained concerning the conditions of life most suitable for those who are called upon to travel or work in dangerous climates, and it appeared desirable that such knowledge should be made available for a much wider circle than those who can enter for the course.

The loan collection included many of the available relics connected with the missionary explorer, lent by the Royal Geographical Society, Mrs. Bruce, Mrs. Wilson, as well as other relatives and friends. Without going into details we may mention that our attention was attracted by a section of the tree under which the heart of Dr. Livingstone was buried, on the shores of Lake Bangweolo. The original carved inscription was still easily readable, despite the effects of several years' growth. The well-used Bible carried through all the journeys, portions of the last journal written after all plain paper and ink had failed, were there, with many another touching memorial.

More practical in their own way were the exhibits of tents, food, clothing, with medical, sanitary, heating, lighting, hygienic, and other special apparatus. All were adapted to the needs of travellers in tropical and arctic climates. Mr. Frank Wilson's lecture was not the only reminder of the different circumstances under which the new workers go forth from those who did the pioneering work.

Another great change of recent years found expression through Sir George Taubman-Goldie, who performed the opening ceremony. In his early African travels, he said, he had been greatly prejudiced against missionary effort, having paid too close attention to the shortcomings of a certain number of the missionaries. His experience had compelled him to change his opinion, and for twenty years his conviction had been deepening that, even from a purely secular standpoint, missionary effort had conferred, directly and indirectly, immense benefits on tropical Africa.

The programme included lectures by Dr. Harford-Battersby, Dr. F. W. Willway, Dr. Robert Howard, and Dr. L. W. Sambon; and the promoters were much gratified by the large numbers who attended of the very classes whom it was desired to reach.

The Suffering Poor.

WE have been making various internal changes in our Cottage Home at Chingford which will enable us, if funds are forthcoming, to receive an increased number of sick and convalescent poor. We are very anxious to make the Cottage serve to its utmost capacity its purposes of rest and healing to body and soul. Amongst many we hope to send down this summer are the following:—A widowed dressmaker in slow decline, but entirely dependent upon her own fitful earnings. A delicate, growing girl, and a delicate younger sister, two out of a family of fatherless children, and for whom a brave mother is doing her best in much weakness. A deserted wife in consumption, so weak as to constantly faint away, but still working at sweating rates "to keep the wolf from the door." An invalid widow, her deformed daughter, and a younger girl, also slightly deformed and delicate. The cases are merely representative of the majority of those we shall be able to help if our kind friends will again render assistance.

Annie F. Perram, Hon. Sec.,
Mission of Help to the Suffering Poor,
90, Darenth Road, Stamford Hill, N.

A Visit to Senghenydd.

In company with Mr. Wintle, the hon. superintendent of the Pontymoile Mission, we went to Senghenydd last week to visit some of the families who, in the recent terrible explosion, had been bereaved of their bread-winners.

The first widow we visited, a thin, pale-faced young woman, had lost, besides husband and father, four other relatives. When Mr. Wintle first visited her, she sat in her room, silent tears flowing down her cheeks. To a remark of sympathy, she said: "All have gone, all, but one is left." "Who is that?" asked her visitor, supposing she meant some relative. "Jesus," she replied, proving that she had the true Sympathizer with her.

Another, whom we visited, points to a photo above the mantelpiece: "This is my son, twenty-three years of age. Fine fellow he was. There was no better boy anywhere. It was—mother here, mother there, mother everywhere—always mother." And she bursts out into a passionate sobbing, in the anguish of a mother's heart almost forgetting the widow's grief; for husband and son had perished together. She is left with six children.

We peep into another house to shake hands with a poor bereaved one who, after the explosion, could not admit the possibility of her husband's death. He knew the mine too well; he must have found a hiding-place, and would come as soon as he could be released. In order to be ready for him she kept the kettle singing by the fire until they brought his body. Oh, the despair!

The only man saved alive has been in delirium ever since; but there is a hope of his recovery.

Mr. Wintle, who is acquainted with all the cases, tells us of a particularly pathetic one. The only child of her parents would cry piteously for her daddy to come home. But daddy, always so willing to listen to his precious little girl, won't come—no he won't. Yet she would continue to call out for him for hours, for days, until her fluttering little heart could stand the strain no longer, and as daddy would not come, she went to him.

A widow referred to in a previous number of The Christian, whose husband and son perished in the explosion, had for some time past been in delicate health, suffering from disease of the eyes. The agony of suspense while waiting for the bodies of her loved ones, was so great, that, when a fortnight after, her husband was carried past the house to the place of burial she was prematurely confined. She became totally blind, and the body of her son had not yet been recovered.

These cases convey some idea of the suffering and distress which have entered the homes of the eighty-three victims of this disastrous explosion. Any contributions in relief of the widows and orphans will be very gratefully received. W. M.

British and Foreign Bible Society.

At a meeting of the committee on June 17 the following resolution was passed, with reference to the circulation by the Society of the Revised Version of the English Bible:—"This committee thinks it desirable to issue the Revised Versions of 1881 and 1885, either by themselves or as alternative readings to the Authorized Version or in both forms, and suggests that steps should be taken to revise the laws of the Society to attain this object."

The first law of the Society as it stands at present is interpreted to restrict the circulation of English versions of the Bible to the "Authorized" version of 1611. In passing the above resolution it was clearly understood, to quote the words of a letter from the president of the Society, the Marquis of Northampton, read at the meeting of the committee, that "unless special application for the Revised Version be made" the Authorized Version will be supplied by the Society as heretofore.

Troops at Lydd.—Mr. F. E. Wootton, of the Soldiers' Home, Lydd, has received permission to visit the camp on Sunday afternoons, and hold services for the hundreds of soldiers stationed there. He would be glad to hear from any gentlemen who may be willing to spend the week-end at Lydd (at their own cost), and assist in this effort. Mr. Wootton's address is North View, Lydd, Kent.

Miss Macpherson's Work.

The seventy-seventh party of youthful emigrants from the Home of Industry (29, Bethnal Green Road), have safely crossed the Atlantic Ocean, and Miss Annie Macpherson invites friends to join in praise for much experience of the goodness of the Lord. When the cases were looked into, it was found that of this company eighteen were entirely orphans, eighteen more were motherless, while some were from families where the breadwinner was gone, and in other cases the love of drink had blunted every good feeling in the parents. To those who read between the lines, there is a pathetic touch in the report that, as the children were settled in their new homes, in no case were there visible signs of regret for the change.

The prayers of many are answered in the steady work of grace which is found to be going on among the young people who went out in former years. "Many and many a boy and girl, after conversion, writes at once to the friends at the Home, sure of sympathy." One girl, who went out in 1887, and who was led to the truth two years ago, writes, "I would like very much to be a missionary, but must be contented with the work our Saviour gives me to do."

A number of the beds in the training home are empty, while the Canadian friends have more applications than they can satisfy from good farmhouse homes. Well may Miss Macpherson ask why little ones should pine away in workhouses, or in other ways be deprived of loving care? For every £10 given, a child can be provided with outfit and maintenance during training, sent out to Canada, and supervised until grown up.

Blackdown Hills Mission.

Writing of the fruitful endeavours which have been made by the Blackdown Hills Mission, Mr. W. H. Brealey, the superintendent, says: "We are grateful to God that the meetings held in the various mission rooms, the day and Sunday schools, and the evening classes, have been earnestly sustained. The congregations in most of the mission stations are exceedingly good (some of the mission rooms being always well filled), and God has cheered the workers by saving souls, many of whom are entirely voluntary helpers, who give much of their time to the work, while some are dependent upon the Lord for their supplies. We are anxious to help the many sick and very needy ones in their distress, and for this we look to God. The believers on the hills are for the most part very poor, and hence it is impossible for the work to be self-supporting. Our two Gospel tents, which were so badly damaged by the gales last year, are still waiting to be repaired and set to use in the needy districts. We have received and evangelists are ready to undertake the work. Doors are wide open, but we cannot give the order for the repairs, which will cost over £20, until we have the means required.

URGENT INVITATIONS,

"Mr. and Mrs. Showell, who have been residing on the Hills and labouring among the people more or less during the past ten years, have for some time felt scarcely equal to the work and strain involved—and, making it an earnest matter of prayer, have come to the conclusion that it is their Heavenly Father's will that they should leave. We are looking to the Lord to raise up some servant of his with private means, who would be willing to reside on the Hills and take an interest in the work. A most happy, blessed, and fruitful sphere of service would be open to such a one. One of the chief features of the Mission on the Blackdown Hills ever has been and still is, school work—day schools, evening classes, Sunday schools, and children's services. If our best workers come from the rural districts, can we afford to neglect these far-away villages? Ought we not in return to help the weary but earnest labourers in these remote parts?"

Scottish Notes.

A satisfactory amalgamation of village congregations is now taking place at Eaglesham, where complete harmony and unanimity seem to prevail. It is expected that the arrangement will be confirmed by the Presbytery and consummated at an early date.

The Dunfermline Public House Society has been refused the transference of a hotel licence for which it applied with the intention of working it on the Gothenburg system. A petition was, however, presented contending, among other points, that the so-called Gothenburg experiment is calculated to retard temperance reform and to make public-houses respectable, and thus increase the demoralization of the people; that its pretended advantages are only a delusion; and that its whole tendency is towards the degradation of the community. It is believed, however, that the magistrates would have come to a different decision had the Society acquired a public-house rather than a hotel, which it is contended is required in the town.

The half-yearly meetings of the Northern Association of Congregational Churches were held at New Deer, on Tuesday of last week, when an earnest discussion took place on the present position of Biblical criticism. Friendly references to the desirability of unity were made by representatives of the Established and Free Churches. One member, however, said he did not crave a corporate union. That he rather dreaded, as he believed it would not be conducive to very effective or aggressive Christian work. Another speaker said there was no doubt that differences in religious matters were abating, and he thought there were indications of larger unity of spirit, and perhaps of faith, in the future than there had been in the past. Even in their own Church they were adopting the Presbyterian Hymnal.

The opening service in the new missionary premises of the Deaf and Dumb of Dundee and District, Dudhope Park, was conducted last week by Rev. Dr. Colin Campbell. There was a large attendance of the afflicted people and their friends, the little chapel being quite filled. Rev. Charles Shaw, Rev. Walter Walsh, and Mr. Archibald Welsh, the missionary, were also on the platform. The sermon was on "I desire mercy and not sacrifice" (Matthew ix. 13). He had sought that day to put before them as a leading thought for their own lives the idea of mercy and compassion towards others, for that was the real foundation of human society. He had the greatest sympathy with their condition, a condition which he would not dwell upon, because he felt and knew it was only for a little while, and that one day the ears of the deaf would be unstopped and the lips of the dumb unsealed by the power, and to the glory, of God. He urged them to value highly the privileges that had been recently conferred upon them in meeting in that splendid place and in enjoying the services of their talented missionary, Mr. Welsh. The sermon, as well as the psalms and prayers, was interpreted by Mr. Welsh as the service proceeded.

At a meeting last week of the Scottish Threefold Option Alliance, the recently-appointed organizing secretary (Mr. W. B. Gardner) explained that the Temperance Reform Threefold Option (Scotland) Bill had not been reintroduced into Parliament during the present session. It was considered that it would be more helpful to the temperance cause to keep the Parliamentary field clear, in order to induce either a resolution to be submitted calling on the Government to initiate legislation following upon the Royal Commission's report, or a measure on the lines of the minority report or of other proposals of the Royal Commission to be laid upon the table of Parliament. Had such a bill been presented the executive were prepared to suspend their agitation for the special proposals of their own bill, and to lend their efforts to secure any legislation of a remedial nature bearing upon the licensing laws, assured that this would have had the effect of making the course clearer for a bill in the future embodying the principles of the Alliance. No bill on the lines anticipated had yet been presented to Parliament; and it was felt that the Alliance must now consider whether their own Bill, recast to a slight extent on the lines of the minority report, should not be introduced, in order that an agitation on more definite lines than could otherwise be attempted might be carried on; and that the principles to which Lord Peel and his coadjutors have secured so much attention might ere long issue in practical legislation.

Limehouse Christian Mission.—Owing to the hall in which the agencies of this Mission have been so successfully sustained for the past ten years being required for other purposes, the work has been transferred to Coverdale Chapel, Commercial Road. Among young and old, the efforts of the promoters are being continued with renewed vigour, and are attended by encouraging results. Mr. J. Blair, the secretary, may be addressed, 24, Salmon Lane, London, E.

From Barotsiland.

BY PASTOR F. COILLARD.

THE Lord has called us again to pass through the deep waters of affliction. After the death of Mdlle. Dupuy, the storm seemed over, and the young workers who had survived that first year in this terrible climate were all full of courage, and threw themselves heart and soul into the work. Everywhere we noticed hopeful signs—the schools were prosperous, and the meetings well attended; and we began to hope that, after having sown in tears so long, we were on the eve of reaping with joy.

Our Industrial School had made a good start; we counted upon it specially for bettering our dwelling-houses, and, in order to give that school all the impulsion we could, we had resolved to send its director, Mons. G. Mercier, home, for the double purpose of getting married, and of procuring machinery and the tools which were most urgently needed.

Our brother had to wait several weeks at the Victoria Falls, where Mons. and Madame Coüson are beginning a new station. When at last the long-expected transport waggons were announced, and he was preparing to cross the river, our friend was seized with a severe attack of hæmaturia, which in a few days carried him off. The Lord did not allow his servant to leave the country to which he had given himself, with all his talents, his manhood, and his life. There on the banks of the great river his grave is to be of the love of God to these people.

ANOTHER SILENT WITNESS

We were stunned, and had not yet recovered from this sudden stroke when several members of the Mission were in turn brought to the brink of the grave either by paludean fever or hæmaturia. After struggling for a whole year, Mr. and Mrs. Mann were obliged to leave for England, and their work at Mabumbu, which was most encouraging, is left to the care of a Zambesian native teacher, and the superior primary school of Mrs. Mann we entrusted to my young and beloved colleague, Mons. Liénard—a work not exactly of his own choice, but he ungrudgingly threw all his energy into it. On his return to Sefula, he was apparently in good health and spirits. But from the pulpit he went straight to his bed, feeling chilly; he was seized with the dreaded hæmaturia, and the Thursday following breathed his last, and fell asleep in the Lord.

Suddenly called, I arrived in time to speak a few words to him. It was only then that he realized that his end was fast approaching. Hitherto, he had clung to life—"he had come here not to die, but to work;" but when he understood that his Lord had ordered differently, he received grace meekly and peacefully to submit. Thus suddenly closed just at its dawn a career full of promise. A true scholar, cultivated and well-informed, our brother was wonderfully gifted every way. He could put his hands to any manual labour with the same skill and cheerfulness as to his pen. He had grasped the native language which he spoke beautifully, and had got already a deep insight into the mind of our Zambesians. His indomitable energy made him take upon himself more than his share of the work, while his lovely character and the tenderness of his affection endeared him to those with whom he was in daily contact. We do not grudge the promotion of our young brother to higher service. But we, who are left with the burden, wear deep affliction, although we know that the Lord will care for his own work and yet glorify Himself. Do pray for us.

—Yours in the Lord's service,

Lealuyi, March 23, 1901. F. COILLARD.

Theodore L. Cuyler Church, Canton.—The members of Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, have been mainly instrumental in the erection of a church at Canton, China, which will seat nearly 1,000 persons, and it has most appropriately been named after Dr. Cuyler. The missionary in charge, Rev. A. A. Fulton, went out to the mission field from Dr. Cuyler's congregation.

Progress in Sumatra.

ON his late visit of inspection to the stations of the Rhenish Missionary Society, Rev. Dr. Schreiber penetrated Sumatra to the Toba country. Arrived at the Toba Lake, he found a teeming population. Here was the real seat of the old Batak heathenism, and from the outset this region has been the goal of the missionaries.

The history of the Mission may be told in a few words. In 1873 three of the brethren, after many adventures, succeeded in reaching the Toba Lake (sacred to the chief divinity of the Bataks); they were within an inch of being killed by the raging multitude, and were only saved by the intervention of a friendly chief.

In spite of the hostile attitude of the people, in spite of molestations, attempts at poisoning and incendiarism, the brethren held on, and were able, three years later, to establish their first station at Bahal Batu, on the extensive plain between Silindung and the lake. In 1881 a further step was taken in the formation of a settlement on the shores of the lake itself; but this advance met with more determined resistance, and three times the workers suffered from a hostile attack under the leadership of the chief priest, who saw himself threatened in his sway over the people. The missionaries, whose property was destroyed, and who barely escaped with their lives, owed their preservation partly to the presence, in the neighbourhood, of a Dutch garrison.

For a time the Governor decided, for the sake of peace and quietness, to confine the operations of the brethren within certain well-defined limits, where he felt himself able to protect them. In 1890 he withdrew his veto, and the brethren promptly availed themselves of the opportunity for re-occupying former ground, for which they had made every preparation. Four additional stations were immediately opened on the south-eastern shore of the lake. When Dr. Schreiber arrived at Toba in the middle of 1899, he found eleven stations on the lake, and two on the steppe. When are completed, there will be seventeen chief stations, each surrounded by its branches, the former to be in charge of missionaries, the latter to be occupied by native evangelists and teachers.

THE PROJECTED EXTENSIONS

Within less than thirty years the Rhenish Society will have gathered in the Toba country ninety churches, with 12,000 members, and 4,000 candidates under instruction. These are served by eighteen brethren, two sisters, four native pastors, ninety teachers and evangelists, and about 350 elders. In addition, there are eighty-three schools, with 2,800 scholars.

While much has been done, more remains to be done. The whole Northern part of the Toba Island, as well as the Eastern and Northern shores of the Toba Lake, all thickly populated, are as yet unoccupied, and present an open door. The same magazine which gives these particulars (Rheinische Missions Berichte for May) contains an appeal for help, to meet a deficit of £7,300, with which the last report closes, and which represents legitimate inevitable developments in Sumatra, Nias, and among the Hereros, such as should rejoice the heart of every Christian. Within twelve years the number of the Society's missionaries has risen from seventy-eight to 147, and the number of their church members from 35,000 to 82,000. Since the greater blessing has been so abundantly vouchsafed of God, the lesser blessing of material support will assuredly not be withheld. B. HITJER.

Answers to Prayer.—Refering to a statement in PRAYER AND ITS ANSWER (Partridge) that Mr. George Müller, having prayed for over thirty-six years for the conversion of five persons, three of them had been converted, but two still remained unsaved in 1896—we are informed that the author has just received a letter, saying, "It seems that one of the two was converted a few months before Mr. Müller's death, but the other not till a week or two after that event." Here we have another signal instance of the supplication of a righteous man availing much in its working.

Echoes from The Paris Exhibition.

VISITORS to the Paris Exhibition must have been impressed by the numerous efforts which were made to preach the Gospel to the thousands who daily assembled, and the report of the work which was carried on at the Salle Evangélique will be read with interest by those who contributed towards its maintenance. From May 16 to November 12, meetings were held nightly in the Salle, and on Sunday afternoons the services were conducted by the Paris Y.M.C.A. The young men took up the work with great heartiness, dividing among themselves the various duties of inviting visitors to enter, showing them to their places, conducting the music and singing, and giving the addresses. At the evening gatherings the attendance often reached over 600. In many cases a deep impression was made, evidenced not only by the reverent attention given to the speakers, but by the grateful expressions to the ladies who assisted at the services.

The Salle was the centre of gratuitous distribution of portions of Scripture carried on in connection with the Exhibition. The British and Foreign Bible Society printed 400,000 Gospels bearing the imprint, "Souvenir de l'Exposition." The Scripture Gift Mission distributed 450,000 portions, including Gospels and Epistles, and the Geneva Evangelical Society 30,000 Gospels. It has been encouraging to the different workers to hear, since the Exhibition closed, of the Gospels and tracts received being carefully treasured, read and re-read in widely-separated parts of France.

The morning prayer meetings, held at the Salle, were found to be extremely helpful by the workers who gathered at the Throne of Grace, and were joined by visitors, before going forth to their numerous branches of Christian service. They fitly culminated in a series of undenominational meetings held during the last week of the Exhibition. The results of this great scattering of the Word must be far-reaching, and become a stimulus to Christian hearts who are praying for the return of the French nation, with all its precious gifts, to the faith of the martyred Huguenots. The deficit of nearly £200 that still remains against the work has been advanced by the M'All Mission, which, however, is in urgent need of additional support for the maintenance of its invaluable service, and can ill afford to bear a burden which it had already declined as being beyond its strength. Communications may be sent to Mr. J. G. Alexander, 8, Grove Hill, Tunbridge Wells.

Italian Evangelical Church.

THE report of the Italian Evangelical Church (formerly called Free Italian Church) for the years 1899-1900 exhibits a somewhat distressful condition of things. The work proceeds steadily, but the funds by no means support it. In fact, the Committee has been obliged to give official intimation to the directors of the elementary schools, also to all the teachers and others interested, that they may shortly be compelled to close the schools! This would, of course, mean irreparable damage to the mission work!

Rev. Cav. Fera, foreign secretary, writes: "The work is not ours but God's; He has confided this mission to our weak hands, to show forth his omnipotence and his glory, and for the welfare of Italy; to extend the kingdom of his Son, of our dear Saviour and Head, and for his own eternal glory. He will certainly deliver us; our faith is in Him alone. We think of our pastors, of evangelists, of all our school teachers and their numerous families, without bread, without resources . . . and our hearts are broken! Our prayers, our cries, and our tears go up to God, especially in this moment of great sorrow and humiliation for the good work and for ourselves."

This work is that with which the late Dr. J. R. MacDougall was so long and so honourably associated.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

I want to interest my elder "Young People" every week in what Mr. Meyer writes on the Christian Endeavour Topic. Parents will also find the S.S. Lesson Notes suggestive and helpful for Sunday talks with their young folk. See next page.)

Pen Pictures from Afar.

SOME TYPES OF CHINESE CONVERTS.

I RECENTLY had the pleasure of saying "God speed" to a beloved missionary returning to his work in China. Already he has done splendid service for Christ in that sadly disturbed country. By the time you read this he will be far on his journey. No fear, no thought of peril, can restrain him. "China for Christ" is his watchword.

I wish all the young readers of The Christian could have heard his "farewell" words. He really seemed to pity those who were being left behind, since they could not share in the joy of telling the Chinese of the love of God and the gift of his Son for the salvation of men.

One thing my friend told us about was the wonderful steadfastness of the native converts during the recent reign of terror. The faith of these Christians could not be shaken. They had gladly suffered the loss of all things in confessing Christ. When face to face with death numbers of them never dreamt of denying Him. I am not quite sure whether some Christians in England could have maintained such courage and consistency under similar circumstances.

My friend was also certain that in the end the terrible disturbances would mean the further extension of the Kingdom of Christ in China. One or two pen pictures of natives who were "not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ" will give you an idea of the kind of converts that are to be found in China:—

Hao Lao Hsiao is a convert of twenty-five years standing. No young follower of Christ, in the first flush of his devotion, could be more energetic in seeking souls. Meeting a person on the road, he will stop him with little ceremony and ask, "Have you heard the news?" The stranger, expecting tidings of a marriage or birth of a son, replies, "What news?" Lao Hsiao, with his forefinger raised (without which he can do nothing), seizes the opportunity, and is soon telling the Gospel message, painting graphically the glories of heaven for those who accept Christ as their crucified and risen Saviour, and comparing these with the hopeless beliefs of the heathen. "Now, you've heard the news—What's your decision?" Invariably the person tries to shuffle out, and remarks: "It's a very good doctrine." This is not enough for Hsiao, who continues: "You say it's good; in what way is it good? Why don't you accept it?"

Chang Ching Yu suffered from a troublesome disease requiring surgical treatment. He travelled 200 miles to Tientsin, but was told there was no hope of recovery. One day he heard a preacher speaking of Jesus of Nazareth as the first medical missionary. He listened, was impressed, and resolved: "I will pray to this great Healer who has cured so many hopeless cases." Meeting a Christian from a neighbouring village, they united in prayer, spreading their case like Hezekiah before the Lord. Mr. Chang determined, "If this great God, whom I have heard about, heals me, I will become his follower, and tell of Him wherever I go. My house, too, shall be used as a place of worship where others can hear of his love and power." He recovered, and kept his promise. His house became the first church in connection with the Chi Chou Mission.

Yang Ching Ngan was for many years a slave to opium smoking. His nephew, returning on one occasion from Wuchang, brought with him a copy of a tract, "Martin's Evidences of Christianity." Mr. Yang read it again and again, and at length gladdened the heart of the missionary by applying for baptism. He became the first convert to Christianity in the Liu Kang district of Central China. Of course, he gave up his opium smoking, and in a short time won over several of his friends who, following his example, became Christians in deed and in truth. When the little chapel was about to be built, he gave the land and promised a good sum of money in addition.

Who can for a moment doubt, when men like these abandon their heathenism, and cheerfully accept all the sacrifices which faith in Christ demands, that the whole work is of God? We have reason to thank God very earnestly for the steadfastness of Chinese Christians, and also to pray that in any hour of trial yet before them, their faith may not fail. J. W.

"The Christian" Bible Searcher.

22nd Quarterly Prize Competition.

April to June.

RULES.

☞ Will parents and teachers kindly see that each of the following rules is strictly observed, especially Nos. 5, 7 and 10? The only help permitted is to explain the meaning of the rules or questions, if necessary.

1. Only those may enter whose names appear in the list below as having been right eight times out of eleven.

2. Competitors will be divided into Four Divisions:—
   I. Those under ten years of age.
   II. Those over ten and under thirteen.
   III. Those over thirteen and under fifteen.
   IV. Those between fifteen and eighteen.

3. Write outside your envelope in large letters the words "Prize Competition," and the Number of the Division to which you belong; and address it to "Uncle Tom," as usual.

4. At the top of your paper write very clearly your Division, your Full Name and Address, and Age last birthday.

5. The questions must be answered in the Right Order. The answers must be written on either Foolscap or Quarto size sheets, and on one side of the paper only. Number your Answers exactly to correspond with the questions.

6. Every paper must be signed by a parent or teacher to testify that Rule 7 has been observed.

7. No Concordance and no help allowed; only the use of a Reference Bible. ☞ Competitors must not help each other.

8. The last day for answers to reach the office is Wednesday July 10. The results will be announced on July 18.

9. Marks will be given for accuracy, neatness, writing, spelling, &c., the rewards being: First Prize, Second Prize, First Certificate, and Second Certificate.

10. Chapter and Verse must be given wherever possible.

11. Those who cannot do all the questions set for their division must do as many as they can, and will receive marks accordingly. No papers can be re-examined. And don't forget Rule 5!

☞ Any seniors who are over Eighteen years of age may do the Competition, and have their names included in the lists, but will not be eligible for the prizes.

PRIZE COMPETITION.

Divisions I. and II.

[Division I. Do only Nos. 1, 2, 4, 7, 8, and a-f of No. 9.]

1. (a) Tell the story of Cain and Abel. (b) Why was Abel's sacrifice more acceptable to God than Cain's?

2. (a) Who "walked with God"? (b) How did God treat him differently to other men? (c) Why?

3. (a) Give (where you can) the ages at death of the persons mentioned in Hebrews xi. 1-22. (b) Say which of them lived before the Flood, and which after it.

4. (a) Describe the Flood. (b) Who lived through it? (c) What relations were they to each other?

5. (a) Describe briefly three of the principal events in Abram's life. (b) What name was afterwards given to him? (c) Why?

6. (a) Whom did Isaac marry? (b) How did he find his wife? (c) Who were his children?

7. Describe all the dreams with which Joseph had to do.

8. Give the names of Jacob's sons.

9. By whom, to whom, and why were the following spoken? (a) "They will save thee alive." (b) "Thou shalt go to thy fathers." (c) "He will be a wild man." (d) "I will fetch a morsel of bread." (e) "Up, get you out." (f) "What aileth thee?" (g) "Where is the lamb." (h) "We cannot speak unto thee bad or good." (i) "Bless me, even me also." (j) "I will not let thee go." (k) "Lay no hand upon him." (l) "I will nourish you."

Divisions III. and IV.

[Division III. omit Nos. 1 (b, c), 2, and 3.]

1. (a) Name the six principal offerings. (b) Of what might each be composed? (c) What was forbidden, and what was compulsory in all or any of them?

2. State briefly what provision was made for sin through ignorance on the part of (a) the priest? (b) the congregation? (c) a ruler? (d) an ordinary person?

3. Distinguish between the sin and trespass offerings, as regards their purpose.

4. What characteristic had the peace offering that is not found in the others?

5. (a) Who was the high priest? (b) What was his dress? (c) Who were Aaron's sons? (d) What was their dress?

6. (a) What special mark was put upon the high priest and his sons? (b) Where was it put?

7. (a) With whom was Moses angry? (b) Why?

8. (a) On what condition should the glory of the Lord appear? (b) What happened when it did?

9. Give lists of the animals that the people (a) might and (b) might not eat. (c) By what rule was the distinction made?

10. Give similar lists of birds and other living things.

(In Hebrews.)

11. In what respect was Christ like or unlike (a) Moses? (b) Aaron? (c) Melchisedec?

12. (a) What are we encouraged to do by the similarity between Christ and Aaron? (b) Why?

13. What differences are noted between (a) the first and second covenants? (b) The work of the high priest and that of Christ?

The following are eligible for the Competition this quarter:—

A—Ernest and Ralph Aldwinckle, Ethel Alford, Mabel Ashwell, Irene Ashdown, Douglas Anderson Berry.

B—Louise Betts, Leonard Browne, Beatrice Brouard, Gordon and May Bligh, Violette Birney, Herbert Braddon, Frances Burnett, Eunice Baber, James Barker, Ella Berryman, Emily Bridgewater, Ernestine Buhl, Lucienne Brabandes, Dorothy Berry, James Bryant, Mary and Susette Beck, Dorothy Brooks, Massey and Conyers Baker, Robert Bushby, Ada Bratt, Evelyn Butlin, Gordon Berry, Mabel, Evelyn, Ileane, and Hilda Barstow, Mabel Baker, Cyril Baddeley, Aline Bazett, Harold Berry, Marion Boyle, Helen Beck, Maud Bunn, Annie Blackie, Alison and Monica Bailey, Millicent Buckingham.

C—Hannah Chapman, Mabel Campe, Hilda Cook, Anna Chanyen, Sophie Cohen Lydia Cleary, Augusta Clark, Mabel and Ida Cole, Jessie and Maggie Carter, Gladys Clark, Mabel Candlin, John and David Colville, Alfred Cocking, Beryl and Gladys Calvert, George Cross, George Crawford, Duncan Campbell, George Cary, Kitty Cope, Ernest and Annie Cole, May Cullen, Hyde Campbell, Henry Colville, Ida Cullen, Josephine and Elma Cheal, Percy and Stanley Chappell, Ruth Collis, Dorothy Cooper.

D—Kittie and Violet Donaldson-Selby, Willie and Nellie Dowsett, Stanley Drew, Pelognia Daws, Harold Davis, Ralph and Dorothy Daintree, Hilda, Elizabeth and Constance Drayson, Marjory Dyke, May Darroll, Marie Denizot, Mai and Violet Davidson, Thomas Dunn, Ethel Dancy, Catherine, Emily, Grace and Willie Demster.

E—Olive and Leonard Ewin.

F—Percy Fitch, Eirene Fennell, Vincent, Mabel and Olive Fleet, Ethel Fowler, Hyacinth FitzSimons, Phyllis Fry, Louise Filhol, Jeanne Faucon, Laura Finch, Frances and Aileen Figgis, Arthur Foley, Gwendolen Fennell, Kitty Fausset, Harry Flashman.

G Cicely Gibson, Evelyn Gulston, Thomas Gilbert, G., C. and M. Graham-Brown, Margie Goudge, Stuart, Dorothy and Jack Gray, Grace Gulston, David Gardiner, Margaret Guillaume, Margaret Gorrie, Winifred Gardner, Grace Goldsmith, Dorothy and Gladys Gibson, Katie Green, George Goodall, Mary Glass, Elsie and Isabel Goudge.

H—Hilda Hooper, Annie Horstcraft, Dorothy Hunt, Mary and Elizabeth Hooper, Beatrice Hastings, Hetty Hill, Violet Holford, Florence, Francie, Julyan and Norman Hoyte, Ella Hake, Georgette Hoffmann, Willie Hooper, Henry, Edith and Winifred Harvey, May and Sandy Handasyde, Nellie Hatchett, Ruth Hunt, Sydney Handford, Elsie and Dorothy Hanson, Violet Hatch, Dorothy Havergal-Shaw, Ina Hemmell, Dorothy Heckford.

I—Daisy Iredell, Nellie Irving, Elsie Irvine, Amiand Isabel Inglis.

J—Betty Jacobs, Emily Jones, Hilda, Winifred and Louie Jeffery, Linda Jones, Alfred Johnson, David Jameson, Amelia Jacobson.

K—Annie Kingsford, M. Kinnaird, Maurice Kalinsky, Max and Eva Kalb, Hannah Knapp, Grace, Philippa and Dorothy Kerr, Lionel Kepple.

L—Georgina Lichtenstein, Sidney and Mary Law, Arthur Llewellyn, Gladys Lee, Beatrice Le Mesurier.

M—Alan Marshall, Fannie Messenger, Tom McGlone, Mabel Morris, Doris Martin, Mildred Morgan, Dorothy McMullin, Evie and Alec Miller, Grace, Arthur, Nellie and Lewis Morice, May Hills, Arthur McLeod Johnson, Daniel, Margaret and Dorothy Morris, Charlotte Millar, Margie Marston, Dora Muir, Daisie Mackenzie, Barbara Maconchy, John and Ella MacMurray, Dorothy, Winnie and Leonard Mace, Dorothy Morgan, Bella Morrice, Amy Munday, Jessie and Charles Morrison, Marjorie Martin, Harvey Moore, Godfrey Miller, Ella, Ivy and Margaret McFadzean, Aldie and Edith Margetts, William Morrice, Nora Marshall, Charles McMullin, Sidney, John, Winifred, Mollie and Geoffrey Martin.

N—Daisy Nicholas, Emily Norris, Hilda and Gerald Nicholls, Eleanor and Valerie Noel, Edith Nash, Amy and Maude Nottage, Blanche Norcock.

O—Olive Oxley, Maude and Eva Oakes.

P—Olive Pine Coffin, Dora Phillimore, William Porter, Christine Pearson, Myrtle Perry, Leonard and Walter Picknell, Kathleen Pincott, Ruth Pledger, Kathleen and Ethel Pasley, Gladys and Isabel Phipps, Lucy and Mabel Pelham-Burn, Cyrill Partridge, Clarice, Geoffrey and Percy Peach, Edith Palmer, Laura Percy, Mary Pearson, Jessie Palmer, Enid Pincott, Isabel Perks, Willie Palmer, Evelyn Primrose Pechey. Q—Frances Quance.

R—Marjorie Roberts, Cicely Roe, Hilda Reid, Maggie Russell, Alice and Jessie Ricketts, Kate Rosenbloom, Marion Richards, Alice Reid, Olive Robinson, Jessie and Elmina Roe, Ada Renals, Marion and Gussie Roach, Marjorie Rainey, Eva Rodgers, Aileen Roberts, May Rodgers.

S—Reginald Skinner, Agnes Shields, Grace Spurgeon, Whately Smith, Esther Simmons, Margery Smart, Frances Stileman, Amy Simmons, Kathleen Shepherd, Betty Stocks, Effie, Florence and Ellen Simpson, Stanley W. Smith, Violet and Evelyn Shaw, Hugh Shields, Dollie Salt, Flora Smith, M. Spurgeon, Poppie Stidolph, Constance Schaeffer, Lily and Ellen Scriven, Christine Soans, David and Stanley Soman, Edgar Schaeffer, Lydia Shirley, Glanvill Smith, Raymond, Augusta and William Simpkin, Mary Sowden.

T—Archibald Thorn, Evelyn Tracey, Dudley Toye, Florence Tomlinson, Theodora Thorn, Willie Thomas, Winifred Trotter, Bertha Tranter, Flossie and Charlie Thomson, Reginald Thresh, Margaret Tweedy.

U—Eva Usher.

W—Ellen Williams, Mansfield White, Dorothy Woodforde, Stephen Wilson, Mabel and Theo Wallis, Nora and Ellie Wyatt, Ronald Watson, Bertram Webb, Charles Wingrave, Dorothy White, Sarah and Annie Wood, Florence Wilde, Cecile and Phillis Wright, Fannie Wheeler, Agatha Ward, James, Rachel, Sarah and Georgina Wilson, Ernest, Kenrick and Queenie Wakeford, Edward and Edith Wheeler, Pringle Wilson, Leonard Wall, Louisa and Violet Walker, Bertie Wallis, Winnie Williams, Gertrude Williams, Sidney Wisdom, Wilfred and Sidney Watson, Nellie and Rachel Wilson, Ruth Warren, Kathleen Wingrave, Gladys, Lilian and Elsie Willoughby, Katie Welch, Mary Wilson, Helen Whitney.

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (283).

1. They that turn many to righteousness. For ever and ever (Dan. xii. 3).

2. God said, Let there be light; and there was light; He saw the light that it was good; He divided the light from the darkness; He called the light Day, and the darkness Night (Gen. i. 3, 4, and 5).

3. The star, which appeared in the east, went before them. It brought them to where the young child, Jesus, lay (Matt. ii. 9).

4. Righteous (Psa. xcvii. 11).

5. (a) The Lord (Micah vii. 8). (b) Jesus Christ (Luke ii. 32). (c) Jesus Christ (John i. 9). (d) John the Baptist (John v. 35).

6. The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day (Prov. iv. 18).

7. Everyone that doeth evil (John iii. 20).

8. To loose the bands of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, to let the oppressed go free, to break every yoke, to deal thy bread to the hungry, to bring the afflicted to thy house, and to cover the naked (Isa. lviii. 6 and 7).

9. (a) "We beseech you, brethren, to know them which . . . are over you in the Lord . . . to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake." (b) "In everything give thanks." (c) "Quench not the Spirit." (d) "Let us watch." (e) "See that none render evil for evil unto any man" (1 Thess. v. 6, 12, 13, 15, 18, and 19).

10. (a) If we walk in the light, as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin (1 John i. 6 and 7). (b) He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him (1 John ii. 9 and 10).

11. On the Lord (Psa. xviii. 28).

12. That men may see our good works and glorify our Father which is in heaven (Matt. v. 16).

13. The five foolish virgins took no oil in their lamps (Matt. xxv. 3).

14. The Lord God giveth light (Rev. xxii. 5).

15. The lamp of the wicked shall be put out (Prov. xiii. 9).

16. The entrance of thy words giveth light (Psa. cxix. 130).

No. 283—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—Ethel Alford*, Ernest and Ralph Aldwinckle, Miriam and Olive Allam, Douglas Anderson-Berry*, Irene Ashdown*.

B—Ethel, Alison and Monica* Bailey, E. Berryman, Hilda*, Evelyn*, Mabel* and Ileene* Barstow, Clarence Bass, Reginald Bristow, Gertrude Bush, Cyril Baddeley, May* and Gordon Bligh, Marion Boyle, Mabel Baker, Annie Blaikie, Dorothy Butcher, Millicent Buckingham, Ada Bratt*, Nellie Bayford*, Herbert Braddon*, Aline Bazett*, Emily Bridgewater, Dorothy Brooks*, James Bryant, Eunice Baker, Harold*, Dorothy* and Gordon* Berry.

C—Annie and Ernest* Cole, Kittie Cope*, Josephine and Gulielma* Cheal, Anna Chanyen, Sophie Cohen, George Cross, Mabel Campe, Willie and May* Cullen, Lydia Cleary, Gussie and Gladys Clark, Ruth Collis, Hilda Cook, Margaret Cooper, David*, John and Henry* Colville, M.* and Ida* Cole, Hannah Chapman, Mabel Candlin, D. Rosalind and Dorothy Clarke, Alfred Cocking, Dorothy Cooper.

D—Ethel Dancy*, May Darroll*, Ralph* and Dorothy* Daintree, Catherine, Emily, Willie and Grace Dempster, Mal Davidson, Pologna Daws, Nellie* and W. Dowsett, Stanley Drew, Violet and Kitty Donaldson-Selby.
F—Ethel Fowler, Harry Flashman, Mary Freeman, Mabel, Olive and Vincent Fleet, Mildred Fooks*, Hyacinth FitzSimons, Arthur Foley, Percy Fitch.
G—Isabel, Margaret and Elsie* Goudge, Dorothy Green, Mayflower Glover, May Gover, Dorothy,* Jack and Stuart Gray, Margare Guillaume, Katie Green, Cissy and Tom Garfit, Margaret Gorrie, Mary Glass, Thomas Gilbert,* Winifred Gardner, Gladys,* Cicely* and Dorothy Gibson.
H—Harry Hodgkinson, Elsie Hanson, Nellie Hatchett, Elizabeth, Hilda and Mary Hooper, Sydney Hanford,* Ella Hake*, Mary Hill, Ina Hemmel,* Ruth,* Dorothy and Ince Hunt, Willie Hooper, Hetty Hill, Beatrice Hastings, Annie Horstcraft, Dorothy and Kathleen Heckford, Dorothy Havergal-Shaw, Norman, Stanley, Florence,* Julyan and Francie* Hoyte, Theodora Hill.
I—Nellie Irving,* Edith Ibbott, Daisy Iredell.
J—Winifred*, Louie* and Hilda Jeffery, Amelia Jacobson, Betty Jacobs, Emily Jones*, David Jameson*, Alfred Johnson, Linda Jones*.
K—Annie Kingsford, Eva and Max Kalb, Lionel Kepple*, Lilian Kyme*.
L—A. Leigh*, Cecilia and Georgina Lichtenstein*, Sidney and Mary* Law, Gladys Lee, Mary Lynn.
M—Harvey Moore, Charlie and Dorothy McMullin, Ella* and John MacMurray, Nellie, Arthur, Lewis and Grace Morice, Amy Munday, Tom McGlone*, F. Messenger, Doris and Agnes Morgan, Winnie* and Doris Martin, May Mills, Nora and Alan Marshall, Mollie, Sidney, Winifred and Geoffrey Martin, Dorothy Morgan*, Mabel Morris*, Arthur MacLeod Johnson*.
N—Nellie Nicholas, Blanche Norcock, Hilda Nicholls, Maude and Amy Nottage, Emily Norris, Valerie and Eleanor Noel, Edith Nash*.
O—Olive Oxley.
P—Evelyn Primrose-Pechey*, Myrtle Perry*, Leslie and Cyril Partridge, Dora Phillimore*, Olive Pine-Coffin, Kathleen* and Ethel* Pasley, Leonard, Walter and Winnie Picknell, Geoffrey, Percy and Clarice Peach, Gladys* and Isabel* Phipps, Ruth Pledger*, Christine* and Mary* Pearson.
Q—Frances Quance*.
R—May and Eva Rodgers, Ada Renals, Maggie Russell, Winifred Runting, Marion Richards*, Gussie and Marion Roach, Alice and Jessie Ricketts, Kate Rosenbloom*, Alice Reid, Aileen and Marjorie Roberts.
S—Whately Smith, Lily and Ellen Scriven, Violet* and Evelyn* Shaw, Rebecca Stidolph, Dollie Salt*, Glanville Smith, Margery Smart*, Constance Sherbrooke, Marjorie Smith*, Betty Stocks*, France Stileman, Esther* and Amy Simmons, Stanley and David Soltau, Kathleen Shepherd, Christie Soans*, Mary Sowden, Flora Shadbolt, William, Augustus and Raymond Simpkin, G.* and M. Spurgeon.
T—Marion Tarry*, Dudley Toye*, Frank Tomkins, Doris and Madge Twite, Reginald Thresh*, Florence Tomlinson, Bertha Tranter, Vincent Taylor, Archibald and Theodora* Thorn, Margaret Tweedy.
W—Florence Wilde*, Evelyn Wilkinson*, Fanny Wheeler, Ronald Watson, Cecile and Phillis Wright, Gertrude Williams*, Mansfield White*, Ruth Warren*, Ellen Williams, Sarah and Annie Wood, Violet* and Louisa Walker, Bertram Webb, Dorothy Woodforde, Edward* and Edith Wheeler, Agatha Ward, Nellie Whitney, Winnie Williams, Ellie and Nora Wyatt, Wilfred and Sidney Watson, Theo and Mabel Wallis, B. Walls, Charles and Kathleen Wingrave, Allan Wallis.
Y—Maurice Young.

282—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Gwendoline Ahier, Irene Ashdown and Margery Ashdown Mabel Ashwell*.
B—Eunice Baber, Maggie Batting*, Gordon Boxer, Massy and Conyers Baker, Clara Brown*, Annie Blaikie, Leonard Browne*, Nellie Bayford*, Evelyn and Marianne Butlin, Gladys Batting, Ella Berryman*, Ernestine Bühl*, Lucienne Brabandes, Frances Burnett*, William and Gordon Bryant, Beatrice Brouard, Louise Berthe, Maud Bunn, Dorothy* and Gordon* Berry, Dorothy Brooks*, Mabel Bartlett*, Louise Betts*.
C—Ethel Cumbers*, M. Candlin, Agnes Cook, John, David* and Henry* Colville, Ruth Collis, Alice Crang, Jessie*, Maggie* and Walter* Carter, George Crawford, Duncan* and Hyde* Campbell, Gladys and Beryl Calvert, Alfred Cocking, Dorothy Cooper, Hannah Chapman.
D—George, Elizabeth, Hilda and C. Drayson, Violet Davidson, Gladys and Harold Davis, Marie Denizot, Vera Dickinson, May Darroll*.
E—Olive Ewin.
F—Hyacinth FitzSimons, Eirene, May and Gwendolen Fennell, Ethel Fowler, Louise Filhol, Jeanne Faucon*, Phyllis Fry, Mabel and Eva Fletcher, Lewis, Agnes and Meg Fullarton, Laura Finch, F. and Aileen Figgis.
G—Hilda* and Ivy* Godfrey, George Goodall, Margaret Guillaume*, Grace and Evelyn Gulston, Aimée Guilbert, Margery, George and Colin Graham-Brown, Isabel, Elsie* and Margie* Goudge, Constance Gabbett*, Mary* and Daisy* Greenacre, Edith Grieve*, Stuart, Edith and Dorothy* Gray, Winnie and Dorothy* Grove.
H—Theodora Hill, Elsie Hanson, Willie Hooper, Harry Hodgkinson, A. and May* Handasyde, Elsie Hibbs, John C. Henderson, Julyan, Norman and Florence* Hoyte, Mary Haines, Georgette Hoffmann, Violet Holford, Winifred, Henry and Edith* Harvey, Elizabeth, Hilda and Mary Hooper, Francie Hoyte*, Ella Hake*, Violet Hatch*, Clarice Herivel.
I—Daisy Iredell, Ami* and Isabel* Inglis, Elsie Irvine.
J—Lizzie Johnstone*, Hilda* and Louie* Jeffery.
K—Margaret Kinnaird, Hannah Knapp, Philippa*, Dorothy* Cecilia, and Grace Kerr.
L—Arthur Llewellyn, Mary and Dorrie Lynn, Alice Lee*, A. Leigh*.
M—Isabella* and William Morrice, Alice* and Maisie* Mackenzie, John Macfarlane, Doris* and Winnie Martin, Daisie Mackenzie, Connie Murfin, Philip Martin, Arthur MacLeod-Johnson*, Dora Muir*, Harvey Moore, Charlotte Millar*, Barbara Maconchy, Daniel, Dorothy and Margaret* Morris, Margie Marston, Tom McGlone, Jessie, Alick and Charlie* Morrison, Margaret*, Ella and Joy* McFadzean, Evie Godfrey and Alec Miller, John* and Ella* MacMurray, Mildred Morgan*, Winnie, Leonard and Dorothy Mace.
N—Maude and Amy Nottage, Edith Nash*.
O—Maude and Eva Oakes.
P—Isabel Perks, Clarice, Geoffrey and Percy Peach, Lucy and Mabel Pelham-Burn, Olive Pine-Coffin, Isabel* and Gladys* Phipps, Ruth Pledger*, Laura Percy, Mary and Christine Pearson.
R—May and Eva Rodgers, Hope Robinson, Elmina*, Cecily* and Jessie* Roe, Olive Robinson*, Winnie Runting, Maggie Russell.
S—Stanley Smith, Lydia Shirley, Augustus, William and Raymond Simpkin, Germaine Schumann, Stanley W.* and Flora* Smith, Hugh* and Agnes* Shields, Kathleen Shepherd*, Ivy Sall, Poppie Stidolph, Evelyn*, Violet* and Gladys* Shaw, Effie, Ellen, and Florence Simpson, G.* and M. Spurgeon.
T—Willie Thomas*, Flossie and Charlie Thomson, Doris Twite, Evelyn Tracey, Florence Tomlinson, Reginald Thresh*, Margaret Tweedy, Winifred Trotter.
W—Zoe Wilkins, Dorothy White, Violet Walker, Sarah, Rachel Georgina and James Wilson, Winnie Williams, Katie Welch*, Mary Wilson, Bertie Walls, Edward* and Edith Wheeler, Ellie and Nora Wyatt, Stephen Wilson, Ernest, Kenrick and Queenie Wakeford, Stewart and William Watson, Pringle Wilson*, Dorothy Woodforde, Charles and Kathleen Wingrave, Ronald Watson, Ella and Alexander Watt.

FOREIGN LIST.

No. 276—Minnie Lister, Huldah Krige* (S. Africa). No. 277—Huldah Krige. No. 278—Roths, Lottie, Ivan and Eric St. George (Canada). No. 279—Dora Wallace*, Amy Ramsay (Canada). No. 281—Ina, Katie*, Will and Nettie Thomson (Bulgaria), Phyllis Boyd (Malta).

Personal.

Many thanks for flowers received.

GWENDOLINE AHIER.—I am glad to welcome you as a new "Searcher," and hope you will be as diligent as your friends.

AILEEN FIGGIS, MAYFLOWER GLOVER, DOROTHY DAINTREE.—As your birthdays are so near the time of the Competition, you may remain in the old division.

VERA DICKINSON.—Thank you for your letter. I am glad you are having such a grand time.

UNCLE TOM.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, June 30.

"I WILL STRIVE TO DO WHATEVER HE WOULD LIKE TO HAVE ME DO" (Matt. xxviii. 18 to 20; John xv. 7 to 16).

IT is a wonderful thing to hear these words from the lips of our Lord, when we remember what the devil said to Him at the beginning of his ministry. "To Thee will I give all this authority, for it hath been delivered unto me" (Luke iv. 6). It is evident that a great transformation had been effected by the death and resurrection of our Lord, or He never could have said, "All authority hath been given unto Me." Evidently the sceptre had been wrested from the hand of the prince of this world. Our Lord is supreme in heaven; He is equally so on earth. He has authority over winds and waves; over the natural world with its laws and elements; over the minds and souls of men, over gold mines and harvest fields. There is no land which He does not own; no seas which He cannot rule; no tribes of men that have not been purchased by his precious blood. It would greatly facilitate our obedience to his command if we realized that the world is his, and that wherever we go throughout its vast extent we are within his territory.

Have you pondered, young friend, that distinct command, "Go ye and make disciples of all nations"? Have you done your best to obey? Or, supposing it is clear from the circumstances of your lot that you must stay quietly at home, are you doing your best to send out a substitute? If all those who stay at home would see to it that their place of service on the mission field was being filled, if not by themselves, then by another whom they were helping to maintain, or maintaining entirely, surely the great lack of a dying world would be met. Some of you must make haste to go out, and others of you must resolve that the first charge on your income must be a contribution towards the maintenance of your representative. Happy, indeed, will you be if the time should come when you can maintain one, two, or three representatives in different parts of the world.

You will notice the care with which Christ insists that those who were disciples should be taught to observe all his commands. He speaks not only as Prophet, as when He predicted the fall of Jerusalem, or as Priest, as when He poured out his life an atonement for sin, but as King, with a sort of peremptoriness in his tone. He had chosen these apostles that they might receive his commands, not for their own obedience alone, but that they might impress them upon others. Obedience is the law of spiritual growth and blessedness. In obedience the human mind is ever teaching the divine way of response. If not by the movement of our lips, yet by the swift obedience of our nature, we attest that the will of God is our supreme law. I shall never forget years ago, at a supreme crisis of my life, encountering a young man whose candles in an autumn morning were guttering low as I entered his room, and who in answer to my inquiry told me that he had been up since four o'clock, searching out all the commands of Christ he could discover, that he might be sure he was obeying them. Let us make up our minds, first, to observe whatsoever the Master has appointed, and second, to teach others to do the same; and, whenever the task seems too great for our strength, let us remember the precious promise that He is with us always, or, as the margin puts it, "all the days." Never a day can come with its demands, with its call for dutiful obedience, but He will be at hand to bear our burden, to help us by the right hand of his strength, to inspire us by the beam of his face.

But if we would do this, we must abide in Him, and allow his words, by meditation and prayer, to abide in us. Nothing is more absolutely important than the daily meditation on the words of Christ; it is as important as food is to the body, or as coal to the locomotive. It is by the indwelling of his words, through the Holy Spirit, that we may reckon on the indwelling of Christ. Then obedience ceases to be an effort, it is fruit. Pity the tree that it has to bear its autumn burden, and it laughs you to scorn. It cannot help it. The fruit is the expression of its exuberant life. It is equally impossible to avoid obedience when the heart is charged with the words and presence of Christ. Naturally and irresistibly the result accrues. So we succeed in prayer (xv. 7). We are known as his disciples (8). We abide in his love (9, 10). Our joy is full (11). We abound in love (12). We know our Lord's will (15). Our fruit abides (16).

Christian life after all comes to this, how much will you obey Christ? If you refuse you shut yourself out of his best. He can do nothing for you or with you. The hiatus cannot be filled that separates you from Him. But if you surrender yourself to obey, there is no limit to the usefulness or blessedness that must ensue (Gen. xviii. 18-19). F. B. M.

International S.S. Lesson.

July 7, 1901.

GOD THE CREATOR OF ALL THINGS (Gen. i., ii. 1-3).
GOLDEN TEXT—Gen. i. 1.

THIS week we begin a new series of lessons taken from the Old Testament Scriptures. The first five books of the Old Testament were called by the Jews, "The Law." Jesus spoke of them thus (Matt. v. 17); we call them the Pentateuch, which means "five-formed," and from the earliest times they have been named the Books of Moses (see Luke xxiv. 27).

GENESIS, the first book, means Origin or Beginning: it tells of the beginnings of things and peoples and nations. It divides into two parts: chapters i. to xi. is general, the remainder particular history. The details of chapters i. and ii. seem to have been presented to the mind of the writer in panoramic vision. In studying, remember that the dates and division into chapter and verse are not part of the original Bible, but have been added as helps, like the marginal references and notes.

GOD.

God existed always (Psa. xc. 2; Isa. xl. 25, 26). The Hebrew word for God, "Elohim," is plural; God, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are all revealed in this first chapter of the Bible (26; John i. 3-10; John viii. 12). This word "God" occurs in every verse but five in the chapter; trace through and note—God created, God moved, God said, God called, God saw, &c. We need higher conceptions of the eternal, self-existent God, so that we may "give to Him the glory due unto his Name."

CREATION (Heb. i. 2).

To create is to make things out of nothing; God alone can do this—He wills, and it is done. The account here given is simple and sublime, the most ignorant can understand, the most learned cannot refute. Nothing contradicts scientific discovery; it is written in accordance with human language and understanding. We do not need to know how long each day or period was; it makes no difference. As the vision of creation passed before the mind of the writer each creative act closed with a morning.

THE OPENING VERSE OF THE BIBLE.

Verse 1 is the introduction; ages before what follows, God had created the universe. Remember 2 Pet. iii. 8; Psa. xc. 4. Note the difference between man and all the other creations; made in the image of God (26, 27); the breath of life breathed into him by God (ii. 7); the only creature like God, or who can think about God. Man was made master of the earth and all it contains. References to the creation are found all through the Bible:—Neh. ix. 6; Job xxxiii. 4; Psa. viii.; Isa. xl. 28; John i. 1-3; Acts xvii. 24; Rev. iv. 11.

THE SABBATH.

This was God's day of rest. Not a Jewish institution, but "from the beginning." Our nature needs this rest. "Remember the Sabbath Day to keep it holy."

PRACTICAL POINTS.

The Omnipotence of God.
The Responsibility of man.
Am I like God?
Life without God is waste and void.
Analogies between this and the New Creation.
Chaos and darkness result from Sin.
Light enters by the Word of God (2 Cor. iv. 3, 4).
God's works are all good. What are ours?

Tent Work.

The London Campaign.

At Upton Park a promising opening has been effected in a needy district, and there is every indication of a good work being done. Messrs. J. Bennett Anderson and R. S. Bradbrook are in charge until Friday next. The gatherings on Sunday were most encouraging; an immense concourse of people assembled in the evening, and a number entered the inquiry-room. Mr. J. Kennaby, the local secretary, and his friends, have gathered an efficient choir from the various places of worship, and the singing is proving a great help to the meetings.

Those present at the closing of the Stratford tent will probably never forget the occasion. The tent was advertised to close on the Sunday, but the local committee decided to give a tea to the converts in the Conference Hall, Stratford, on the Monday night, to be followed by a meeting in the tent. About 1,200 to 1,500 people were present. Mr. Ransome Wallis, a member of the central council, addressed some helpful counsel to the converts. The meeting was then thrown open for testimonies, and for some twenty-five minutes old and young spoke of the blessing they had received in the mission. The local committee's report states that they have a record of 179 women and 67 men whose names have been taken as having all of whom had been visited. Very many more had passed through the inquiry rooms whose names and addresses had not been taken. An impressive feature of the meeting was when Mr. Leonard Weaver, at the close, asked all those who had accepted Christ in this year's or last year's mission to gather round the platform. Some hundreds of people responded. The meeting closed with the singing of "God be with you till we meet again."

DECIDED FOR CHRIST,

Mr. Charles Inglis concluded a fruitful week at Kilburn on Friday last. The work was blessed to both saints and sinners. One young man, a backslider, who had just returned from South Africa, was led back to the Saviour. The ministers of the district have heartily co-operated in the work. On Saturday evening, June 22, the meeting was of a particularly interesting character. Revs. W. H. Stone (vicar of St. Mary's), Stuart Churchill (vicar of Holy Trinity), and S. P. Hodgson (Presbyterian), conducted the service. After Mr. Churchill had opened with prayer and read from the Bible, Mr. Hodgson spoke forcibly on three points: "A Saviour, the Saviour, and my Saviour." Mr. Stone followed with a powerful address on "The Cross and the Resurrection." The audience listened with deep interest. The speaker's story of his conversion, while studying at Cambridge, created a deep impression. Mr. Arthur Fry, in sending these particulars, adds: "We are now in the last week of the Kilburn Mission; the seed has been faithfully sown, with earnest prayer; God alone can give the increase. Pray for us."

At Woolwich during the past week the presence and power of the Lord was realized in all the meetings. Messrs. L. Weaver and William Grove have conducted the meetings. Good numbers have attended, the majority being men, including a number of SOLDIERS FROM THE GARRISON.

Each night some have decided for Christ. On Thursday night there was a glorious meeting; some 300 or 400 Christians were on their knees praying for a revival. Messrs. J. B. Wookey and William Grove were announced to conduct the meetings during the present week.

Mr. H. M. Dobson sends an account of the operations at Brixton. Many striking cases of blessing have transpired during the past week. Messrs. Bennett Anderson and R. S. Bradbrook have given timely and helpful addresses. On Sunday week an immense audience assembled in the evening, and the solemn address of Mr. Bennett Anderson was graciously used in bringing conviction to many who afterwards entered the inquiry-room. On the following night some words to backsliders (of whom a number were present) proved effective, and at the close many rose for prayer, and were dealt with in the inquiry-room. On the Tuesday Dr. John Robertson gave a stirring address; the illustrations, drawn from the preacher's own personal experience, were felicitous and well calculated to drive home the weighty truths he uttered. There were again a good number of seekers. On June 14, Mr. Charles Cook was speaking. A man living near to the tent was drawn into the meeting by hearing Miss Angel sing "My Mother's Prayer," and was led to decision. He has since written saying that he has and intends, by God's help, to live a better life.

"DONE WITH THE DRINK,"

Rev. W. Moxham, of Chatsworth Road Baptist Tabernacle, N.E., sends particulars of Mr. George Clarke's mission at the Clapton tent, which closed on Friday evening, June 21. During the mission the work of the Holy Spirit was very manifest. Many were convinced of sin, and in the majority of cases led into the light of the love of God. Many backsliders were restored, believers were reconsecrated, and beyond those who "subscribed with their hand unto the Lord," others were impressed and influenced, of whom "the day shall declare it." From the first Mr. Clarke gained wonderfully with his audience. The addresses were very forcible and clear; and following each other in order, were admirably adapted to make the way of salvation plain to all, and yet to compel the interested attention of the thoughtful and well informed. On the last Sunday evening crowds were unable to obtain admission, and the next evening (Monday) the tent was filled to the utmost, notwithstanding that an immense multitude had assembled at the Congress Hall close by to hear General Booth tell the story of his life. At the closing service on Friday the crowd who filled the tent remained to the close. Mr. Moxham concludes: "The mission has brought great blessing, and, as the writer—an old worker in Clapton—believes, Mr. Clarke's labours have wrought lasting good."

An interesting feature of the campaign is the formation of ladies' committees in each district for

THE VISITATION OF CONVERTS.

The duties of organization have been undertaken by a central committee, including Mrs. Algernon Wallis, Mrs. R. C. Morgan and others.

Tents are now erected in the following districts:—Kilburn, Willesden Lane; Brixton, Canterbury Road; Woolwich, Woolwich Common. At Shepherd's Bush (close to Shepherd's Bush Hotel) a tent is to be opened on Saturday next. Mr. Henry Varley will conduct the meeting, and he will likewise take the services on Sunday. The Campaign will be also opened on Saturday at Canning Town (in Forty Acre Lane, Barking Road).

Notices.

Applicants for Tracts.—Mr. Claude B. Dunn, The Elms, Kingswingford, near Dudley; Mr. James Pickard, 188, Globe Road, Mile End, E.; Miss A. Scantlebury, "Marlborough," Chesterfield Road, Newbury, Berks; Mr. Sam A. Fox, 13, Cromwell Street, Nottingham; Mr. Horace W. Phillips, 53, Tredegar Square, Bow, London, E.; Mrs. Nation, 251, Hornsey Road, London, N. (for young women); Mr. Charles Medlicott, 15, Spencer Road, Loraine Road, Holloway; Mr. Tebbits, Stoke Hammond, near Bletchley; Mr. C. Daniels, near Church, Loughton, near Bletchley, Bucks; Mr. S. Hodgson, 17, Hissail Street, Hanley, Staffs.; Mr. W. Grundy, 12, Brick Street, Broadbottom, near Manchester; Mr. T. Brooks, 71, Barrett's Grove, Stoke Newington, N.; Mr. F. Wright, 120, Cottenham Road, Holloway, N.; Nurse Walker, High Street, Orpington; Mr. J. Hayes, 98, Byron Street, Preston, Lancs.; Mr. S. B. Meadows, Thurning Rectory, E. Dereham, Norfolk.

Communications Received with Thanks.—Mrs. J. W.A.C. H.M. F.T.W. G.E.G. W.T.F. Mrs W. J.K. L.J. T.L.S. W.H.S. C.D. W.A.L. A.S. N.M.F. T.W. J.E.H. M.C. R.E. W.T. H.M. C.B.D. T.A. A.T. G.C.H. C.B.St.G. A.H. D.B.H. T.M.R. W.R.L. T.S.P. F.B.M. A.M. J.B. A.M. W.W. W.Y.F. Mrs. H. J.E.S. K.B. J.P. T. Mrs. F.A.W. E.B. R.D.S. J.T. D.T. S.S. G.E.M. F.L. M.R.J. J.W.C. W.F. B.H.A. E.H. W.D. G.E. O.T. J.J.T. O.W. J.A.V. S.A.F. J.W. C.B. H.A.P. C.M. E.J.B. F.M. J.C.M. L.E.S. J.B. G.F.T. B.G. J.P.D. J.D.P.D.L.H. J.S.C. L.V. T.M.W. V.A.S. J.G.B. A.R.C. T.C.U. H.B.W. H.T.N. H.E.N. F.W.H. E.H. E.P.F. A.V.S. A.R. F.W.B. W.P. J.D. E.M.R. D.B. O.L.H. J.C. W.H.N. E.G. S.B.M. A.C. C.W.

About Books.

Billy and Hans: A True History, by W. J. Stillman. (1s. net. Geo. Bell & Sons.) This is a re-issue of a popular story of squirrel life. It is a dainty little book, and illustrated.

Rev. J. F. B. Tinling has added to the "Sermon Seed" series a volume of Sermons on Isaiah: Sketches of 150 Sermons on Texts from Isaiah. (1s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.) Preachers will find the pages rich in suggestion.

Among recent collections of sacred songs, a high place must be given to Twenty-Four New Hymns, by Miss Ada Rose. "The Way of the Cross," to which we referred as sung at the China Inland Mission a fortnight ago, is in the collection. (1s. Mrs. W. J. Gibbs, Bromley, Kent.)

The Church Association has issued a valuable pamphlet, entitled Roman Catholic Disabilities, by Benjamin Whitehead, B.A., barrister-at-law. It gives a table showing the principal statutes relating to Roman Catholics, and indicating the extent to which they have been repealed. (Price 2d.)

We have received a second edition of Cancer and Cancer Symptoms: Chiefly Arborivital Treatment, with illustrative cases, by Robert T. Cooper, M.A., M.D. (2s. net. C. Marten, 67, Wigmore Street, W.) The author holds in a peculiar sense the curative action of plant remedies; hence the name by which he describes his treatment.

The second volume of the "Light and Leading" Library consists of Forty-Seven Outline Sermonettes on Golden Texts (1s. Allenson) gathered from the last volume of that monthly. The contents are varied, the names of eleven authors being given on the title page. Speakers to the young will find here in a compact form much that is suggestive and helpful.

The Society of Friends: Its Faith and Practice. By John S. Rowntree. This deeply interesting little book, informing as to facts, and unexceptionable as to tone and tendency, has speedily passed into a second edition. (Paper, 6d.; cloth, 1s. nett. Headley Bros.) There is a useful list of authorities; and in the form of appendices some specially attractive documents, with official queries and general advices, are given. In matter and manner alike, this is an excellent work, calculated to interest Christians of all denominations.

The first two volumes of Rev. J. Paterson Smyth's "Bible for the Young"—Genesis and St. Matthew (1s. each. Sampson Low), are illustrations of the author's plan to help teachers in presenting to children the certainties of revelation in such fashion that instead of having to win men back from unbelief in after years they may never be exposed to it. The system is based on the principle of drawing out all the knowledge the child already possesses before making that the basis for further instruction.

Quite a small literature of good books, expository and practical, have come from the pen of Pastor Frank Thomas, of Geneva. Among his recent publications we cordially commend Vie en Christ, a treatise in four chapters—à Lui, en Lui, pour Lui, comme Lui; and La Croix de Christ, ce qu'elle est, ce qu'elle donne, ce qu'elle demande. Both are chaste in language, and helpful in substance. Another gem is Bonheur et Marriage, a small book of great value on a subject of vast interest. (Cloth 1 fr. 50c. each. J. H. Jeheber, 28, Rue du Marché, Geneva.)

The Great Eastern Railway Company's new handbook, Holidays in Eastern Counties, edited by Percy Lindley, is a publication of exceptional interest. Prominence has been given, alike in the pictures and letterpress, to some of the less known districts of East Anglia. The illustrations have been made a special feature, and they include miniatures after Constable and highly-finished reproductions from pencil drawings and photographs. Within easy reach of the metropolis, East Anglia affords beauties that compare favourably with scenes for which many a Londoner takes long and tedious journeys. (1s. and 3s. 6d. Office, 30, Fleet Street, E.C.)

William Knibb: Missionary in Jamaica. A cheap edition of this interesting memoir, by Mrs. John James Smith, has been issued by the Baptist Tract and Book Society, 16, Gray's Inn Road. (1s. 6d.) Knibb was a noble soul, and his work lives to this day. These pages delineate his fidelity and boldness, and his sufferings for Christ's sake. Those to whom the cause of the blacks is a matter of prayerful concern, will find much that is instructive here. To missionaries the book will be specially stimulating, and all who study the great questions of slave emancipation and world-wide evangelization will find it a compendium of information, as well as a record of some of the many exciting occurrences in the first half of the nineteenth century.

SEA BREEZES FOR THE AILING POOR.

The sum of Ten Shillings provides a week at the Sea-side Homes at Lancing, Sussex, for an ailing mother and delicate infant; or two weeks for a child under 12 years.

Beside our own Mission poor, appeals are daily reaching us from City Missionaries and others.

Donations gratefully received by MRS. F. A. BEVAN 59, Princes Gate, S. Kensington, S.W., or by the Secretary, MR. WM. CHORLEY, 6, Clephane Road, Canonbury, N.
Articles and Contributions for Sale of Work should be addressed to the Matron, Women's Home, Lancing, Sussex

THE WOMEN'S PROTESTANT UNION NEEDS
SPECIAL DONATIONS
To meet the heavy expenses of its VARIED WORK.

NEW MEMBERS will be cordially welcomed.
OVER 14,000 HAVE JOINED SINCE 1891.

The Union publishes two Penny Magazines Monthly.

Minimum Membership Subscription (including Magazine), 1s. 6d. per annum.
Send penny stamp for specimens of Magazines, Tracts or the King's Declaration, &c.

Contributions will be thankfully received by The Secretary, Women's Protestant Union, Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C., or may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

BAYSWATER FRENCH CHURCH FREEHOLD FUND.

£655 WANTED BEFORE JULY 25th, 1901, to secure for all time this Protestant Evangelical Place of Worship for the French-speaking Foreign Population of the Metropolis, and to ensure the continuance of a work which has proved a blessing to very many in different lands.

Towards the needed sum, £378 have already been contributed. A sum of £277 remains to be found, and must be found before July 25th.

Christian Friends in Great Britain, do kindly help us.

Contributions will be thankfully received by Pasteur J. M. H. Du Pontet de La Harpe, Le Presbytére, 16, Kildare Gardens, Bayswater, W. Cheques made payable to Bayswater French Church Freehold Fund and crossed Barclay & Co., Ltd., bankers to the Church.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY
14, BLOMFIELD STREET, LONDON, E.C.

Now in its second century of work. Distinguished for its Catholic basis, its famous Missionaries (Williams, Moffat, Livingstone, Morrison, Ellis, Gilmour, &c.) its Pioneering successes, its enterprising Native Agents, its self-supporting Churches, its Bible Translation Work, its Contributions to Christian Literature, its Preaching to the Masses, its Women's Work for Women, its Schools and Orphanages, its Training Institutions, its Medical Missionaries, its Hospitals and Dispensaries, and its Leper Asylums.

Funds greatly needed. Special contributions for support of "Own Missionaries," or for Native Helpers, gladly received.

Home Secretary: REV. ARTHUR N. JOHNSON M.A.

THE ORPHAN WORKING SCHOOL,
Haverstock Hill and Hornsey. Founded 1753.

PATRON - - - - - HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
PRESIDENT - H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CAMBRIDGE, K.G.
TREASURER - HORACE B. MARSHALL, ESQ., J.P., D.L.

Maintains and Educates 500 Fatherless Children, varying in age from infancy to 14 years. An undenominational institution supported by voluntary contributions.

Help for the "Fatherless and the Widow in their affliction" is urgently needed. Contributions will be thankfully received by the Secretary, ALEXANDER GRANT.
At the office, 73, Cheapside, London, E.C.

THE SURGICAL AID SOCIETY.

Chief Office—SALISBURY SQUARE, FLEET STREET, E.C.
Patron—HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President—The Rt. Hon. the EARL OF ABERDEEN, G.C.M.G.

This Society was established in 1862 to supply Trusses, Elastic Stockings, Artificial Limbs, &c., and every other description of mechanical support to the poor, without limit as to locality or disease.

WATER BEDS and INVALID CHAIRS and CARRIAGES are Lent to the Afflicted.

It provides against imposition by supplying the appliance on the certificate of a surgeon only. By special grant it ensures that every deserving applicant shall receive prompt assistance.

25,219 Appliances given in the year ending Sept. 30, 1900.
Annual Subscription of £0 10 6 } Entitles to two recommendations per annum.
Life Subscription of .. 5 5 0 }
Contributions are earnestly solicited. Bankers—Messrs. BARCLAY & Co., Ltd., Lombard Street.
RICHARD C. TRESIDDER, Secretary.

St. Giles' Christian Mission
FOUNDED 1860.

This old-established Mission is constantly helping those who cannot help themselves.

FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED TO SEND THE SICK POOR
(weakly Little Children and over-worked Adults)
TO THE
Mission's Convalescent and Holiday Homes.

Bankers: Messrs. BARCLAY AND Co., 54, Lombard Street, E.C.
Superintendent: WILLIAM WHEATLEY, 4, Ampton Street, Regent Square, London, W.C.

THE "ANCHORAGE."
HEBREWS VI. 19.

Trustees: Rev. H. E. FOX and GEORGE HANBURY, Esq.

To Shelter and give Spiritual Care to young women lately fallen into sin, whether or not about to become mothers, with special arrangements for such as are of gentle birth.

Anyone desiring admission for such cases to apply, by letter only, to the Secretary of the "Anchorage," 32, Charing Cross, London, S.W.

Contributions may be paid to the account of the "Anchorage" Mission, at BARCLAY and Co., LTD., 1, Pall Mall East; or may be sent to the SECRETARY of the "Anchorage," 32, Charing Cross, London, S.W.; or to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C., or to the Trustees.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

Help is very much needed for the FIVE HOMES and OPEN-ALL-NIGHT REFUGE, and the reader is earnestly asked to assist us.

Our wants are numerous:—180 Inmates to Maintain and over 5,000 Meals to Provide every week.

The New Report will be sent post free to any address upon application

Contributions may be sent to Messrs. MORGAN AND SCOTT, or to WILLIAM J. TAYLOR, Secretary, 200, Euston Road, London, N.W.

THE LECTURE AGENCY, LTD., The Outer Temple, Strand, London, W.C., acts as Agent for all the Leading Lecturers and Entertainers of the day.

List will be sent post free on application to Secretaries of Literary Societies, Mechanics' Institutes, Lecture Committees, Schools, &c.

Large numbers of

Blind and Crippled Girls from the Slums

Who spend their young but burdensome lives amid most painful surroundings, are begging to be sent to our Holiday Home at and we desire to turn none empty away.

CLACTON-ON-SEA,

*

What Delightful Rambles on the Sea Shore and in the Green Fields.

What Sun-Burnt Faces, Strengthened Limbs, and Happy Hearts.

Who will help in this sweet service for Christ?

Subscriptions may be forwarded to Treasurer,
F. A. BEVAN, Esq.,
54, Lombard Street, E.C.; or to
JOHN A. GROOM,
Secretary Watercress and Flower Girls' Christian Mission,
8, Sekforde Street,
Clerkenwell, E.C.

TEN SHILLINGS ONLY will meet the entire expense of a Blind or Crippled Child for a Fortnight.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

Funds are needed to carry on the work of the Society.

Just now we are urgently wanting £50 for Purchase of Bibles, to issue to Sailors who are too poor to buy them.

F. PENFOLD, R.N., Secretary,
31, New Bridge Street, E.C.

THE CHILDREN'S HOME and ORPHANAGE.
Chief Offices—Bonner Road, London, N.E.

A SPECIAL APPEAL IS MADE TO Provide the Children with a Summer Holiday.

Boys to camp out at the sea-side.
This is specially important for Children living in the EAST END OF LONDON. Estimated cost £100.

Contributions will be gratefully received by the Principal, Rev. ARTHUR F. GREGORY, D.D., The Children's Home, Bonner Road, London, N.E.
Cheques and Postal Orders should be crossed "London City and Midland Bank."

BRIDGE OF HOPE.

NIGHT SHELTER. REFUGE.
8 CHILDREN'S COTTAGE HOMES
250 TO FEED AND CLOTHE DAILY.
HELP IS MUCH NEEDED NOW.

Between 400 to 500 pass through the Homes during the year, besides those assisted through the Night Shelter only.

The Annual Report, with Subscription List and Balance Sheet, will be gladly sent to any friends who may not have received it.

MARY H. STEER.

BRIDGE OF HOPE,
St. George's in the East, E.

Evangelistic.

The Racecourse Mission.

IF there is one place more than another where the "classes," in contradistinction to the "masses," are to be reached with the Word of Life, it is at Ascot race meeting. During the four days of last week the special staff of the Racecourse Mission devoted their energies to "Clubland" on the course, where, with prayer and care, they succeeded in getting some 200 copies of Gospels accepted.

Our tent was again placed at the disposal of the police, and some 300 of them gratefully accepted our invitation to rest and refreshment; nor was any opportunity lost when a word for the Master could be spoken. Our workers, numbering twenty, report much blessing in personal dealing, while distributing the Word of God, and in some instances tell of decisions for Christ. The meetings held on the course were with much power. We have had encouraging news of some who accepted God's free gift at Epsom, and who have since joined with the people of God.

O. L. Heatley.

Free Church Mission at Mountain Ash.

A Free Church Council has lately been formed at Mountain Ash. The inaugural meeting was held a few weeks ago, and was addressed by Rev. J. Stephens, representing the National Free Church Council. Following this, the local council arranged a united evangelistic mission, which commenced on June 8, and was conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane. The mission gathered strength and power night after night. Among other forcible addresses may be mentioned that on Purity, in which the missioner dealt helpfully with his important topic. The large congregation will long remember the solemnity of the occasion. Mr. Lane also gave his lantern lecture on "John Bunyan and the Pilgrim's Progress." It was illustrated by magnificent slides, and was listened to by a large and appreciative audience. On the concluding night of the mission, when fully 2,000 people were present, Mr. Lane told the story of his conversion. The address included a vivid description of barrack-life in the Coldstream Guards, and of the manner in which the speaker was brought to Christ. Mr. Lane's words were "as goads, and as nails well fastened." Truly the Lord was with his people, and was "as the dew to Israel." Hundreds have been blessed, the spiritual life of the churches greatly deepened, and the town has been awakened to its religious responsibilities. It has been decided to continue the services.

A Revival in Arizona.

A remarkable mission, lasting nearly three months has been held in Phœnix, Arizona, by Major Cole.' The Arizona Republican of June 4 says: "The evangelist came upon the joint invitation of the pastors and officers of six of the city churches. The visible results must be very gratifying to the Christian workers of the city. Those who have experienced a change of heart and life are numbered by the hundred. These have come from all walks and professions. Drunkards, gamblers, business men, saloon-keepers, Mexicans, Indians, libertines, cowboys, miners and farmers, with young people and children by the hundred, are among the number. Meetings with gratifying attendances and interest have been held in all the churches. For about a month, through the courtesy of the owner, Judge Wells, of Prescott, the regular evening services have been held at the old post-office building opposite the court-house. Among the converts the return of conscience-money has not been an isolated incident. Two of the saloons have been closed, and the contents of casks and bottles poured upon the ground. Separated families have been re-united. Useless hands have been made productive, and those who had been doing evil have been incited to do well. These are the results which one can see. But it is believed the invisible effects, which cannot be gauged or measured, will prove not less unimportant or lasting. The increased warmth of Christian fellowship, so important an element in the uplifting of the world, has been already noted. Never before has the respect for heart and life religion been in Phœnix so sincere and open. Never before among the people generally, has it seemed so real and important a thing to 'Get right with God.' Never before have the Gospel songs of the last two decades been in Phœnix so familiar and so popular, nor the influence of Providence upon secular affairs been so fully appreciated."

Open-Air Work in Glasgow.

While many deliberate and confer as to how to reach the masses, open-air workers are, in part, at least, helping to solve the problem. Fishers of men must go to where men are to be found, and the churchless crowds are ever near at hand in the public thoroughfares of great cities.

The workers at White Memorial United Free Church have just had a prolonged series of outdoor Gospel Temperance services, Rev. Jas. Paterson, minister of the church; Mr. Jas. Ramsay, U.F.C., evangelist, and others, spoke on the opening night, and other speakers sounded out the words of life on the following evenings. Large audiences were secured nightly, an adjournment being made after each service to the hall of the church. A number of pledges have been taken; better still, some have been led to the Saviour. One man on one of the nights, at the close of the open-air meeting, asked the missionary of the church to speak with him. He was taken into the vestry and privately dealt with. Afterwards, we had the privilege of a word with him. What a grip he gave as we shook hands! "I am trusting Christ to-night," he said, and as he uttered the words, every finger seemed to get a new lease of strength as he gripped our hand afresh. Another interesting case was that of a young man who was awakened on the opening night, and brought to Christ the following evening. One night the Salvation Army brass band belonging to the district rendered help, and this union of forces imparted quite an interest among those who stood around.

The noon-day services in St. George's Church, which were begun by Rev. John McNeill for the Exhibition visitors, have been abandoned in favour of nightly open-air meetings near the Exhibition grounds. Three nights a week the missioner preaches at the Hillhead entrance, on the north side, and on the remaining nights at the grand entrance at Kelvingrove, save on Sunday nights, when he speaks in St. Andrew's Hall, to which place he continues to draws immense audiences. One of his addresses on a recent Sunday night, on "The Rich Man and Lazarus," was a powerful one, and could not fail of good results. The open-air audiences were variously estimated at from 1,200 to 2,000. There is great reason for thankfulness, for it may be expected that of the many who hear the Gospel, some who have come simply to see the great show may see Jesus, and be made glad in his salvation. Mr. McNeill has the valued assistance nightly in song of a band of students from the Bible Training Institute.

Mr. J. J. Sims, from Canada, and a hearty band of helpers, are also conducting open-air services every night, and are distributing large quantities of Gospel literature. They have been cheered to learn that their labour is not in vain in the Lord. J. C.

On Thursday last about 200 theatrical women and girls accepted the invitation of Mr. William Forbes to spend the day at Kew Gardens. The guests went by steamer. After tea, sacred songs were sung and a brief service was held. As, on account of an afternoon performance, the young women engaged at one of the places of amusement could not go to Kew, a special tea meeting for them was held on Friday.

Mr. William Day has attended several race meetings during recent weeks, with his Gospel banner, in company with workers of the Open Air and the Racecourse Missions. At Ascot last week Mr. Day stood with the banner for two hours at a time in an advantageous position, while thousands of people passed by. In 1899 Mr. Day was ordered to take the banner down, but this year the police manifested a kindly spirit, and there was no molestation of any kind.

Personalia.

Dr. Barnardo's daughter, Gwendoline Maude Syrie, was on Tuesday last married to Mr. Henry S. Wellcome, at St. Mark's Church, Surbiton.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan arrived at New York on the evening of June 19, after a rough passage which proved very trying to Mrs. Morgan and the children.

Miss Tucker, honorary secretary to the C.M.S. Missionaries' Book Fund, has removed from 74, Carlton Hill, Abbey Road, to 10, Lancaster Road, Westbourne Park, W.

Our readers will learn with regret that Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., has been obliged by the state of his health to pair off for the remainder of the Parliamentary session; and it is desirable that friends should be considerate in the matter of correspondence.

Mr. Herbert R. Francis would be so glad if the friends who have spoken of arranging lectures on the Old Testament, specially the Tabernacle, will write to him as soon as possible, as the autumn work is being fixed. His new address is 2, Brunswick Square, Gloucester.

Friends will learn with regret that Mr. George Hatton (formerly superintendent of St. Giles' Christian Mission) has been suffering much of late. He may be addressed at 20, Guildford Road, Tunbridge Wells, where he and his sisters conduct a quiet resting place for Christians.

In view of the preparation of a life of the late Rev. Edward Bacheler Russell, we are requested to insert the following notice: "Mrs. E. B. Russell will be very grateful to friends possessing any of his letters, valuable correspondence, or dates of events, if they will kindly communicate with her at Ravenscroft, Hertford Heath, Herts."

The latest reports of the condition of Rev. G. J. Hill, secretary of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society, who has been dangerously ill, are somewhat reassuring, but the patient remains very weak. The Society has suffered in its finances from Mr. Hill's enforced absence, and the friends who are carrying on the work express the hope that increased support will be forthcoming.

Among the Churches.

The number of fully-accredited lay preachers in connection with the Wesleyan Methodist Church will be reported at the ensuing conference as 18,323, compared with 18,136 a year ago.

In the Presbyterian churches Rev. William Johnstone has been elected minister of Trinity Church, Leeds, and Rev. E. L. Roberts, pastor of the English and Welsh Churches, Chester.

Pownall Road Congregational Church, London Fields (Rev. Ernest Goode), has been re-opened after repairs and renovation, the whole amount needed—£193—having been previously raised.

In the Baptist churches Rev. Joseph Beaupre has become minister of the church at Wincanton; Rev. B. D. Harries of Leeswood Church, Mold; and Rev. E. T. Beckett of Arthur Street Church, King's Cross.

A meeting has been held in Bristol to arrange a memorial to the late Rev. Urijah R. Thomas. The Lord Mayor presided, and was supported by the leading men of the city. A representative committee was formed. At present the suggestion is that about £1,200 should be raised for placing a fountain on the top of Blackboy Hill.

In connection with the Twentieth Century Extension scheme, Bristol Wesleyan Methodists have resolved to embark upon a large scheme, viz., to establish a central mission on similar lines to those of the West London Wesleyan Mission. For the purpose the Colston Hall—capable of affording accommodation for nearly 5,000—will be secured on a lease, probably extending over fourteen years.

The men's service at St. James-the-Less, Bethnal Green, E., founded by Rev. J. E. Watts-Ditchfield, attracts large congregations. Although so near to Victoria, Park with all its attractions, the attendance, Sunday by Sunday, even in the summer months, is excellent. On a recent Sunday, when service was thrown open to both men and women, the church was crowded in every part, hassocks, chairs and forms being utilized in the aisles.

At the annual meeting of the Lancashire and Cheshire Baptist Association, Rev. John Thomas, of Liverpool, said there is a lacking in the number of young people attending the Sunday school. He remembered the time when grey-haired men were not ashamed to take their places in the class, but now even young people soon think themselves too big to attend. Mr. Thomas also deprecated the anxiety of young people to get away from home.

The two years' leave of absence granted to Mr. James Rutherford (secretary of the West Midland Free Church Federation, and of the Birmingham Free Church Council), in order to enable him to serve the Congregational Twentieth Century Fund as its organising secretary, expired on June 24, and as the work of that Fund will not be completed until the close of the year, Mr. Rutherford recently tendered his resignation of the former appointments, which has been accepted, Rev. C. A. Fellowes being appointed in his place.

The fourth Convention of Congregationalist country ministers at Lyndhurst Road Church, N.W., was held recently. Thirty ministers accepted the hospitality of Dr. Horton and the Lyndhurst Road congregation. In a brief address, Dr. Parker referred to the days when he was a country pastor: "I do not know that I was ever happier. A village minister or a country minister is not lower than a metropolitan one. Let us find our unity in roots, and not in leaves. God bless you; my love is with you in Christ Jesus."

In the list of representatives to the Methodist Œcumenical Conference, which is to be held in London, at Wesley's Chapel, in September, are 180 delegates from the Methodist Episcopal Church, of America, among them Bishops J. F. Hurst (Washington), J. H. Vincent (Zurich), D. A. Goodsell (Chattanooga), J. W. Hamilton (San Francisco), and J. C. Hartzell. Among the delegates to the conference will be a number of coloured bishops associated with the African Methodist Episcopal Church.

The annual sermon and conference of the Devon and Cornwall Clerical and Lay Association was held at Plymouth on June 12 and 13, Archdeacon Wilkinson presiding. At one of the sessions Rev. W. Bothamley, rector of St. Leonard's, Exeter, read a paper on "Conversion: the Key of the Position," showing the supreme importance of conversion as the groundwork of spiritual life. Another notable paper was that by Rev. A. E. Barnes-Lawrence on "Weak Points in our Harness," in which the speaker urged deeper theological study.

The Methodist New Connexion Conference has been held at Stanley. The new President is Rev. G. T. Candlin. At one of the sessions the chairman of the Stationing Committee appealed for more ministers. The Extension Fund report shows that towards the £10,000 contemplated, £4,690 has been promised. With regard to Missions, the chief official change is that after ten years' faithful work as Home secretary, Rev. James Ogden retires from that office, and Rev. George Packer takes the double office of Home and Foreign secretary, and is entirely set apart to this work.

In 1896 a small Baptist cause was started by Rev. W. Frith at Westcliff-on-Sea, Essex. Within a year, however, the founder died. After an interval Mr. Arthur C. Sidey was invited to take the pastorate, and, the work having gone forward in an encouraging manner, a new chapel has now been built, and this was opened on Monday last. In the afternoon Pastor A. G. Brown preached a stirring Gospel sermon to an assemblage much larger than the chapel would hold. In the evening a public meeting was held. Mr. R. C. Morgan presided, and local ministers delivered addresses of a high order, both Evangelical and Evangelistic.

The ninety-eighth anniversary of the Hackney Congregational College was celebrated on June 18. Professor Agar Beet took the chair at the evening meeting, when addresses were given by Principal Vaughan Pr[illegible], of New College, and Rev. Percy Martin. The year's accounts showing a considerable deficit, investments have been sold to the extent of £500, and the claims of this and the other colleges were earnestly pressed upon the Nonconformist churches. In future the students of New and Hackney Colleges are to be taught together in philosophy, Church history, Christian ethics, and Bible languages, and arrangements between the two principals are in progress for co-operation in theological teaching. The public reception of Dr. Forsyth, the new Principal, is to take place early in October.

Services have been held at Prewett Street Mission Hall, Cathay, Bristol, in connection with the recognition of the new pastor, Mr. A. C. Fletcher, who is taking sole charge in succession to Mr. Samuel Thomas and Rev. J. Pugh. Mr. Thomas gave an interesting description of the development of the work. It was originated in a humble room which soon proved too small, as did other places in which the mission found a temporary home. Subsequently a malthouse was secured and converted into the present building, which accommodates 600 people. Rev. D. J. Hiley referred to the time Mr. Thomas gave, for thirty years, in spite of his business, to mission work, and remarked that if more laymen gave time to such work, many problems of city life and village life would be solved. Principal Henderson also took part.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

The Triumph of Love. The six addresses of Paster O. Stockmayer during his recent visit to London are now published under the title of "Triumph of Forbearing Love." The subjects are :—

I. With our Brethren.
II. Christ in his Childhood.
III. Christ with his Mother.
IV. Christ with his Disciples—even Judas.
V. The Mind of Christ.
VI. The Ministry of the Spirit.

All are excellent; the last appeared in our issue of May 30. It has the importance of a manifesto, and is of deep interest, while the doctrine concerning the Holy Spirit is under such general consideration. (6d. Morgan and Scott.)

The Children's Festival. Our "Day in the Country" Fund is at present taxed to its utmost capacity to provide for the claims made upon it, and we hope friends will lose no time in remitting such gifts as they may be led to devote to this Christ-like work. The heat of summer is on us, and all who can afford to do so have their minds more or less occupied with holidays at the seaside or in the country. But if the need for change is felt in suburbs and opener localities, how much more in the narrow courts and alleys! The appeal for fresh air is "writ large" on the pale, wan faces of little ones all over the city, and in letter after letter it is expressed in words by those whose helping hand is limited for lack of means.

The Genteel Poor. Of the many classes of persons for whom charitable aid is sought, there is one class that is liable to be overlooked, viz., the genteel poor. There are many persons of gentle birth, who through one cause or another have become reduced in circumstances, and who are consequently unable to seek change of air or holiday. Their native modesty prevents them making any display of their impecuniosity, hence their needs are likely to be passed by without notice. To many such a holiday would be most grateful. We would like to commend this class of people to our readers. They will never be discovered by advertisement; it is only possible to reach them privately. We like the method of a certain well-known Christian man whose habit it is to invite as his guests, in the summer holiday, one or two people of the class we have mentioned. The advantage of this is, that friendship is more conspicuous than "charity"; the former can be accepted where the latter would be declined.

The Education Bill Dropped. In dropping the Education Bill, as he announced last week, Mr. Balfour promises to bring it up again in the autumn, and to give it a place of honour among the Bills of the next Session. By that time it will probably have lost the features which made it in its present form so objectionable—notably, the placing of Secondary Education in the hands of a committee appointed not by a central educational authority, but by the local authorities. This last feature will make education more than ever controversial, and mix it up inevitably with the "religious" question. Meanwhile, the country should awake to the fact that the ecclesiastical party is determined to make use of the occasion to capture the position in the interests of their cause.

The New Unitarianism. A writer in a contemporary, speaking in the name of the advanced guard of the Unitarian body, claims that a fresh departure in thought is taking place in that community, which tends to bring it more into line with other churches. It shows itself as a tendency to react against the "barren Theism of the last generation"; to part company with the theory which looks at Jesus as merely an ethical and spiritual teacher; and claims that it is as easy for man to come to God apart from Him as through Him; and to—> lay new stress on the personality of Jesus, to see in Him once more the Chief Revelation of the Father, the Archtype of the Divinity of Man and of the Humanity of God, and to assert that there is not "a law of commandments contained in ordinances," but the Religion of the Incarnation. It is insisted that Christ is indeed a Mediator between God and man by showing the Father as no one else could do; that He is the Atonement, because He and the Father are one; that, in short, the personality of Christ is the Gospel.

At first blush, this manifesto looks as though Unitarianism has given up its case. The phraseology just quoted reads like an Evangelical confession of faith, and so far as the words go it would seem as though it were a recantation of the position taken up hitherto by those who have ever claimed that Jesus is a mere man, wonderfully pure and holy in life, but still a man, and nothing more. But if we read between the lines, we find that this is apparent, not real. The use of theological terms has been so loose and misleading of late that we must very carefully scrutinize what is being said, especially by those of "advanced" views, who have ever had a trick of capturing the speech of their opponents, and using it in a misleading way. The new Unitarianism, like the old, still dethrones the Son of God, empties the concept of Jesus of its Divinity, and leaves us still without the God-Man, who is the Object of Christian worship, the Eternal Son, the Redeemer of the world, who died for our sins and rose again for our justification. Two other reflections are suggested. Unitarianism in its present stage of evolution confesses to a felt want. It is dissatisfied with itself; feels that it has all along missed something vital, and desires to lay hold of a wider and deeper truth as regards the Saviour than it has yet mastered.

A Warning. Here, however, a warning is needed. It would be the shallowest optimism to expect that this "new departure" will result in a general return of Unitarianism into the Trinitarian fold. It will still be as necessary as ever, if not more so, to test and weigh the exact meaning of our terms in theology, and to insist that the writer and the reader, the preacher and his audience, should understand them in the same sense. If this is done with judicial care and honesty, it will be found that the new Unitarianism, like the old, empties the Gospel of its distinctive and historic contents, and that we must say of it, like Mary of old, "They have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him."

Proof v. Speculation. Sir J. W. Dawson, in his "Story of the Earth and Man," advises his readers, whenever they encounter statements hostile to faith, quietly to ask, "How much of this is bald, unproved assertion, and how much is demonstrated fact?" It is a capital rule to work by. Too often the dictum of a learned professor is regarded as a proper counterbalance to Twenty Centuries of Christian Faith and Life. The extreme rationalistic interpretations of our Lord's life and person, when tested by this simple rule will be found to diminish to very insignificant proportions. At present, however, there is a disposition to accept any theory as of value, provided it is introduced by an author of big name. This wild criticism is bound in the nature of things to over-reach itself. Soon we shall have a sane reaction. Meanwhile, let no one be disturbed. Personal communion with the Saviour is proof against all assaults of hypercritical literary criticism.

"Protestant," plus—— Like every great word, the word "Protestant" is liable to abuse, and at present there is a little danger that it is being used unworthily by certain sections of the community. Atheists, Unitarians, Agnostics, and religious rationalists alike are making it their war cry, and emphasizing it for their own purposes. "Protestant" to them is merely the rejection of the dogmas of Rome, in which they would include all things supernatural. For us, however, it is well to say again and again, we are Protestants with a plus. We cannot join hands with all persons who offer a protest against superstitious dogmas and practices. Our work is positive, not negative; and we are not simply Protestants, but protestants because we are Evangelicals. Our Protestantism is the natural recoil of a vigorous and positive Evangelical Life. This position must be made very clear, for our Roman antagonists are in the habit of labelling all dissenters from their system as "Protestants," without distinguishing between Christians and unbelievers. Mere protest against error without a positive statement of truth is often nothing more than empty sound.

The Bishops and Ritualism. Nothing is more serious in the position of affairs in the Church of England just now than the indeterminate attitude taken up by the bishops towards the Romeward movement. Now and again we find them speaking out in words of soberness and wisdom; anon they seem to be playing into the hands of the extremists in spite of themselves. Is there something in the episcopal office which saps at the root of independence in judgment and act? The Bishop of Norwich, in his visitation address, expressed a deep anxiety in view of the conduct of the extreme Ritualists. In the same address he speaks approvingly of the desire to bring the Church of England more into line with the "rest of the Latin Church." This is sitting on the episcopal fence with a vengeance. At such halting utterances the extremists will smile. For is not their one aim and purpose to bring Anglicanism into line with Vaticanism in a subtle form? While our bishops speak in this ambiguous way, it is no wonder that "discipline" in the Church of England flags.

Discipline in the Church. As an instance of the lack of discipline, we need not go further than Lord Halifax's address at the forty-second anniversary of the English Church Union. In this he spoke with almost open disregard of the decisions of the two archbishops, and of the authority of the right reverend fathers in God who legislate for the spiritual interests of the Church in the House of Lords. Who, he asked, at the present moment pays any attention to the decisions of the Judicial Council? The tone of this address is of a thinly-veiled exultation at the success of the Ritualists in defying the authority of the State in the Church. While clinging to the emoluments and patronage of the State, he and his party are quite determined to enjoy all the privileges which Free Churchmen claim for themselves—the liberty to manage their own affairs in matters spiritual. It seems like irony that the very principle of Free Churchism should thus be proclaimed by those who are bitterly opposed to it in its logical conclusions. The principle is good; the application made of it is as bad as it could well be.

"Here a Little—there a Little." It would appear that the Coronation ceremony, which has been postponed to next June, is to be made use of for the purpose of legalizing the use of incense in ordinary church services. That, according to the Archbishop's Lambeth decision, is not now legal; but since in that decision the Archbishop went so far as to say:—

> Even now the liturgical use of incense is not by law permanently excluded from the Church's ritual. . . . It would always be possible, if some great occasion made it suitable, for the Sovereign, with the advice of the Primate, to order a great ceremonial in which the use of incense should form a part.

The Bishop of Peterborough thinks that it would be possible, by enacting a precedent in this one instance, to take a step towards a general legalisation of this "symbolic and Scriptural act." The Church Times, commenting on this, pertinently asks, as regards the Reservation of the Sacrament, why, having gone so far as to hint that the Lambeth opinion on incense may be nullified by new directions, should he not see that the same thing might happen in regard to the other matter? By such insensible steps is the Church being gradually led Romewards!

France and Her Missionary Indemnity. The demand of the French Government for an indemnity which includes an item of three millions and three-quarters pounds sterling for "damage done to Christian Missions," this being inclusive of all claims made by Roman Catholic missionaries on behalf of native Christians, has naturally aroused a deep resentment in the Chinese. It was the action of these missionaries in misusing the political privileges secured to them by the French Government some years ago which partly led to the Boxer movement, and involved the inoffensive Protestant missionaries in one common flood of persecution and disaster with them. To demand this fanciful sum as compensation will not help the missionary cause in China. The only hope is that the Chinese may learn to distinguish between the Jesuits, who make use of every chance for grasping at civil and political privilege, and those true servants of the Cross who ask for nothing for themselves, but preach Christ out of a pure desire to benefit the Chinese and save them from their sins.

Reading and Culture. It is a remarkable fact which needs pondering that, with the spread of popular education, there has been a distinct lowering of public taste in reading. This is seen chiefly in the kind of fiction which is popular just now. Publishers say that coarse sensualism pays best in modern literature. Questions bordering on the indecent, especially if their real nature is concealed behind the embroideries of an ornate style, are the favourite subject-matter of the average novel reader. Closely allied with this is the appetite for novels full of fighting and slaughter, to read which must be altogether debasing, and to which grown-up readers are almost as addicted as the proverbial school-boy; all of which, coming after an era in literature presided over by Scott, Thackeray, Dickens, Kingsley, and Chas. Reade, suggests that education in itself is no guarantee of real culture, and that other things than the three R's are needed to make the human mind what it ought to be.

The "Pilgrim's Progress." We have been a little surprised to find, from the reports of one or two Children's Evangelists, that Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" seems to be an unknown book to many young people. At a recent gathering of nearly a thousand young people, when the speaker asked all present who had read the "Pilgrim's Progress" to raise their hands, only four hands were held up, to the amazement of the speaker. Bunyan's "Pilgrim" is as much needed to-day as when the famous dreamer first wrote it, and its enticing form would certainly hold the attention of any child. There are few better ways of teaching young people the fundamentals of the Gospel than by the medium of this famous old book. Amidst the multitude of modern periodicals, the "Pilgrim's Progress" must not be allowed to lose its hold. Mr. Lane, the evangelist, always draws the largest audience of his missions upon the nights when he discourses upon the "Pilgrim's Progress."

Trial Sermons. The case of Mr. Campbell Morgan has led our Methodist brethren to some searchings of heart. For it will be remembered that he was rejected as a candidate for the Wesleyan ministry because of an adverse report upon his "trial sermon." The Methodist Recorder remarks that such cases as these demand that special attention should be given to the value of reports, and the ability and personality of the ministers who write them, as well as to the candidate and his sermons. A much larger question than this is, in our judgment, raised by our friend's career. Something more than a trial sermon is needed either for accepting or rejecting a man as a minister of Christ. Upon the strength of a brilliant sermon many a man has been introduced into a career for which he had no real vocation, while on the other hand many a church has lost a great man simply because absurd and inadequate tests were applied to him. Hard and fast rules frequently allow no freedom for the action of the Spirit of God. Order there must always be, but such order as may in its turn be set aside by Him who orders all things according to his will.

To the Discouraged. In the world of to-day, "unsuccessful" persons receive scant notice. Even in the Church it is often so. There has grown up a habit of measuring all Christian work by certain arithmetical standards, and judged by these work is a success or a failure. It is a very vicious mode, however, if it is to be always rigorously applied. Much work done for God is of such a nature that it necessarily evades mechanical tests. It is none the less acceptable to Him on this account. To any who know that they have received from Him the vocation for any service, and who yet are discouraged because in spite of every effort there is little visible fruit, we would recall the word of the Prophet in Isaiah xlix:—"I said, I have laboured in vain. I have spent my strength for nought and vanity; yet surely my judgment is with the Lord, and my recompense with my God" (R.V.) Here is the true elixir of life, which recovers a soul from exhaustion. If the work is done for God it cannot really fail—although it may fail to be recognised by men.

The Art of Happiness. Augustine, in the fifth century, declared that he had enumerated more than 180 different opinions of the philosophers as to what constituted happiness. It is likely that the number has been greatly augmented since the great theologian's time. And to-day those who preach happiness as the summum bonum of mankind differ most widely as to how it is to be obtained. The latest attempt, made by a popular novelist, while containing much that all must recognize to be of value, misses the main point as clearly as previous attempts have missed it. Certainly it would be a good thing, following the latest advice, if people ceased to pretend to be above their real station in life, and would apply themselves to honest work, to love, fidelity, affection, and patriotism. Easier said than done, however. But granted that all this were accomplished, would mankind be less in pursuit of an ignis fatuus than it is now? No! the philosophers, ancient and modern, have missed their way; that is why Schopenhauer, the pessimist, has such a cult in these days—for pessimism is the goal of disappointment. The great fault in all the advice that is so liberally (and conscientiously) given to us is that the fact of sin, source of all misery, is carefully suppressed. And men will never learn the art of true happiness until they fairly face sin before God—confess it to Him, and by his grace be saved from its guilt and power.

The Grace of Hospitality. It has been alleged several times lately in public gatherings, that the grace of hospitality is dying out in Christian circles. We do not wish to believe this, and we think that the statements made are a little extreme. In one of the counties where this statement was made, there is undoubtedly much less of hearty hospitality than formerly. But is it so everywhere? Whether there is less of it or not, it is an advantage to remind ourselves that hospitality is a grace binding upon Christian people. There are many references to it in the Epistles, and we have the very searching word of our Lord in Luke xiv. Christian hospitality cuts at the root of many weaknesses. It is an antidote to meanness, it emphasizes the idea of stewardship, it develops brotherly feeling, and it dilates the heart. It is pleasing to our Lord, hence it is enjoined upon us by every apostle. It would be an unspeakable boon to many a cold and convention-bound Church, if this grace of hospitality began to flourish amongst the members. Casual and superficial intercourse in public leaves the heart untouched—it is in private where the veils are removed, and the heart is free to speak its true language.

The King's Declaration.

WE continue to receive communications regarding the proposed alteration of the King's Declaration against Romanism. Our own correspondence has afforded proof of a very widespread interest in the subject, and there has been considerable earnestness in the expression of popular apprehension. Indeed, it has been reported on good authority that the number of postcards delivered to M.P.'s at the House of Commons, calling upon them not to allow any alteration to be made in the Declaration, has been "enormous." These are the postcards issued by the Church Association, of which the secretary states that he has sent out 100,000!

Among the Parliamentary papers issued on Saturday was the report of the Select Committee of the House of Lords appointed "to consider the Declaration required of the Sovereign, on his accession, by the Bill of Rights (1 Will. III. cap. 2, s. 1); and to report whether its language can be modified advantageously, without diminishing its efficacy as a security for the maintenance of the Protestant succession." The Committee held one sitting only, under the chairmanship of the Lord Chancellor, and their report thus runs:—

The Committee have met and considered the subject referred to them, and have passed the following resolution, viz.:—

That the Declaration required of the Sovereign on his accession by the Bill of Rights can be modified advantageously, and for the future should be as follows, viz.:—

"I, A.B., by the Grace of God, King (or Queen) of Great Britain and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, do solemnly and sincerely, in the presence of God, profess, testify, and declare that I do believe that in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper there is not any Transubstantiation of the elements of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ, at or after the consecration thereof by any person whatsoever. And I do believe that the invocation or adoration of the Virgin Mary or any other Saint, and the Sacrifice of the Mass, as they are now used in the Church of Rome, are contrary to the Protestant religion. And I do solemnly, in the presence of God, profess, testify, and declare that I do make this declaration and every part thereof unreservedly."

As compared with the time-honoured Declaration, the one now proposed is singularly bald and unimpressive. Here is the form of words which King Edward repeated, subscribing the oath on the same, in February last:—

I do solemnly and sincerely, in the presence of God, profess, testify, and declare that I do believe that in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper there is not any Transubstantiation of the elements of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ, at or after the consecration thereof by any person whatsoever; and that the invocation or adoration of the Virgin Mary or any other Saint, and the Sacrifice of the Mass, as they are now used in the Church of Rome, are superstitious and idolatrous. And I do solemnly, in the presence of God, profess, testify, and declare, that I do make this declaration and every part thereof in the plain and ordinary sense of the words read unto me, as they are commonly understood by English Protestants, without any evasion, equivocation, or mental reservation whatsoever, and without any dispensation already granted me for this purpose by the Pope, or any other authority or person whatsoever, or without any hope of any such dispensation from any person or authority whatsoever, or without thinking that I am or can be acquitted before God or man, or absolved of this declaration or any part thereof, although the Pope or any other person or persons or power whatsoever shall dispense with or annul the same, or declare that it was null and void from the beginning.

It will be observed, in the new form, (1) the Sovereign is associated with the Christian religion before using words descriptive of his judgment in regard to Romanism. He is described as "Defender of the Faith." (2) No change is suggested as to the clause regarding Transubstantiation. (3) Of "the invocation or adoration of the Virgin Mary, or any other Saint, and the Sacrifice of the Mass, as they are now used in the Church of Rome," it is proposed simply to say that they "are contrary to the Protestant Religion," rather than to speak of them as "superstitious and idolatrous." It is true that superstitious and idolatrous practices are "contrary to the Protestant Religion;" and we would that every minister of the Church of England acted upon the Declaration in that respect. But the statement is a mere truism, which any Roman Catholic might sign.

Then (4) there is a great reduction of the clause on the meaning which the Sovereign puts upon the Declaration. The words "I do solemnly, in the presence of God, profess, testify, and declare that I do make this declaration and every part thereof unreservedly," should satisfy the conscience of an honest man. At the same time, the old form was not too strong. The long sentence was historic. There was reason for all the apprehension of evasion, &c., and for every fear of Papal dispensation designed to make the Declaration "null and void."*

As a modification, much more as an improvement, of the original Declaration, the new statement is feeble in expression, and insufficient in result. The minds of men are influenced, not only by what is written, but by the form in which it is said, by the definiteness and vigour with which the facts are stated and the arguments expressed. In speech the effect produced depends on the accent of conviction, the tone, the enthusiasm, the action, of the speaker. In written documents the want of these must be supplied by clear and forcible statement. The accent of conviction thrills us in reading the original Declaration, but it is absent from that which it is proposed to substitute for it. The statement that the invocation of the Virgin, and the Sacrifice of the Mass are "contrary to the Protestant Religion" is as nothing in its effect upon the mind, compared with the assertion that these practices are "superstitious and idolatrous."

Our forefathers knew the character of Rome, which boasts that it is "Always the Same," and they took care sufficiently to guard against devices of which they had had only too bitter experience. The effect of substituting this feeble modification will be to impress the mind of every Sovereign who might make it, far less than the original; to have the same effect on the mind of the people generally; and it will be a withdrawal from the strong position transmitted to us by the mighty men of old, and will only encourage the Popish party to seek further and yet further encroachments on our freedom from Popish tyranny.

It remains to be seen whether the proposal of the Select Committee will be accepted by Parliament. The hour has come for Protestants to open their eyes; for as surely as the subject comes forward for debate, Rome will make herself heard for a still greater concession. As we pointed out last week, it is the avowed intention of Roman Catholics to agitate this question. Though a minority of the population, they are for securing their point by "continual coming." In view of the indifference of the irreligious masses, there is ground for fear that the mere suggestion of this shortened Declaration will lead, sooner or later, to sacrifices involving religious principle and civil liberty.

* See A Defence of the King's Protestant Declaration. By Walter Walsh. (1s. Swan Sonnenschein.)

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

THE second annual statutory meeting of this institution since its incorporation, was held at Exeter Hall on Thursday last, under the presidency of Mr. Howard Williams, Chairman of the Council.

In proposing that the Report, together with statements of accounts be adopted, printed, and circulated, the Chairman called attention to the objection often raised that no accounts are published, and stated that on the contrary they have been issued annually for thirty-five years past. He also spoke of a recent visit to Canada, where he had met a large number of those who had been emigrated by the Homes, He had formed a very strong conviction of the value of this part of the work.

The existing Council was re-elected with five exceptions, and the following gentlemen were elected to fill the five vacancies:—Messrs. Robert Anderson, C.B., LL.D., A. W. Ballance, Albert Carless, M.B., W. Hind Smith, sen., and Theodore Howard.

Business Men in the Mission Field.

FOLLOWING up recent references in our columns to the influence of European travellers and those engaged in trade in heathen countries, we have pleasure in calling attention to the institution of a Business Men in the Mission Field Committee in connection with the Lay Workers' Union for London of the Church Missionary Society. (C.M.S. House, Salisbury Square, E.C.) The committee believes that there are many persons in this country desirous of serving the Lord in foreign lands who do not see their way to seek ordination, or whose offers of service as laymen have been declined by various societies. To such the question is put forward: Why should you not go forth as business men, and use the opportunities afforded you of influencing the heathen with whom you come into contact? The hope is entertained that the missionary staff may thus be practically doubled—without expense to the Society.

That there are serious difficulties in the way is frankly admitted, but it is pointed out (1) that while a commercial man could not give the same attention to the study of a language as a missionary finds requisite, he may speak in a language which all can understand—that of a consistent Christian life; (2) that the climate is rarely spoken of as a difficulty except when the carrying of the Gospel is concerned; (3) that strong stalwart Christians should not find it impossible to withstand abounding temptations, or the coercion of fellow-traders; and (4) that firm Christians should not be overcome by the deadening influence of heathenism.

Careful inquiries have elicited information showing that suitable openings are to be found in nearly every business, and missionaries in different parts of the world speak with enthusiasm of the prospect of what would be a real and valuable addition to their numbers. One missionary puts the pertinent question, "Mohammedan traders are efficient missionaries of Islam: why are not Christian traders missionaries of the true Gospel?"

Among the practical advice given by the committee, one item is that none under twenty-three years of age should go to tropical climates. "The indifferent, the mediocre, the unsuccessful at home, are not those who will be successful abroad. . . . If any wish to know how to prepare themselves for such a work, we would say: Get to know your business thoroughly, get a thorough knowledge of the Bible, get as much experience of Home Mission work as possible, and be prepared for any opening which may come in your way."

The Kingdom.

THE Kingdom of God in the human soul,
From the centre of life to its utmost pole,
Where sin was wont to be—
From its cruel chain and its deadly blight,
Into glorious liberty and light—
Is the Kingdom given thee.

To this end the Son of God was born,
And bore the curse and the death of scorn,
To be a King with right.
To heal our wounds with his own life-blood,
To grant us to look on the face of God,
By the Holy Spirit's light.

Of the Ransom, vast as the human Fall,
The tidings are ringing through nations all;
There's an echo on the strand,
The shouting of empires breaking free,
The prelude of coming jubilee—
The Kingdom of Heaven at hand.

Donegal. J. K.

Malaga.—An English lady, who has been helping Miss Browne, writes: "I am sorry to say my own happy visit to the beehive of mission work is coming to an end. The Lord is indeed blessing. Souls are entering the kingdom. Our hearts are full of praise. We have taken a house adjoining the Matamoras Hall, and have large schools, and a preacher whom we wish to engage permanently for the Hall. The high-class school for well-to-do Spaniards will keep many from the baneful influence of the Jesuits." £50 a year are needed to support the work.

The Epistle of James.

By Rev. T. A. GURNEY, M.A., LL.B., Swanage.

VII.—Obedience in the Light of the Coming.

(James ii. 1-13).

THE subject of the closing verses of the first chapter of the Epistle was the perfect law of liberty, and our attitude towards it. We were warned against a hearing which is merely a forgetting, and against a doing which is inactive in the true fruits of righteousness, though full of religious zeal. From the perfect law of liberty, we now pass to the perfect obedience to that law in detail which faith renders, and from this to the features of the perfect faith itself.

The perfect obedience which will alone be accepted at the Coming has certain features.

I. It springs from faith in the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ (ii. 1). "Hold not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons" (R.V.). The words express the relation of internal connection (Huther). "Have not your faith so that it is, as it were, enclosed in," narrowed down by, "respect of persons." The obedience here emphasized is not obedience apart from faith, but an obedience which is the outcome of faith.

Whatever interpretation we give to the words "of glory," the purport is practically the same. Whether we read "The Messiah of glory," or "Our Lord of glory, Jesus Christ," or, as above in the Revised Version, or "Our glorious Lord Jesus Christ," or (Mayor) "Our Lord Jesus Christ, the Glory," it is faith in the person of the Exalted One which is the basis of obedience. There is a striking petition in the Moravian Litany, "From the loss of our glory in Thee, preserve us, gracious Lord and God." Faith in the glorious Lord is at once the standard, the motive, the principle, the power underlying the obedience. It is not possible apart from Him; but if faith is emphasized, the law of God is exalted, too, as "perfect," as "royal," as "the law of liberty." "Not only colts," says Manton, quaintly, "but HORSES ALREADY BROKEN NEED A BRIDLE."

II. A second feature in the perfect obedience is that it seeks to fulfil the command to love our neighbours as ourselves (2-9). In glaring contrast to the glorious Object of faith, stands this typical case of disloyalty to faith as a principle. The fault here denounced was a very common one among the Jews, as it is among ourselves; and, in spite of the many passages in the Old Testament condemning it, it had almost ceased to be regarded as a fault at all (Lev. xix. 15; Deut. i. 17, &c.). The very word for "respect of persons" implies in the Greek a bad sense. It is (Mayor) "to accept the outside surface for the inner reality, the mask for the person." The word is plural here as implying "the many individual and concrete instances in which the general fault manifested itself" (Huther).

We are in the synagogue, in which Jew and Christian Jew still worship side by side. The congregation has assembled. The entrance (Edersheim) is at the south end, and just in front is the Ark on a raised space, with, immediately before it, the seats of elders and great men facing northward across the colonnades, which form the body of the synagogue, to the women's gallery at the further end. Enter "the gold-ringed man" "in shining raiment," object of hypocritical admiration and obsequious attention. He is rich, he is feared. Will the deacon rise to the occasion? He does so, and puts the man at once into the raised seats of the privileged. "Sit thou here in a good place." Immediately afterwards comes the poor man in shabby, soiled garments. (The word used is the very word which describes the dress of Joshua, the High Priest, as he stood before the angel, Zech. iii. 3, 4.) He seeks unnoticed to find a seat. Seat! There is none for such a man. "Stand thou there," pointing probably across the synagogue to the space under the women's gallery. Or, "Sit thou here UNDER my footstool, on the stone floor."

Each step in a series of acts dishonouring to God and contradictory to faith is brought out clearly by James. "Ye have regard to him that weareth the fine clothing; you look on him (epiblepein) with the glance of studied admiration, the fawning gaze of a false appreciation." Your glance goes no deeper than the ring and the clothes. Moral worth, station in the sight of God, are unconsidered. Where is your faith then? "Are ye not divided in your own mind?" (R.V.) How often are we thus "divided" in these days when the pressure of the material and visible is upon us to a degree unknown ever before! How hard it is to judge by faith! Thus do we "fall into a contradiction with our faith," which is Huther's rendering of the question. We become "wrong-considering judges" (Mayor), and actually who chooses the poor to be "rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom which He promised."

REVERSE THE JUDGMENT OF GOD,

Character, spiritual worth, not only in the special case before us, but in all life, become subordinate to, and overruled by, the superficial, the accidental, the trivial, the earthly. The Church of Christ to-day needs this warning as much as at any moment in her past history. It is the secret of her loss of power. When the Pope of his day was showing St. Francis of Assisi the artistic glories of the Vatican galleries, he said, smilingly, "You see the days are past when the Church had to say, 'Silver and gold have I none.'" "Yes," answered the apostle of poverty, "and the days are past, too, when she could say, 'In the Name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, rise up and walk!'"

III. Another feature of the perfect obedience is that it welcomes the will of God as the rule of liberty (10-12). Springing from faith as its source, acting upon love as its principle, it embraces the whole revealed will of God as its sphere. It seeks to "fulfil" the royal law (ii. 8). The word is stronger than the word used below in verse 10. It is telein ("fulfil") here; there it is merely tērein ("keep"), where the obedience is merely partial, as shown by the actual breach. In the latter case there is an outward obedience which looks up to that law as the will of a Superior, with sanctions behind it, as a rule outside one's self which has been promulgated, and, therefore, must be obeyed. In the other case, it is a law to the heart itself, an inner principle, accepted as perfect, and embraced as the pathway to perfection, obeyed not merely in the letter but in the spirit also.

One might well picture those two mighty powers, Law and Liberty, as constituting the twin guardian angels of the soul of man under the Gospel dispensation. They stand to each other in the relationship of mother and daughter, dual mistresses of the same wide realm of world-order. Law! Before her strong sway civil discords cease. The high seas are swept of their pirate hordes. The ports of commerce stand wide open. The subject kingdoms blend in one harmonious industry of life. The old bitter feuds are buried. She stands above the nations with her drawn sword of peace to overwhelm the would-be peace-breaker. She holds the keys of exchange and commerce. Her arm grasps the mighty shield beneath which there is refuge even from the avenger of blood. She carries in her skirts the charters of national and personal freedom. Her offspring are well ordered commonwealths, kingdoms bathed in the sunshine of perpetual peace, communities strong in the power which comes from self-restraint. She proclaims in the spiritual, as in the natural and social sphere,

THE WILL OF THE ETERNAL

as supreme over heart and mind and will alike.

Liberty! Is there not a thrill comes over us at the very word?

> We must be free or die who speak the tongue
> That Shakespeare spake, the faith and morals hold > Which Milton held.

Liberty! She was promised at Christ's coming (Luke iv. 18); she was bought for us at Calvary (Gal. v. 1; Colos. ii. 14-15); she was revealed to us at the opened sepulchre (Rom. vi. 22-23); she was brought to us at Pentecost (2 Cor. iii. 17; John viii. 36). And what have not men risked for this sacred gift of the Spirit Himself, for "where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty"? She is "higher than the kings of the earth" in her uncrowned majesty. She lifts up her voice above the waterfloods of revolutions, and that voice is as the sound of many waters. Calm, erect, and strong, she stands mistress before the gates of the new, coming age. In her eyes are the tears of memory over a bitter and irretrievable past, while at her feet lie the bones of the martyrs, scattered before the pit, "like as when one breaketh and heweth wood upon the earth!" But upon her fair forehead, unruffled by lines of fear, the sunshine of peace rests like the Spirit of God brooding upon the face of the waters. There is in her frame not only the majesty of confidence and strength, but the motion and grace of life and youth. The pledges of the world's future lie hidden upon her heaving bosom (Rom. viii. 21, R.V.). The girdle of love is round about her delicate loins. Her right hand grasps the hand of a near, but unseen Friend.

These twain "full summed in all their powers" are ours, and ours only, to rule and constrain and keep us, as we yield to the "royal" and "perfect" yoke of "the Lord of Glory" and of Grace.

IV. Perfect obedience is filled with the spirit of mercy in the thought of ever-nearing judgment (12, 13). By what law do we expect to be judged? The law of justice? It is for ever done away in Christ. Yet we are "about to be judged," but "by the law of liberty." It will be mercy dealing with us on the ground of mercy received, and asking for its return. It would be an awful paradox to be judged by mercy, and condemned for not showing to others the mercy we ourselves received. Men can glare at a stern judge with an air of brazen defiance. But when it is Mercy sitting on the high bench, not in the sable and ermine of the justiciary but in her white, unsullied robe of purity, with soft, mild eyes of pity and meek and holy mien, Grace for the usher of her court and human Instincts for her jury, Love and Truth on either hand as sweet assessors, who would not quail then? "Judgment is without mercy to him that hath shewed no mercy; mercy glorieth against judgment" (13).

> Why all the souls of men were forfeit once,
> And He that might the vantage best have took > Found out the remedy. . . . Oh, think on that,
> And Mercy then will breathe within your lips
> Like Man new made.

THE MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

JUNE 25—27.

AFTER the opening session, an account of which appeared in our last issue, the attendances were well maintained on the level of preceding years. From Tuesday till Thursday evening the general subject—"Divine Beginnings for Unending Human Need" was gradually developed under the successive daily topics—(1) God in Creation, (2) God in Revelation, (3) God in Manifestation. The three days constituted a season of waiting upon God, as the Spirit fulfilled his offices of teaching and bringing to remembrance the things of the Kingdom. That the hearing ear was graciously granted was manifest on faces all around; and the holding of the home and foreign missionary gatherings in the afternoons brought into their true relation the unfolding of the truth and the "works" which "are good and profitable unto men."

On Tuesday evening, after prayer led by Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, Lord Polwarth read 2 Cor. v. 17-19, and pointed out that, as the first four words of the Bible give the keynote of Creation, so we have that of Redemption in "all things are of God." Describing the beauties of an Alpine scene, he said there is something more glorious than the mountains, whiter than the snow, lit up with a greater glory, and that is a soul cleansed by the blood of Jesus. "Why did God create the world? Because it pleased Him. It was his delight. Why does He save the sinner? Because it is his delight so to do.

"If any man be in Christ, he is a new creation, receiving each moment of the life that flows from the great Vine-Stock, Christ Jesus. The branch that is in Him is nourished, is nurtured, is upheld, made fruitful all through with that wondrous secret life that flows from the living Christ into each Christian. In Christ there is no limit to what the grace of God can do and will do."

The Crown of God's Creation on Earth.

Rev. W. Y. FULLERTON.

Man was made in the image of God, and was to have dominion given to him. We can gather some idea of the dignity of his being by the extent of the preparations made for him. As to the reasons for his creation we do best not to conjecture, but rather to realize the importance of the fact, and the attributes of his being. Man is the direct outcome of a special creative act of God. Even those who accept the theory of evolution—and they will do well to remember the words of Drummond, that he regarded it as "far from proved, and merely a working hypothesis"—must still recognize that man is of Divine origin. We believe, however, that not an embryo, but a fully-formed being. We are not called upon to accept as facts the long periods assigned by some scientists as the duration of man's existence upon the earth. The learned and devoted Sir William Dawson told us that he found no reason to suppose that the race has existed more than 7,000 years. In examining the skeletons of prehistoric men, we find that they were as fully developed, and their brains were as large, as the people of to-day.

GOD MADE MAN PERFECT,

God made man a reasoning being. The words "Let us make man" (Gen. i. 26) suggest a conference in the Godhead. We are here in the presence of a mystery, but it is one into which we may reverently enter. The bush burns, but we may humbly remove our shoes and approach it. Did the Father desire to create a new order of beings, the Son wish for them to share his blessing, and the Spirit, who had already brooded over chaos, gladly assent? And for what purpose did God make man? Man, subject to temptation, and who, should he fall, would drag down into ruin with him millions of beings as yet uncreated!

Thou wilt not leave him in the dust,
Thou madest man, he knows not why.
He thinks he was not born to die;
And Thou hast made him; Thou art just.

Was it in order to show to Satan that He could create other beings, capable of rendering Him loyal service, or that He yearned for creatures

ON WHOM HE MIGHT BESTOW BLESSINGS?

We have the answer to these questions in Rev. iv. 11—"Thou art worthy to receive glory and honour and power, for Thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created."

Again, man has an affinity with God. "Let us make man after our likeness." So, man arose in the image of God. As we are told in James iii. 9, "God is the Father," and men "are made after the similitude of God." Do we ask what is meant by the "image of God"? Surely it is the individuality, the personality. We may ponder on all that is formed by man's environment and his circumstances; yet shall we find that his chief characteristic is that he stands up in God's image. The beauty may be lost—and Rom. i. tells us that "God gave them over to a reprobate mind"; but the image is still there. The coin may lie in the dust, but the stamp is still upon it.

It will follow, then, that the spirit of man must seek unto its Giver. Man can never attain to the highest possibilities of his nature apart from God. In the words of Augustine, "Our hearts were made for Thee, and they can never rest till they rest in Thee."

Again, man became a living soul (Gen. ii. 7). He is a complex entity. When the serpent came with subtle temptation man lifted up his will against God, and he is fallen. Sin in man is not a remnant of the beast, but the consequence of rebellion. We trace the downward steps in Gen. iii. There ensued shame, fear, meanness, sorrow, toil, and then, exile. Sin became inherent in our nature. As the poet-philosopher of the last century wrote:—

I still, to suppose it true, for my part
See reasons and reasons; this, to begin:
'Tis the faith that launched point blank her dart
At the head of a lie, taught Original Sin,
The Corruption of Man's Heart.

We recall, in this connection, the story of Æsop, who, when asked "Why weeds grow without trouble, while herbs need so much care?" replied,

"THE EARTH IS MOTHER TO WEEDS, and only mother-in-law to herbs." It is natural to man to bring forth sin.

It may be interesting to some to speculate what man might have been had he not fallen. Well, if we would form a true conception, may we not look, reverently, to the earthly life of our Lord as affording a picture of what man might have been? for Christ was human as well as divine. Moreover, there was a relation between Him and man from the beginning; "In Him was light, and the life was the light of men" (John i. 4), and "as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." If we could find the Throne in the centre of the universe, we should find thereon—think of it—a Man. One day we shall be with Him, and at the end, as at the beginning, dominion shall be given to, and the crown shall rest upon—a Man.

The Blood-Bought Church.

Rev. D. J. STATHER HUNT.

When John Bunyan was once asked about heaven, and the glories of heaven, he answered: "If you want to know more about it you must live a godly life, and go and see for yourselves." If you want to know what is the measure of the glory of God's creation in his blood-bought Church, you must rest under the shadow of the blood, you must walk in the light and power of Christ, and then in God's time you shall know more even than God's Word tells us of what the glory of God's creation is—his blood-bought Church. In the Epistle to the Ephesians we find two great facts—(1) the depths of the sin of man, and (2) the riches of the grace of God.

I. To whom is God's Grace shown? The Epistle teaches us the depth to which man has fallen. Take a few verses. In chapter ii. verse 1, we find that man, who is the crown of is dead in trespasses and sins; and in verse 12, that he is an alien and a stranger from the covenants of promise, without hope and without God in the world. At iv. 18, we are told he is one who has his understanding darkened; and verse 19 goes on to say that he is past feeling, and has given himself over to lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness. Here you read something of the depth to which man has fallen. In the day when God created him he was perfect and fair. He entered the world, over which God had given him to be lord, without the consciousness of sin, without the experience of sorrow. It was his delight to bask in the sunshine of God's smile. He walked in the presence of God, holding communion with Him.

GOD'S EARTHLY CREATION,

Then, if you turn a page of history, you see a marvellous change. From the important height of glory man has fallen to a low level, to a condition of being without God in the world. This is what the Bible teaches us, and our own experience says very much the same. It is very hard to convince individual men that they are apart from God, that they need regeneration, and that they must be made new creatures in Christ Jesus. Yet the language of man constantly accepts and realizes the facts. In our prayers we confess ourselves miserable sinners, though no man likes to be told about it. When we speak about the men who are lowest in the social scale, most degraded, bestial, we describe them as being most natural. We refer to the unclothed savage, the man farthest removed from humanity, as being in a state of nature. We use a similar phrase when we talk of humanizing men, and the very word tells us that

MAN NEEDS TO BE MADE MANLY.

We do not use such expressions about any animal that God has created. We do not speak of making horses equine, or of making dogs canine; but we talk about humanizing men. So we realize the depths to which man has fallen, and confess that he must be lifted up. We realize his loss.

But man cannot lift himself up. There is nothing apart from the grace of Christ that can make a man a new creature, that can lift him up from the depths into which he has sunk. Here the Gospel comes in. It tells us how Christ came to the stranger and the man far away from God, that He might bring them nigh by the precious blood; and shows us how, notwithstanding the depth to which man has fallen, the arm of God can reach down. The key of the Bible is man's redemption. That is the red word that runs through it. You may read the Bible in another light, and you will not find this; but as you read in the light of redeeming love many a dark and mysterious passage becomes light and clear.

Men ask why God took such a man as Jacob and held communion with him, but look at the story in the light of redemption, and you will see the wonderful work wrought in Jacob. It tells us then how God can come to such a man and transform him into a prince who has power with God, and who prevails.

This is the Gospel, the one means by which men are raised to the life of righteousness. Thank God for it.

WE WANT NO OTHER GOSPEL.

Christ is still the power and wisdom of God to all who believe. It is the simple preaching of Christ that we want more and more. If you want to have crowded congregations, or to get good collections for the work of the Lord, preach Christ. If you want to see souls born again, preach Christ.

Why did Christ thus come to redeem men? You will get the answer in Eph. ii. 4, 5. Because of his mercy. But oh what it cost God to create the crown of his creation! When

He made the world, He did it with a word; but when He did this it cost Him the death of Christ. We who know the power of Christ cannot help speaking about Him. Men want us to preach another Gospel. The man who has realized the life of Christ, who has known the depth from which Christ has brought him, wants no other Message, and to know no other power, than that which had changed him.

II. The Grace brought to us to-day. The purpose of the grace of God is to make us new creatures in Christ Jesus (2 Cor. v. 17), R.V., "a new creation." The word "new" is not used in the sense of time, but in the sense of quality, of person. He is

A NEW PERSON ALTOGETHER.

It is not a case of the Ethiopian with his blackness washed away, or of the leopard without his spots, not even of the man raised up to a life of resurrection. It is a new man, a new creation. If you know anything of the power of Christ you know what you are—a new creature—not only you, but everything around you. The world is new. There are beauties you never saw before. Above all the Word of God is new to you, every page shines with messages to your soul. It is rare to hear of a new creature in the world of natural history. Men are astonished to hear of one they did not know before; but what is that to the creation of a new creature in Christ Jesus. Three things come to us with this new creation:

(1) There is life, with Christ dwelling in us (Eph. iii. 17). Think that your life is hid with Christ in God; Christ is your life. This is the mystery which was hid for ages, but which has been revealed by the Holy Ghost to us—that Christ is to dwell in us, not only the source of life, but our life itself. In the New Testament there are of the oneness between Christ and his Church—(a) The Shepherd and the sheep; (b) the Vine and the branches; (c) the fellow-citizens; (d) the stones of the Temple; (e) the Head and the body; (f) the bride and the Bridegroom; and (g) "one Spirit" (1 Cor. v. 17). The last swallows up all the rest. You may separate shepherd and sheep or the vine and its branches, you may banish a citizen, you may cut a limb from the body; but you can never separate those who are joined to the Lord, and are one spirit.

SEVEN FIGURES

And this I shall find, for such is his mind,
He'll not be in glory and leave me behind.

"To me to live is Christ," that is for Christ to live over again in me.

You think it very difficult to live the Christian life; but if Christ is dwelling in you it is not difficult for Him to be a Christian. It is not difficult for Him to live his own life out in you if you are surrendered to Him.

(2) It brings us to the likeness of Christ. "Be ye imitators of God" (Eph. v. 1). We cannot imitate Him, but we have his illimitable power to reproduce his life in us. What a different conception God has of man from what men have of themselves. That we should "be conformed to the image of his Son" (Rom. viii. 29), that we should live like Christ. "The new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of Him that created him" (Col. iii. 10); what an honour to be like Christ, and thank God we shall be one day!

When as a poor sinner you came to Christ, and were made by Him a new creation, the life of Christ was imparted to you.

AS THE OAK IS IN THE ACORN, so the life of Christ is in you, and that life will grow and expand—"Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." Is not this worth living for? If the angels could have hoped that they would be made like Christ, they would have been willing to take man's estate.

How are we to be made like Christ? As we were saved by looking to Him, so we shall live by looking to Him. You may depend upon it that there are so many living the Christian life on a low level, because they are looking at their own hearts instead of at Christ. Your life in Christ, and your love for Him, will be in proportion as you appreciate his life and his love for you. As his love fills your soul then your own love will flow out, for "we love Him because He first loved us."

(3) There is oneness with Him: "We are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones" (Eph. v. 30). If you will sit down and think it over it will fairly break your heart to think that you, a poor sinner, may be one with Christ, that you are part of his body, and that He cannot say to you—even though the poorest member of that body—for without any member a body is crippled. If you are cut off it is not only that you are helpless, but that Christ's body is maimed and crippled.

"I HAVE NO NEED OF THEE;"

There is this also that we are one with each other. The name of Jesus binds all God's children together in indissoluble bonds. We may seem to be disunited, but we are all one in Christ Jesus. There may seem to be divisions, but the nearer we get to Christ the nearer we are to one another. As we grow up to Him in all things, and get ripe for Him, the divisions vanish, and there is the golden glory of the coming harvest.

III. The Glory that shall be revealed. What is the outcome of this purpose of Christ? The past of Christ's Church has been grand—washed in the precious blood, redeemed; and how grand is the present—an indwelling Christ within us, walking together with Him, holding communion with Himself! But the future is grander still, infinitely grand. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him, but God hath revealed them to us by his Spirit" (1 Cor. ii. 9, 10).

So what I cannot talk about, God's Spirit reveals to your hearts. We echo the words of Judas, not Iscariot, who asked, "Lord, how is it that Thou wilt manifest Thyself unto us, and not unto the world?" I look abroad upon the Church, and I see a Mary Magdalene, Zaccheus the usurer, and Peter (who was to deny his Lord). How is it that Thou wilt and raise them up to the height of glory? It is the purpose of God in Christ Jesus. Nothing can stop it. He will carry out his purpose despite men and devils. There is no disarranging of God's plan. Evil may come in and seem to make good subservient; but what seemed to gain the victory for a time will itself be put beneath that wondrous foot, when He shall have all power, when He shall reign.

TAKE THESE POOR CREATURES,

You will see this great purpose of God running through the Epistle to the Ephesians:—(i. 4) "chosen . . . before the foundation of the world;" (i. 5) "hath predestinated us unto the adoption of children." Have you thought that the power which God will manifest to you, and in you, is the same power which He wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead, or that God has an inheritance in you (i. 18-20)? We might have thought that we knew the unsearchable riches of Christ to-day, but there is more to be revealed; and I cannot help thinking that God might come to us and say: "I have many things to say, but ye cannot bear them now." In the ages to come these mysteries which we are not able to bear will be revealed (ii. 7). The angels who saw Him create the world might have thought they saw his wisdom; but there are depths yet to be manifested (iii. 9, 10). You are to be the bride of Christ (v. 25). Are you prepared for this?

ARE YOU ADORNED?

How wonderful that Christ is to be admired in all them that believe! Is He admired in you? We are called "unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus" (1 Peter v. 10).

We long for that glory. The new creature is not at home in the old creation. It longs for the new. While it is at home as to the body, it is from home as to the Lord, and is longing for the time when it shall be at home with Him, when grief shall be swallowed up in radiant victory, and when God shall be able to say, "This is man in our own image, and after our likeness." When that day comes Christ shall reign. He shall be exalted. He to whom we say, "Thou art my King, O God," shall reign with purpose and power, with which He never yet has reigned in our hearts. Christ is marching on to victory. Nothing can stop his progress. You may help to advance it, but you cannot stop it.

Oh, the joy to see Thee reigning,
Thee, my own beloved Lord!
Every tongue thy name confessing,
Worship, honour, glory, blessing,
Brought to Thee with glad accord!
Thee, my Master and my Friend,
Vindicated and enthroned;
Unto earth's remotest end
Glorified, adored, and owned!

Wednesday Morning.

God in Revelation.

The opening hymn this morning was "O Lord, with one accord," and prayer was offered by Rev. Thos. Thwaites, Chaplain of the Lock Hospital. Among other pleas was an urgent one for revival of the work of God—that the pulpits may be occupied by men filled with the Holy Ghost, and that, with grace upon the hearers, great blessings may be showered upon the people throughout the land. The chairman, Lord Polwarth, read Luke xxiv. 25-46, and made helpful remarks upon the two narratives.

The tenderness of the Lord's rebuke of his sorrowing disciples was pointed out; as He walked with the other two, the Son of Man expounded to them from all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself. The Master did not despise two hearers; some of his most gracious and wonderful teachings were given in the first place to one soul. Hurrying to Jerusalem, the disciples hear the words "The Lord is risen indeed," and they are able to add their testimony as to the glorious fact. The Lord appeared in their midst, and said, "Peace be unto you," and, as John adds, "He breathed upon them, saying, Receive ye the Holy Ghost." Then comes the statement concerning Scripture that is common to both narratives: "These are the words which I spake unto you while I was yet with you, how that all things must needs be fulfilled which are written in the law of Moses and the Prophets and the Psalms concerning Me. Then opened He their understanding that they might understand the Scriptures." The Author of Scripture unfolds Scripture. No one could expound as He did. The risen Christ bears testimony to the written Word—the Word which in every age and always is showing its Divine origin and power in the conversion of souls.

The Bible and its Claim.

Rev. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS, D.D.

God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake . . . by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son. . . . Therefore we ought to give the more earnest heed to the things which we have heard . . . for if the word spoken by angels was stedfast . . . how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard Him; God also bearing them witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost? (Heb. i. 1, 2; ii. 1-4).

The subject before us is a very solemn one—great and glorious, having its mysteries also—God in Revelation. To begin with, What is Revelation? What is the clearest, simplest statement that we can form or fashion to express the thing itself? Revelation is unveiling, of course; that is the meaning of the word. Proceeding, we find that Divine Revelation, the Bible Revelation, is—Light: light from God, light of (or about) God, light concerning our relations with God. I do not know how to put the thing more simply.

Such light is needed. Revelation is required to illuminate or instruct us, to console and regenerate us. Nature cannot do these things; philosophy cannot. Nature makes known to us the existence of God, conscience reveals to us duty; but we need to know more—to know something about God's real character, and his relations with ourselves. Does God care for us? Does He love us? Is He undertaking our salvation? Sin, sorrow, death, are here—all around us.

WE MOVE AMID GRAVES—life is a procession to the tomb. We want to know of the past—the whence of things; of the present, the actual nature of things of the future, the whither of things. Where shall we get such light from? It has been said that philosophy places man on an eminence in the midst of things, and shows him "rivers flowing from unknown sources into unknown seas." It cannot tell us of the whence and whither of things. Conscience tells us that we have sinned, that we cannot get rid of sin. What about death and deliverance from it? What about the life beyond? On the verge of time we cry out, "Who shall deliver us?" No answer comes from nature. There is nothing but the silence of the stars above, and the silence of the tomb beneath. Between these we stand, and pass away like shadows into the unknown, unless there be a revelation, or a drawing back of the veil by God. In these circumstances we find ourselves, thank God, furnished with the Bible.

What shall we say of that Book? Like Jesus Christ,

IT CLAIMS TO BE FROM ABOVE;

it proclaims itself to be a revelation from God. Did you ever search the Bible through on that theme? I have at various times. The Bible testifies of itself—it tells us of its origin, how its contents were revealed in dreams, visions, voices, angel messengers, by inspirations, in many times (portions) and in various manners, during a long period of centuries. Some 1,700 years were occupied in the production of this volume; forty different authors wrote it in different languages, especially Hebrew and Greek, in different lands and different circumstances, composing sixty-six books, the whole forming one glorious sacred volume.

Examine the book, and note the origin and nature of the contents. You can mark the books of Moses by underlining the phrase, "And the Lord God said unto Moses;" and in the writings of the prophets you continually meet the familiar words, "Thus saith the Lord." In advanced years David wrote, "The Spirit of the Lord spake by me, and his words were on my tongue." Jesus Christ declared that his message was from the Father, and, unlike others He said, "Verily, verily, I say unto you." Of Paul and other Apostles, we read that their teaching was not of man, nor by man, but from the Lord Himself—their word was

BY DIVINE AUTHORITY.

And then the Book of the Revelation at the end of the Bible, what does it say? It opens—"The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto Him, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and He sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John, who bare record of the word of God . . . John to the seven churches," &c. The mighty movement of a torrent is in the words as they represent Divine truth on its way to men—from God the Father to Jesus Christ, from Jesus Christ to the revealing angel, and to John, who bears record to the churches. And then the same blessed book bears the seal of the Lord, who says in the last chapter: "I Jesus, have sent mine angel," &c.—the only time in the Bible in which such a form appears, "I Jesus." Fitting close of the book, to which nothing can be added, from which nothing may be taken.

The Bible claims to be from above. Is the claim sustained? In Heb. ii. 4 we read, "God bearing witness, both with signs and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost." As God bore witness to Christ when on earth, by miracles, so He has borne witness to Scripture by supernatural manifestations. The written Word, like Christ the Living Word, has been sealed by the miracle-working hand of God. External and internal evidences support the claim of the Bible. In the former department, is given by prophecy. From Genesis to Malachi, throughout the Old Testament, there are promises and anticipations regarding the Messiah—statements not only as to his coming, but whence He should spring, where He should be born, when He should appear, and what He should do and suffer. At the time predicted the Messiah appeared, also in the circumstances described by the prophets. He lived and taught and He died; and, as was also foretold, the temple of the Jews was destroyed, Jerusalem was trodden under foot, and the Kingdom of God spread throughout the world. Prophecy bears witness to Christ and also to the Bible which contains it.

THE GRANDEST SUPPORT

In the department of internal evidence we meet with the action of conscience. It tells us of duty and need; and here I am much impressed by a saying of our Lord. He who said "My meat and drink is to do the will of Him that sent Me," said, "If any man will do (R.V., correct, willeth to do: is willing to do) his will, he shall know of the doctrine, whether it be of God" (John vii. 17). If we are willing to do, we shall know. According as we set ourselves to do what in our conscience we know to be right, we feel that the Book is true, and has the seal of God upon it.

The sun in the heavens is self-revealing; it shows itself to the earth upon which it shines. So God in Revelation is self-revealing; you look at Him, and find that He reveals everything. The first word of Revelation is God; and its last word is God—"that God may be all in all." I know no phrase reaching further into futurity than that—

"THAT GOD MAY BE ALL IN ALL."

Between those two limits is the Book of God, which speaks of God—creating and promising, ruling, judging, and commanding, foretelling and performing, God appearing in Jesus Christ for redemption, reconciling the world to Himself. There are three great revelations of God in his relations to us—God for us, God with us, God in us. These are three steps in the revelation of God. Jesus Christ especially revealed God to us as our Father in heaven; and John, who lay his head on the breast of Jesus, recorded the Lord's saying, "God is a Spirit," and added, "God is Light," and, last of all, "God is Love"—Love itself, eternally and essentially Love. Wherever God is, love is. As long as God has been, love has been; as long as God is on the throne, love is on the throne. Love is the fulfilling of the law, the essence of the Gospel.

The Bible is, above all, the revelation of God in Christ. The prophets spoke by the Spirit of Christ which was in them (1 Pet. i. 11). Jesus Christ came, and spoke in his own person, and when He ascended He sent forth his own Spirit to speak through his Apostles. Christ is the Revealer and the Subject of Revelation—God and Man united for ever, and the Reconciler of man to God; what shall we say of the Book which unveils these great truths? Words fail utterly to express the meaning of the message. And the Book unfolds the story of the work of God in a historic manner. It does not merely show God, and God in relation to ourselves, but the work of God, even the mighty redemption which is proceeding from age to age to a glorious consummation. The Bible is

THE HISTORY OF REDEMPTION.

Look at some of the salient characteristics and features of this book. The Bible is (1) A Partial Revelation of truth. Paul says, "We know in part, and prophesy in part." As we know but a fragment of nature, so of revelation we know but a section of the great orb of Truth. Wait, therefore, and do not judge the whole by the part. In that direction lies an answer to many objections and difficulties. The Bible is (2) A Progressive Revelation. In general literature, books have to be adapted to various ages; there are primers for children, more advanced books for youths, and others again for collegians and maturer students. Consider all kinds bound together in a single volume—the Bible is some such a book. It is a progressive Revelation, with portions for children, more of the race, and other portions for persons of maturer years. The New Testament is more advanced than the Old; such practices as polygamy and slavery, which were allowed in olden times, have been abolished. In regard to many such matters, Christ said: "Ye have heard how it was said by them of old time . . . but I say unto you." He told his disciples that by and by they would be able to bear teaching which He hesitated at the time to present. He promised them the Spirit of Truth, who would lead them into further truth.

Remember the difference of the circumstances, and remember and you will be greatly helped in the study of God's Word.

THE LAW OF PROGRESS,

A word, in conclusion, about the treatment of this sacred Book. Dwell in the light; for that light is the light of life. "This is life eternal, to know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent." The Reformation has been called the Age of the Book. "There is but one Book," as Walter Scott said to Lockhart when dying; yet never was the Bible more attacked than now! But we must not be discouraged. The attacks lead to answers by means of which the Church is greatly enriched. We know that the attacks on the person of Christ were thus turned to account. In this age of criticism and increased knowledge, hold fast, intelligently, fearlessly, firmly, the Word of truth, and remember the needs of those around you, near at hand and far off—above all, the needs of the thousand millions plunged in the darkness of Mohammedanism and heathenism, who have not the Word of God. Hold forth the Word of life; be God's witnesses; be lights in the world to the glory of God.

Notes of other Addresses, and of the smaller meetings in connection with the Conference, will appear next week.

What She Went for: What She Got.

By WILLIAM LUFF.

She went for a pint of the liquid curse,
That fair small child of my simple verse:
Her mother sent her, and little thought
What more those pence for her daughter bought.

She got her beer; but she got beside
A thousand evils that eventide;
For she saw examples of sin and shame,
Results of the drink for which she came.

She heard the talk at that bar of death,
And breathed for a moment the tainted breath:
And the pure young mind got an unknown thought,
None knew the stain that she homeward brought.

She saw, she heard, and she tasted, too,
The foaming draught of that hellish brew:
And the first dire love for the drink that night
Was bought with the money by that fair mite.

Her mother took from the childish hand
The drink she fetched at her sad command;
But she could not take from those bright blue eyes
The scenes like clouds upon azure skies.

She took the change that the maiden brought;
But she could not take from her mind one thought,
Or word, or memory of that hour,
Where first she learned the infernal power.

Years passed away, and the fair young child
Was a drunken woman with passions wild;
Her mother was dying with broken heart,
That she in her drunkenness first had part.

For she saw too late that her pence had bought
A curse for her daughter she little thought;
But she might have thought, and she should have known
That the house of sin was the tempter's throne.

O mothers, fathers, and Christians, say,
Shall the children still in this Gospel day
Be offered thus to this Moloch grim?
Nay! cry through your armies, "Away with him!"

And if his worship must still go on,
Disgracing the world where the Christ was born,
Though the hosts of evil may rage and scoff,
Yet over the little ones cry, "Hands off!"

Working Girls' Holidays.—In connection with the Homes for Working Girls in London, the Holiday Fund enables every year a large number of young women to enjoy a period of rest and change, which would otherwise be an impossibility. The gratitude of those benefited is often expressed with a touch of pathos. One writes:—"I cannot express all I feel for your kindness, not only to me, but to the other girls, who, like myself, earn insufficient money to procure a holiday." Another says:—"This is my first year at business, and I could not have gone home without your assistance"; and a third acknowledges—"I had not seen any of our family for eight years." The founder and director of the Homes is Mr. John Shrimpton, 3, Victoria Street, Westminster, S.W.

Some German Conferences.

CHRISTIANS in Western Germany have experienced much refreshment at the Conferences which have of late been held at Cassel, Mülheim on the Ruhr, Siegen, and Neukirchen, near Moers. At Cassel, April 10-12, there were eight meetings, and the subject, "Christ in you" (Col. i. 27), was considered in its various aspects. The addresses were edifying in a high degree. Believers came together in large numbers in the capacious Vereinshaus, and the speakers, all of them well known among German Christians, included Pastor Stockmayer, Prediger Schrenk, and Inspector Th. Haarbeck, of Barmen.

The Conference at Mülheim (May 8-10) was held in the beautiful Tersteegen's Rest, a house built to commemorate the life and work of Gerhard Tersteegen in that town, in the earlier part of the eighteenth century. The speakers included General-Lieut. von Viebahn, Pastor Stockmayer, Pastor Paul, and Lieut.-Colonel von Knobelsdorf. The meetings were well attended, and the remembrance of them is full of fragrance.

On May 28-30 a very largely-attended series of meetings was held at Siegen on the Sieg. 1 Cor. i. 30 was considered: "But of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us Wisdom, and Righteousness, and Sanctification, and Redemption." In its various parts the text was dealt with by Pastor Jacob Haarbeck, of Elberfeld; Pastor Damman; Pastor Krafft, of Barmen, and Prediger Koch, of Barmen. The addresses were eminently thoughtful, and much blessing attended them.

The latest Conference was held on June 10 and 11 at Neukirchen, near Moers. Neukirchen is a village of perhaps 2,000 inhabitants, but is, nevertheless, specially interesting as being the home of two important Christian institutions—the Erziehungsverein (or Education Union) and the Neukirchen Mission (to British East Africa and Java), with an orphan house. The annual meetings in connection with the latter were held on Sunday, June 9, and there was a goodly muster of friends. Two missionaries at present home on furlough, Brethren Kraft and Jüngst, delivered addresses regarding the work in British East Africa and Java respectively. On the Monday and Tuesday following, four meetings were held. Impressive addresses were delivered by Pastor Krafft, of Barmen, Pastor Keudel, of Vluyn, Prediger Bender, of Schalksmühle, and Inspector Stursberg, secretary of the Neukirchen Mission. Pastor Kraft spoke on the writing to the church at Ephesus (Rev. ii. 1-7), laying special stress on verse 4—"Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love."

May the messages of God's servants at these very inspiring gatherings be made continually fruitful by the blessed Spirit, who brings to remembrance the things of Christ, and applies the Truth of God unto Salvation and Sanctification. D. G. T.

American Notes.

MRS. BALLINGTON BOOTH, the wife of the President of the Volunteers of America, has an excellent work going on in many of the largest prisons in the country. At Sing Sing Penitentiary, on the banks of the Hudson river, she has a Volunteers' Prisoners' League, about 600 strong. The man in charge of this local organisation, who was a "long-term" man, has just been pardoned by the Governor of the State, and intends to devote his life to the work of doing good to the prisoners of the country. The Volunteers are making steady progress in many directions.

Plainfield, New Jersey, is a handsome residential town an hour's railroad run from New York. A press despatch from there, dated Monday, said: "A crusade against the sale of liquor in the 'speakeasies,' with Chief of Police F. J. Kiely at its head, has been started here. The officers have been instructed to follow the methods of Mrs. Carrie Nation in every case discovered. The 'speakeasy' is ordinarily in some little shop, and is generally run by a woman. For the last year complaints have been coming in from the West End about a store of this description, but the police have not been able to find evidence to convict." Roger Martin.

Drink in South Africa.

A MOVEMENT was set on foot some weeks ago at Johannesburg to secure the establishment of the principle of Government control and sale of liquor in the Transvaal and Orange River Colonies. The High Commissioner has expressed his sympathy; and, though not feeling called on to take action in the matter, will interpose no obstacle. The Colonial Secretary has also been approached on the subject, and the promoters are understood to be zealously advocating the step in the Colonies concerned.

We have received a letter from Mr. Theophilus Lyndall Schreiner, who points out, among other objections to such a step, that the experience of the Government of Russia, after identifying itself with the retail liquor traffic, has not been such as to recommend the experiment elsewhere; that though under Crown Colony Government the scheme might not work so badly, its influence on general politics would be pernicious in the extreme when Representative Government is established; and that since the prohibitory liquor of the Orange Free State was successfully administered it deserves to be maintained, while it will not do to have one system there and a different one in the Transvaal.

In addition to the fact that the proposed change would lead to an identification of the Government with a trade which it ought to be curbing and restricting, the history of the opium traffic stands out before us as an instance of a trade with many of the same characteristics passing into Government hands. Long experience has shown there is grave danger connected with enabling even the body corporate to make profit out of the vices of the people.

Miss Anstey's Orphanage.

THE accompanying picture shows a section of the orphan group under the care of Miss Anstey (formerly of Kolar) in her orphanage at Bangalore, South India. This is not an institution for famine children, but for destitute Eurasians, a very needy class. Over 120 children, boys and girls, are sheltered and trained in the orphanage.

At the present time the work is in sore need of help; in fact, if sympathy is not speedily forthcoming the orphanage must be disbanded, and the little ones be cast upon the world. Miss Anstey's labours in India during many years past should command the generous support of Christian people.

Italian Evangelical Church.—We understand that this Church, a notice of which appeared in our last issue, is at present being re-organized. Pending needful changes, the committee of the Evangelical Continental Society has this year felt compelled to withhold such assistance as for many years past it has been only too glad to render.

Summer at Northfield.

BEAUTIFUL Northfield, ordinarily so quiet, begins to take on an appearance of much activity as the time for the Conferences draws near. From the little Northfield station on the Central Vermont Railroad, sundry conveyances may now frequently be seen making their way along old Northfield Street, past colonial houses of Puritan-Indian days, to the modern summer houses, on the slopes of the green and wooded hills, and the various boarding-houses which are yearly opened to the throngs of Northfield's summer visitors. Everybody is looking forward to a "good time." Lord Kinnaird, Dr. A. T. Pierson, and others, are already on the ground; and much prayer is being offered for grace, wisdom, and edification.

The season fairly started yesterday with "Commencement Sunday," in connection with the Seminary exercises. These were observed in the village church. The building was filled mainly with young people. Some had driven in from long distances in "buggies"; some had come on cycles, which lay in a heap on the slope of the lawn in front of the church. It is of significance that the church itself is built upon a rock of historic association, thus linking it with the olden days of Puritan sufferings. "The Beldon Stone," by which name this rock is known, is a large natural rock cut by the rough inscription, "Aaron Beldon was killed here" (by Indians) "July the 23rd, 1748."

The Baccalaureate Sermon (on the last Sunday of the term) was delivered by Rev. Dr. C. I. Scofield from Heb. viii. 5, "See, saith He, that thou make all things according to the pattern shown thee in the mount." It was a noble address. In some preliminary remarks the preacher drew attention to the fact that the object of the beloved founder of the schools was the formation in the scholars of an ideal Christian life, the educational training, in his mind, being secondary. The Doctor urged that after the pattern given to Moses (1) the Christian life should be made beautiful. Usefulness was generally placed first, but he would change the emphasis. The religion of the Puritan was good and noble, but it lacked beauty; it was like a rough old tower, strong but aggressive, enduring but unsympathetic. It lacked sweetness, smoothness, kindliness, charity, the full and rounded character of our Lord. (2) The real Christian life is a costly thing, just as the pattern was. (3) It should be, like the tabernacle, beautiful within, though outwardly plain. (4) The Tabernacle was not a great or imposing building; it was only 15 × 45 × 10ft. From this Dr. Scofield drew the lesson that our lives were generally very insignificant—just little tabernacles built on the sands of the desert, on the farm, in the field, or in the kitchen—but we could make them, after the pattern on the mount, very beautiful within, though outwardly plain and unattractive.

This will almost be enough for your Northfield Letter, but there is much more to write about, as will readily be seen from the able summary of Northfield events in The Christian of May 30. The Boys' "Camp," the Conferences, Mount Hermon Summer School, the Student Conference, the Young Women's Conference, the General Conference for Christian Workers, the beautiful hotel, the Special Bible Lectures, the Young People's Institute, the Musical Lectures, the Institute for Christian Doctrine, the Endowment Story, the plans for Rev. G. Campbell Morgan (now ploughing his way to us across the Atlantic), and for Rev. Samuel Chadwick, and others—why, it would almost fill a volume!

I hope to write again next week, for many thoughts and many eyes are turned with interest and affection to this Mecca of devout and earnest souls.

Northfield, June 18. Pilgrim.

Spanish Evangelization Society.—In reviewing the operations of this Society during the year the missionary superintendent, Rev. W. B. Douglas, writes: "As the country is not savage, nor, technically speaking, heathen, our work is like that of a home mission in the midst of a densely ignorant and deeply-prejudiced people." The agencies of the Society are now established at Cadiz, Seville, and Huelva, with numerous minor missions. Itinerant work is organized from these centres, and by this means the influence of the Society is expanding in many directions. Few who take a stand as Protestants fail to be thorough in their profession, but give themselves heartily to spreading the good news with great enthusiasm. A young pastor recently remarked that his flock of twenty-six communicants "make so much noise" that the townspeople reckon them to be about 300 instead of twenty-six. The hon. sec. of the Society is Mrs. F. M. Graham, 16, Mayfield Gardens, Edinburgh.

The Late Dr. and Mrs. Lovitt.

THE son of Mr. James L. Lovitt, of Camden Town, Dr. Arnold Edward Lovitt, early came under the instruction of a godly Sunday school teacher, by whom his thoughts were turned in the direction of systematic Christian work, while the definite desire to take part in foreign mission effort was kindled through a sermon by Dr. Horton, and stimulated by the strong missionary tone of the church at Hampstead. By Dr. Horton's advice he offered himself for preparation to the Missionary Training College at Harley House, Bow. He devoted himself to study and mission work in the East of London for some eighteen months, being in fellowship with the church in the Burdett Road, under the pastoral care of Rev. Archibald G. Brown. At the expiry of that time, on the suggestion of Dr. Harry Guinness, he entered upon the medical course at the London Hospital, still residing at Harley House, and continuing local mission work. He obtained the diploma of L.S.A. in 1895, and those of M.R.C.S. and L.R.C.P. Lond. in 1897. He was for a year Resident Medical Officer of the Mildmay Mission Hospital, Bethnal Green, and also worked with Dr. George Hillman in Castleford, Yorkshire, and with friends in Kent and Surrey.

The hope of Dr. Lovitt's family had always been that he would undertake work in China under the auspices of the London Missionary Society, and he was actually accepted by the directors; but when feeling himself ready and qualified for work, he was informed there would be no vacancy for a year. Disinclined to wait so long, he accepted, out of four offers for service, that of Mr. Pigott, of the Sheo-yang Mission.

Mrs. Lovitt was a daughter of Mr. Alexander Grant, a missionary at Singapore. She was received into church fellowship on December 25, 1881, when thirteen years old, and from that time evinced a desire to devote herself to the Lord in mission work. On the return of her parents to England in 1885, she went to school, and was there used of the Lord among her school-fellows. On leaving school she took up for some years work among the Jewish children in the East End of London. In the neighbourhood of Tottenham, where she resided, she threw her energies into the Sunday school, the Children's Mission, and visitation of the poor. In 1894 she entered the London Hospital for training as a nurse, in order to further fit herself for mission work abroad.

After their marriage in 1897, Dr. and Mrs. Lovitt sailed for China. From the time of their arrival at their destination—Tai-yuen-fu, in Shan-si province—Mrs. Lovitt was able to give much help to the Chinese women in medical work. In one of her last letters to her mother she spoke of their busy life, and said, "We shall need a long and early rest, as we are putting two days' work into one." Mrs. Lovitt's life throughout was one of self-sacrifice and whole-hearted devotion to her Lord, and her early influence will never be forgotten by her home circle.

The attitude of the people and their rulers was perfectly friendly until the new governor, of known murderous tendency, was appointed. Even then the home letters show such perfect confidence in the love of the people for the mission-staff, and appreciation of medical aid, that it was hoped no danger would arise. But, alas, the fatal July 9 came, with its oft-told tales of treachery and martyrdom!

Of the nearly three years' life at Tai-yuen, it is almost enough to say that it was indescribably happy. Letters to his father and mother are full of bright description of daily duties, intense interest in surgical operations, opium and other cures, delight in the friendship of the staff as well as that of other missionaries, and the special joy attending the little English services on Sundays, when all the workers were brought into close touch with each other and their Lord.

One of the great domestic joys of the home circle was of a visit paid to them by Mr. Grant while he was on a missionary tour. After the sad tragedy at Tai-yuen-fu, when the two missionaries were called home through the fiery trial of martyrdom, Mr. Grant wrote as follows:—

Very pleasant is the memory of some ten or twelve days spent at Sheo-yang, with the dear friends serving the Lord in the Gospel there. In daily meetings for the Word of God the lamented man of God, T. W. Pigott, kindly translated what was said in English. One of those present on those occasions was the shepherd Li-pai, a man who rejoiced at the Word of God; his intelligent and devout countenance would not easily be forgotten by those who saw him. An ex-opium dealer, too, who had willingly suffered loss for the Gospel, and was becoming, if indeed he had not become, a valued worker and witness for Christ. Pastor Chü, with his cheery but earnest and weighty teaching, helped those who had believed through grace. Are there any of these and of the others now alive? Shall we ever know particulars on this side of that Day?

The brightest memory of Tai-yuen-fu was the occasion of the large gathering of foreign teachers and native believers there, from the different places round about where the Word of God had been the power of God to salvation, with those in the city itself. This was held at the beginning of the Chinese year (Feb. 8-12). Had the brethren who arranged it known what was going to befall they could not have chosen a more essential point for conference, meditation, and prayer than "the Word made flesh."

Of that crowd of persons, men and women, from far and near, delivered from the frivolities of the season, and gladly availing themselves of the opportunity to gather and compare notes, listen to addresses, and worship together, we cannot tell how many are now with Christ. Two of the Tai-yuen-fu workers, ladies, went to England in the following month, and the writer left in April; but all the rest, English, Scotch, American, old and young, have been cut off so far as appears. Two letters have been received, after the rumours of coming danger reached them, from one of those who left there. One mentioned the report of a design to exterminate foreigners, but added: "The angel of the Lord encampeth." The other repeated, "The angel of the Lord still encampeth."

Between the breaking into the hospital buildings on June 27, and the events of July 9, when the prisoners stood before the governor (as the Lord of heaven and earth once did), what exercises of soul they passed through as yet we know not; possibly shall not know. What cheer they were able to be of, who was able to encourage their hearts in God, how those ten days of tribulation were spent, we know not. This we know that they were sustained even in the hour of death. Mrs. Lovitt held the hand of her little boy to the last, and with her latest breath reminded her persecutors that they had only brought the Good News. We can only say, as one nearly related to one of the sufferers, a young mother, said in writing to a survivor: "Jehovah liveth" (Psa. xviii. 46). This is his glory; and ours, too. In the solitude of a past eternity, "I am;" amid the myriads of created dependents still the only "I am;" to all a future eternity "He who is" (Rev. i. 8). Here faith finds her firm foundations: "And blessed be my Rock" (Psa. xviii. 46). What less could hold the soul amid the waves and billows of life!

Letters to the Editor.

National Need for Prayer.

DEAR SIR,—Do not the present circumstances of our country and of the world call upon Christians, generally and individually, for much and very earnest intercessory prayer for the help and interposition of the Most High?

Firstly, there is the long continuance of the horrible war in South Africa with all the death and disease and suffering and bitterness involved.

Then there is the apparent paralysis of the Government and of Parliament in reference to many urgently needed social reforms, such as the improvement of the dwellings of the poor, the diminution of over-crowding, and the demands of further legislation to check drunkenness.

Thirdly, there is the too general popular indifference to the necessity for more earnest effort for such reforms, and also in regard to the observance of the Sabbath.

Fourthly, the immense development of prostitution and open as well as secret vice.

Fifthly, the enormous progress, throughout the country, of sacerdotalism, together with the weak and flagging condition of spiritual life in some churches, and in many directions.

Sixthly, the excessively popular indulgence in betting and gambling.

Seventhly, the indifference to, and neglect of (to an increasing extent), the religious education of the young, and also in regard to home devotion and individual Bible-reading and prayer.

Other discouraging, and indeed alarming, conditions of national life could be mentioned, but the above are sufficient to call for increased earnestness, and recourse to more persevering prayer.

Whilst we need not be pessimists, and whilst there are many bright and hopeful gleams in the moral and spiritual atmosphere of our land, yet there is also very much to awaken a deep concern and endeavour for both Divine and human operation to improve existing circumstances, and to bring about a fresh and reviving visitation of the Holy Spirit's graces and energies.—Respectfully yours, A Wayfarer.

Y.W.C.A.—The new Holiday Home and Institute at Liscard, Cheshire, recently opened, promises to become a centre of useful activity. The house is admirably adapted to the requirements of the work. It is capable of accommodating about twenty-four boarders, besides having most suitable rooms for Bible classes and educational purposes. It is situated within easy reach of Liverpool, and about a quarter of an hour's walk from the seashore. Information will be given by the Lady Superintendent, Withenfield House, Liscard, Cheshire.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, July 7. Luke xiv.

WE have in this chapter a specimen of Christ's Table-Talk. What a stream of rich and wholesome conversation poured from his lips to those who were privileged to sit with Him at meat. Though He was sensible of being watched, and unfriendly eyes watching for some cause of accusation against Him, nothing seemed to staunch the overflowing fountains of his soul.

First, He healed the sufferer from dropsy; then accosted those who sought the best seats; next turned from the guests to the host; and finally, addressing Himself to the utterer of the pious exclamation concerning those who should eat bread in the Kingdom of God, He gave utterance to one of his noblest parables—and all was so natural, so appropriate, so calculated to touch the deepest chords in the hearts of his hearers, that it was impossible to take serious umbrage. Let us imitate our Master as a model of the way in which ordinary conversation may subserve the highest spiritual results.

Ere the chapter closes, we have an instance of the Lord's use of his winnowing fan. Amid the crowds He knew that there was so much chaff that He must needs set Himself to winnow it away, by suggesting that his disciples should count the cost. What a comfort it is to realize that our God also has counted the cost! When He began to save us, He knew exactly all the patience and wisdom, the grace and love, it would cost. But, notwithstanding all, He began, and what He began He will assuredly complete. Be of good cheer!

MONDAY, July 8. Luke xv.

The first parable is pastoral. What a picture! Leaving the ninety-and-nine in their mountain pasture, the shepherd also turns his thoughts from them and seeks the lost one. Calling it by name, he climbs the terraced hills until the very flints of the rock seem to partake in his interest. When the sheep is found, he does not chide it, being only too glad to bear it home, where weariness, fatigue, and anxiety are swallowed up in the new-found joy. The parable is but a veil of words, slightly concealing the features of the Good Shepherd Himself.

The second is from domestic life, from a woman's interests, for truth has both a masculine and feminine dress. It is thought by some that the ten drachmas were the ten coins worn as a frontlet by the women of the East, and invested with a kind of sanctity, because given by the bridegroom to the bride, at the time of marriage. That lost coin is like man in his natural state. He still bears the image and superscription of his Maker, but he has rolled into the dust of neglect. There he will lie until he is sought. But One who loves him has stooped low to seek and save.

The third parable is human. In the first, a lost sheep, a loss that might soon be replaced; in the second, a lost coin, the loss of which would make a serious, though not irreparable, flaw in the fair adornment; in the third, something far more valuable than either silver or sheep was at stake. The sheep wandered blindly, the silver piece had no choice, but the prodigal went off of his own self-will—each marks a further lapse of hopelessness. But what grief! what cost of suffering! what eager interest! what a welcome! what a blessed restoration! Have these parables been true of thee?

TUESDAY, July 9. Luke xvi.

The burden of this chapter is our relationship to money. There is, first, the picture of its true use. While on earth we may lay up "treasure in the heavens," make for ourselves "purses which wax not old," and secure a welcome into the eternal habitations. As the creditors of the rich man were glad enough to welcome the steward who had used his temporary power to do them a good turn, so those whom we have sought to aid by the administration of money will one day, supposing of course that they are the children of God, welcome us into one of the many mansions. Are you so living as to be securing a welcome there? Then the Lord gives three definitions of money. It is "a very little thing" (10). To be a millionaire is to be an infinitely smaller man than to be a good man. It is the unrighteous mammon (11). It is "another's" (12). Throughout his teaching our Lord constantly affirms our stewardship of these earthly possessions for God. Of every penny we shall have to give an account.

The lovers of money derided these words, but the Master showed the evils that congregated in their hearts. They justified themselves before men; and were peculiarly liable to the sins of the flesh. In the next parable He drew a succession of strange contrasts. The rich man dwells in a palatial residence, clothed in garments of Tyrian purple and Egyptian fine linen, faring on perpetual banquets—his whole thought centred on his lowest self. But in the other life he is plunged into the direst distress. Whilst the beggar, who had lain at his gate, and whose name, "God is my help," is an indication of his character, is blessed with the society of earth's noblest. We are forming character by our daily temper and actions towards God and man; character is forming destiny; and when destiny is once determined it is unalterable (Rev. xxii. 11).

WEDNESDAY, July 10. Luke xvii.

The world is full of hate and evil. We are perpetually putting stumbling-blocks in each other's way, and making life more difficult for our fellows. Let us take heed to ourselves and to them. Let us obey the law of perfect love and the consideration of others. Let us be always willing to forgive where there are signs of true repentance.

Do these precepts seem too high to be attained? If so, let it be remembered that He giveth more grace on the only condition, on our part, that we open our hearts to receive it. Faith is the power of God-receptiveness. As the tiny seed opens to receive the forces of nature, so faith opens to receive the mighty power and grace of God. Only we must see to it that our faith is coupled with humility, for when we have done our best in ploughing the soil, or in keeping sheep, we are unprofitable servants, having only done our duty. True faith will not only be receptive and humble; it will not only be thoughtful of men and full of ministry to Christ, but it will give glory to God (15).

Clearly enough our Lord foresaw the approaching dissolution of the Jewish state. There was no help for it. Suddenly and inevitably its doom must befal, as the deluge on the old world, or the overthrow of Sodom. The Roman eagles would gather round the devoted city, and only instant flight would avail. The early disciples were warned by these words, and escaped to Pella, before Titus struck the last blow. Since then other catastrophes have befallen, and, finally, the day of doom will break on our world—to all of which the Master's words have been and will be appropriate. We must hold lightly to the present, looking for and hastening unto our eternal home.

THURSDAY, July 11. Luke xviii.

There are three phases in our Lord's teaching about prayer—that of Matt. vi., this chapter, and the words of John xiv., xv. In the second, or intermediate phase, He exhorts to importunity and urgency. There is an aspect in prayer which we are in danger of overlooking, when the skies are blue and the sun of prosperity is shining—the need of holy "violence." This is taught us in the first parable of the chapter, by a striking contrast, which may be stated thus: If an unjust and abandoned judge grants a just petition at last, out of base and selfish motives, and to save himself from being worried, because it has been urged by a defenceless, helpless woman, for whom he cares nothing—how much more shall the just and merciful God hear the cry, and avenge the cause, of those whom He loves! Our heavenly Father does not need any worrying into mercy, but the blessing may not be ripe, or we ourselves not fully prepared to receive it.

But let it never be forgotten that those who would be justified, and stand accepted before God, must be prepared to be nothing in their own estimation. It is our part always to remember that we have no claim on God save through his mercy. For such there is propitiation, and acceptance (13, R.V. marg.).

The key to our Lord's conversation with the young ruler lies deep. He had asked what he should do, Jesus tells him what he must be. He must be so full of love to others as to be willing to sacrifice all for their sakes. It is through a perfected love that we perfectly live, but we must live before we love.

The chapter closes with an illustration of importunity in prayer (39). O soul, do not take a denial, if thy cause is a just one, but let every hindrance and delay only increase thy earnestness.

FRIDAY, July 12. Luke xix.

Under what different phases does our Lord's character appear in this chapter! He is represented under aspects that alternately charm and awe us. First, He is the welcomed and honoured Guest of the publican, who for years had been striving towards the light—it may be since the days of John the Baptist, when many of his class began to live a new life. To his house the Saviour goes in search of a lost sheep.

But, next, we see this same pitiful and gentle Master seated on the throne, and taking account of his servants, the unfaithful among whom account Him an austere man; whilst, to all of them, his judgment seat is a mirror at which they find themselves revealed.

To this succeeds a further revelation of his character, when, in humble triumph, He rides the lowly colt, amid the hosannas of his followers. His royalty is not that of the kings of the earth. It is based on character. It is ignored by the proud, but welcomed by the poor. It is fairest to those whose eyes are anointed to penetrate the veil, and discern the eternal realities.

But this is not all. We hear Him speaking as Prophet, and detect his tears as Patriot. His heart is full of woe for the city He loved, as He detects the gathering shadows of the night. Once more He enters the temple to cleanse it. Once more He sits there to teach. Once more the crowds gather, while his enemies plot against his life. In which of these phases of character does He come to thee?

SATURDAY, July 13. Luke xx.

This was almost the last day of our Lord's public ministry to Jerusalem, and it was a day of strife and conflict. The chief priests, elders, and scribes were intent on entrapping Him, but they were themselves entrapped and silenced, for they could not answer his questions. He held them up to the view of all men in the parable of the vineyard. He depicted their unutterable overthrow in his reference to the rejected corner stone, on which they would be broken, and to the stone cut out of the mountain, without hands, which would grind them to powder.

With what infinite wisdom He detected and exposed the sophistry of those who pretended that they were just men, and came to catch his words (20)! Our Master can search our hearts, and read their inner secrets; does He find us rendering to God the things which are his? We are coins, bearing the image and superscription of the Eternal; are we circulating for the increase of his wealth?

The Sadducees were also silenced. They stood for the broad school of thinking among the Jews, and denied the future life. Our Lord showed they could not do this, consistently with their faith in the Bible; and, from a most unexpected verse, proved that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were living, centuries after their death, since God described Himself as their God, and it was impossible to suppose that He could call Himself the God of those who had ceased to exist.

Finally, our Lord applied to Himself one of the greatest of the Messianic Psalms (cx.); and in the hearing of the people denounced Pharisees and scribes. Here is the wrath of the Lamb. To these He is the savour of life; to those of death. The same sun that softens wax hardens clay. F. B. M.

Y.M.C.A. Conference at Oxford.

[BY OUR SPECIAL COMMISSIONER.]

FOLLOWING the opening proceedings of the Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations at Oxford, reported in our last issue, the delegates assembled at 9.30 on Wednesday morning at a devotional meeting conducted by Rev. W. Bradfield, B.A., of Wesley Memorial Church, Oxford. His brief address, based on 2 Tim. ii. 4-6, may be summarised in three points of advice to Christians, (a) Don't get entangled; (b) Keep the rules; (c) Work hard.

The chair was then taken by Mr. Alderman Anderson, of Belfast, in the regretted absence of the president, Sir George Williams, through ill-health. The "Roll Call" was taken, and in addition to the four countries forming the United Kingdom there were present representatives from Australia, Canada, India, South Africa, and the Continent of Europe, with a coloured brother from West Africa. A letter of greeting from Sir George Williams was read to the conference, and it was unanimously resolved to send the following telegram in reply: "Delegates assembled at British Conference deeply regret your enforced absence. They send most affectionate greetings, and earnestly trust that by the Divine blessing you may speedily be restored to your usual health." A loyal and dutiful message was also forwarded to the King. These preliminaries over, we settled down to the consideration of

THE ACTIVE MEMBERSHIP.

The introductory paper was written by Mr. J. H. PUTTERILL, and read in his absence by Mr. Basil Hewer, one of his colleagues in the secretariat of the Central London Y.M.C.A.

The title of the paper was "The Relation of the Member to the Primary Work of the Y.M.C.A." Mr. Putterill dealt first with the field of operations. "It is estimated that there are in this country at least five millions of young men between the ages of fifteen and thirty. These form the constituency among which the Association has to work. What is the spiritual condition of these young men? Taking as a criterion the attendance at public worship, it is safe to say that not more than ten per cent. of the young men of the United Kingdom attend a place of worship, thus we are face to face with the fact that there are 4,500,000 of young men whose spiritual condition is such that they have so little interest in the Kingdom of God as never to be found worshipping in his house on the Lord's Day.

"How appalling is the fact that nine-tenths of the young men of this country, at that period of their lives when character is formed, and when they are most exposed to the temptations which work ruin in men's lives, should be without that knowledge which alone can insure for them victory over sin, the saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ! The question then is, 'How can these young men best be reached with the Gospel message?' The Churches notwithstanding their manifold activities to-day, are of the young men of our land, and to deal with the four-and-a-half millions outside of Church influence demands a special missionary organization. This is provided in the Young Men's Christian Association.

ONLY TOUCHING A SMALL PROPORTION

"But it is an important question for us to ask, 'Are our Associations to-day accomplishing all that can be expected of them?' We need to look to our machinery. The basis of our work is clear and distinct. 'The Y.M.C.A. seeks to unite those young men who, regarding the Lord Jesus Christ as their God and Saviour, according to the Scriptures, desire to be his disciples in their doctrine and in their lives, and to associate their efforts for the extension of his Kingdom among young men.' It is clear, therefore, that members should unite to do the missionary work of the Association. But do they? Unfortunately a great many of our members not only do nothing, but have no sense of responsibility concerning the matter.

"Many members join the Association only for the advantages they can secure, not for the good they can do, so that our membership roll, as at present constituted, does not represent the real working force of our Associations. What, then, is to be done?"

Mr. Putterill's paper contained five suggestions which may be briefly summarised thus:—(1) To give more prominence to the fact that the Association is a union of workers, and affords opportunities for those who desire to use their efforts on behalf of young men; (2) To restrict the membership (as distinct from associateship) to

THOSE WHO WILL WORK;

(3) To organise the work of the Association so that everyone may have a definite sphere of labour; (4) To meet frequently as workers to report progress, and plan further effort; (5) To trust the workers, even the young and comparatively inexperienced, seeing that in that way responsibility will be felt and efficiency attained.

A somewhat desultory discussion followed. Many of the speakers had failed to grasp the main point, which was, "Should the membership roll of a Y.M.C.A. be made up of all and sundry who were eligible because they were Christians, or should it represent the actual working force of the Association without any 'deadheads'?" Some Associations are already practically working on the lines suggested by Mr. Putterill, and only enrol as "active members" those who undertake to engage definitely in the work of winning young men for Christ. The question whether those who, being Christians, are not active workers should be called honorary members or associate members is one which must be settled by each individual Association. The main point is to get a reliable working membership which will be in fact, and not merely on paper.

A noonday service had been arranged at the University Church, with a sermon by the Dean of Norwich (Dr. LEFROY), in which he gave a masterly exposition of the two-fold statement of the Lord Jesus Christ, "I am the Light of the world," "Ye are the light of the world" (John viii. 12; Matt. v. 14). A collection was taken for the Oxford Y.M.C.A. Building Fund.

The delegates were entertained at luncheon by Mr. MARTIN J. SUTTON, after which a garden party at Headington Hill Hall, the seat of Mr. G. H. MORRELL, M.P., afforded a pleasant break in the round of meetings, though even here a meeting was held in

THE INTERESTS OF THE FOREIGN WORK

of the Y.M.C.A. Mr. SEAGRAM presided, and addresses were given by Mr. W. M. OATTS, who has just completed a world tour; Colonel CANDY, who gave some interesting information about Y.M.C.A. work in Poona; and Mr. R. D. PRINGLE, who spoke with special reference to Bombay (where he spent some years as secretary) and Burma.

The evening found the magnificent Town Hall crowded for the public meeting. The MARQUIS OF NORTHAMPTON presided, and urged that the Y.M.C.A. should run its social or recreational work side by side with its more definitely religious work, taking care that the former should never have predominance over the latter. Christian young men should feel their responsibility. There was a test which every member of a Y.M.C.A. should apply to himself—had he ever during his membership said one word or done one thing to help his fellow-member nearer their Lord and Master? To enter as a member was the first step, but the second one was much more important—the setting of an example, the having an influence on all whom he met in intercourse, and by his influence and example helping others to follow humbly the footsteps of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Mr. ROBINSON SOUTTAR,, a former President of the Oxford Y.M.C.A., spoke of the Conference as an opportunity for each delegate to get a spiritual uplifting, the influence of which he might transmit to his own Association on returning home.

The BISHOP OF LIVERPOOL, who, naturally, had a most hearty reception in Oxford, spoke of four great qualifications which went to make a missionary to young men. First and foremost there was the separate life, not separation from society but from sin, not separation from the world but from worldliness. Secondly, there was saintliness, which was not the doing of extraordinary things, but the doing of ORDINARY THINGS EXTRAORDINARILY WELL.

The third great quality for a missionary to young men was simplicity; and fourthly, there was self-sacrifice. If a man possessed these four great characteristics there would be no limit to the peace, the fruitfulness, and the joy of his life. The musical part of the meeting was admirably rendered by the Free Church Choir Union, under the bâton of Mr. Alfred Wiblin.

Thursday morning's proceedings opened with a devotional service conducted by Hon. and Rev. W. TALBOT RICE. Two papers followed, one by Mr. JOHN SAMUEL, of Glasgow, on "How best to extend and develop the Social Work of the Associations," the other by Mr. COPEMAN, of Cork, on "Financial Problems, and How to Solve Them."

In the discussion on the first paper, the perennial controversy about "religious" and "secular" was very much in evidence, but there is, fortunately, among Y.M.C.A. workers a growing disposition to abandon the "separate compartment" theory of life, and to recognise that the whole man, body, mind, and soul must be consecrated and used for the service of God. Many instances of the advantage of social agencies were given. Professor GLADSTONE referred to a young man who joined the Association for the sake of the reading-room, and was led to attend the Bible class through which he was converted. A delegate from Walsall spoke of one of their former secretaries, now a missionary of the L.M.S. in New Guinea, who was brought into the Association by the attraction of a social evening. The moral of the whole discussion was, Neglect no means of attracting young men to the Association rooms, and let the Christian influence of the members be fully exerted on all who are thus brought into touch with them.

The delegates were entertained at luncheon on Thursday by members of the University, represented by Dr. JACKSON, Rector of Exeter College, who throughout the Conference showed much practical interest.

The afternoon was devoted to a visit to Blenheim Palace. The DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH met the delegates, and with great courtesy did the honours of his ancestral home. In the evening Mr. M. H. HODDER, of London, presided over a meeting in the Town Hall for devotional exercises and to receive reports of American and Colonial work. Mr. W. H. MILLS, secretary of the English National Council, who returned only the day previously from attending the Jubilee Convention of the American Y.M.C.A., spoke enthusiastically of the work as he and Mr. Putterill had seen it in the cities of Canada and the United States. Mr. and Mrs. OATTS, who also spoke, referred to their trip round the world, and to the opportunities they had had of seeing and helping Y.M.C.A. work.

Friday morning brought the closing function of the Conference, a farewell service in Mansfield College Chapel. A large proportion of the delegates were members of the Free Churches, and were accordingly much interested in this Free Church College, which, for beauty of position and architecture, compares favourably with its fellows of older foundation. Dr. FAIRBAIRN, the Principal, conducted a short devotional service, and then gave a most interesting historical resumé of Oxford as touching its collegiate life. He concluded with an appeal to the Association not to relax its efforts to reach and teach young men. He would rather be a teacher than a preacher, for the latter sometimes got no further than the ears of the people, but a teacher could more effectually reach the heart and influence the will.

Cruelty to Animals.—Mr. Sidney Trist (Editor The Animal's Friend, 32, Sackville Street, Piccadilly, W.) is willing to lecture—with or without lime-light views—to any organization connected with a place of worship, on scientific experiments on living animals, and other forms of cruelty to the lower creation. Mr. Thomas Clemo (same address) offers to each applicant a free copy of a booklet containing the opinions of the late Queen Victoria, Archdeacon Wilberforce, Dr. Talmage, and others, including eminent medical specialists, on the utility and the morality of the practice

867

Regions Beyond Missionary Union.

HARLEY HOUSE, Bow, was on Friday the rendezvous of a large number of Christian friends, gathered together with the twofold object of showing their continued interest in the institutes which form the centre of the Regions Beyond Missionary Union, and of hearing of the blessing which has attended the efforts of the agents in home and foreign fields. The afternoon meeting was held in Harley Street Chapel, and was presided over by Mr. T. A. Denny, who spoke of the numerous difficulties with which missionaries have to contend. Referring to the storm which has passed over China, he spoke of it as indicating God's anger with us as a nation. It is no secret that during the whole of her late Majesty's reign half a ton of opium had been sent into China every hour; and now the country is told that the Government are unable to make any effort to decrease the facilities for supplying this poison.

A résumé of the work of the year was read by Mr. E. A. Talbot. Its opening words were a pathetic allusion to ten missionaries formerly connected with the Institute, who in China had been slain for the Word of God and the testimony of his Son. A note of thanksgiving was raised for the partial recovery of Dr. Harry Guinness, in answer to a from every part of the land. For practically the whole session the Institute has been deprived of its beloved acting director, and especially has he been missed in his eloquent advocacy of the missionary cause throughout the country. Thirteen new men were received for training at the colleges. At Harley College thirty-eight men have been in residence, six of whom have taken the Livingstone College course of instruction in the elements of medicine and surgery at the completion of their ordinary theological study. Ten students have been resident in Cliff College. The evangelistic work of the students in and around London has been carried on as usual, nearly 700 indoor addresses being given, and 177 in the open air. Over 1,000 visits have been made to homes of the poor, and 146 to the London Docks. A second contingent of workers has left for in North India, and the staff of the Congo Balolo Mission has also been strengthened. Three have left for Canada, and many others are shortly leaving for Newfoundland, Paraguay, Jamaica, &c. Of the deaconesses, three have left for India. A new station has been opened on the Upper Congo at Baringa, and the necessary school, chapel, and houses erected by the missionaries. The whole of the cost of the new steamer Livingstone, has been provided, but a sum of £3,000 is still necessary for her transport and reconstruction on the Upper Congo.

REMARKABLE CONCERT OF PRAYER

THE NEW BEHAR MISSION

In the course of a brief address, Rev. Silas Mead spoke of the session just closed as one of the happiest and most successful in the history of Harley College. He had only one regret, the over-anxiety of the students to get through their course, which had resulted in prostration. Similar testimony to the thoroughness and devotion of the students at Cliff was borne by Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes. The men have been "law-bound, love-bound, work-bound, and above all, they have been Christ-bound."

Concerning the women's branch at Doric Lodge, Miss Duff had an interesting report to give. The labours of the deaconesses among the homes of the poor have been maintained with untiring devotion. Medical work, mothers' meetings, and night schools are among the numerous channels through which Christian is caused to flow. Bromley is also a training ground for lady missionaries, the district affording every opportunity for the development of their gifts, and the exercise of love and sympathy for those in need.

COMPASSION FOR THE MULTITUDE

Pastor Hayes told of the progressive evangelistic work which is carried on week by week. The three mission halls, with their seating capacity of 1,300, are quite insufficient to accommodate the numbers desirous of worshipping at the services. At Berger Hall there is the second largest Sunday-school in East London. Nearly the whole of its seventy teachers have passed through the school. In this hall no fewer than thirty-seven meetings are held weekly.

Reviewing the operations of the R.B.M.U. at home and abroad, Dr. Grattan Guinness found many causes for gratitude to God. He announced that Dr. Harry had arrived in Tasmania, and expressed the hope that his visit to the colonies will result in awakening a deeper interest in the Union. Apart from the sixty missionaries who are being supported, Dr. Guinness referred to the extensive work of the 900 former students in all parts of the world, of whose labours encouraging reports are ever coming to hand. Rev. F. B. Meyer followed, and in a few words, said he assumed the responsibility of the office of Dr. Harry Guinness, in answer to a call from God. He trusted that by relieving him of his onerous duties, many years would be added to the life of their beloved director.

After tea, a meeting was held in the grounds of Harley House, under the presidency of Mr. R. C. Morgan, when addresses relating more particularly to effort abroad were given by Missionaries.

Foreigners in London.

THE thirty-ninth annual gathering of the friends and supporters of the Eglise Réformée Evangélique Française of Bayswater, and of the Mission to French-speaking Foreigners in London in connection with it, was held a few days ago in the grounds of Grove House, Regent's Park. The presence of upwards of 100 children of different nationalities from the French Schools near Fitzroy Square, who in turn sang hymns and lovely "rondes," added much to the interest of the meeting, and Rev. Herbert Marston addressed a few words in French to the young ones. The meeting was held in a tent, the chair being taken by Mr. T. Cheney Garfit.

Pasteur Du Pontet-de La Harpe, the founder of the Church and Mission, was unfortunately prevented from taking part in the proceedings, owing to a chill. In his absence the report was read by Mr. J. G. Ryffel, secretary, and comprised some encouraging information.

Authorization has been given by the Archbishop of Canterbury to the Bishop of London to allow Rev. J. J. Coxhead to invite Pasteur Du Pontet-de La Harpe, to preach in French in the parish church of St. John's, Fitzroy Square, for the benefit of the large cosmopolitan population of the district. In all the departments of the Mission the year has been one of healthy efficient activity, attended with gratifying results. The missionary spirit which distinguishes this congregation has derived a new impetus from the visit of Captain Bertrand, of Geneva, the originator of the Zambesi Society. Some 170 children of thirteen different nationalities have been educated in the schools, making a total of 1,245 since their opening; 329 foreign governesses have availed themselves of the advantages offered them by the Bienvenue Home; seventy have been helped to situations; 350 foreign servant girls have applied to the Société Protestante Française de Placement, which has provided 150 of them with situations. The young men of the Church have formed themselves into a regular association, with the object of mutual, social, moral, and spiritual improvement, and Gospel work.

The distribution of Bibles, New Testaments, and tracts has been carried on during the year through the instrumentality of twelve regular workers, with occasional friendly assistance. The total receipts from all sources amounted to £2,502 18s. 4½d., and the expenditure to £2,463 4s. 8d. Deeply interesting addresses on the importance of a work of this kind to promote the interests of the kingdom of God, and to bring about real and solid entente cordiale between nations, were delivered by the Chairman, Revs. J. J. Coxhead, C. H. Irwin, Herbert Marston, G. R. Thornton, Mr. J. H. Gladstone, and Pasteur Samuel Monnier. It is to be regretted that the Medical Mission should continue closed for lack of £250 a year.

Portsmouth and Gosport Seamen.

WE are thankful to announce that, after thorough renovation and refitting, the "Henry Cook" Institute and Boys' Home, in connection with the above Mission, was reopened on May 29.

The need for such a work is very great indeed, as may be seen by the hundreds of young men wandering aimlessly about the streets until entrapped by music-halls or public-houses. Our object is to win them for Christ. For this, the Institute is provided with reading-rooms, in which good literature is provided, also quiet games and writing materials, a bath-room and beds.

Sailors and fishermen much appreciate the Home. The nightly attendance in the reading-room is about forty, and some testify to the benefit they received here as lads.

If space permitted the nightly attendance of lads under sixteen would be quite 100.

The cost of renovation and refitting has been great, and it is hoped that friends knowing the value and need of the work will not withhold their practical sympathy and support, but endeavour to lessen the burden and responsibility resting on the superintendent. She is in great need of helpers who could give their time to the work and live at their own charges.

Information can be obtained from Mrs. H. Cook, Stoke Road, Gosport, Superintendent of Mission. Gifts of magazines, games, clothing, &c., are urgently needed.

T. M. Riley, Captain K.R.R.

New Barracks, Gosport.

"Welcome Mission," Portsmouth.

THE thirteenth anniversary of this Mission was held on Sunday and Monday, June 23 and 24. On Sunday Rev. A. D. Cope preached in the morning and evening, and in the afternoon Mr. W. A. Limbrick (Protestant Reformation Society) gave an address on "Reformation Saving Truths." On Monday evening Mr. Hogben presided, and gave an outline of the history of the work which, since its commencement, has had continuous evidence of the favour of God in the conversion of sinners and the sanctification of saints. This year 120 persons have professed saving faith in Christ, forty of whom are naval or military men. He gave illustrations of how sailors working upon the "one by one" method are on many of H.M. ships leading their comrades to Christ, and stated his deep conviction that if ever the men are to be won for Christ this line of effort must be generally followed. Last year 105,000 copies of Mr. Hogben's booklet, entitled "A Greeting and Warning," were circulated, principally at the South African ports among our soldiers.

Several illustrations of the value of this mission were given. In the beginning of the work a soldier a Roman Catholic was saved. The priests tried in many ways to get him back; sent his comrades to disturb the meetings, and ultimately cursed and excommunicated him; but, notwithstanding their curses, he continued a good soldier of Jesus Christ, and his widow, who was present at this meeting, brought a message from his death-bed in Ireland, "Tell Mr. Hogben that the Lord has kept me, and I am going to heaven." The various branches of the work are in a state of spiritual prosperity.

Mr. Hogben is asking for £4,000 to purchase the freehold of the premises, and to build a small home for Christian men, with class-rooms, &c., for Sunday-school work: £540 has been given, and Mr. G. H. Fison, one of the trustees, being much interested in this work, has made a further promise of £300. Mrs. Buller (London) gave an address on "The Christian's Resting Place;" Miss Inge told of her own work for shop assistants; Rev. A. D. Cope of the joy he had during the past nine years in seeing God's power manifested in the work. Rev. J. Kemp, Captain Key, R.N., and others followed with hearty expressions of gratitude to God for what He has done through this Mission. A report for the past year will be sent on application to Mr. Hogben.

How to Win Men.

SOME six years ago the Christian workers at Brimscombe were much distressed at the gradual disappearance of the young men of the village from the Sunday schools and ordinary religious services, notwithstanding the fact that places of worship were plentiful and evenly divided, and a variety of efforts were made to influence them for good.

In 1895 Mr. S. G. Weaver, eldest son of the late Mr. Richard Weaver, in conjunction with representatives of the various denominations, decided to start a Bible-class for men on neutral ground. A suitable room in a central place being available, a start was made with seventeen young men. A working committee was formed, weekly contributions received from each member to defray expenses, and to form a benevolent fund, out of which to vote temporary relief to members in case of need. From the first God's blessing attended the effort, and the class now numbers 100 members. Many have removed from the neighbourhood, others have been called to the higher service of heaven.

Every Sunday afternoon the Scriptures are read, and a sound pointed Gospel address delivered. The word spoken has proved to many the power of God unto salvation. Upwards of 600 good religious books have been distributed at the annual meetings. These must be beneficial in giving taste for sound reading, and in checking the flow of pernicious and trashy literature. The Christian mill owners, Messrs. Evans Brothers, take a deep interest in this and every other movement for the social and spiritual well-being of the people, and in the summer occasionally invite the class to their beautiful grounds.

On a recent Sunday afternoon the members of the class, with their wives, together with Mrs. E. E. Evans' Bible class for women (the latter is held in the teacher's kitchen) were invited to Inglewood, the picturesque residence and well-kept grounds of Mr. Edward E. Evans. Members of the class contributed solos and quartettes, and it was my privilege to give a Gospel address. T. M. Wintle.

Pontymoile.

National Blind Relief Society.

ACCORDING to the annual report of this Society the subscriptions and donations last year were £270 less than the previous twelve months. Christian friends of the needy blind will, it is hoped, seek to arouse the interest of the British public in a Society aiming to provide the afflicted with small pensions, which enable them to remain in their homes with some small modicum of comfort, and without the bitter consciousness of having to drag down their dearest and nearest by the inert weight of their own dark helplessness. Last year the lack of funds compelled the committee to abandon the tea parties it has annually given to the blind poor in London, and to which the unfortunate sufferers looked forward as their one great day of gladness. Next year the cheap coal with which its club has brought warmth into their homes will have to be retrenched, and the year following may have to be marked by some other suppression. If so, to use the words of Miss Rhoda Broughton, who is pleading the cause of the Society, "silence and extinction will have overtaken as compassionate and eminently useful an effort to force a little happiness to grow in souls where despair would seem the only possible product, as ever a good man's heart framed or his hand executed." The hon. secretary of the Society is Rev. J. Pullein-Thompson, The Vicarage, 27, Tite Street, Chelsea, S.W.

Boys Wishing to go to Sea.—So many of the boys have recently been sent into the Royal Navy and mercantile marine, that there are at present a number of vacancies on the Arethusa and Chichester training ships, for poor boys of good character who wish to go to sea. Mission workers, teachers, and others interested in such boys—between fourteen and sixteen years of age—are invited to communicate with Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, Secretary, 164, Shaftesbury Avenue, W.C.

Cheshunt College.

THE 133rd anniversary of the Countess of Huntingdon's College at Cheshunt was held on Thursday last. Everything contributed to the success of the occasion. The fineness of the weather enabled visitors to see this important College at its best.

In the morning Divine Service was held in the College chapel. The sermon was delivered by Rev. Alex. Connell, M.A., B.D., of Regent Square, who took for his text Num. xi. 29: "Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets." He dwelt on modern phases and methods of prophecy, and enlarged upon the results which would follow if the spirit of prophecy fell on the Christian community at large. Savonarola was sustained by his mighty genius in the pulpit; but the preacher of to-day would find his genius to be in his congregation if the spirit of prophecy were manifest in the pew.

At the luncheon served in the dining hall, Mr. J. Compton Rickett, M.P., presided. The presidential address, by Dr. Whitehouse, showed the breadth of the college curriculum, and the strenuous work which had been accomplished during the past session both by students and professors. The college is now affiliated as a Theological School of the new London University. Rev. R. Lovett, M.A., stated that the expenditure had been upwards of £3,000 for the session, towards which £2,758 had been contributed by various churches. Although a deficit seems to be a permanent spectre, nevertheless the past session had seen an increase in the number of contributing churches and new subscribers. An address was also given by Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon, who pleaded, not so much for academic distinction, as for power in the pulpit.

The afternoon gathering was held in the College chapel. Reports of the studies were presented, and prizes and certificates awarded. Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, Foreign Secretary of the London Missionary Society, addressed the students. Touching reference was made to the loss by death of three distinguished alumni, J. Owen Whitehouse, Urijah Thomas, and James Chalmers of New Guinea.

Personalia.

When Rev. Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler heard of the proposal to erect a memorial statue of him in Cuyler Park, Brooklyn, he wrote at once to the friends in charge of the movement, begging that it should go no further. While by no means indifferent to the proposed honour, he felt that he could not conscientiously consent to the outlay in such fashion of the large sum of money involved.

Friends attending the recent Mildmay Conference may have noticed, as they left the hall by the door of the Deaconess's House, that this year Colonel Sandwith did not occupy his usual place to receive their free will offerings, and to greet them with a smile. They will learn with much regret that his absence was occasioned by illness, and they will not fail to pray that a life so valuable may be yet further prolonged.

It was to the deep regret of a wide circle of friends that Captain J. Kearney White found it necessary to retire from the office of secretary to the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland owing to advancing years. In him the Readers have had a kind and generous leader, whose brotherly sympathy and counsel ever cheered and encouraged the workers to greater zeal in promoting the interests of the Society and extending the Kingdom of Christ in the Sister Isle. Captain and Mrs. White a few days ago were presented by the Readers and friends with a hand some address and other tokens of the loving esteem in which they are held.

Mr. A. V. Liley, of the North Africa Mission, who has spent nearly seventeen years in North Africa has just returned to this country with over 100 beautifully-coloured lantern slides made from his own negatives. Some of these photographs could only have been obtained by a resident in the country, and one who had gained the confidence of the people. The slides illustrate an instructive and interesting lecture on Arab life, the Moslem religion, and missionary work in Tunisia. Mr. Liley would be glad if friends could kindly arrange meetings for the autumn at which he could give his lecture and tell of the spiritual needs of the people of North Africa. He is prepared to provide lantern, screen, light, and all necessary apparatus free of charge. The lecture will doubtless prove a stimulus to missionary work. Address, North Africa Mission, 31, Linton Road, Barking, London, E.

Obituary.

MR. W. WILBERFORCE BAYNES.

BY the death of Mr. William Wilberforce Baynes, J.P., D.L., which took place recently at Bromley, the Baptist denomination loses one of its most honoured members. Mr. Baynes was a son of the late Rev. Joseph Baynes, for fifty years Baptist minister at Wellington, Somerset, and brother of Mr. A. H. Baynes, the secretary of the Baptist Missionary Society. With that society Mr. Baynes had long been associated as a member of the committee, while for some years he acted as treasurer to the Baptist Union. He served also on the committees of the Religious Tract Society and of the British and Foreign Bible Society.

REV. JOSEPH COOK, LL.D., BOSTON.

The announcement of the decease of the well-known American divine, Dr. Joseph Cook, who passed away recently in New York in his sixty-third year, will recall to many the days when his "Boston Monday Lectures," in defence of Christian truth, and, as against the materialism of the Huxley School, attracted world-wide attention. The lectures were published, and had a great vogue. They possess, indeed, much more than a passing value. At a later period his mind became somewhat clouded, as the result of illness, and he withdrew for a time from public work. During the past few years Dr. Cook had again engaged in lecturing and literary work. He made many friends in this country during a lecturing tour upon which he engaged, with considerable success, in 1880.

BISHOP PARKER, NORTH INDIA.

After a lingering illness Rev. E. W. Parker, D.D., Bishop for Northern India of the Methodist Episcopal Church, passed away at Naini Tal on June 4. His death came with the shock of a personal loss to a great number of Christian workers of all denominations. Principal Scott, of Bareilly Theological Seminary, in a tribute to his friend and Conference colleague of forty years, says:—He was converted in 1853, and arrived in India as a missionary in 1859. His range of appointments was wide in Rohilkhund and Oudh. For many years he was Presiding Elder in both these Provinces. In May, 1900, he was chosen Missionary Bishop of Southern Asia. Far-seeing in plan, fertile in resource, a good legislator, and tireless in executive, he was a marvel to all who knew him. Many of the most fruitful enterprises in the North India Mission were initiated by him. He had a genius for calling out and training men for mission work, and this gift alone would have made his work in India great and imperishable

Notices.

Mrs. Mans, of Paris, Ontario, Canada, desires to thank Mrs. Tann for sending her The Christian. She has addressed a letter to Mrs. Tann, care of this office, which will be forwarded on receiving address.

Applicants for Tracts.—Mr. S. Hodgson, 17, Hissall Street, Hanley, Staffs.; Mr. Carl Henkes, 10, Doggett Road, Catford, S.E.; Mr. G. Murray, 14, Fairfield Road, Higham Hill, Walthamstow, E.; Mr. F. G. Sudborough, 3, Lamb Lane, Mare Street, Hackney, N.E.; Mr. S. A. Fox, evangelist, 13, Cromwell Street, Nottingham; Mr. J. F. Curling, 5, Church Street, Chester; Mr. Geo. Holmes, Misión Evangélica, Gibraltar.

Communications Received with Thanks.—W.A.L. A.J.S. F.S.J. S.T. J.J.K. W.L. J.L. A.H.W. Miss F. H.T.W. J.W. T.M.S. F.J.C. E.D.B. R.C. C.R.H. Baron P. J.B. E.S.B. G.S.G. P.A. B.F.A. R.McC. J.G. E.H. C.P. G.M. Mrs. B.R. A.B. S.B. W.D.D. J.C. M.M. F.B.M. G.H.G. S.E.B. J.K.W. F.W. R.J.K. B.H.K. C.C. F.B.M. T.G.W. A.W.B. A.T.W. McK. H.G. F.G.S. A.K. J.J. W.R.B. F.W. S.A.F. F.H.S. A.N. Miss L. G.H. J.N. J.F.T. M.P. D.J.E. H.L. W.W. R.S. J.A.C. D.H. T.C. G.S.J. J.S. J.D.C. E.P.F. F.C. J.H.T. W.E.W. G.W.L.B. E.H.W. J.W. M.L.J. M.E.H. C.B. L.B. Sir C.S.K. J.G. J.Y. W.A.L. C.P. F.A.F. W. R.F.E. W.F.

Bryn Celyn, Abbey Road, Llandudno.—This house was recently opened as a centre of Christian activity. The enterprise is another demonstration of the untiring devotion to the cause of the Gospel of the widow of Dean Goode, who has acquired and furnished this residence at her own cost. It is to be used for the purpose of holding meetings in connection with home and foreign missions, and an occasional holiday resting place for ladies and gentlemen engaged in Christian work, who will be able, at a small cost, to avail themselves of well-furnished apartments in a house delightfully situated.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

* I want to interest my* elder "Young People" every week in what Mr. Meyer writes on the Christian Endeavour Topic. Parents will also find the S.S. Lesson Notes suggestive and helpful for Sunday talks with their young folk. See next page.)

Uncle Tom's Cots.

MY Dear Young Friends,—It is now a long time since I wrote you anything about the cots at the Ragged School Union Home at South-end-on-Sea, in which you have shown so much interest. I am glad to hear from the matron that many of you have called at the Home, and kindly inquired after little Hannah and Rosy. Some of you, not being able to call personally, have sent inquiries to Uncle Tom; but a good many of you will have come into relationship with Uncle Tom only during the last year or so, and perhaps you wonder what is meant when you see the reference to Uncle Tom's Cots in the "Young People's Page." So for the benefit of these I will give a brief explanation.

I called at the Home at Southend one day in the spring of 1899, and found among the many crippled children who were there a little girl, named Hannah, aged eight years, whose case was a very sad one. She had been, about fifteen months before, knocked down in the school playground, the blow resulting in hip disease. She was taken to the Royal Free Hospital and remained there a whole year; then she was discharged a helpless little cripple, with irons round her waist and down each leg—really encased in an iron frame.

The poor child was a terrible burden to her parents, who, though very respectable, were poor, and had to work hard for a living. A kind friend called on her mother one day, and proposed that Hannah should be sent to the Cripples' Home at Southend; and her mother was delighted with the proposal. A great number of crippled children who have visited the Home have derived so much benefit from the change that it was thought that little Hannah might also be greatly improved; while at home she could not possibly receive the attention and care so much needed. So arrangements were made, and Hannah was sent for a holiday; and it was then that I saw her.

It was thought that while a fortnight's stay would certainly strengthen her, yet it could hardly be expected that she could derive permanent benefit from so short a holiday. But, I asked, was it possible that a prolonged stay at the seaside would restore a crippled child? and I called upon Hannah's doctor and put this quest to him. His reply was to this effect: There are a great many little sufferers who visit the Home, with whom there is little or no possibility of recovery in their own homes, but who, through a prolonged stay at Southend, would doubtless be permanently restored. And in his opinion Hannah's was a case in point.

I made inquiries of the Ragged School Union, and ascertained that the cost of maintaining Hannah at the Home for twelve months would be about £15; and I asked the numerous nieces and nephews of Uncle Tom to defray this cost. Well, the result was that far more than this amount was received, and for a time two cots were maintained through your munificence—and Hannah has remained at the Home ever since!

Of course, we had all hoped that she would be able to walk ere this; but I am sorry to say that she is still in splints, and is wheeled about in a spinal carriage. She has grown considerably during the two and a half years she has spent at Southend; and, better still, she has learnt to love the Saviour, and is beloved by all who come into contact with her. She is a very patient child, although naturally she longs for the time when she will be able to run and skip with other girls of her own age; indeed, she sometimes dreams that she is able to walk again. I recently asked the doctor how she was getting on, and the following is his reply, which you will be glad to see:—

"I am pleased to say that our little patient, Hannah, at the Cripples' Home, continues to improve, and I am hopeful that another summer at Southend will prove so beneficial as to allow of her getting about without a spinal carriage."

I must thank you for the flowers and toys which you have sent from time to time; they have greatly cheered Hannah. She has been pleased to know that friends at a distance think of her, and it has delighted her to share her joys with other unfortunate little sufferers. I remember once when I called at the Home she was playing with two nice dolls which had been sent her; and such is the desire for sympathy in a case like hers, that she had actually bandaged them up, pretending that they were both cripples! I hope that the next time I write you I may be able to say that she is able to walk, even if it is with the aid of crutches.

I am very grateful to you for having so heartily responded to my appeal on her behalf, and I hope that you will not grow weary in well-doing, but that you will at any rate continue to maintain the cot over which is a board bearing the inscription—

UNCLE TOM'S COT

Little Rosy, who occupied the second cot for a time, I regret to say, is now in the hospital, but she is expected to return to the Home shortly, when I hope that she will be greatly benefited.

I ought to add that during the year about 3,000 halt and maimed, and sometimes blind, little sufferers are sent at least for a fortnight to the various Homes of the Ragged School Union; and in the Home at Southend from two dozen to three dozen crippled boys and girls may almost always be found. Any of you will be heartily welcomed whenever you may be able to call. Further particulars respecting this and any of the other numerous branches of the Ragged School Union may be obtained from Mr. John Kirk, Secretary, 32, John Street, Theobald's Road, London, W.C.

F. T. Watt.

"The Christian" Bible Searcher.

NEW QUARTER.—RULES.

Answers to the "Bible Searcher" are acknowledged in two lists:—

(1) Those received up to Monday morning, in the next Thursday's issue.

(2) Those received later, in the one following. Answers for the "second list" which reach the office after mid-day Wednesday are too late. Those from Scotland and Ireland only will be received till Thursday morning.

No Concordance may be used or help given with the answers, but the questions may be explained when necessary.

No papers can be re-examined.

It is necessary that letters should be properly stamped, and that names should be written very distinctly. A star (*) is given for neatness and extra care in answering the questions.

A Prize Competition is given the last week of March, June, September, and December. To be eligible, every child must have been correct nine times during the preceding twelve weeks.

Those whose 10th or 13th birthdays occur during the quarter may continue the weekly Searcher in the same division, but must enter for the Prize Competition for their actual age. There is no limit of age for weekly competitors; but no one above eighteen years of age can enter for the Quarterly Competition.

All communications must be addressed to "Uncle Tom," the Young People's Editor of "The Christian," 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 285).

Bible Clock.

Make a circle to represent a clock; mark off the hours from one to twelve, and taking the word for one o'clock, find texts in which this word occurs, having two, three, four, to twelve words to represent the hours. Chapter and verse must be given. Select from the Psalms only.

STRENGTH

[Children under ten do any 4; under thirteen, any 7; under seventeen, any 10.]

HONOURS LIST.

The following have been correct each time during the quarter.

B—Violette Birney, Frances Burnett, Ella Berryman, Lucienne Brabandès, Massy and Conyers Baker, Mabel, Evelyn, Ileene and Hilda Barstow.

C—Hannah Chapman, Lydia Cleary, Duncan and Hyde Campbell, Kitty Cope, Henry Colville.

D—Stanley Drew, Dorothy Daintree, May Darroll, Marie Denizot, Thomas Dunn, Ethel Dancy.

F—Percy Fitch, Vincent, Mabel and Olive Fleet.

G—Colin and Margery Graham-Brown, Dorothy Gray, Dorothy and Gladys Gibson, George Goodall.

H—Violet Holford, Henry Harvey, Sydney Hanford, Dorothy Huvergal-Shaw.

I—Daisy Iredell.

J—Hilda and Winifred Jeffery, David Jameson.

L—Mary Law, Gladys Lee.

M—Alan Marshall, Evie and Alec Miller, Dorothy Morris, Charlotte Millar, Margie Marston, Barbara Maconchy, John and Ella MacMurray, Dorothy and Winnie Mace, Godfrey Miller, Ella McFadzean.

N—Amy and Maude Nottage.

P—William Porter, Kathleen and Ethel Pasley, Gladys and Isabel Phipps.

R—Marion Richards, Alice Reid.

S—Margery Smart, Betty Stocks, Effie and Ellen Simpson, Stanley W. Smith, Evelyn Shaw, Flora Smith, Christine Soans.

T—Dudley Tove.

W—Stephen Wilson, Nora and Ellie Wyatt, Charles Wingrave, Fannie Wheeler, Edward and Edith Wheeler, Pringle Wilson, Nellie and Rachel Wilson, Kathleen Wingrave.

283—Correct answers (second list) received from:—

A—Margery Ashdown, Mabel Ashwell*.

B—Gordon Boxer, Violette Birney, Frances Burnett*, Marianne and Evelyn Butlin, Beatrice Brouard, James Barker, Maud Bunn, Louis Berthé, Louise Betts, Massy and Conyers Baker, Ernestine Buhl*, Lucienne Brabandès, Leonard Browne*.

C—George Cary, Ida Cullen*, Alice Crang, Stanley and Percy Chappell, Duncan* and Hyde* Campbell, Walter*, Jessie* and Maggie* Carter.

D—Allison Devonshire, Thomas Dunn*, Hilda, Elizabeth and C. Drayson, Harold and Gladys Davis, Vera Dickinson*, Marjory Dyke*, Marie Denizot.

E—Leonard and Olive Ewin.

F—Laura Finch, Gwendolen and Eirene Fennell, Phyllis Fry, Louise Filhol, Jeanne Faucon, Eva* and Mabel* Fletcher, Meg*, Agnes* and Lewis* Fullarton, Aileen and F. Figgis.

G—Henry Goulding, Daisy and Mary* Greenacre, Grace and Evelyn* Gulston, George Goodall, Ivy* and Hilda* Godfrey, Geo., Margery and Colin Graham-Brown, Dorothy* and Winnie Grove, David Gardiner, Aimée Guilbert, Constance Gabbett*, Edith Grieve*.

H—Violet Holford*, John C. and David Henderson, Edith, Winifred and Henry Harvey, Georgette Hoffman, Mary Haines.

I—Ami and Isabel* Inglis.

K—Margaret Kinnaird, Grace, Cecilia and Philippa* Kerr.

L—Arthur Llewellyn, Harry and Linda Lowe, G. Larwill.

M—Leonard, Dorothy and Winnie Mace, Daisie Mackenzie, Nellie and Bertie Mills, Margie Marston, Philip Martin, Charlie*, Jessie and Alex Morrison, Alice and Maisie* Mackenzie, Charlotte Millar*, Alec, Evie and Godfrey Miller, Barbara Maconchy, Irene Mabille*, Joy*, Ella and Margaret* McFadzean, Kathleen Morphey, John Macfarlane, Mildred Morgan*, Connie Murfin*, Dora Muir*, Daniel, Dorothy* and Margaret* Morris, Marjorie and John Martin.

O—Maude and Eva Oakes, Louisa O'Brien.

P—Laura Percy, Willie*, Ada, Eddie, Jessie and Connie Palmer, Enid and Kathleen Pincott, Mabel and Lucy Pelham-Burn, Isabel Perks, May Panes, William and Lizzie Porter.

R—Marjorie Rainey*, Gordon Remington, Maggie Reid, Elmina*, Cecily* and Jessie* Roe, Hope Robinson.

S—Eric Slater, Agnes* and Hugh Shields, Germaine Schumann, Edgar, Constance and H. Schaeffer, Frankie Sellwood*, Florence*, Effie* and Ellen Simpson, Stanley W. Smith, Lydia Shirley, Flora Smith*.

T—Willie Thomas*, Winifred Trotter, Frank Thompson, Carleton Tufnell, Evelyn Tracey*.

U—Eva Usher*.

W—Freda Watts*, Gladys*, Elsie* and Lilian* Willoughby, Stephen and Pringle* Wilson, William and Stewart Watson, Alexander and Ella Watt, Rachel* and Nellie* Wilson, Leonard Wall, Beatrice Weatherall*, Ernest, Queenie and Kenrick Wakeford, Mary, Rachel, James, Georgina and Sarah Wilson.

FOREIGN LIST.

Nos. 267, 268, 269, 270—William* and Abigail* Gray (New Zealand). No. 276 Cuckoo* and Flo Lister, Mattie, Georgina Tollner* (S. Africa). No. 277—Georgina Tollner. No. 279—Vera* and Frank* Sjöström (U.S.A.), Lottie*, Eric*, Ivan* and Rotha* St. George (Canada). No. 280—Vera* and Frank* Sjöström, Dora Wallace*, Amy Ramsay* (Canada). No. 282—Ina, Nettie, Will and Nettie* Thomson (Bulgaria), Phyllis Boyd (Malta).

Personal.

I was much pleased to receive several kind remembrances of my birthday.

Many thanks for the beautiful flowers received last week.

Kathleen Morphey.—I am glad to welcome you as a new "Searcher," and trust you will enjoy the study.

G. Larwill.—Thank you for your little letter.

Uncle Tom.

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, July 7.

Religion and Patriotism (Rom. xiii. 1-7).

SOCIETY is a divine institution. It has been the dream of the social reformer that men should stand upon a dead level, each man as good as his neighbour, that there should be no recognition of grades of society, that in station, rank and privilege, each should be as the rest. To say this, is to ignore the Divine idea which underlies the whole structure of society, and determines the relation of man to man.

The Apostle declares that "the powers that be are ordained of God," that is, that it is the Divine will and intention that authority should be vested in representative men, and that in their judgments there should be an echo of the decisions of the Eternal.

It is quite true that there are corrupt and unjust judges, but that does not prejudice the Apostle's position, for the ideal judge is the representative amongst men of the Eternal Judge, and the throne of judgment mirrors the great white throne with its eternal decisions. In the year 58, when this Epistle was written, the chief ruler and judge was a dissolute young man, "intoxicated by the discovery that he might do almost entirely as he pleased with the lives around him." But even under these circumstances civil authority, with a Nero at its head, was still in principle and intention a Divine thing, and it was the Christian's duty to obey.

There are certain conditions, however, which we must observe. First, it must be clearly borne in mind that no judge whatever may interfere with matters of conscience, and that if any human authority whatsoever clashes with the authority of God, we have no alternative but to refuse obedience. The attitude of the Apostles before the Sanhedrim must express the attitude of every Christian under like circumstances: "we must obey God rather than man." The very religion which announces that "the powers which be are ordained of God" insists also that we must calmly resist whensoever the earthly judge contravenes the authority of the heavenly.

Secondly, if a king or other authority notoriously acts in violation of the highest interests of a nation, it is surely right for us as part of the nation, after due deliberation and thought, to remove such from his position and substitute another more closely conformed to the Divine ideal. There should be nothing rash or iconoclastic in such a movement, it should be deliberate, prayerful, and religious. As long as the power exists it is our duty to obey, but when it notoriously ceases to express the Divine ideal, the people for whom it was constituted have a perfect right to supersede it.

We should do all in our power to maintain the settled order of the society of which we are part. It is our duty to be prepared to serve any public office. In the cause of the right and true we should do our best to reinforce the officers of justice. We should not seek to avoid the call of the state for revenue. It is our duty to pay our taxes, and to make true and proper returns. Christians ought to be law-abiding and law-supporting. They should be to the rest of the citizens as mortar to bricks.

How important it is for public men to consider their duty to God; if they are ministers of God's service they should attend continually upon this very thing, using their high position as a sacred trust for the King of kings and Lord of lords. They should never forget that in the sight of the Lord all men have equal rights, the slave as much as his owner, the poor equally with the rich. "The ruler of men," says the psalmist, "must be just, ruling in the fear of God.

F. B. M.

International S.S. Lesson.

July 14, 1901.

Reading (Gen. iii. 1-15). Golden Text (Rom. v. 20.)

Introductory Connection.

AFTER the creation of Adam, God placed him in a lovely garden, and brought all the animals and birds, &c., to him that he might name them; but not one was a fit companion for the man. Why? So God then formed a woman to be his helper and friend. Picture the peace and joy of Eden, and God coming down to talk with and teach these two. In the Garden of Eden were two special trees—one called "The Tree of Life," the eating of which would give everlasting life (iii. 22), we read of this tree again in Rev. ii. 7; xxii. 2, 14; and the other "The Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil"—of which they were forbidden to eat to test their obedience. Only one thing they must not do! If we cannot do wrong, there is no merit in doing right.

The Serpent and the Devil (Job i. 6).

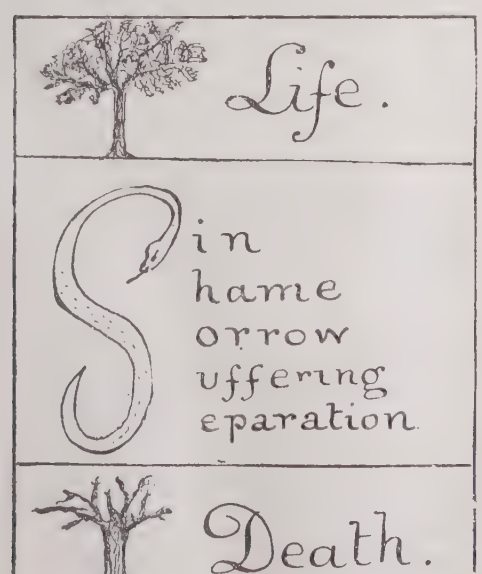
The serpent was a very imposing and beautiful animal. Satan gave it speech that could be understood by man. The devil is the great enemy who tries to mar and destroy all God's beautiful works. Perhaps he was one of those disobedient angels who had to be turned out of heaven (2 Pet. ii. 4; Jude 6). We read his character in John viii. 44; 2 Cor. xi. 3, 14; Rev. xii. 9; xx. 2. He determined to destroy God's wonderful image, "Man," and made use of the favourite and cleverest animal to accomplish this end. He is full of cunning and hatred, and is just the same now as he was then—a real, living being, our greatest foe (1 Pet. v. 9). But not omnipotent or omnipresent.

Temptation (James i. 13).

First the evil one insinuates a doubt in the mind of the woman, whom he finds alone. "Have you not made a mistake?" Misunderstood God's meaning? Then he contradicts God's words and speaks lightly of his commands. Beware of listening to any talk like this. Never parley with temptation: flee from it at once (James iv. 7; Matt. iv. 10; Rom. xvi. 20; Eph. iv. 27).

Sin (1 John iii. 4; James iv. 17).

Temptation is not sin; sin is to yield to what we know is wrong. (6) Mark the downward steps. The woman listened, doubted, misquoted God's words, looked, longed for, touched, tasted, gave to Adam.



Conscience and Excuses (Rom. ii. 1; v. 12).

There is surely something wrong when we are afraid of God. We can never hide from God (Prov. xv. 3), or clothe ourselves to cover our sin. God's question to each of us is, "Where art thou? What is our answer. There is a voice within which tells us we are wrong. Adam shows by his answer that he thought more of the consequences of sin than of the sin itself. We are often sorry that we have got into trouble, but not that we have grieved a loving God. Note how each casts the blame on another, and how God does not question the Devil. Every sinner is mean; true repentance acknowledges sin, and does not blame others (Luke xviii. 13).

Punishment (Ezek. xviii. 4).

First the poor animal is degraded as the agent in the sin. The whole world fell under God's curse (Rom. viii. 22); what an awful thing is the curse of the glorious loving God! The man has lost his likeness to God, pain and toil, weeds and work and weariness, and worst of all, banishment from Eden and from God. Sin always separates from God (Isa. lix. 2).

Promise (Rom. v. 15).

Serpents have ever since been looked upon with dislike, their poison is in the head, but that head is to be crushed. Satan is doomed (Rev. xx. 10). The Child of the woman was to be the Saviour from sin and destroy the works of the devil (1 John iii. 8). Through Christ we can regain our likeness to God (1 John iii. 2). Notice God's gentle way of dealing with sinners, and his love in giving a promise to cheer them.

Irish Notes.

MUCH regret is felt by a wide circle of friends at the death of Rev. Hugh Waddell, Presbyterian missionary, who has just passed away at Belfast. He was the son of an Irish Presbyterian minister, and went out as a missionary to China. Subsequently he laboured in Spain, and more recently went to Japan, where he spent nearly thirty years, and rendered excellent service to the cause of Christ in that land.

The treasurer of the Bible and Colportage Society of Ireland was able to make a satisfactory and encouraging statement at its annual meeting a few days ago. The number of families visited during the year was 24,489, and the total sales of Bibles, Testaments, portions, &c., 35,030. The agents have been well received, and evidence of Divine blessing upon their labours has not been lacking. After filling three vacancies caused by death, the committee found that it is possible to place two additional colporteurs in the field.

The opposition to Dr. Long on the part of the Roman Catholic priests and people in Limerick still continues, and a similar spirit is spreading to other parts of Ireland. For instance, last week at Camolin, near Enniscorthy, Co. Wexford, a couple of evangelists were erecting a wooden tent on a common, when a crowd of about three hundred assembled and smashed the tent, compelling the evangelists to fly for their lives and take shelter in the police barracks. It is worthy of note that the evangelists had not held a single service in the tent when it was thus demolished, and the mob could not, therefore, excuse themselves on the ground that some of the doctrines of their Church were being assailed. Evidently the attack was an organised one, for a leading Roman Catholic paper calls the incident "an insolent intrusion resented," and speaks of the evangelists as "itinerant Gospel howlers."

The Irish Methodist Conference, after being in session for eight days in the city of Cork, has come to a close. Rev. Dr. Allen, of Birmingham, presided, and the other English representatives present were Revs. Enoch Salt, Wm. Burgess, and Mr. S. Rathbone Edge. Ten young men who had successfully passed through their four years' probationary course were admitted to full connexion with the Conference, and were ordained to the work of the ministry. One minister resigned owing to a change in his doctrinal views, and four died during the year. An increase of nearly 200 was reported in the membership, and ten candidates for the ministry were accepted. Resolutions were passed against gambling, smoking, religious intolerance, and the setting up of a sectarian university in Ireland. A minister was set apart for the purpose of carrying on open-air work in the South and West of Ireland.

Children's Special Service Mission.

Mr. E. Arrowsmith, Surbiton, July 7; Mr. Hutchinson, Thornton Hill, near Croydon, July 5; Donhead, Salisbury, July 7; Mr. E. Clark, with Caravan, Bozeat, near Wellingborough, Northampton. Mr. L. H. Ingram, with Caravan, Effingham Manor Farm, Leatherhead, Surrey. Mr. David Clarke, with Caravan, Little Saling, Braintree, Essex. Mr. J. H. P. Cutting, with Caravan, St. Glemham, Saxmundham, Suffolk, to July 11. Mr. E. Phillips, with caravan, Bacton, Suffolk.

Seaside Services during July.—Mr. J. S. Tyler, Herne Bay, to July 12. Rev. A. G. Dodderidge, Portrush. Mr. J. Spiers, Dunoon. Mr. R. F. Drury, B.A., Brodick, Isle of Arran. Mr. H. D. Salmon, Bundoran, Ireland. Mr. R. T. Archibald, Lamlash, Isle of Arran. Rev. A. D. Cousins, Brighton, July 8-21.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending July 13.

Sun. July 7	Acts	xix. 13-27	Thurs. July 11	Acts	xx. 25-38
Mon. „ 8	„	xix. 28-41	Fri., „ 12	„	xxi. 1-14
Tues., „ 9	„	xx. 1-12	Sat., „ 13	„	xxi. 15-26
Wed., „ 10	„	xx. 13-24

Welsh Notes.

THE latest statistics of the Welsh Baptist Association for the counties of Flint, Denbigh, Merioneth, together with the churches in Liverpool, Birkenhead, Manchester, and other English towns, show a membership of 8,000 in some 110 churches. Nearly 900 were admitted into membership during the past year.

Famous as Wales is for its great open-air preaching associations, it is surprising how little is done in the way of street-preaching, especially in towns and villages where the Welsh language predominates. There are indications, however, that this condition of things is being remedied. In Denbigh the Free Churches are carrying on a successful open-air campaign. In Bala also a series of open-air services has been conducted by the students of the Theological College and the ministers of the town.

The National Christian Endeavour Union of Wales held its second annual convention at Brigend on June 18, 19, 20. Rev. T. Richards, of Ebbw Vale, was elected president in the place of Rev. R. J. Rees, Cardiff. The report of the general secretary showed that there are in Wales to-day 278 young people's societies, fifty-seven junior societies, and three floating societies. The estimated membership of these societies was nearly 15,000, made up of 11,825 active members, 3,057 junior members, and over fifty floating members.

The tenth anniversary of the Welsh Forward Movement was celebrated on Monday, June 24, at Cardiff, by a conference of the evangelists and friends of the movement. A resolution was passed declaring that, in view of the fact that 800,000 persons habitually neglect the means of grace in Wales and Monmouthshire, the work of the Movement is only just begun. At the same Conference a resolution was passed favouring the adoption of the American "star" system in connection with the Sunday school work Rev. W. Ross delivered an address upon "Soul-Winning," and was also the principal speaker in the public meeting held in the evening.

Scottish Notes.

AT the annual meeting, held last week, of the Dundee and Lochee Mission to the Outdoor Blind, the chairman (Mr. Alexander Henderson) reported that this and similar missions in Scotland have under their care over 3,150 persons.

The committee appointed by the ministers of Dundee, in connection with the Combined Christian Movement, has agreed to recommend a general meeting of ministers to divide the city into six districts: work in these districts to be commenced in November, each district in turn to be visited by ministers and office-bearers, and thereafter services to be held in one or more churches within the area specified.

A committee of the Presbytery of Edinburgh is making inquiry into the help required for adequately carrying on mission work in the poorer parishes. The convener is of opinion that much good would be derived from the formation of a central association, the members of which would be willing to give addresses at evangelistic, social, and other gatherings in parishes requiring such help. Other speakers emphasised the the fact that the endowments were intended for the service of the poor, and that their interests are a first charge on the service of the Church.

At a meeting last week in Dundee, under the auspices of the United Free Church Welfare of Youth Scheme, Rev. John Martin congratulated the students on the fact that they had been so well advised as to become students of the Bible. At the present day they heard a great deal about the indifference of people to Divine things. He sometimes found in his visitation that the sermons of ministers did not interest their hearers as they used to do, and the fault did not lie with the ministers. When they used illustrations from God's Word many of their people did not understand what they were talking about, and because they had not a knowledge of the Bible they had not the interest in preaching that their fathers had.

The Greenock Total Abstinence Society caused a census to be made of the number of persons who entered certain public-houses during two hours on a recent pay Saturday night, and those who attended places of worship on a Sunday. The figures for the public-houses (numbering 143 bars) were:—Men, 12,986; women, 5,269; children, 2,533—total, 20,788. When the church census was taken the day was fine. the figures being those of the best-attended service. In the forty-five churches and other meetings there were present 4,660 men, 5,295 women, 2,195 children—a total of 12,870. In addition, 1,505 persons attended the meetings of the Working Boys' and Girls' Religious Society, making the grand total 14,375. The seating accommodation of the churches is 28,805. In one of the public-houses 480 persons, equal to four per minute, entered, while in another 383 entered, and of these 103 were child messengers.

Evangelistic.

Mr. Charles Cook's Work.

MANY friends of Mr. Charles Cook's work in Hyde Park gathered in Hyde Park Hall on Saturday last, when an address, on "The Filling of the Spirit," was given by Rev. Francis Paynter. Lady Hope and Mr. T. A. Denny also spoke. Hearty words of commendation were given by Mr. W. R. Lane, who said that the congregations attracted to the Hyde Park services are of the careless and unevangelized class, who will not attend a service in a place of worship or even in a tent.

On the Sunday afternoon, Mr. Cook, speaking of the previous Wednesday's meeting in the Park, read a request for praise from one of ten men who were awakened. A quotation read: "Being miserable on account of sin, I had made up my mind to end my life. The only thing that gave me courage was your exhortation to accept a living Saviour. I think, had you given me the opportunity, I should have surrendered in the Park before that vast audience; but He gave me grace to do so at the Hall. It did me good to see others embracing the same Lord."

Mr. Leonard Weaver and Mr. J. S. Harrison spoke warmly of this aggressive and fruitful work, which is as fresh and effective to-day as it was a quarter of a century ago. Mr. T. A. Denny bore witness to having known the work for many years. He rejoiced that Mr. Cook had stuck to his special post so long.

The evening meeting in the Park was started at six o'clock; Mr. Cook gave the address. An immense audience soon was gathered by the fine singing by the choir. The Hon. and Rev. E. J. Bligh, Mr. and Mrs. Lepper, of Belfast, and other friends were present, in addition to those mentioned above. Mr. Cook spoke from, "He shall be holden with the cords of his sin." At the conclusion of the meeting the people crowded into the after-meeting at Hyde Park Hall, where Lady Hope addressed the anxious. Some striking cases of conviction were seen, and a number of the penitent were led to confess Christ. An interesting letter was read from Mr. J. B. Wookey, in the course of which the writer said: "It is now nearly a quarter of a century ago since, in dark, dismal days, when I was living without God, and when it would never have entered into my mind to enter any place of worship, that I remember standing on the outskirts of the crowd listening to your workers. . . . The gracious invitation contained in the singing of the hymns never left me, and some time after, in God's goodness, I found peace in a humble mission hall. Only eternity will reveal all that your Hyde Park services have been the means of accomplishing."

The services, which were most impressive, marked the thirtieth year of Mr. Cook's labours in Hyde Park.

Rev. John McNeill at Glasgow Exhibition.

We stood on a recent evening at the Hillhead entrance of the West End Park, in the grounds of which the Exhibition buildings stand, and as the continuous stream of human life flowed in the park gate, and on towards the Exhibition north entrance, we saw one and another halt for a moment, and look over towards where Rev. John McNeill was standing, declaring the blessed news of free salvation. It seemed a haughty, supercilious, arrogant look that many gave, while others, though after halting momentarily they ambled on at an easy pace towards the big show, looked over in a respectful and obviously sympathetic way.

On the front steps of the Anderston United Free Church, in which worships the congregation to which the late Dr. Somerville used to minister, Mr. McNeill was holding forth on "the man with the withered hand." The church stands within fifteen yards or so of the railings that surround the park, and between the façade of the building and the park boundary is a private enclosure belonging to the church, in the shape of a grass plot with a low, iron balustrade next the roadway. In this most suitable place the service was being held. As the preacher delivered his message, a gentleman beside us sympathetically said: "He is getting serious attention," a fact that was evident to the most superficial observer. Appealing to his audience at one point as to their spiritual state, Mr. McNeill said: "You are either on the sand or on the rock; either on the broad road or the narrow way; either on the road to heaven or the road to hell; either in Christ or out of Christ." And again in dealing with the endeavours of men to put themselves right without Christ, he said: "It is not a little putty; not a little paint; not a little whitewash; not a little reformation. Ye must be born again." His address was one prolonged Gospel peal and appeal from beginning to end.

How many heard him in the course of the evening it would be difficult to say. He had probably a stationary congregation of some fifteen hundred people; but over and above, from the crowds that flocked past, some were constantly turning aside and stepping in through the gateway into the enclosure to listen for a few minutes before going further; and from the burning words spoken, and urgent appeals made, fruit must be gathered.

Standing outside the enclosure for part of the time, we heard one and another say in the course of the evening, "What is this?" The invariable answer was, "It's John McNeill," "Rev." or "Mr." we never heard used once. "Who is this?" said a young lady, just as the service was closing. She was arrayed in fine summer dress, with an abundance of ruffles. "Oh! it's John McNeill, he's been preaching," replied the young gentleman who was acting as her escort. "It's very brave," she said.

His month's mission has been brought to a close, with what results the Lord of the Harvest alone can say! J. C.

Mr. Bob Johnson has conducted a Gospel Temperance Mission at Exeter. Both at the outdoor and indoor meetings numerous audiences listened with interest and profit.

A mission in connection with the Mid-Rhondda Valley Free Church Council has been conducted by Mr. and Mrs. Gipsy Evens. Night after night the largest halls and chapels have been crowded, and hundreds have been turned away.

Rev. D. J. Mackay writes from Tiree: "We have had most encouraging meetings in Skye, Lewis, and Harris for several weeks. The Lord poured out his Spirit, and turned many from darkness to light. May his name be praised! We trust it is only the beginning of a great work all over our beloved Highlands and islands. We are holding special meetings here."

MR. BENNETT ANDERSON.
From photograph by Mr. Andrew W. Dron, Brondesbury.

Tent Work.

The London Tent Campaign.

Mr. J. Kennaby, the local secretary, sends an interesting account of the work carried on in the Upton Park tent during the past week by Messrs. Bennett Anderson and R. S. Bradbrook. The meetings have grown in interest and many have been brought into the kingdom. One interesting case was that of a lady who had attended the Kilburn Tent, night after night, for nearly two weeks. She travelled to Upton Park on the last night the evangelists were there, and after a struggle came into the light.

Mr. J. Bennett Anderson is one of the familiar figures in connection with the London Tent Campaign. Born in 1846, he was early engaged in active Christian work, and for some years before he was out of his "teens" was known in the districts round his home as a boy preacher, at which time, as in later days, he was privileged to see fruit borne by the seed of the Word. His first formal appointment was that of Scripture reader for a year at Great Horton for the Church of England Pastoral Aid Society, when he was appointed home missionary of the Church of St. John the Evangelist, Westminster, and laboured for four years under the direction of Archdeacon Jennings. Two years were spent as pastor at Queen Square Mission Church, followed by two more in Ireland as agent and lecturer of the Temperance Reformation Society.

After this period of varied experience, Mr. Anderson felt that his path of duty lay in the direction of devoting his life to evangelistic work. Six years were spent in Gospel service in Canada and the New England States of America, with headquarters at Toronto. Returning in October, 1880, he settled with his family in England. Within a month he was invited by the late Mr. John Houghton to preach and sing the Gospel at Old Byrom Hall, Liverpool, where he remained for ten years as evangelist and pastor, and saw large numbers of men and women brought to a saving knowledge of the truth.

Leaving this country in 1890, Mr. Anderson acted for five years as chaplain of the Mariners' Chapel, Sydney. A visit to New Zealand was followed by five months spent in South Africa, where many opportunities for the preaching of the Gospel presented themselves, at Cape Town, Kimberley, Durban, Ladysmith, Johannesburg, and other towns.

Following a few weeks in London in spring, 1896, nine months were spent preaching in the Y.M.C.A. Hall and churches of Belfast, followed by three months at the Edinburgh Castle in the East End of London. Missions in London and Cornwall filled up the time till June, 1899, when the way was opened up for a fourth visit to Canada, during which work was done over an area ranging from New Brunswick on the Atlantic seaboard to British Columbia in the far west. Five months of camp and mission services in California, allowed only time for a month in Newfoundland, before leaving to take part in the Simultaneous Mission, London.

This servant of God has seen the arm of the Lord made bare in many lands. His message is not a local one, but for the fallen children of men. How many have been brought to the truth through his instrumentality only the Great Day will declare.

On Saturday evening last Rev. Henderson Burnside, of St. Saviour's, Forest Gate, gave a sound evangelistic address to an attentive company in the Upton Park tent. Describing the services on Sunday last, which were taken by Mr. J. B. Wookey, an esteemed correspondent, writes:—"At night a vast assemblage gathered in spite of wind and rain, when Mr. Wookey preached a Gospel sermon from John vi. 37, illustrating his discourse with many pathetic incidents gathered during his long ministry amongst the fallen and the weak. How many jewels were gathered in for the Redeemer's crown during these remarkable services it is not for us to say, though we have every reason to believe that not a few turned their tear-dimmed eyes to the once crucified, but now risen Lord.

"In the morning, at 11, Mr. Wookey addressed a large meeting of men on 'Purity of Life.' This service was a most impressive one, and will long be remembered by those who were privileged to be present. In the afternoon the evangelist addressed a large gathering of Christians from the words, 'Submit yourselves unto God.'

At Canning Town, one of the most needy districts of the metropolis, where there is a vast working-class population, Messrs. Bennett Anderson and Bradbrook opened the work on Sunday. Owing to the partially-finished state of the tent the attendance was not so large as is usual at the generality of the tent meetings, but quite sufficient to indicate that there is a great work to be done.

The Lord's saving power has been manifested at the Clapton tent. Mr. Charles Inglis, following on Mr. Geo. Clarke's meetings, experienced a gracious season of refreshing. Night after night the people were impressed, so that the meetings were necessarily prolonged to a late hour in dealing with the anxious. The solos of Miss Inglis were blessed to many hearers. On Sunday last a prayer meeting, held at 7.30 a.m., was well attended. In the afternoon there was a glorious gathering, and the words of Dr. Grattan Guinness on "Reconciliation" were greatly blessed. The evening service, too, was an occasion notable for remarkable spiritual freedom. The great tent was crowded to the utmost, and the audience listened with eager attention, the majority remaining from 7.30 to 10 p.m. Mr. Leonard Weaver spoke on "The Unpardonable Sin," and numbers were deeply touched by the earnest and pathetic appeals. Backsliders were awakened to a sense of their awful position, and a large number of seekers were dealt with by the devoted band of workers who, at Clapton, as in other tents, labour so indefatigably.

Mr. Henry Varley has experienced revival times at Shepherd's Bush. Crowds attended on Saturday and Sunday last. The evangelist spoke with directness and power, and a deep spirit of solemnity was upon the people. There were many seekers, and a rich harvest of souls is anticipated.

Tidings of blessing come, also, from Kilburn. Mr. Leonard Weaver had an inspiring "men's meeting" on Sunday morning, and at subsequent gatherings Mr. William Grove and Mr. J. Gracie took part.

The secretary of the Brixton tent reports that, during the past week, the meetings which were conducted by the Weaver Brothers have been very good, and there were a number of interesting cases of decision. The workers have been cheered by answers to prayer. One man who was prayed for has signed the pledge, and the friends are looking for his conversion. In another instance a man stopped one of the evangelists in the street, and then and there yielded his heart to the Saviour. A young Roman Catholic, too, has sought the Lord, thus giving an answer to the prayers of his mother, who is also a converted Romanist.

Tents are now erected in the following districts:—Kilburn, Willesden Lane (closes Saturday); Brixton, Canterbury Road; Woolwich, Woolwich Common; Shepherd's Bush Green (close to Shepherd's Bush Hotel); Clapton, High Road, opposite Lynscott Road (closes Saturday); Canning Town, Forty Acre Lane, Barking Road; and at Upton Park. Tents will be opened on Saturday next at Notting Hill (close to St. Helen's Gardens); Walthamstow (Hoe Street).

Priestcraft, Superstition, & Idolatry

OPPOSED BY THE

KENSIT CRUSADE & WICKLIFFE PREACHERS.

An earnest appeal is made to all lovers of civil and religious liberty to assist the Committee with funds that they may go forward in their much needed work throughout the country. There can be no doubt that the Protestant Revival is largely due (under God's blessing) to the tremendous efforts put forth by our energetic and God honoured Secretary, Mr. John Kensit, and his bold and brave bands of Wickliffe Preachers. Great and enthusiastic meetings are being held every day, and it is estimated that Twenty-five Thousand persons are being addressed every month. Mr. Kensit's bold and fearless protests have aroused public opinion and brought to light the terrible Conspiracy in our midst. Hundreds all over the country are appealing to us for a week's mission in their priest-ridden parishes. Shall we go forward? Reader, can you help us? We want Eleven Friends to give £100, the expenses of a Wickliffe Preacher for one year. We appealed for fifteen first, and four friends have responded. We want Five Hundred more Annual Subscribers. Who will have one of our Kensit Crusade Collecting Boxes? We want offertories from churches and chapels; will you interest your church with this object? In brief, we ask all lovers of God's truth to help in any and every way possible. The need is great. The necessity for action was never more needed since the Reformation. God is wonderfully blessing our work and we leave this appeal with His people. The Ladies' Union of Workers are holding a Sale of Work at Wickliffe House, 146, Alexandra Road, N,W., on Thursday, July 11th, to be opened by Joseph Peters, Esq., from 3 to 10 p.m.

I have great pleasure in enclosing Cheque or Postal Order for £ : s. d. as an Annual Subscription or Donation, or to maintain a Preacher for one Year.

*Name*_____

*Address*_____

P.S.—Please state whether Rev., Mr., Mrs., or Miss.

To JOHN KENSIT, Secretary, Protestant Truth Society, 18, Paternoster Row, E.C.

WHEN JESUS COMES

CHAPTERS ON THE SECOND ADVENT.
(SECOND THOUSAND.)

By Rev. THOMAS WAUGH.
Price 2s.

London: Rev. C. H. KELLY, 2, Castle St., City Rd., E.C.
Rochdale: Rev. T. CHAMPNESS, "Joyful News" Depot.

THE PROTESTANT REFORMATION SOCIETY,

ESTABLISHED 1827.
DOES PERMANENT PROTESTANT WORK.
Trained Resident Missionaries for the Conversion and Instruction of Roman Catholics in England,
AND FOR THE
Education and Preservation of Protestants.

SERMONS, LECTURES, EDUCATIONAL CLASSES, THE DISSEMINATION OF LITERATURE, DOMICILIARY VISITATION, DISCUSSIONS, BIBLE CLASSES, &c., &c., are constantly going on.

You can help by (a) Becoming an Annual Subscriber; (b) Giving a Donation; (c) Taking a Collecting Card; (d) Subscribing One Shilling a year for The Protestant Churchman; (e) Buying and Circulating the Society's Literature.

Subscriptions and Donations, which are urgently needed, should be sent to, and will be thankfully acknowledged by—

WALTER A. LIMBRICK, Secretary,
62, Berners Street, London, W.

Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland

This Society continues to Spread the Word of God in the homes of the people, and never found a more open door, but funds are much needed to extend the Work.

Contributions will be thankfully received at the Offices, 27, Lower Pembroke Street, Dublin; or 9, Paternoster Row, London; and at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

REV. J. O. GAGE DOUGHERTY, M.A.,
Secretary and Treasurer;
or CAPT. JAMES KEARNEY WHITE,
Hon. Secretary.

Gospel Hymns & Sacred Songs

COMPILED AND SUNG BY
IRA D. SANKEY.

211 Pieces. Words and Music, Old Notation.

Giraffe Covers	1s. 0d.
Limp Cloth	1s. 6d.
Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges .	2s. 0d.

Words Only.
Giraffe Covers, 1d. Printed Cloth, 2d.

London: MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.
And may be ordered of any Bookseller or Musicseller.

CHEAP EDITION of the Official and only Authorised LIFE OF DWIGHT L. MOODY
By His Son, W. R. MOODY.

It contains 576 pages, Large 8vo, including over Eighty Illustrations. 5/=

The 10s. 6d. Edition is still on Sale, and is admirably suited For Presentation.

A minister, who was presented with a copy by his Christian Endeavour Society, wrote: "A more suitable work could not have been given me."

"The book ought to be read."—British Weekly
"Stimulating and marvellous . . . Of absorbing interest."—Methodist Times.

The Complete "D. L. Moody" Library

Consists of 16 Volumes, as follows:—

Anecdotes, Incidents, and Illustrations. Weighed in the Balances. The Faith Which Overcomes. Pleasure and Profit in Bible Study. Notes from my Bible. Sowing and Reaping. Heaven. The Faithful Saying. The Way to God. Addresses. The Old Gospel. Power from on High. Bible Characters. Sovereign Grace. To the Work! Prevailing Prayer.

These Volumes, bound in Library Style, and enclosed in a STRONG OAK CASE, price complete, 25/- NET.

Or, in POLISHED WALNUT CASE, 27/6 NET, Carriage extra in either case.

D. L. MOODY AT HOME.

HIS HOME AND HOME WORK.

A description of the Educational Institutions established at Northfield and Mount Hermon; also Reports of some of the most striking Addresses at the various Christian Conventions held there.

EIGHT FULL-PAGE ILLUSTRATIONS.

Tinted covers, 2s.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.; Cloth bevelled boards, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

A Sixpenny Edition

Of the following Works by Mr. MOODY, Now Ready:—

THE WAY TO GOD.
SOVEREIGN GRACE.
PLEASURE AND PROFIT IN BIBLE STUDY.
SOWING AND REAPING.
WEIGHED IN THE BALANCES.
HEAVEN, OR THE LIFE BEYOND.
WHERE ART THOU?
BIBLE CHARACTERS.
THE OLD GOSPEL.
THE FAITHFUL SAYING.
ANECDOTES, INCIDENTS, AND ILLUSTRATIONS.
PREVAILING PRAYER.
THE FAITH WHICH OVERCOMES.

SIXPENCE EACH (By Post, 7½d.)

And can also be had in Cloth Limp at NINEPENCE. (By Post, 10½d.)

The above Thirteen Volumes (6d. Edition) can be had in a CLOTH CASE, together with Life of D. L. MOODY (Fourteen Volumes in all), PRICE COMPLETE,

5s. 6d. NET. (Postage 8d. extra.)

Or, the Fourteen Volumes (9d. Edition) in similar CASE, PRICE COMPLETE, 8s. NET. (Postage 8d. extra.)

London: MORGAN AND SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C. And of all Booksellers.

About Books.

THE TWO-VERSION BIBLE.

THE Two-Version Bible, as issued by the Oxford University Press, has rapidly come into favour among Christian workers and others. Its special features made this a foregone conclusion. The familiar charm of the A.V., and the greater precision of the R.V.—both were wanted; and the question was how to secure both in a compact and handy volume. The Two-Version is just what its name implies, the Authorized and Revised Versions combined, and in a manner that is plainness itself. The A.V. forms the text, and the variations of the R.V. are given in the side margins, their place and character being indicated by signs that are simple, and the whole being set in type which it is a pleasure to read. A central column gives the usual reference material.

On all grounds it was certain that this book would be widely adopted, and this anticipation has been speedily realized. There are editions on ordinary paper as well as on the fine India paper of the Oxford Press. Everything that beautiful printing, strong sewing with silk, and thoroughly serviceable binding could do, helped to establish the Two-Version as a Christian worker's edition. The extent to which it has been adopted for presentation purposes is quite remarkable. Ministers and evangelists have been loud in their praise of the edition, and all that they have said in its favour has been fully deserved.

This being so, it is good news to report that Mr. Frowde is extending the usefulness of the book. Many workers are unable to feel "at home," except with Bibles furnished with a goodly margin. They must enjoy the pleasure of marking such passages as they intend to quote in their addresses; and they must avail themselves of the help afforded by notes of their own making around the printed page. Without long waiting a Two-Version Bible has been prepared, with margins suited to the purposes indicated. It is called the "Wide Margin Edition," and is printed on paper that will bear ink writing; there are also ruled sheets at both ends, for additional notes, memoranda, and indexes. The book is a treasure in every way, and will, we are sure, be in large demand. In the pulpit and the reading desk, it will be of great value. It has been produced in a variety of bindings and prices. (H. Frowde).

A TEACHER'S COMMENTARY.

THE Teacher's Commentary of the New Testament is an important undertaking, by Dr. F. N. Peloubet, long and widely known as the author of "Notes on the International Lessons." The first volume is before us—Matthew, a goodly book of over 400 pages. (5s. Henry Frowde.) As commentaries on the Gospels are numerous and good, it were needful that this should have features at once distinctive and valuable; and these it assuredly possesses. To quote the preface: "The aim is to present in the light of the latest and best scholarship, and of the best modern methods, the Life, the Character, the Teachings, and the Mission of Jesus the Christ, as witnessed and recorded by the Apostle Matthew, so clearly, so simply, so practically, so suggestively, that people of even ordinary intelligence and culture may possess the best there is on the subject in the most attractive and helpful form; and that teachers, leaders of prayer-meetings, pastors, heads of families, and Christian workers of all denominations may be aided in accomplishing their work." These purposes have been conscientiously pursued. The text of Scripture is the combined Authorized and Revised, and the references are the new ones lately prepared for the R.V.

Every kind of help is included that can throw light upon the text—from scholarship, from literature, from history, from geography and travel, from new points of view, from pictures, from the original Greek. There are maps, charts, and pictures so far as they can explain any obscure references to Oriental customs; the time, place, and circumstances are noted in connection with events. The work embodies the results of much reading and research; authorities are given for important statements, also indications as to the directions in which to seek illustrative matter. This is a very useful book, the opening of an undertaking full of promise.

A new series of beautifully-designed Scripture Text Puzzles, for children in school and the home, are published by Mr. George Stoneman. (Eighteen assorted, 6d.)

"Mors janua vitæ" is the motto of an attractive booklet, Parables of the Cross (6d. Marshall Bros.) in which Miss I. Lilias Trotter shows how truly "death is the gate of life." The secret of the life of justification, holiness, surrender, and sacrifice, is found in the taking up of the cross daily.

Messrs. Seeley have included in their new "Eighteen penny Series" Rev. E. C. Dawson's Lion Hearted: The Story of Bishop Hannington's Life told for Boys and Girls. The book is in its ninth thousand, and it has many illustrations. The series is neat and cheap.

Nature Songs, by Emily Read. (2s. 6d. net. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.) All the seasons are celebrated; and much that is beautiful is sung of birds and flowers, and the mysteries of life in its various manifestations. The pages are thoughtful and tuneful. Some of the poems are suggestive of profound truths, natural and spiritual.

Our Gracious Queen Alexandra, by Rev. Canon Fleming, B.D (2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society.) A handsome little book, dedicated to Her Majesty. There is a beautiful photogravure portrait of the Queen, from a painting by Edward Hughes, and there are three illustrations of Sandringham. In every respect a choice and dainty publication.

In Commissioner Dowdle, the Saved Railway Guard, Commissioner Railton gives a biographical sketch of one of the early evangelists of the Salvation Army, whose labours contributed much to the upbuilding of the organization, and who, after a busy and useful life, passed away in July of last year. Mr. Railton writes with characteristic vigour and raciness. (6d. Salvation Army Depôt, 100, Clerkenwell Road, E.C.)

It is many years since Catherine Winkworth's Lyra Germanica was first issued. We welcome a new edition of the First Series, containing hymns for the Sundays and Chief Festivals of the Christian year. Among the writers represented here, special mention may be made of Luther, Gerhardt, Tersteegen, Schmolck, Rist, and Neumarck. The poem, "Eternity! Eternity!" by Wülffer, is one of the many gems of this little book. (2s. net. Longmans.)

On Human Nature as an Excuse for Sin: An Essay addressed to Christians. By Maurice C. Hime, LL.D., some time Head Master of Foyle College, Derry. (1s. J. & A. Churchill.) Who has not heard sin excused as "natural," and immorality palliated as "human"? Dr. Hime examines these demoralizing fallacies, showing man's relation to duty and conscience, and the bearing of morality upon social well-being and the law of God. The book is a serious attempt to discuss a subject of great practical importance, and it deserves many readers.

The Biblical Illustrator is now so well known as to require no description. As book after book of the Bible is brought under treatment in the series, it is sufficient to announce the fact. The latest issue is Proverbs, and the collection of sermonic material gathered in the pages (some 700 in number) is simply marvellous in bulk. Many have found this series of volumes of great service; and the latest addition to the number is as good as the best, and will be specially welcome, as the literature of its subject is somewhat limited. (7s. 6d. Nisbet.)

The fact that the author is not a missionary, but an employé of the Chinese Government, being one of the professors of the Imperial College, gives special interest and value to Mr. S. M. Russell's The Story of the Siege in Peking. (1s. 6d. Stock.) The narrative is mainly constructed from a diary, and gives a vivid picture of the life for two months of those whom their friends mourned as dead. A number of extracts from the Peking Gazette are translated, which are believed to give a fair impression of the attitude of the Chinese Government during the crisis.

Disappointed or dispirited Christian workers may well be advised to read Working for God (1s. Nisbet), which Rev. Andrew Murray has sent forth as a sequel to "Waiting on God." Its primary object is to emphasize the glory of such work, but it will also point out the causes of many failures. The summing up of each of the thirty-two chapters in a few terse sentences will cause more lasting impressions to be made. Many aspects of the truth are presented, and those who read in the spirit of the writer will find the book throbbing with spirituality, for the condition of success is shown to be that "God's work must be done in God's way, and in God's power."

Winsome Womanhood: Familiar Talks on Life and Conduct, by Margaret E. Sangster. (3s. 6d. nett. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) Of this handsome volume, the author says in a "Foreword":—"This little book has been written for women, with a wish and hope that it may prove suggestive and helpful to the girl in her teens, who faces so many problems, and stands before an unknown future, to the older woman having the responsibilities of middle life, and to her whose outlook is toward the setting sun." The wish and hope are well grounded; this is a good book from a graceful pen. Explaining the choice of title, the author says: "It is my firm belief that we are strongest as we are gentlest, that the 'loving are the daring,' and that the ideal Christian woman should be especially serene, tender, and full of charm." These pages are practical and beautiful, and there are several "studies from life" artistically produced.

Mr. David Nutt is issuing a series of small books on "The Ancient East," setting forth in succinct form the point and drift of recent discoveries and investigations in Babylonia, Assyria, and Egyptian history and religion. They are translations, made by Miss J. Hutchison, of studies now appearing in Germany, from the pen of leading scholars and specialists. We welcome the first two of the series—The Realms of the Egyptian Dead, by A. Wiedemann, Ph.D., who summarizes with ability a vast amount of archæological research; and The Tell el-Amarna Period: the Relations of Egypt and Western Asia in the fifteenth century B.C., according to the Tell el-Amarna Tablets, by Carl Niebuhr. Each book is provided with a brief biographical appendix (1s. each.)

Many will learn with satisfaction that Mrs. Ashley Carus-Wilson's book—Clews to Holy Writ, has been issued in a popular edition. (2s. Hodder & Stoughton.) When the book first appeared, in 1892, in connection with the work of the author (then Miss Mary L. G. Petrie, B.A.) in the College by Post, we gave it a hearty commendation. The fact that it has completed a circulation of 17,000 affords proof that a real need has been met by the book, which is correctly described on the title-page as a Scheme for Studying the Whole Bible in its Historical Order during Three Years. It is a pleasure to learn that the volume is a text-book in many colleges and schools, and there is reason to believe that it has been instrumental of much good in stimulating individual Christians, and young people's societies and classes, to a systematic study of Holy Scripture. It is a book for students of all ages, and we trust it will be still more widely adopted.

The history of the Church of Christ has much to teach us. Every virtue, as well as every weakness, finds exemplification: and there is not a generation that has not its encouragement and its warning. Yet, how few read Church history! Perhaps some who cannot find time to peruse large volumes may be glad to know where the story may be "sampled" in a thoroughly interesting manner. We recommend such to procure Pictures of Church History, in Pen and Pencil, from the Close of the New Testament to the Death of Bede. By Charles Tylor and Gordon Hargrave. (3s. 6d. Headley Bros.) For many years Mr. Tylor has been before the Christian public as a writer on Church history and allied themes. He has given us books for students; now he gives us, for "the general reader," choice morsels of incident furnished by the lives of fathers and confessors in the early ages of the Church. The chapters are fifty-two in number, and there are half as many illustrations of a superior order.

Students working upon the Psalter will find much help in The Psalms of David and the Higher Criticism; or, Was David "The Sweet Singer of Israel?" By Rev. Alex. Wright, M.A. (5s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) In the preface, the author tells us that he had a two-fold object in publishing his book: (1) To vindicate for the Psalms an earlier place in the history of Israel than a certain school of modern criticism is disposed to allow; and (2) to point out that it is reasonable to suppose that David at least wrote certain of the Psalms to which his name as author is prefixed. These purposes involved much investigation, not only as regards the Psalms, but also regarding the views of scholars as to their composition and age; and with considerable success the author sets himself to ascertain as far as possible the background of historical circumstance of each composition. In a measure the work is expository. It is evidently the product of much reading and thought, and will repay careful study. Many a Psalm is a budget of problems—critical, historical, and exegetical—and along all these lines of inquiry the author renders welcome assistance.

In THEY LOVED NOT THEIR LIVES UNTO THE DEATH (1d. Marshall Brothers) readers will find a translation of the persecution and sufferings of the missionaries and native Christians connected with the Sheo Yang Mission, as told by Li-Pai, a shepherd.

A series of Protestant pictorial postcards has been issued by the Church Association and National Protestant League (14, Buckingham Street, Strand). There are twelve distinct designs, recalling great scenes in Church history, and the reformation of religion.

The last addition to the "Useful Arts and Handicrafts" series is GLASS DECORATION AND REPAIR, by Rev. F. C. Lambert, M.A. The issue on CYCLE REPAIR AND MAINTENANCE has reached its second edition. It is in every respect an admirable publication. (6d. net each. Dawbarn & Ward.)

The concluding address by the Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland (Rev. Dr. Mitchell, South Leith), THE MINISTER IN THE MANSE, THE PULPIT, AND THE PARISH (6d. and 1d. Blackwood), gives to the reader the benefit of experience on many points during a ministry of forty-five years.

The present visit of the subject of the pamphlet to England, is the occasion of the appearance of MIRAGLIA: A MODERN SAVONAROLA, by S. M. Rebotier. (6d. Marshall Bros.), in which the steps are narrated which led up to his breach with Rome, and his enforced exile on account of a sentence of imprisonment.

In a timely booklet, worthy of a wide circulation, Rev. John Thomas (Dursley) advances and discusses the question, WILL GOD STOP PRAYER? (2d. Of the Author) by narrating a dream of a visit to a world where prayer had been discontinued. The closing call to seize the present opportunity is urgent and telling.

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

The Two-Version Bible. It is a pleasure to report continued interest in our Two-Version Bible Scheme, under which readers who secure twelve new subscribers to The Christian are presented with a specially useful edition of the Holy Scriptures. In a number of cases Christian workers, at once concerned for the extended influence of The Christian and desirous of possessing a beautiful book, have set to work with very encouraging results. The issue of the Wide Margin Edition suggests an enlargement of the scheme. Whereas for twelve new subscribers a 20s. copy of the ordinary edition is given, for sixteen new subscribers a copy of the 27s. "Wide Margin" edition, printed on writing paper, an ideal "worker's" Bible, will be presented. For particulars we refer our readers to the advertisement on page 8.

The Religious Orders in France. The French legislation against "Associations" has provoked an indignant letter from the Pope. The ecclesiastical dignitary whom history sets forth as the embodiment of tyranny, boldly insinuates "persecution" on the part of the State. But to deliver the body politic from the blood-sucking institutions classed as religious orders and communities, is wise statecraft, not persecution. Appealing to the sentiment of devotees, the Pope exclaims, "He who touches priests and monks touches the apple of the Church's eye." That is, indeed, a Papal conception. "The faithful" may look after themselves; the Pope will look after the sacerdotal caste.

Monastic Horrors. The same day's paper gives details of inquiries regarding monastic cruelties at Paris and Nancy. The nuns of the Order of the Good Shepherd—a community who are said to include among their besetting sins, self-righteousness, hardness of heart, avarice, and untruthfulness—are shown to have used great brutality to young people who have trusted themselves to their care. Dirt, degradation, and wanton neglect, are among the less sensational features of the Sisters' management; and miserable girls are said to have longed for the deliverance of death, the spectre of which has haunted them in their lives of hard labour and bad living. In some cases bishops have denounced the crimes of the "Good Shepherd" nuns; one of them saying: "The congregation has grown wealthy upon the work of pupils it pretended to receive out of charity." In fact, the order is a slave-driving community, by which 47,000 slaves support 7,000 nuns. Every now and then one gets a glimpse of the conventual system, and the revelation is always un-Christian and cruel. France is awakening. What country should continue to sleep, and let Rome continue to traffic in the bodies and souls of young women? Should Great Britain? Yet the convents of our land have their doors even more firmly closed than is the case in some Roman Catholic lands!

A Spanish Nun's Cry. During the celebration of a novice taking the veil at Cargagente, in the Province of Valencia, Spain, a nun appeared suddenly in the choir of the church crying for help, and telling the audience that she had been taken in against her will, and was actually a victim of imprisonment in the convent itself. The Journal de Genève of June 25, which publishes this fact, is silent as to the issue of the incident. We may safely assert that nobody in a Roman Catholic congregation would dare to attempt to rescue the unfortunate woman.

The Child Messenger Bill. The following paragraph from the Daily News is very discouraging:—

> The Child Messenger Bill has practically been reduced to an utter farce by the proceedings in Grand Committee. The age has been reduced to fourteen, the word "knowingly" has been inserted as a condition of proceedings against any publican, and the Government are now trying practically to except off-licences and liquor contained in a corked bottle.

From this it would appear that the hopes of temperance reformers, as they have been set upon this measure, are likely for the present to remain unrealised. The subject is still one for continued prayer and earnest work.

The Drink Bill for 1900. It is quite startling to find Dr. Dawson Burns in a position to state, through the columns of The Times, that the Drink Bill for last year shows a decrease of £1,271,576, as compared with that of the previous year. The total, however, amounted to £160,891,718, or an average of £3 18s. 8d. for every man, woman, and child, in the United Kingdom, or nearly £20 per annum for each family. Dr. Dawson Burns shows that the sum thus expended upon drink is in excess of the rental of all the houses and farms, and that the collective contributions of all churches and to all charities only reach one-seventh of the amount. More striking still is it to find that the whole of the deaths from wounds and disease during the unhappy South African war are far exceeded each year by the number of deaths directly and indirectly due to drink. Yet a country which is unable to find money for the housing of the poor, for Indian famine relief, or for old age endowment, permits and nurses a trade which is sapping the life of the nation!

Women Drunkards. Testimonies are multiplying as to the increase of drunkenness among women. All classes, it is evident, are the prey of this terrible vice. The evangelists of the London City Mission, who live and labour amid the terrors of slumdom, declare that it is a familiar scene to see a drunken woman staggering through the streets "with a baby in her arms, and one or two little ones clinging to her skirts." The experiences of the large body of Christian workers, who are daily engaged in combating this and other evils, confirms this statement. Turning to the women of the upper and middle classes, a morning contemporary says, in general terms, that "they drink alcohol in a way that would have shocked their mothers fifty or even twenty or thirty years ago." In view of this condition of affairs, we look once more for some prospect of State action, but find a well-known judge, wise and weighty of reputation, observing to a grand jury that, in the matter of temperance reform, "it seems idle to hope for effective legislation." Let us continue instant in prayer that, in God's way, this fruitful source of iniquity may be removed from our midst.

A Great Opportunity. One of the great problems which will face the Government on the restoration of peace in South Africa, is the regulation of the liquor traffic. Under the Transvaal Government the state of things was deplorable. The licensed houses were from four to five times as numerous as the law prescribed (i.e., one for every 400 or 500 adults); canteens were scattered broadcast amongst the mines and in the country districts, police control over them was of the most illusory description, and an illicit trade was carried on by powerful syndicates bent on illegally supplying Kaffirs with drink. The Free State was on the whole honourably free from these abuses. Now that both States are in a condition of suspended animation so far as regards constitutional government, there is an absolutely unique opportunity for the establishment of a thoroughly reformed system of administration. Rev. J. T. Darragh, rector of Johannesburg, discussing the situation in the Contemporary, implores the authorities not to let this opportunity slip.

State Control v. Private Ownership. Mr. Darragh's own solution of the problem would be for the Government to take over the traffic in stimulants, to regulate it, and to administer it in the interests of the community. This is the programme of the South African Alliance for the Reform of the Liquor Traffic, which includes teetotalers and non-teetotalers, prohibitionists and non-prohibitionists, among its members, all resolved to merge their individual differences in order to join their forces for the adequate treatment of this subject. Their great principles are these—the abolition of private profits, and the bringing of the trade under direct State control, with a view to safeguard the public from the many deplorable evils associated with private ownership in this particular business. The arguments for and against are summarized with commendable fairness and candour by the writer, and constitute a case for earnest and careful consideration of the question by all who will have a voice in the settlement of a vexed and imperative problem. The question arises, however, will Government seek to repress the liquor traffic, or will it cultivate the hurtful trade as a source of revenue? The way in which, during a long course of years, opium was forced upon the Chinese, in spite of every moral, Christian, and humane consideration, does not inspire the hope that wiser counsels would prevail in dealing with the drink in South Africa.

The Day of Rest. The report of the International Sunday Rest Congress, recently held in Paris, is significant of the great change that is coming over Continental opinion on this subject. France is on the way to the recovery of her lost day of rest. Since the first Paris Congress, nine years ago, railway workers have had one Sunday a month off, before which they had worked seven days a week all the year round. Since 1889 eighty towns have closed their post offices at noon on Sundays, a benefit now extended to all France. The merchants are also finding out the value of a weekly rest day. M. Honoré, director of the huge company called "The Louvre," stated at the Congress that he had now for several years been able to give 3,000 employés a weekly holiday without loss to the company, the extra receipts on Saturdays and Mondays compensating for the loss of Sunday trade. These facts are as full of warning to us as a nation as they are of encouragement to those who are working so hard to promote a better condition of things among Continental nations.

Sunday v. Lord's Day. This recovery of the Day of Rest does not, of course, insure its rightful use from a religious point of view. It is possible to use a privilege of this kind in a way that would make it a far greater curse than if spent at the most grinding labour. The three ideals of the Day of Rest need to be borne in mind at the present time: The Jewish, which made the day a burden by hedging it in with all kinds of onerous and depressing restrictions; the Pagan, which turns it into a day of self-indulgent, or, at best, purely secular pleasure; the Christian, which uses the opportunity of detachment from work that the soul may be attended to as the child and heir of eternity. While the advocates of an international rest-day are almost all Christians in their motives, they work for it, first, as the inalienable right of every worker to a periodical rest; but this only as a step towards the recovery of the Sunday to its proper spiritual uses. The attainment of the first object should be made a stepping-stone to the latter.

Crying Peace when there is no Peace. It is pleasant to find Lord Halifax yearning for peace, and, in his capacity as President of the English Church Union, assuring his hearers that he and the members will do all in their power to put an end to the strife and division which for some years have been so prominent in the Establishment. Unfortunately, from other parts of the address, there does not appear to be much ground for hope that, in order to secure peace the Ritualist parties will be prepared to concede, but rather the contrary. Lord Halifax not only had commendations for the "extreme men," but also tributes for Rome, and a defence of the "daily Mass," and of "the adoration due to our Lord in the Holy Sacrament of the Altar." He also went on to pat the Pope on the back for having always kept before his people "parts of Catholic doctrine and faith" which "Anglican authorities" have allowed to fall into abeyance and neglect. As those portions include the Mass, Prayers for the Dead, Confession, and the Communion of Saints, it is difficult to see where peace is to come in, especially as Lord Halifax proclaims that all the "poor endeavours" of the Union have had the end in view of re-union with Rome. In view of the Articles and Homilies relating to the subjects mentioned, and the ordination vow to "banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrines contrary to God's Word," it is permitted to raise a moral question. Can ministers of the Church of England be members of the English Church Union and at the same time lay claim to truthfulness and common honesty?

A Romanist View of the Nonconformist Conscience. Is Mr. W. S. Lilly to be taken as a representative exponent of current Roman Catholic opinion? His books and magazine enjoy a reputation second to no others among his co-religionists. What then are we to think of the following estimate of Nonconformist ethics? In his newly-published "Renaissance Types" he says of Henry VIII. that "he can hardly be regarded as abnormally dissolute for a king. What distinguished him was his determination to conciliate . . . indulgence . . . with the sanctity of marriage, and his success in his self-deception . . . He is the supreme example of what I may perhaps call without offence—the phrase has become current coin—'the Nonconformist conscience.'" Surely the force of calumny and prejudice "could no further go!" And this from a quarter which is so sensitive of reputation that it raises agitation because the King, in the language of two centuries of the royal line and general Protestant opinion, declares certain Romish dogmas to be "superstitious and idolatrous!"

The Jesuits' Handbook. A writer in the Humanitarian has thrown a somewhat lurid light upon the secret practices of the Jesuit order by the publication of a concise summary of a large portion of the Monita Secreta, the volume of rules which, usually, is kept carefully in the hands of the Superiors, and is passed on to but few of the members, with instructions to deny its authenticity should the book fall into other hands. The revelation is a startling one, the directions as to interference in the family life being minute to a degree, and the instructions as to the unscrupulous acquisition of wealth by the order being plain and unmistakable. It certainly is difficult to see how the Jesuit body could possibly be presented in a worse light than that afforded by the extracts from their own secret rules; but Mr. Evelyn Lang has preferred to omit one section of the instructions altogether. Judging from some portions of the summary, it is easy to understand his reticence in this respect.

Niagara—and After? An agnostic, writing in The Contemporary, utters a Cassandra-wail over the dark prospects of the higher ethics under the universal sway of the creed to which he himself subscribes. His great anxiety is for the rising generation. The generation to which he himself belongs was brought up under the old ideals and beliefs, and he confesses, in effect, that the noble character of many agnostics is due not to their present loss of faith, but to the Christian training which preceded that loss. The children of agnostics, on the other hand, are brought up as such, except in the many cases where their parents illogically insist that they should be religiously educated—and this writer is full of the gravest apprehension lest, with the loss of Christian training, they may be found to have lost all the high ideals of life. Seldom, indeed, have we had so open a confession from an agnostic as to the disintegrating effect of that cold creed on character and life.

A New Argument for Christianity. This article suggests a fresh argument for Christianity—the moral effects of beliefs as evidential of their truth. Usually the effects of religious beliefs on those who hold them have been ruled out of court by unbelievers; they have insisted that doctrines should be judged on their abstract merits alone. This is to confound physical with spiritual facts. The former are purely objective, the latter are a part of the mind itself that holds them. In the religious realm, therefore, beliefs that are confessedly elevating, and tend to produce the "peaceable fruit of righteousness," are by that very result shown to lie in the direction of reality. The life is thus a test of the truth, as well as of the reality, of the faith. And it will ever be found that one of the most cogent proofs of the Evangelical Gospel is to be found in the results it brings forth in the realm of character. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

The "Future of War." M. Bloch, whose book on "The Future of War" stirred the Russian Emperor to the action which led to the Hague Conference, has been giving his views on the military lessons of the South African war, and has come to conclusions that ought to be disseminated as widely as possible. That conflict, so far from leading to the necessity of conscription in this country, has, he contends, shown the needlessness of standing armies The trained soldier has been shown to be no better than civilians, and in some respects not so good. The qualities which will prevail in war time are just those that are trained in business and in agriculture. If this distinguished thinker's words could be accepted and followed by all the rulers of Europe, what revolution it would initiate! The heavy burden of militarism would be lifted at a stroke.

Advance or Retreat? Mr. Frederick Greenwood writes in the current Nineteenth Century on the missionary question in China. The article contrasts favourably in spirit with that shown by some other journalists towards missionaries. It acknowledges that the chief source of the bitterness out of which the recent massacres arose was political rather than religious. At the same time Mr. Greenwood strongly urges the Societies not to attempt for the present to recover lost ground in the disaffected provinces. By so doing, he says, "a thousand murders may be prevented, a thousand crimes averted, brutalizing reprisals forestalled, and yet not a soul be lost to Christianity." The question now before the various Societies is one of the most anxious and perplexing; but we fail to see how the last result referred to by Mr. Greenwood can be coupled with the others. Historically it is unquestionable that never has Christianity thriven more signally than immediately after a great persecution, when the impressive lessons of the witness of the martyrs to their faith is deep and vivid on the minds of the community.

Only a 'Bus Man. It is stated in a contemporary that while the horses employed in the omnibus service get at least one day in seven of complete rest, the drivers and conductors work on an average eighty-four hours a week, or alternate days of fifteen and nine hours, for 6s. 6d. and 5s. per day respectively. Commenting upon this, the writer adds—

> We are all in favour of humane treatment of animals, and are very glad to think, at all events, that in London our horses are not overworked. But we are of opinion that humane treatment should also be meted out to human beings.

Possibly the question is considered one of dividends only, and it is probable that the humane treatment of the animals has no higher basis than that of economy, as it would not be found profitable to overwork them. What, however, have the Christian shareholders in the companies to say to it?

The Epistle of James.

By Rev. T. A. GURNEY, M.A., LL.B., Swanage.

VIII.—The Faith which brings final Justification (ii. 14-26).

THE possible connection of this passage with Paul's teaching about Justification has diverted attention from its real beauty and significance to side, controversial issues, and the controversial has thus triumphed over the spiritual. Yet the passage is clearly not in itself controversial, but in intimate and direct relationship with the whole teaching of the rest of the Epistle. Is it, indeed, controversial at all? It is possible to doubt it, and to see, in the special language of the writer upon Faith and Works, simply the strong insistence upon practical religion which marks all his words. "Thou that sayest . . . dost thou?"

James' standpoint as a teacher accounts for his special teaching regarding faith. He addresses a people already familiar with religious truth, luxuriating in well-known dogmas, conscious of their separation from the follies of mere idolatry, exceedingly "religious" after a sort. Is it not much our position at home to-day, in contrast with those the missionary has to deal with? Under such conditions the aspect of faith most necessary to emphasize would be as with ourselves, not faith in its first moment of conscious existence merely, but faith in its adult form, tested by years of ripening experience, active in well-proven result, perfected by works. The contrast with Paul is not, therefore, between faith and works as distinct from each other, for with James the perfection of faith is the climax up to which this passage leads. It is, rather, between two different aspects of faith, dependent on the special standpoint of each writer.

Show me, cries James, not mere religious profession, orthodox platitudes, strifeful dogmatism. Show me actual, tangible, spiritual result—fact in the spiritual sphere, character. Hearing, knowing, professing are worse than useless to avert the judgment fast approaching, unless these yield spiritual result. For the faith you will need now is a faith vindicated by its good fruits, capable of being tested by its last hour—at the Grand Assize. It is the same throughout with our writer. The final goal is ever before him. Now it is the perfecting of patience, now the crown of life to the proven, now the fruit of righteousness quietly sown in peace; anon the patience of the husbandman for the latter rain; the "end of the Lord" for the faithful. Therefore it is the activity of true faith which is emphasized here.

A FAITH WHICH SECURES ACQUITTAL

I. Active faith alone, says James, is real faith. "What doth it profit . . . if a man say he hath faith and have not works? Can such a faith as that save him?" (ii. 14). Saying you have faith will not do for your fellow men; how much less will it do in the searching fires of God's coming judgment? Will mercy triumph over judgment in such a case as that? Outward profession of familiar truth is not faith. The empty reliance on "the Christ of glory," coupled with a life of selfish disregard of others, is not enough.

As usual, a vivid illustration clenches home the meaning. "If a brother or sister" (mark this emphasis of the human relationship) "be naked, and in lack of daily food, and one of you SAY unto them, 'Go in peace, be ye warmed and foddered' (R.V. filled), and yet ye give them not the things needful to the body, what doth it profit?"

Is the man who thus bows out his shivering "brother" (clad only with the cetoneth, or under-tunic), with such cold irony, a philanthropist? No one is deceived by such "charity." So no one is deceived by a faith of mere believing phrases which comes short of faithful action. It is striking that each illustration of a defective faith in this chapter (ii. 1, 2; 14, 15) is also an illustration of defective charity: so closely are faith and love interwoven (1 John iv. 20). Greatheart and Christian speak of Talkative in "Pilgrim's Progress" as a "confident fool," whose ways many follow, yet "he deceiveth his own soul." Nominal Profession is not Faith. Active faith alone is worthy of the name. To be "a hearer of forgetfulness" is to build upon sand. But

TO HEAR AND TO DO

(Matt. vii. 24) is to build upon the rock. Is our modern Christianity showing forth the language of faith or the fruit of faith? Is it riding abroad, like Arthur's knights, "redressing human wrong"? What about Armenia?

II. Active faith alone has the power of self-manifestation. Its very existence may otherwise be doubted. The imaginary objector confronts, as it were before James himself, the man who places his confidence in an inactive faith, and gives him the lie as to its very existence (18). The underlying thought still is, If this be so with man, how will it be possible to deceive God? He will discern living faith, and reward it by its results. "Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds." "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." We read of a certain city in the Greek Peloponnesian War—Platæa—which was punished by the Spartans for its want of support, with the death of its leading citizens. The question asked of each, before he was led away to execution, was not "Have you fought against Sparta?" but "What have you done to help her?" From One who died to set us free, such a question will come with terrible force (Matt. xxv. 45). Habitual Acquiescence in a creed may have none of the features of true faith. There are "hereditary Christians" abroad, and there are multitudes of them at home. The "Orthodox Church" of the East has become a byword for spiritual lethargy. We do not need anything for our salvation but faith. But that faith must be a faith which rules mind and heart and conduct, a "faith," in Paul's language, "which worketh by love."

III. For Inactive Faith may be shared even with the lost. "Thou believest that God is One" (19, R.V.). Well spoken! But that this is not sufficient, is shown by the fact that you share such faith even with devils. The very "demons" believe, and "shudder" at the thought. "This verse" (Deut. vi. 4), says Mayor, "is the commencement of the Shema, that portion of the Law which was appointed to be read or recited both morning and evening by every Jew." "For him who reads the Shema with scrupulous precision," they said, "they cool Gehinnom." Mere knowledge of such a truth was supposed to carry with it salvation. On the contrary, says James, it may coexist with

THE TERRORS OF THE LOST.

Zealous Orthodoxy is no more faith than idle acquiescence. To cry, "The Temple of the Lord," yet walk after other gods and follow evil things, is to "trust in lying words that cannot profit" (Jer. vii. 8, 10). That terrible "shudder" of Hell is one of the most vivid "sound-pictures" of the Bible. There is no Agnosticism there. The overshadowing consciousness of the Eternal against whom they have sinned, is a horror which even Dante's realistic pictures of Hell cannot depict or exaggerate.

IV. Active Faith alone is Justifying Faith. James' indignation at the folly which can confound mere profession of a correct creed with real faith finds expression in a personal apostrophe, "Wilt thou know, O vain (lit. "empty") man, that faith apart from works is barren?" (20) This is the only place (Mayor) in the New Testament where kenos, "empty," is used for persons. It exactly describes a man who has nothing to show for his faith.

The great typical case of faith in their Scriptures is chosen by James to prove to his nation that an active faith alone brings justification. But what does James mean by justification? It is justification, not as the first entrance to a life of grace, but as the goal of long opportunity and privilege, winning final approval before the Judge. It is "the justification which places believers at the last judgment in the full enjoyment of salvation" (Huther), rather than "the justification which puts believers . . . into a gracious relation with God, as with St. Paul." "Was not Abraham," says the writer of the First Book of the Maccabees, "found faithful in temptation, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness?" "'Found faithful' there," says Manton, "is the equivalent of the 'was justified' here." And he adds, "Justification in Paul is the opposite to the condemnation of the sinner in general, and justification in James is the opposite to the condemnation of the hypocrite in particular." "In Paul's sense a sinner is absolved, in James' sense

A BELIEVER IS APPROVED."

In full accord with this is the fact that, though he uses the example of Abraham, he takes him at a crisis in his life "much lower down the stream" (Farrar).

For, while Paul points back to a very early scene in his life of faith, where faith was passive and receptive, accepting God's promise under the star-spangled Syrian sky, James selects almost the closing scene wherein faith was put to an agonizing test and came forth active and victorious. "From God" (Manton) "he then received a justification of his faith, though thirty years before he had received a justification of his person." The verdict was final; the man of faith was now installed as such in the sight of God (Gen. xxii. 10, 18). It is thus, as our fathers of the Reformation were fond of saying, "Faith alone which justifies, but not that faith which is alone." "Good works," said Luther, "make not the man, but the good man makes the works."

V. Thus Active Faith alone can reach maturity of faith (22-26). "By works was faith made perfect." It is, therefore, not the elimination of faith, but its perfection, which is the aim of James, as of Paul. The case of Rahab adds nothing to that of Abraham except by its strong contrasts. She, a heathen and a Gentile—might not she be dealt with on other grounds? She, too, was justified by works, that is, by an active faith, "in that she received the messengers and sent" (or, rather, thrust) "them forth another way."

Inactive faith is, indeed, without spiritual life. "As the body apart from the spirit is dead, even so faith apart from works is dead." If we read "without breath" for "spirit" we get a complete parallelism between the two parts of the sentence. Breathing is inseparable from life; it is the manifestation of life. Without it all functions of life cease. So are works to faith. Without them degeneration has set in. The verdict soon goes forth, "Thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead."

The King's Declaration.

THE Select Committee on the King's Declaration against Transubstantiation presented its report last Monday in the House of Lords. It is evident that the present proposal, as published in our columns last week, will not be accepted without considerable alteration or addition. At the same time, it appears that Lord Halifax and others will oppose any continuance of a Declaration the very object of which is distasteful to Roman Catholics; but on the other hand, we believe there is a rising tide of public opinion which will not be satisfied without a form which contains an explicit statement of the Protestant position of the monarch, instead of taking that practically for granted.

WHAT IS IDOLATRY?

We have received many letters on the subject, quite a number of which discuss the question: "What is idolatry?" In this the writers see one of the most important points raised by the Declaration; and for the most part they agree that the definition, "a denial of the true God, and the worship of a false god under the form of some material symbol," is only partial, and therefore unsatisfactory.

Roman Catholics themselves admit that, if Transubstantiation be not a fact, they are guilty of idolatry in the celebration of the Mass; and it is just here that, as we have already pointed out, the proposed alteration will fail in its purpose. The excision of clauses which reflect on the motives and practices of holders of the faith may seem to be going half way to meet them, while really it is not doing so at all.

The importance of this charge of idolatry is very great, and only those who have given close attention to the subject know how justly it is made. Baron Porcelli, who has had long experience in India, points out that there is no such great gulf as is generally supposed between heathen worship there and that which is common in the Roman Catholic countries of Europe. He found, for example, a Hindu praying in front of a little oil lamp in the open air, without "symbol" or idol near, who declared that he believed in "the real presence of the spirit" of the god as indicated by the light. Mr. Maurice Gregory, who was present at the feast of the Goddess Durga at Lucknow, and a few weeks afterwards also at the procession of the Black Virgin in Italy, declares that with the exception of those occasioned by race and climate there was no essential difference—certainly none in spirit.

The great outstanding feature of the religion of Israel was the absolute prohibition of using in the worship of God any material symbol; yet the temptation was too great for them, and, as Sir Charles S. King, Bart., and others point out on at least two occasions, the setting up of the golden calf in the wilderness and the action of Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, their sin consisted in the adoration not of false gods, but of Jehovah, in this way. The most insidious and mischievous tendency of idolatry is when it has to reappear as a part of the true worship, and the iconoclast was not always the mere vandal that some would have us believe.

No one will contend that every heathen worshipper distinguishes between the light, or idol before him, and the real presence of the god believed to be represented thereby; but neither can it be admitted that a similar distinction is drawn by the multitude of Roman Catholic worshippers.

"Idolatrie is Greeke, and the English is image-service," wrote William Tyndale, in the sixteenth century. An argument then used was, "If a man have a matter with a great man, or a king, he must go first unto one of his mean servants, and then higher and higher till he come to the king;" but Tyndale adds, "This enticing argument is but a blind reason of man's wit. It is not like in the kingdom of the world, and in the kingdom of God and Christ." There was no idolatry in the truest sense in the England of that day, as there is among Roman Catholics to-day. If it be objected that image-worship is not even involved in the language of the Declaration, we reply (1) that the question really involved is idolatry; (2) that it is sometimes necessary to follow a matter to its logical conclusion in order to examine it thoroughly; and (3) the Roman Catholic idolatry finds its centre and mainspring in the adoration of the host.

CHURCH ASSOCIATION MANIFESTO.

The following letter has been issued by Captain Cobham, chairman of the Church Association:—

The Report of the Committee appointed by the House of Lords on the King's Declaration has been received by the country with amazement on all sides. Even The Guardian, as the organ of the High Church party, points out that:—

It is ludicrously inadequate and misleading. And surely what is wanted is a declaration, not that certain doctrines and practices are contrary to "the Protestant religion," but that they are rejected by the Sovereign; and the Church Times, the leading organ of the Ritualists, admits that—

If the Committee of the House of Lords on the King's Declaration had deliberately aimed at producing an absolutely futile substitute for that formula, it could not have surpassed its present performance. To take the second clause first, it matters not whether there is such a thing as the Protestant religion, or whether, if there is, anyone can say what it is: but at any rate it is a self-evident propositiou that the Roman view of the Mass and the Invocation of Saints is "contrary to the Protestant religion." How the safety of the Realm as against a Papist Sovereign is to be secured by an affirmation which the Pope himself would sign with both hands we entirely fail to see. This clause, then, might profitably be rejected as absurd and useless.

Naturally the organs of Protestantism both within and without the Established Church speak even more decisively against this fatuous "amendment." The Lords of the Committee appear to have treated this grave question with almost cynical indifference, inasmuch as they expended only twenty minutes on the entire procedure. Are we to understand that this was in fulfilment of Lord Salisbury's remark in the House of Lords, on March 19, that—

When it comes to altering an enactment which has now lasted, as far as I know, without serious question, 200 years, and which was originally included in the Bill of Rights, it is a matter which cannot be done without very considerable thought.

It is deserving of marked notice that the important words of the instruction given to the Committee, viz., "without diminishing its efficacy as a security for the maintenance of the Protestant Succession" were left out from the Resclution as moved by the Lord Chancellor, who merely asked the Committee to report that the Declaration "can be modified advantageously"—which is, of course, quite true from the Roman Catholic point of view: the question of the "security for the Protestant Succession" being entirely passed over in silence, notwithstanding the language used by the Prime Minister, who said, February 22:

The words I should like to add are these: "And whether the language can be modified advantageously without diminishing its efficacy as a security for the maintenance of the Protestant Succession."

The apparent levity of this proceeding is accentuated by the fact that some 500 places (including the Colonies) have forwarded to the Government resolutions deprecating any alteration whatever in the Statutory Declaration. Yet the agitation is only now about to commence, and the whole country will be convulsed ere long by the struggle for the maintenance of the supremacy of Protestantism, which Lord Salisbury has rendered inevitable.

The efficacy of the present test is admitted by the Roman "Catholic Truth Society," of which Cardinal Vaughan is president, which says: "It must be admitted that the test was effective. No Catholic could speak the words and remain a Catholic, and The Tablet, March 30, admits—

A change by which this concrete disavowal would be omitted, would, as Lord Salisbury justly pointed out, have the significance of something more than a mere omission. It would be to them [the Protestants] the hauling down of their flag on a fortress which has been their point of vantage.

So long as the accredited theologians of the Church of Rome, under whose guidance the consciences of its adherents are "directed" in the conduct of ordinary life, continue to teach that Oaths and Declarations conflicting with the interests and dogmas of the "Catholic" Church are not binding in the sight of God, and may be dispensed with by the "Vicar of Christ," it is impossible to forego the definite repudiation of this immoral and dangerous doctrine by the Sovereign himself, whose personal belief it is desired to publicly ascertain.

Recent Conventions.

THE Eighth Annual Convention at Melksham was held on July 2, and in spite of heavy thunder-storms, the attendance exceeded that of any previous year. Three meetings were held, and helpful addresses were given by Revs. F. B. Meyer and J. B. Figgis.

The Convention at Rochester on July 3 and 4 will long be remembered for its deeply spiritual character. The meetings took place in the Old Corn Exchange (by kind permission of the Mayor). Special seasons for intercession were held each morning, and these were most helpful. A large audience gathered each afternoon, and the place was quite crowded both nights. Captain H. Baring presided at all the meetings, and the speakers were Revs. Evan H. Hopkins, W. H. Griffith Thomas, and John Brash. The secretary, Rev. G. Anderson Miller, writes: "Christians from all the places of worship rallied up well. So much has the Convention been blessed (and this is the first) that it is quite expected that it will be an annual institution."

The Seventh Annual Conference at Jordan's Meeting House, near Chalfont St. Giles, on Thursday, July 4. A large number of Christians, including many clergy and ministers of all the Evangelical Churches, came together in happy fellowship. Jordan's is year by year becoming quite a rendezvous on these occasions for the Lord's people for miles around. Both the morning and afternoon meetings were most helpful, the spiritual tone being very high, and the Lord's presence manifestly felt. The subject chosen for consideration was, "Christian Graces." At the morning gathering Mr. Colin Taylor, of Rickmansworth, presided, and, after silent prayer and the singing of a hymn, opened the Conference with a short address, bringing before the meeting, in a helpful manner, some of the graces of the Christian life. Rev. F. S. Webster gave a very helpful address upon Phil. i. 9-11. The speaker dwelt very forcibly on four graces mentioned in this passage, viz., love, knowledge, consistency, and practical righteousness. Pastor Frank H. White followed with an address upon Col. iii. 12-14. At the afternoon meeting (held in the open air, and presided over by Mr. J. E. Taylor, of Aylesbury), the Chairman emphasized the necessity of the new birth ere Christian graces could be manifested in the daily life. Mr. W. J. Doherty (China Inland Mission) gave an able address, pleading for more definite prayer on behalf of that troubled land, and appealing for more workers. The address appeared to move all hearts present, as the speaker told of God's goodness to him when his life had been in danger. Mr. Horsburgh, a returned missionary from China, briefly addressed the meeting, after which Mr. W. R. Lane closed with a practical talk upon Christian living.

Protestant Reformation Society.—The course of afternoon lectures on Protestant topics arranged by Mr. Walter Mayo in connection with the Hastings and St. Leonard's Auxiliary of the society concluded last week. Rev. E. E. Hill gave the closing lecture, "Romanism in the Nineteenth Century." Mr. W. A. Limbrick has commenced a series of midday lectures outside the gates of the Royal Small Arms Factory, Enfield Lock. The opening address was on the King's Accession Oath, "How the Declaration came about," and was warmly received by a large concourse of the employes at this Government workshop.

The Evangelistic Mission.—The summer appeal of the Evangelistic Mission (Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, 164, Alexandra Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.) is this year unusually pressing. It has unexpectedly been found necessary to close Wilton House of Rest for repairs, and requirements of other properties, which cannot be postponed, will cost £300. In the meantime the various branches of the work go steadily forward. The regular services are being maintained, special missions are being taken throughout the country. Some of the tents are already in use, and others are being prepared to go out shortly. It is a matter of deep satisfaction that so many of those who have received blessing in the past have gone forth to do valiant service for God at home and in foreign lands.

MILDMAY ADDRESSES.

Three Voices of God.

By Rev. THOMAS LANCASTER.

The Lord gave the word. . . . He doth send out his voice, and that a mighty voice (Psa. lxviii. 11, 33).

IT is most important for us, as Christians and Christian workers, to know, in the first place, what the word of God is, and in the second place, what the word of God means. Let us consider some of the ways in which God has spoken to man.

I. The Voice at Sinai. This shows us what sin is, and how loathsome it is to God. The subject is not a popular one to-day, but it needs to be brought forward, equally with the story of the love of God. Recall the mighty revival in the eighteenth century, and the practice of the preachers associated with Wesley and Whitefield. They told the people of the love of God, but they also unfolded the law of God in such a way that the consciences of sinners were touched to the quick. Preachers and teachers—all Christian workers—do well to carry this voice of God to the multitudes, that they may know something of their own sin and God's holiness. Let us speak of sin in its (a) universal character—Paul used "to stop every mouth"; in its (b) attractive character—Augustine said that his sins were so attractive to him that when he prayed for deliverance from them he wished God would not hear him; in its (c) self-deceptive quality—the sinner will not see his sin.

There are (d) respectable sins, of which religious people may be guilty—said a lady, when spoken to with plainness,

"YOU MISTAKE YOUR PARTY.

I have been brought up in a boarding-school, and am not one of the set you describe." Sin is (e) aggressive, (f) progressive, (g) always detected—"be sure your sin will find you out." It is (h) devilish, and (i) profligate; the other day a man convicted of an awful sin said to a religious adviser, "I think it is most creditable that I should be calculated to do such a thing." Sin is (j) strong, the mightiest power on earth, save the power of grace. There has always been a tendency among Christians to minimize sin, in fact, to excuse sin. The voice of Sinai, however, is intolerant of all evil; God in Revelation points out the sinfulness of sin, and tells us of the wondrous remedy He has provided. You remember there was the trespass offering as well as the sin offering. God is very particular about the conduct of his people, as well as intent upon dealing with the great disease of the world.

II. The Voice of Calvary is spoken of in Heb. xii. 22-24—"Ye are come . . . . to Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel." The voice from Sinai was one of fear; that from Calvary is one of love. We go on to read: "See that ye refuse not Him that speaketh." The "it" and the "Him" are identical. Unless Jesus is a sacrifice, He is not a Saviour; if Christ's death was not for our sins, then we have no Saviour. Christ was for man's great need; that is the voice of Calvary, and it should be sent forth from the pulpits of Bible classes everythere. The Gospel has lost its power if the blood is taken out of it; no other voice speaks if this is silent. Rowlands, of Wales, felt it when reading the Litany: "By thine agony and bloody sweat; by thy cross and passion; by thy precious death and burial." The Holy Ghost came down upon the assembly, and a blessed revival began. That voice speaks to the weary and heavy laden; not theories of truth of which the world gets fuller year by year, but the voice of Calvary.

GOD'S GREAT PROVISION

III. In the third place, the Voice of Warning (Isa. lxi. 1, 2). We speak of the holiness of God and the redeeming blood of Christ, and yet the people remain untouched. Maybe it is because we do not take up the third voice—the word of warning. Our fathers used to speak of declaring "the whole counsel of God"; are we getting away from that point? Our Lord when He began his ministry, quoted the words of the prophet, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon Me; because He hath anointed Me to preach, . . . to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord." And He went and did so. Towards the close of his ministry, coming to the city that had rejected Him, He spoke words of solemn warning. Have not we in many cases stopped short of truths that should be delivered? Look at the Apostle Paul; for years, night and day, the people to whom he preached the Gospel (Acts xx. 31). Who ever warned men as did Jeremiah, for forty years? We find him crying out, "Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people!" If we would carry the voice of God in Revelation, we must also give the warning. If souls round about us do not heed the Gospel, we must tell them that God has something else in store.

HE WARNED WITH TEARS

The voice of Revelation is of three things: the Law, the Blood, Judgment. Whatever we take to the people, we must not leave these out. I will illustrate by something that happened in the North of England. A young preacher of the Gospel went forth in the power of the Holy Ghost. He had that about him which made his words bring many to Christ. A number of critics watched him, and some young ministers went to hear him preach. They reported on their visit to a venerable man of God:—"He was very common-place. All he said to the people was, 'Come, come, come.' He was perfectly simple; there was nothing of interest about his discourses. It was all 'Come'!" "Well," remarked the aged man, "and did the people come?" "Yes," was the reply. "That surprised us most of all, and numbers of them, too." "Go away, then, and learn to say 'Come' in the same manner!"

All Scripture Inspired.

Rev. E. W. MOORE.

"All Scripture is given by inspiration of God" (2 Tim. iii. 16).

The doctrine of the inspiration of God's Word is the battlefield of this generation. In the report of an address delivered by a certain teacher to teachers, he is represented as saying, "It must be our aim—carefully, of course, but gradually—to withdraw confidence from the Bible," meaning the Old Testament Scriptures, "and fix it upon the life of our Lord, as recorded in the four Gospels." Such words betray extraordinary ignorance concerning the unity and solidarity of Holy Writ. How shall we maintain any superstructure, when we seek to undermine its foundations?

Let us try first to understand the text, and then to say why we believe it. Well has it been said that we are as little equipped for defining inspiration as for explaining the Incarnation of our blessed Lord. In his sacred person and in this book are blended in a way that passes the full comprehension of man. So many misconceptions surround the subject of inspiration that it may be profitable for me to offer some negations.

THE HUMAN AND THE DIVINE

All parts of Scripture are not of equal value. The hyssop that springs upon the wall is as much the work of God in creation as the cedar that strikes its roots into the sides of Lebanon; but the latter is far more valuable than the former. If I am asked which I prefer, the Book of Esther or the Gospel of John, I have no hesitation in choosing the Gospel; but that does not affect the inspiration of Esther. Both writings are equally inspired, though they may not be equally profitable.

Nor do we mean that all utterances recorded and all scenes described in Scripture are inspired. When the tempter said, "Thou shalt not surely die," he was not inspired to say it, though Moses was certainly inspired to record it. Pilate's declaration of innocence after washing his hands before the multitude is simply recorded, not confirmed, by Scripture.

It has been urged that the claim for plenary inspiration is unsound, because it would reduce Scripture to a monotonous literary plane, in which none of

THE DISTINGUISHING CHARACTERISTICS

of the writers would be observable. But we know that, in a way inexplicable to us, the Holy Ghost used the faculties and powers of the writers of the Bible so that we can at once distinguish between the lofty poetic strains of Isaiah and the plain prose of Jeremiah or Amos. We recognise the wonderful reasoning power and the marvellous psychological insight of Paul in his Epistle to the Romans, as compared with the plainer diction of Peter or James in giving the testimony God entrusted to them.

While inspiration is not merely mechanical, yet "holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost;" and this concerns their words as well as their thoughts. How can men think apart from words? And how shall thought be communicated except through words? There may be differences in the mode of inspiration, but, as its result, inspired writings are invested with divine authority. Dr. Bonar says that the production of an Act of Parliament involves many processes; but when the Royal assent has been obtained, that Act becomes the law of the land. In whatever way the Holy Ghost was pleased to superintend the work to which the result of their labours is stamped with his imprimatur, and that result comes to us as God's Word written.

HE MOVED THE WRITERS OF SCRIPTURE,

We believe in inspiration because the Scriptures themselves affirm it, in many expressions such as these, "For ever, O Lord, thy word is settled in heaven;" "The words of the Lord are pure words, as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times." The authorship of Scripture is repeatedly assigned—not to the writers, but to the Holy Ghost. Among other passages where inspiration is distinctly claimed, take 2 Sam. xxiii. 2; Jer. i. 9; Acts xxviii. 25; 1 Thess. ii. 13; Heb. iii. 7 and ix. 8.

We believe in plenary inspiration because the condition of mankind requires it. Unless all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, we have no Bible at all. As an example of the sore straits and perplexities into which even experts are driven in the endeavour to construct a Bible for themselves, I recommend perusal of an article in the quarterly Bibliotheca Sacra for January, entitled, "Isaiah the myth, and Isaiah the Prophet." The opinions of six leading higher critics are there compared and contrasted; and, with scarcely an exception, no two of them agree. Into what hopeless confusion should we be plunged if we were left without an infallible Book to guide us through life's pilgrimage to the heavenly home where we would be!

Further, we believe that all Scripture is inspired, because the consciousness of the seeking soul responds to the written Word, although that response is not made by every man. The Bible is no ordinary volume; it is and an oracle. In the words of Luther, it has hands and feet. Nay, more, it has eyes like a a flame of fire; and it is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. The meaning of the Book is not given to every reader; it can shut itself against its enemies, while it reveals its secrets to them that tremble at God's Word. Come, see a Book that told me all things that ever I did. "What man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him?" Who lays bare my sin and points me to the remedy? It is my Maker alone who thus penetrates the recesses of my being.

A LIVING BOOK,

I heard a missionary describe the awful struggle of an educated Chinaman seeking freedom from the opium habit. The inspiration of the first chapter of Genesis is questioned; but it was through that chapter that the poor devotee just referred to found deliverance. The late Dr. Dale told the story of a Japanese who was sadly perplexed by Confucian descriptions of heaven. A New Testament put into his hand was regarded merely as a literary marvel, until he read Paul's wonderful hymn of love in 1 Cor. xiii. and exclaimed, "This is what I seek; this is heaven!"

The all-important and crowning reason for this belief is that Christ has set upon Scripture. It was in resurrection life and power that He confirmed the Jewish canon, showing that "all things must be fulfilled which were written in the law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me." There is no trace of doubt or hesitation on his part as to the truth and unanimity of the Old Testament Scriptures. Our Lord has told us (Matt. v. 18) that it is easier for heaven and earth to pass than for a jot or tittle of the law to fail. When Christ speaks, the question of inspiration is settled.

HIS OWN SEAL

It is asserted that our Lord merely adopted the customary speech of his day in ascribing the authorship of Psa. cx. to David, and in speaking of the Book of Jonah as an historical record. Can that be true of One who said to his opponents, "Before Abraham was, I am"? Apart from the mystery of the two natures in one person, the Holy Ghost rested upon the Man, Christ Jesus. It was that He gave commandment to his chosen apostles, cast out devils, and in the crowning act of atonement offered Himself without spot to God. As the author of the Psalter and the Old Testament prophecies, the Spirit guided the utterances of Christ, as our Lord gave his authority to those scriptures. If we refuse to accept them, we question Christ's mission, and draw perilously near, however unconsciously, to sinning, not only against the Son of Man, but against the Holy Ghost.

THROUGH THE SPIRIT

Do we criticise the Scriptures of truth, or do we obey them? When the word of Christ dwells in us richly, not only are verses committed to memory, but the Eternal Word takes up his abode in our hearts. When He is the light of life, and the power of service, all doubts concerning this blessed Book are dissipated. "The grass withereth, and the flower thereof falleth away; but the Word of the Lord endureth for ever. And this is the Word which by the Gospel is preached unto you."

Knowing God's Name.

REV. J. GREGORY MANTLE.

No subject is more fascinating than the gradual unfolding of the nature and character of God as seen in his names and titles. In reading the Old Testament we should remember that the names of God therein contained are not introduced merely for the sake of variety, but each one of them has a deep meaning, marking some partial revelation of the Divine nature, given as men were able to bear it.

Some of you may recall an incident in the life of one of our great water-colour painters. A critic asserted that the colours in a picture were exaggerated, and said, "I never saw such in nature." "Don't you wish you could?" was the reply, for the artist had eyes to see what was invisible to the fault-finder.

And it is only as we walk with God, allowing our knowledge to be translated into conduct, that the real meaning of God's names are revealed to us.

In Gen. xvii. we have, within the compass of the first three verses, as many different names of God. The word LORD, when printed in capitals, always stands for Jehovah. For the first time in the Bible there occurs here that delightful and inspiring name at of Abraham, "I am the Almighty God;" or, as in the margin, El Shaddai. "Abraham fell on his face; and God (Elohim) talked with him."

A CRISIS IN THE LIFE

Taking the name Elohim, what is the significance of this revelation of the Divine character? It marks the covenant-keeping God; He who, by his Spirit, brooded over the earth, not forsaking it because it was without form and void, but uttering the repeated word of power which brings light, order, and fruitfulness, out of darkness, confusion, and barrenness, until He rests in the work of his hands, and pronounces it to be very good. In this connection you will recall the words of Jesus Christ, in his familiar parable, when He said: "What man of you, having an hundred sheep, if he lose one of them, doth not leave the ninety and nine in the wilderness, and go after that which is lost, until he find it?" Is it any wonder that He who created man should watch and brood over us, by his Spirit, until He rejoices that the dead is alive and the lost is found? Though we falter and fail, He will never leave nor forsake us; for his name is Elohim.

The name Jehovah is the expression of God's being. Though He is love, yet He must be just and holy; for, evil is not being but its privation. Jehovah is the One who hates sin, but, in the death of the Cross, He made complete and eternal provision for deliverance from its power.

In order to understand the significance of

THE NAME EL SHADDAI,

we must rapidly pass over the history covered by Gen. xii.-xvii. God promised to Abraham a seed, a land and a blessing; and who shall estimate the influence of a life that is under the abiding blessing of God? For our encouragement, we may remember that it was by many a stumble and fall that Abraham reached pre-eminence in the life of faith. That faith was tried when a famine arose in the land, and Abraham paid a calamitous visit to Egypt, where he was humbled in the presence of a heathen king. Coming back into the clear atmosphere of the land which God had given him, the altar at Bethel is repaired, communion with God is restored, and Abraham maintains his true position in his dealings with Lot and with the King of Sodom. Then comes the promise that his seed shall be as the stars, and the belief which is accounted to him for righteousness.

But the promise tarries, and Sarah makes a suggestion for its hastening. Abraham listens to her counsel, walking before her rather than before his God; and the circumstances of the birth of Ishmael remind us that it is harder to wait for God than to trust in Him. Shortly before the death of

GEO. MULLER,

I was privileged to spend two hours with him in the unpretentious little study at Bristol, when he told me of waiting nearly fifty years for the conversion of some for whom he had prayed. Shortly after he was laid in his grave I heard that the prayer was answered. "They shall not be ashamed that wait for me," saith God.

Abraham was eighty-six years old when Hagar bare Ishmael. Then comes thirteen years of broken communion, with no trace of Divine revelation. During this time, Abraham and Sarah were doing what we have so often done, in carrying out our own will, thinking that God needs our help out of a difficulty, and resorting to some unworthy expedient to forward his purpose.

When Abraham was ninety and nine, Jehovah appeared, saying, "I am the Almighty God," or El Shaddai, a name suggestive of INEXHAUSTIBLE SUPPLY.

The all-bountiful God would not have his servants attempt to accomplish, through the will and energy of the flesh, purposes which can only be fulfilled by his own almightiness. This name of God, as it appears in later Scriptures, is invariably associated with the thought of fruitfulness.

As the apostle Paul speaks of the works of the flesh, we are reminded of a manufactory; but the fruits of the Spirit point to a garden. It is only as we know the all-bountiful God of inexhaustible supply that we shall be fruitful in his service. "Walk before me," says God, not before any human being, "and be thou perfect. If thou wilt only wait my time I will multiply thee exceedingly." Abraham fell on his face, and God talked with him.

There is a remarkable change of tense in the words, "I will make my covenant between me and thee. . . . My covenant is with thee. . . . A father of many nations have I made thee"—future, present, and perfect. As Paul says, Abraham stood before Him who quickeneth the dead and calleth things which be not as if they were. Then comes the rite of circumcision, the judgment of the flesh.

In the time of testing Abraham yields unto God, even to the offering of his own son Isaac, "accounting that God was able to raise him up even from the dead, from whence also he received him in a figure."

UNQUESTIONING OBEDIENCE

In order to fruitfulness in Christian life and service, we must know God as almighty and all-bountiful. Mr. Meyer tells how he long sought this blessing, but found only disappointment in attending the Keswick Convention and listening to the speakers. He stole up the mountain side, when all was still and the moon threw its silver light upon him. While he pleaded in prayer for a knowledge of the infinite wealth of grace that there is in God, a voice told him that as he had received pardon from the hands of the crucified Christ, so he must take his share of the anointing of the Holy Ghost from the hands of the living Christ. He was obedient; and all the world knows how wondrously that promise has been fulfilled to him, "He that believeth on me . . . out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water." If we would be channels for that life which is the only cure for death, we must know El Shaddai, the Almighty God.

Grace Hath Appeared to all Men.

REV. S. A. SELWYN, M.A.

In Titus ii. 11-14 we read, "The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ; who gave Himself for us, that He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works."

This is a difficult passage of Scripture for conscientious Unitarians and Socinians, especially those words in the R.V., "our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ." But what God hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

Grace is God's free favour. How can it appear? When your friend plays his violin, take a piece of paper sprinkled with sand, and connect it with one of the strings, and the sound waves will make themselves visible in the shapes that the sand assumes. Looking into the spiritual realm we have grace abounding in the Son of God. This is the grace that not only but brings something. True it is that Christ says, "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest"; but none except those who are alive can come. We being born in trespasses and sins, God first comes to us that we may have life; and as we can only receive, we may thank Him that He gives.

TAKES FORM AND SHAPE,

On the other hand, when the grace of God brings deliverance, help, and blessing to the very door of his children's hearts, theirs is an awful responsibility if they put that grace away from them. Here and there before me may be one who has not accepted the Lord Jesus Christ as his or her Saviour; but doubtless most of those who hear me are the justified children of God. It is a very hardening process to be constantly drinking in only half the Gospel message, while we practically ignore the claims of Christ as to the life to be lived after we have received Him.

Salvation is a term of wide significance, meaning far more than the glorious doctrine of justification by faith, and implying deliverance from the power of sin. It was said of an old brother and sister who lived together that one could always tell when they were back from a certain convention, because they were extra quarrelsome. Well, there is something in it; but nerves are often overstrained by attendance at too many meetings, and then there is a natural tendency to lose the temper. We make bad worse, however, by saying that we cannot help it. The Lord wants from angry tempers, as well as from all kinds of mere formalism, such as joining in beautiful prayers and hymns, without meaning the words that we sing, and sometimes provoking the wish that we would live our loud amen. Yielding to God, we shall live out his grace, and shall win other souls for Him.

TO DELIVER HIS PEOPLE

Moreover, salvation touches our anxiety and care. Peter's Epistle does not tell us to cast some of our care upon the Lord. Anxieties come to us all, but we need not be weighed down by them. We know what to do with our sins; and it is made equally clear that we are to take our cares to the same Saviour. We are fond of preaching and teaching what a happy thing it is to be a Christian; but where there is a long and morose countenance, men will not believe that Christianity has done us much good. "Come on, Bill," says some hearer, "he doesn't look like it." That may be crude criticism; but, in any case, let us see that it is not true of us.

Does not the grace of God bring salvation from spiritual weakness? Will it not quicken the senses of our souls? There are who cannot see beyond the things that are near them; the millions of dying heathen are out of their view altogether. They will wait until London is converted, and then see about the needs of the world. But a touch of the Master's loving hand upon heart and eye will show that his sheep across the seas need saving.

SHORT-SIGHTED CHRISTIANS,

Other Christians are long-sighted, and having uncomfortable homes, they long to be missionaries in China or elsewhere. Perhaps, if they attended to duties at home, and were able to live a godly life before the one angular person there, they might be accounted worthy, by the grace that would appear to them, of going abroad in the service of God. It is a whole life's work to receive all that God would give us.

We are not here this morning merely to listen and criticise; but we are in the presence of Him who looks into every heart, desiring to deliver us from sin's burden, as well as from its punishment. The Lord Jesus Christ took upon Him our nature that He might, as a Man perfect and spotless before God, die for man's sin. It may be that, to two or three here who have not yet accepted Him, He offers pardon for all the past. But there is never a congregation without some who have gone down again and again under a besetting sin, either secret or evident to all. They come to a Convention like this because it has been their custom to attend; and, while longing for deliverance, they are weary and despairing. Mothers, do not say to your child, or the devil may take advantage of your words in years to come. A mother will love her wayward child as long as there is breath in her body. Poor backslider, however far along the pathway of sin and worldliness you have gone, God loves you with an everlasting love, and will give you no rest until you come right back to find in Him, not only renewed pardon and peace, but the power to live a new life.

"I'LL NEVER LOVE YOU AGAIN,"

This world is God's training school, wherein grace brings us three volumns to study. On the first is written: "Denying (or disowning) ungodliness and worldly lusts." Here is a self-denial worthy of the name, a fast which is to go on all the year round, Lent included. God's salvation includes such power of the Holy Ghost in heart and life, that we are dead indeed unto the sins that assail us. If we have never yet made a beginning, let us start upon the way of dying daily unto all that grieves the Lord, and may God keep us upon that path all our lives.

Another volume that grace puts into our hands is that of "Living," which has three special chapters: "Soberly," towards ourselves; "Righteously," towards our neighbours; and "Godly," towards our Maker. There is to be life-long restraint of self by the Holy Spirit, and this is beyond mere self-restraint. Self has strong bias in its own favour, and needs the absolutely wise and loving control of the pure and Holy One. Sometimes self takes a cruel and tyrannical turn; and men so loathe themselves that, without Divine restraint, they would be suicides. But the rule of the Spirit over every part of our being brings lasting joy and gladness into every heart.

Would to God that all professed Christians lived righteously, renouncing everything like sharp practice, wilful misunderstanding, and backbiting.

If we are to live godly lives, God must be first in heart, home, business, and recreation. Christ hath redeemed us, that He might make us fit for his own possession. Let us enter into the redemption that has been accomplished for us. It is the blessed Spirit of God that makes us zealous of good works; and when we are fully surrendered to Him, we shall prove that the grace of God hath appeared, bringing salvation.

Missions to the Jews.

OF the numerous meetings of the Tuesday afternoon, that arranged in the interests of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews was one of the most important. It was largely attended, and again demonstrated the fact that it is no longer difficult to arouse the interest of Gentile-Christians in the past history, present position, and prophetic future of Israel. The chair was taken by General Sir W. Stirling, who reverted to the topic of the morning, "God in Creation." With the truth that man was created in the image of God it is pleasing to connect the words, "God who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom He hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also He made the worlds." God chose his ancient people Israel in the most remarkable way, and words concerning them in Scripture should have a warm place in our hearts. Not only did the Lord choose these people, but he arranged for the land which they were to occupy, and we find Moses calling upon those who were listening to him to remember consider the years of many generations. This people, who were so especially elevated and chosen, and to whom God gave this land, when Christ came to earth, what choice did they make? "Not this man, but Barabbas." So they fulfilled the prophecy, "Lo, the people shall dwell alone, and not be reckoned among the nations."

THE DAYS OF OLD,

Israel's claims upon Christians were also urged by Rev. F. L. Denman. He said that from Scripture we learn that there was a time when many Jews were saved and few Gentiles; but the order has been reversed, and now, comparatively speaking, there are many Gentiles and few Jews. The day will come when all Israel shall be saved, and, through the Jews, all Gentiles. There is a remnant according to the election of grace, and the fulness of Gentiles, to be gathered in. Then the Church of God is complete, and Christ fulfils his word: "After this I will return and will build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up." Mr. Denman pleaded for personal effort in reaching Jews, and cited several instances in which a word spoken in season had been used of God to the awakening and enlightening of

MISGUIDED ISRAELITES.

Rev. S. Wilkinson spoke of the duty and responsibility of giving the Gospel to the Jews in Russia. While the Church of Christ has been stirred in these days to take an interest in the gathering together of the scattered race, recognizing the order laid down "to the Jews first," it is a remarkable fact that Russia, their centre and headquarters as regards numbers and religion, is the most neglected country. In the Russian Empire there are five or six millions of Jews, whose conditions of life are very different from the atmosphere of kindness in which they live in our own country. There are very few Jews in London who at one time or another have not been approached on the matter of the salvation of their souls. But in Russia it is far different, where the Jew is at a great disadvantage and suffers physically and morally, and being handicapped by the oppressive laws which prevail, he too often becomes subtle in business and deceitful. But he also suffers spiritually, being isolated from all Christian influence, living quite separate from the rest of the community, having no dealing except so far as business is concerned with Christians. Having paid six visits to Russia, Mr. Wilkinson was able to plead the cause of its

HEBREW POPULATION,

and the need for a deeper interest being awakened in the hearts of Christians at home, in the work which is carried on by the Mildmay Mission to the Jews and similar agencies. No doubt the fact that so little has been done in Russia is owing to the difficulties which have to be encountered. Gospel work, as such, is forbidden. One door was opened, and has never been closed—the distribution of the Word of God. There is no restriction upon this branch of Christian service. The depôt of the Mildmay Mission in Warsaw is a small shop in which Jews are to be found all day long in conversation with the workers. Meetings are not allowed, but in this way the

GOSPEL IS DAILY PREACHED

in a room full of anxious inquirers and seekers after the truth. Many thousands of Testaments have been distributed, and the prospects of the Mission's efforts in Russia are full of promise.

In acknowledging the goodness of God in restoring him to health, Rev. J. Wilkinson also expressed his gratitude to the friends who had offered unceasing prayer for his recovery. In urging the claims of Israel, the speaker remarked that, while the Lord did not use the words, "to the Jew first," He commanded that repentance and remission of sins should be preached, beginning at Jerusalem, and then in Judea, and then Samaria, and the uttermost parts of the earth. Few dispute the right of the Jew to punishment for his sin, but many fail to recognize his right to the Gospel first. Let the Holy Spirit have his own way for doing his work, as well as the authority for marking down his own plan. The Jew will be a pioneer or an auxiliary in taking the Gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth. When we win over a Jew we have an agency which is both native and foreign at the same time, with a knowledge of men and customs the world over.

Before the meeting terminated, a number of children from the Mildmay Schools for Jewish boys and girls took their place in front of the audience, and recited Hebrews xii. with touching simplicity, afterwards singing with much tenderness, "Jesus knows thy sorrow." A prayer meeting for Israel followed under the presidency of Mr. James E. Mathieson.

The Late Mrs. Smyly.

A COMMITTEE has been nominated to receive subscriptions and formulate a scheme for appropriating sums contributed to a Memorial Fund to perpetuate the work inaugurated by the late Mrs. Smyly. Many will doubtless be glad of the opportunity of practically testifying their esteem and regard for one who has done so much to help the necessitous children of Ireland. The committee naturally believe that the seven homes and schools established so largely by her labours are themselves the best memorial to Mrs. Smyly, and it is proposed to devote the interest upon the "Mrs. Ellen Smyly Memorial Fund" for helping from time to time one of the Homes. Subscriptions may be placed to the credit of the fund at the Royal Bank of Ireland, Foster Place, Dublin.

Count Bobrinskoy.—The reference to Count Bobrinskoy in our issue of June 13 was based on inaccurate information. The Count of that name so widely known in Christian circles in this country died eight years ago.

The Church and the Outside Masses.*

By Rev. THOMAS KENNEDY, D.D.

THOSE outside of the churches are a vast multitude. Even although there were not in any of them direct antagonism to the Church, they are an influence which is against the Church. They are a danger to its vital godliness. Their influence is of the earth earthy, and it passes over the youth of our Church and of our country with blighting effect. The Church must consider them, even although it were only to resist the influence, and safeguard those entrusted to its care. To consider them is an obligation laid on us by Christ. We are under the responsibility of gaining them; we are charged with the duty; we are furnished with the means. They may be grouped into two classes—those who are directly accessible to the agencies and efforts of the Church on their behalf, and those who are not.

In the first of the classes may be placed persons who are by no means all on the same level. There are numbers of exemplary, industrious, intelligent artisans and workmen, who are living unblameably according to the ordinary moral standard (and in a Christian country the ordinary moral standard for those outside of the Church is higher than the ordinary moral standard in a country where the Gospel is not); but who concentrate their attention and energies wholly on the seen and temporal, and give no heed to the unseen and eternal. Now, whatever the proximate causes that may have led to a state of matters which we deplore, whatever blame may be laid on the Church, or on the community, or the laws of our country, for the existence and continuance of certain evil conditions of living, let it be remembered that and the man himself has a moral responsibility before God.

THE ROOT CAUSE IS SIN,

Men are not mere helpless creatures of circumstance. They are accountable to the Judge of all. The fact that they are so lays a burden upon the Church to go to their rescue. The accountability to God gives the Church a ground to work on. It also warrants the hope of the Church that in attempting their rescue it will not labour in vain. It is, humanly speaking, a hard task, the hardest missionary task that has to be faced anywhere. Those who have known the Gospel and have forsaken it, and have seen the light and turned from it, or have gone down in spite of opportunity, are the most difficult to be aroused. There has not been lack of benevolent endeavour, where needed, in the Church's home mission work, but the spiritual is the most pressing need. Its claims are primary so far as the Church is concerned. Her duty is to evangelize. Whatever benevolent effort may accompany it, the evangelization should be so made as not to hinder the supreme duty of lifting up the fallen by leading them to Christ. By so lifting them up, a great step has been taken towards their temporal betterment.

What, now, of the other class of the churchless—namely, those who are not easily accessible, or not at all accessible, to the direct endeavours of the Church to appeal to them on behalf of Christ? There are many such, from the well-to-do and virtuous artisans and tradesmen up through the educated and higher classes of society. The Church, by its very existence and presence in the world, is a witness for Christ. It has to make itself an effective witness for Him by its own quickened life, its purity, its peace, its holiness, and its love. It has to make itself a religious influence in the land—an influence that can be felt. It has to prove the presence of Christ in the midst of it, and the consequent power of its members, to yield the fruits of righteousness, fruits the reality and preciousness of which cannot be questioned. It has to prove the Divine power operating through it to the rescuing of the guilty and sinful from their evil ways.

* Extracts from Moderator's closing address at the General Assembly of the United Free Church of Scotland.

A Call to Faithfulness.

By Rev. GEORGE GOODCHILD, Skegness.

"BE thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life." Is not this emphatically the present-day message? Eyes all asparkle with spiritual light, and looking up to this fadeless and divinely bejewelled crown, and a steadfast daily adherence to divinely declared principle—is not that the one requirement of these shifting and vacillating times? At a public banquet, a "Rationalist" rose and said, "Who will dare now defend the antiquated and effete doctrines contained in the documents called the 'Scriptures'?" It was a godly merchant who "stood up for Jesus," and said, "I dare!" The conscience all aglow in the light of the Spirit, the eternal truths of God's Word clearly revealed by the same Spirit, and the life firmly established upon them by that Spirit; this spirit must be maintained, grown into, and tenaciously held against all that opposes the soul.

Oh, the soul-strength of it! At a seaside town in North Wales, a small boy with a strong stick was striking a great black rock. "What is it, my boy?" "I want to get this shell-fish off." Yes, there it was, the limpet clinging, adhering, so that it looked like part of the very rock, and neither boy nor man could part them asunder. By inborn and practised power of suction it draws into itself the very nature of the rock. When skies are bluest, sunshine most golden, and God's fair world most calm, if it does relax its hold it is only to adhere the stronger when winds howl, storms roar, and wild waves break over its tiny life. The life daringly faithful to the Lord's clear Word at all times is the life that declares—"Therefore we will not fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea."

"BE STRONG IN THE LORD"

is an exhortation that can only be translated into actual life as we heed the other one, "Be thou faithful."

And the real abiding peace of it! Gethsemane and Calvary are before Jesus. Influences subtle, great, bold, and daring, and set in motion by men and devils, had used up their energy in seeking to sway Him from the Divine purpose. But He adheres, and says, "My peace I give unto you." Scientists say that at the centre of a cyclone there is absolute stillness, while at its circumference are terrible and awful destruction and havoc. All round the life that is actually faithful may be terrible temptations, bitterest trials, darkest hours, and keenest sorrows; but in the heart "there is a river" of Divine peace, "the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God."

"But," exclaims some present-day believer, "oh, the kindness of it!" And that is the special part of your Lord's present-day bugle-call. "Faithful unto death." He has clearly put the possible result by the side of the exercise: "Faithfulness—possibly death." In the chapter (Rev. ii.) from whence this needful exhortation comes, one is mentioned as, "Antipas, my faithful martyr." "Antipas"—against all! Was that his proper name, or was it a typical one? In any case it shows the spirit in which faithfulness has sometimes to be exercised.

"Faithful among the faithless found." "I have trodden the winepress alone; and of the people there was none with Me." It is encouraging and inspiriting to be with the crowd; but if faithful we may oft-times have to journey alone along the narrow way that leads at length to "the great multitude whom no man can number." It is against one's naturally sensitive constitution to be labelled "narrow"; but in these days it is cheering to be so dubbed, for to the faithful heart it is the surest evidence of being in "the narrow way." In this enlightened age of modern inventions there are so many new agencies for removing, killing, or neutralizing pain, that we are getting to hate pain in every guise, even the pain attached to being faithful. In practical life the proverb is becoming effete:—

"No Cross; no Crown."

World-Wide Y.M.C.A. Work.

THE heat of the weather last Friday afternoon did not prevent a large and influential company from accepting the invitation of Sir George and Lady Williams to meet a number of colonial visitors, and specially to welcome Mr. and Mrs. William M. Oatts on their return from their round the world tour in the interests of Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. work throughout the British colonies and dependencies. Exeter Hall was the scene of an enthusiastic gathering, including many of the leaders in the Christian effort of the metropolis and other parts of the country. A high spiritual tone was given to the proceedings by the opening greeting of the chairman, as he counselled all to "be apt to teach, ready to say a word in season," and emphasized the presenting the Gospel in simple fashion as the true method of leading men into the truth.

The dominant note running through the utterances of the travellers was one of gratitude to God. "We have learned," said Mrs. Oatts, "many lessons during these months. God opens up the way step by step in every piece of work, however closed the path may seem, however encompassed with complications and difficulties. Sometimes we were in places where it seemed as though nothing could be done; workers had become discouraged, and so hopeless that they did not even want anything to be done; but because we put our trust in God we could go everywhere, and He never disappointed us." A pleasant picture was drawn of the mutual helpfulness of Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A. work in various parts of the world. Speaking of India, Mrs. Oatts said there was for work among young women, untouched by any other society. No foreign language requires to be learned, no isolation has to be faced; the great need is for consecrated educated workers to go forth. Burmah, Australia, New Zealand, and Canada were briefly passed under review. The one common need was that of workers—ladies with hearts filled with the love of God, and with an earnest desire to serve Him in this field.

A PRACTICALLY UNLIMITED FIELD

Mr. Oatts testified again to the keeping of God all through their journey of 46,000 miles, during which they had been enabled to keep every one of 896 engagements made. Over and over again in remote districts their hearts had been gladdened by meeting ministers and other zealous Christian workers who had received their first impressions and impetus in the home Y.M.C.A.'s. Several very deep impressions had been made on his mind by recent experiences. Prominent among these was the deep bond of love between the colonies and the mother country, as evidenced in connection with the death of Queen Victoria, and the sending of troops to South Africa. It was cause of true thankfulness to note the enthusiasm with which the names of Sir George Williams and other leaders in Christian effort were greeted wherever the deputies went.

Speaking of the men who are doing Y.M.C.A. work in the British dependencies, Mr. Oatts said he did not know a more devoted consecrated band. Then, when face to face with the problems of India, he found there was one man who could be trusted throughout that empire, and that man was the native Christian. In every university city which he visited in India he was invited by the authorities to address the students within their own hall; and at the close of one address sixty men asked him to pray for them.

The report of the delegates who attended the Y.M.C.A. Jubilee Convention at Montreal and Boston was given by Lord Kinnaird, with Messrs. Howard Williams, J. H. Putterill, and W. H. Mills. Remarkable testimony was borne to the recognition of the work by the business men and companies of America, and emphasis laid on the true spiritual aims which permeate the Associations of that continent.

Christian Ladies' Club.—The Alliance Club has been opened at 37, Clarges Street, Piccadilly, for the convenience of ladies engaged and interested in Christian work.

Rev. D. S. Margoliouth, M.A.,

FELLOW OF NEW COLLEGE, AND LAUDIAN PROFESSOR OF ARABIC IN THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD.

REV. PROFESSOR MARGOLIOUTH is the son of the late Ezekiel Margoliouth, a convert and lay missionary of the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews. In a memoir of the father in the Jewish Missionary Intelligence for August, 1894, it is said: "Ezekiel Margoliouth will long be remembered with gratitude and honour. He was a distinguished co-worker with a number of well-known missionaries, who by their great learning produced almost a new literature in theology, and made a great impression on the Jewish nation. On his decease, a Jew said: 'If he had died a member of the Synagogue, there would have been a lamentation in the Jewish Community, for he was a great man in his generation.'" Born in Suwalki, a government town in Russian Poland, Mr. Margoliouth's father could trace twelve Rabbis among his ancestors, and the family made a mark in the Jewish history at the close of the eighteenth century.

We are not surprised to find that Professor Margoliouth inherits the rare scholarly gifts of his family. Educated at Winchester School, he obtained a scholarship at New College, Oxford, and his successes at the University are almost unprecedented. In view of the work he has taken up, we give the following record:—In 1878, he obtained both the classical Blue Ribbons—the Hertford and the Ireland Scholarships, and in the same year he was in the First Class in Classical Moderations. In 1879 he obtained the Gainsford Prize for Greek prose, and in the same year the Pusey and Ellerton Hebrew Scholarship. In 1880 he was in the First Class in Literis Humanioribus, and obtained the Houghton Syriac Prize. In 1881 he obtained the Boden Sanskrit Scholarship; in 1882 the Kennicott Hebrew Scholarship, and the Derby Scholarship; in 1887 the Senior Kennicott Hebrew Scholarship. In 1889 he was elected Laudian Professor of Arabic. Such a list of successes shows how well equipped Professor Margoliouth is for the work he has set himself to do.

Writing of his father in the Jewish Intelligence, mentioned above, he says:—

> My father believed as firmly as a man could in the Divine origin of the Bible. "That the Bible is a revelation from God there is not the smallest doubt," I well remember him saying when explaining to me some fresh light that had occurred to him on a difficult text. Owing to this belief, the study of the Bible was, ever since I can remember, his most constant employment. In the later years of his life he acquired many languages, chiefly in order to study the versions of the Bible in them. Arabic, for example, he first began to study at the age of seventy. The work which was given him to do was to his liking, nor did he relinquish it till his powers failed.

Such is the work to which the Professor has consecrated his own rare gifts, and it is safe to say that few, if any, in England to-day bring to the study of the sacred Scriptures such a wealth of linguistic learning. For this we cannot be too profoundly thankful. The task he has set himself is no mean one, and to many a devout student of Scripture it is of primal importance. That task is, as we may gather from his volume recently published, "Lines of Defence of the Biblical Revelation," a direct assault on the methods and results of the modern hostile criticism of the Old Testament. It is in this field that we must look for Professor Margoliouth's work to be done, and the prayers of all earnest students of the Word will follow him in his strenuous efforts.

The times call for such work as Professor Margoliouth has entered upon. The problem was stated with judgment in his speech at the Church Congress in 1899:—

> It is certain that circumstances wherein the need for religion makes itself felt occur in most men's lives. If, however, the need is to be supplied, the mode must be communicated by teaching; but if there be nothing to teach, the hope of supplying it must sooner or later be discarded.

He then declares that the methods adopted by the extreme critics must ultimately lead to the position assumed by Voltaire or M. Renan.

> Either we must face and adopt the most far-reaching results of Biblical criticism, or we must discover some good grounds for believing that the "devout experts," as they have been called, are most likely to be mistaken in their reasoning.

He maintains that the fundamental fallacy is the neglect of the unique element which gives Scripture its value. To apply the same methods of criticism to the Biblical writer as is applied to the European classics must lead, so the Professor thinks, to the above result. Yet this is done, he urges, in adjoining class-rooms, with the result that the sacred books, in the minds of many, are relegated to the same place as the classics.

From Photograph by Messrs. Fradelle & Young, 288, Regent Street, W.

Professor Margoliouth is nothing if not courageous. He has the courage of his convictions. He is very severe on those who bestow the title of "prophet" on the supposed unknown author of the Book of Daniel, whom they acknowledge to be a forger. He says: "Of the immorality of forgers in the secular class-room we entertain no doubt . . . but when we come to the lecture-room, in which Biblical criticism is taught, we find ourselves regarding forgery as a normal and even praiseworthy act!"

But he is no pessimist, and one rises from a perusal of his work feeling that the last word has not been said even on such a subject as the Unity of Isaiah. No one can read his wonderful paper on "Unity as against Plurality" without feeling devoutly grateful for his scholarship, which floods the sacred text with light, and for the skill with which he finds a joint in the armour of the enemy. He believes that it is the presence of an "incalculable factor" in the Bible that gives it its worth, and because of it we may look forward to a day when the alarming attempts of modern times to discount the traditional view of the Old Testament will be classed with those of Voltaire. He affirms that already grave mistakes have been made by the "experts," and on the principle of falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus, he holds that the outworks have already been taken, and so there is good hope that the citadel will in time be captured.

Professor Margoliouth was ordained by the late Bishop of Liverpool, Dr. Ryle, in 1899, and has been appointed by the present Bishop, Dr. Chavasse, one of his examining chaplains.

In addition to his lectures and other work, Mr. Margoliouth finds time occasionally to preach, and has taken a deep interest in missions, the great Mohammedan field, as might be expected, claiming his special and earnest attention.

The Secret of Prosperity.

IT is interesting at this time to inquire into the cause of the prosperity of the five "Reforming Kings" of Judah. As we do so, we cannot but see that the secret of their success was also the secret of the success of our late beloved Queen.

1. Asa.—In 2 Chron. xv. we read that "the Spirit of God came upon Azariah," and he met Asa and said: "The Lord is with you while ye be with Him; and if ye seek Him, He will be found of you; . . . but if ye forsake Him, He will forsake you." For the greater part of his reign he was prosperous, but at the close he "relied on the King of Syria and not on the Lord" (2 Chron. xvi. 7), and afterwards, in consequence, he had troubles. Thus the secret of his success was the having the Lord with Him.

2. Jehoshaphat.—In 2 Chron. xvii. we are told "The Lord was with Jehoshaphat" (3), and therefore the kingdom "was established in his hand" (5).

3. Joash.—In the early part of his reign he "did that which was right in the sight of the Lord." But later, he was led astray by the princes of Judah, and the "Spirit of God came upon Zechariah," and he said, "Because ye have forsaken the Lord, He hath also forsaken you" (2 Chron. xxiv. 20). After that Joash encountered troublous times. Here again, the secret of the King's prosperity was the having the Lord with him.

4. Hezekiah.—"The Lord was with him, and he prospered" (2 Kings xviii. 7).

5. Josiah.—"In the eighth year of his reign, while he was yet young, he began to seek after God" (2 Chron. xxxiv. 3); and the promise of Azariah to Asa was still good (as it is still good to-day), "if ye seek Him, He will be found of you."

Thus of the five the great secret of their success and prosperity may be said to be "The Lord was with them." And this is not only to be seen in the history of the Kingdom of Judah, it is also recorded, "The Lord was with Joseph, and he was a prosperous man" (Gen. xxxix. 2), and "The Lord was with Joshua, and his fame was noised throughout all the country" (Josh. vi. 27).

H. W. H.

Women's Holiday Fund.—At a drawing-room meeting in aid of the Women's Holiday Fund, held a few days ago at the residence of Lord Brassey, Rev. Falkner Bailey (chairman) said a large proportion of those helped came from the south of the river, where his work lay; and that the poor there have to pay as much as one-quarter of their income in rent, so that scarcely any margin is left for holidays. In helping the women the society really taught them to help themselves, this being shown by the fact of their own contributions towards the expense having doubled. Friends were invited by Hon. Maud Lawrence to help (1) by visiting the women who apply for help, generally in the poorer districts of London; (2) by finding houses in the country to which they can be sent; (3) by contributions. An address followed from Prebendary Webb-Peploe. The hon. secretary of the Fund is Miss G. E. Burt, 47, St. James's Square, Notting Hill, W.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, July 14. Luke xxi.

LET us ponder the lessons with which this chapter is replete. In the first paragraph (1-4), we learn that the value of a gift is in proportion to the sacrifice it involves. The rich men gave of their superfluity, and did not feel it, the widow gave all she had, and felt it, as she had not another farthing for the next meal.

From the second (5-19), we learn the transience of the most stable monuments of earthly power and glory. The temple is described as having been longer and higher than York Cathedral, and standing on a solid mass of masonry almost equal in height to the tallest of our church spires; and its offerings (i.e., consecrated things) were very valuable, as, for instance, Herod's golden vine, with bunches as tall as a man, yet it would all pass away amid great and awful troubles. Amid those terrible scenes the disciples of Jesus would be treated as enemies of the human race; yet no real harm could befall them.

In the third (20-28), we are taught that the present age is pre-eminently "the Times of the Gentiles." The Holy City is trodden down by the infidel Turk, and so long as it is so we know that the times of the Gentiles, as signified by Nebuchadnezzar's great image, are not fulfilled. At the close of the present age there will be vast revolutions, which shall indicate the break up of the one age and the introduction of another.

In the fourth (29-38), we are bidden to watch and pray, and notice that the cares of this life are mentioned equally with surfeiting and drunkenness as overwhelming drowsy souls. In this "Apocalypse of Jesus" we have marvellous words that are alike applicable to the fall of Jerusalem and his second advent: Prepare, my soul, to meet Him.

MONDAY, July 15. Luke xxii.

The world seemed in arms against the blessed Lord. Satan entered the heart of Judas, for it was his hour, and he gathered all his strength for one last prodigious effort to throw and baffle the Son of Man. Judas, one of the favoured Apostles, did not hesitate to open his heart to Satan, admitting him under the form of greed for money and diabolical hatred. The Temple authorities eagerly caught at their chance, and offered bribes of money.

In the meanwhile the Lord girded himself for the conflict by gathering his little circle of followers around Him, to the last meal of love. It is clear from this evangelist that our Lord partook of the Paschal Feast on the day when the whole nation was doing the same (7); but with what intensity of significance did those emblems speak to Him! "With desire I have desired. . . ." That lamb, those bitter herbs, the very form in which the lamb was skewered, the unleavened bread, were full of the most touching significance. He was about to fulfil them, and fulfilling, to make them no longer necessary. From the Passover Feast, He passed to institute the Lord's Supper.

It is probable that the dispute as to priority (24) took place, where Matthew puts it, on their entrance into the upper room (Matt. xx. 24-28). It could hardly have taken place after that tender scene described in John xiii. But probably that scene prepared the way for the testing, and sifting, and ultimately the fall, which left so deep a mark on Peter's life. How bitter it was that the dear Master received so little help from those on whom He had so absolutely expended Himself, and that an angel had to be sent to do what human words or hands might have done! (43, 44.)

TUESDAY, July 16. Luke xxiii.

The Jewish Sanhedrim, hastily summoned for the hour of dawn, having elicited from Jesus the profession of his Messiahship and Divine Nature, and having resolved on his death, as early as possible hailed Him before Pilate, the Roman Governor, who happened to be in Jerusalem, and whose warrant was necessary for the infliction of the death penalty. The High Priest accused Him of treason, but Pilate, after examination (John xviii. 33, &c.), not finding any fault worthy of death, and wishing to rid himself of the responsibility of deciding either way, sent Him to Herod. With what a sigh of relief he heard the voices of the retreating crowd. Ah, but it is not possible thus to rid ourselves of responsibility! Jesus had answered the Sanhedrim and Pilate, but was silent before Herod's shallow curiosity.

When the crowd returned to Pilate, he still hesitated to give a final and decisive verdict, but temporized still further, placing Barabbas in contrast with Jesus, in the hope that the people would relieve him of the responsibility of decision by choosing to release Jesus of Nazareth. But for the third time his remonstrances were overborne (vv. 4, 14, 22).

Of what contrasts that cross is the centre! Simon is laid hold of to carry the cross, and becomes a Christian (Mark xv. 21; Rom. xvi. 13). The women are reminded that the time of Jerusalem's autumn is nigh, when it will be as a sere and withered tree. The Crucified forgives his crucifiers, and his prayer was subsequently answered by the Day of Pentecost. The dying thieves part at that cross for ever. The priests in the temple are prepared to believe in Him by the rending veil. The centurion acknowledges his righteousness. The rich councillors who had withheld public confession now stand forth as his professed disciples. O cross of Christ, what a winnowing fan thou art!

WEDNESDAY, July 17. Luke xxiv.

None of the Gospels describe the Resurrection itself, but all give testimony to the fact that the grave was empty, and the body of the Lord gone. His friends had not taken it, for they would not have left behind the fine linen with which it was enswathed. His foes had not taken it, for they would have been only too glad to produce it afterwards. Thieves had not taken it, for they would not have dared to encounter the Roman sentinels. There is but one explanation—"Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the firstfruits of them that slept."

Women were last at the cross, and first at the grave. To them also was entrusted the honour of bearing the first tidings to the world. Their message was received by the Apostles as the wild talk of delirium; but this was well, for evidently our Christian faith was not the result of a perverted fancy, but of the evidence of incontrovertible facts.

The journey to Emmaus is a Gospel idyll. There were three phases in it. First, Christ, neither recognized nor felt. Second, Christ felt, but his presence not recognized. Third, the veil withdrawn, and Christ both recognized and made known in all the fulness of his risen nature. It is thus that He still draws near to us when our hearts are overwhelmed with questionings, doubts, and fears.

The blessed fellowship of the forty days prepared the disciples for the years which were coming, when they should no longer behold Him, but would be conscious of his intimate nearness all the days, even to the end. Heaven is not far away. Probably it is all around us. There is but a veil between it and us. In the Ascension our Lord passed within the veil, but there is only a thin curtain between us and Him.

THURSDAY, July 18. John i.

The Prologue (1-13). The titles of our Lord are set forth in royal fashion. He is the Word or Wisdom of God, who existed from all eternity as God, possessed of the Divine nature and attributes. He was the Agent and Medium through which the Divine power was put forth in creation. He is the abiding Source and Centre of all animated existence. He is the Light of all moral and intelligent beings. His advent to our world was announced by the greatest prophet of the old dispensation; but the children of Abraham, his own kith and kin, refused Him, so that from the first his followers were drawn out from among men by a special elective affinity. Hast thou received Him? Then thou art certainly a son, an heir of God, a member of the inner circle of God's Home!

The Results of the Incarnation (14-18). Note that word became. Evidently He existed before He became, and evidently there was some genuine change of state other than a mere outward and temporary manifestation. He was full of grace, the love of God; full of truth, the truth of God; full of glory, the unique glory of the Only Begotten Son—there are many sons, but only one Son. The tabernacle of his humanity could hardly conceal his intrinsic nature, the indwelling Shekinah streamed forth, as at the Transfiguration.

Various Testimonies (19-51). The Baptist disclaimed the Messianic function, but announced Jesus as the Lamb and the Son of God. Andrew bore witness to Him as Messiah. Nathanael hailed Him as Son of God and King of Israel. The Lord described Himself as Son of Man—related to all mankind.

FRIDAY, July 19. John ii.

The keyword to this chapter is the word signs. This beginning of signs (1-11). "On the third day," i.e. reckoning from i. 43. The wine failed; the earthly and human is often allowed to fail, to make a platform for the manifestation of the Divine. All of us, like Mary, are impetuous, and endeavour to hurry the Divine movements; but God is ever deliberate, never before his time, never behind, but we must wait, and be prepared to do whatever He bids. If each water-pot contained more than twenty gallons, there must have been about 130 gallons in all. It may be, however, that only as the servants drew and bore to the table, the wondrous change was wrought. Our Lord did in a moment what God is always doing, transforming dews and raindrops into the ruddy juice of the grape. Here is a sign, indeed, of how the presence of Jesus, so far from dampening joy, increases it, and of how He can touch common or ordinary events and relationships into what is joyous and heavenly.

The demand for a sign (13-22). There were many evils congregated in the market established in the Temple courts. The animals were often sold at exorbitant prices—hence covetousness. The money changers made considerable profits in supplying Jewish coins for Roman and Greek money. Jesus drove them out before the majesty of his bearing. The Jews asked for some evidence that He was authorized to act thus, and He spake of the resurrection of his body. That is the final and all-sufficient evidence of his right to cleanse hearts, temples, worlds.

Many other signs (23-25 and iii. 2). What a question is suggested by 24. Can Jesus trust Himself to me!

SATURDAY, July 20. John iii.

The conversation with Nicodemus (1-21). Apparently Nicodemus had shrunk from identifying himself with John's baptism, and all it signified. He was one of the three richest men of Jerusalem, and our Lord addresses him as the teacher (10, R.V.). He was willing enough to talk with the Lord about systems of truth; but the Master knew that more, much more, was necessary—there must be a new birth. The Jews often used this phrase of Gentiles, and it greatly startled Nicodemus to learn that as great a change was needed by himself, as was required by Gentiles before they could enter Judaism. We must all pass through that change. For each of us there must be a birth out of the kingdom of nature into that of God's dear Son; and such a birth takes place when we believe in Him who was lifted up on the cross for our redemption, and is now lifted to the right hand of power.

That blessed v. 16 demands special notice. Luther called it a little Bible. What untold myriads have been led by it to faith and peace. The redemption of the world is traced to the love of God; it was effected through blood and death; it is applied through faith.

Our Lord's Judæan ministry (22-36). Every clause of these verses is fragrant with holy significance. The humility of the Baptist, who realizes that his popularity was given him from above, and who is willing to surrender it to the Divine Lord, taking his position as the Bridegroom's friend, is one of the most exquisite pictures in Scripture.

F. B. M.

South African Compounds Mission.

BEFORE the war began the South African Compounds Mission had twelve halls at distances of from four to six miles apart, along the whole length of the Reefs, and 200 converts who had been baptized from thirteen native tribes. Some who had gone back to their homes were working as evangelists among their own people in the Portuguese territory; and Mr. A. W. Baker, on one recent tour from Delagoa Bay to Inhambane, walked 300 miles, preaching the Gospel with the help of lantern pictures in villages and kraals. He draws a terribly dark picture of the treatment of the natives, and quotes a wish frequently expressed that Great Britain would take over the country.

In the midst of a seething mass of corruption and oppression some of the converts are holding up the torch of the Gospel. So deadly is the climate to the European missionary that there seems no prospect of the population being evangelized except by means of native workers, and a serious attempt is being made to organize an effort under these conditions. The work is established on faith lines, and during a recent visit to Australia Mr. Baker (who writes from 297, Burger Street, Maritzburg, Natal) received additional offers of service from several young Australians, some of whom are now in training at Angas College.

"During the war three of the workers have done excellent work among natives retained at the mines, and especially among the sick for whom nobody cared. In Natal we have four stations three of which were right in the theatre of war near Colenso. God has graciously protected our people and property, and since my return in March I have had the joy of baptizing eighty-two of these dear Zulu people. Our other workers and myself are awaiting our permits to return to our work in Johannesburg."

Soldiers in South Africa.

THE Camp Homes in the Orange River Colony and the Transvaal are still open, and are as much needed as ever. Those at the large railway stations seem to be indispensable, affording as they do shelter as well as refreshment. Hundreds of men who would have to sleep in the open air in the station-yard at Bloemfontein, or on the platform in the piercingly cold wind are comfortably sheltered in our large marquee.

At an important junction in the Transvaal we are now pitching a large marquee, as the cold is intense at night, the elevation above sea level being 6,200 feet. The men detained at the station have no cover, and our manager wrote that some of the poor fellows had emptied his large rubbish bin, and converted it into a shelter from the biting wind.

Here "free coffee," hot and sweetened, is provided at our refreshment hut for all troops passing through, a pint to each man. During the past twelve months they have consumed no less than two tons of dry coffee.

We have cheering news from all the Homes, of blessing on the spiritual work. Sometimes encouragement comes from an outside source. A chaplain met with a soldier who said he attended only one meeting at our Home at Kroonstad while waiting at the station, but there and then he found Christ. Another told a sergeant-major that he attended the Home at De Aar, and carried away with him the assurance of sins forgiven and peace with God; with a joy, he said, which through the fight and the fever never left him.

We are on the coast for our health. . On the way North, three weeks ago, we were overtaken by influenza in that Siberia of cold and desolation, the Orange River Colony.

Our thanks are more than due for the sympathy and gifts which have reached us through The Christian this year, and for which we are deeply grateful.

(Mrs.) M. S. Osborn Howe.

Care of J. Storr Lister, Esq., King William's Town, Cape Colony.

Lebanon Hospital for Insane.

THE condition of the mentally afflicted of Syria has evoked widespread sympathy, and the efforts which have been made for the relief of their sufferings are more than justified by the needs. In August of last year the Lebanon Hospital for the Insane was opened for the reception of patients. Up to March 31, 1901, fifty-four had been admitted; nine recovered, and returned to their homes; and four are reported to have been benefited by their stay in the Hospital. Considering the difficulties inseparable from the commencement of this work in Syria, so opposed to established customs and beliefs, it is gratifying to learn that the natural prejudice of the people has been so far overcome, and that so considerable a number have availed themselves of the new hospital in the first year of its active existence. The people of Syria are already receiving an object lesson in the RATIONAL TREATMENT OF THE INSANE.

Under the barbarous methods hitherto in vogue very few, if any, could recover from mental affections. It was indeed scarcely believed that recovery was possible. Now at length, at the Asfuriyeh Hospital, a very different result is being witnessed. One patient, a young woman, was lately discharged, quite well. Her husband would not believe it when he got the news to come and fetch his wife. He did not know how to show his gratitude. "I am not rich," said he, "but I want to appoint a vineyard on my property with 100 vines, and all the fruit shall be given to Asfuriyeh."

Dr. Wolff, the medical superintendent, reports that everything has his entire approval. The buildings—one for males and one for females—are as perfect as possible. The increasing number of applicants shows that the benefits of the Hospital are becoming more and more appreciated, and not only the natives, but occasionally a British subject, comes for treatment, no distinction of nationality or creed being made. Copies of the illustrated annual report will be sent on application to the secretary, Mr. F. C. Brading, 35, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.

Persecution of Stundists.

FULLER particulars have reached us of the persecution of Stundists at Odessa, referred to in our columns a few weeks ago, in the form of a translation of the report which appeared in the daily newspaper, Novosti. The evidence brought out before the justice of the peace, in the 18th district court, showed that in April last eighteen persons, "calling themselves evangelists," had been holding religious meetings in accordance with the method of the teaching of the Stundists, in the house of one Ewtichy (Eutychus) Sabolotny, in the village of Romanowka. Twelve of the accused appeared in court, and being questioned, they averred that they did not belong to the sect of the Stundists. They were, they said, Christians, solemnly recognising the teaching of Christ the Saviour; and they steadfastly clung to the text of the New Testament.

The witnesses in the case—police and others—stated that when they entered the house of Sabolotny, the accused persons were on their knees; some were reading the New Testament, others the Psalms. At the command of the police the accused rose from their knees and discontinued their worship. The missionary of the bishopric of Cherson (Mr. Kalwin) was called in to give his opinion, as an expert, concerning the doctrine held by the accused. To the questions first put the accused declined to give categorical answers, simply maintaining that they fulfilled everything "as written in the New Testament Scriptures." Being pressed by the judge, however, they gave certain replies, from which it appeared that: (1) "Baptism was acknowledged by them as an act of union to God, but not as a forgiveness or remission of original inborn sin; (2) a separate priesthood was not recognised: (3) the rite of unction with holy oil was not acknowledged."

A request for permission to put questions to Mr. Kalwin was refused, but he gave it as his opinion that the accused were Stundists. They were then declared guilty, and fined twenty roubles each, the alternative being imprisonment for one month. They were poor, and consequently suffered imprisonment in the cause of Christ. It would appear, therefore, that Christians in Russia, who hold the Evangelical faith in its simplicity, have an urgent claim on the prayerful sympathy of believers in this country.

Notes from the Philippines.

SOME six months ago, on arriving in these Islands, I was much struck by the extraordinary spiritual seeking which marks these as being revival days in the Philippines. It is no unusual thing for us to hear words like these spoken to us by the natives: "O, if you could but go to the people who will not have either priests or friars in their towns. They conduct their own funerals, carrying the dead to the churches; they pray there, and then bury the bodies," &c. The most marked characteristic of the sowing here is that the little seed sown brings such a bountiful return. We who are giving the Gospel to the people here look upon the field more in the light of a harvest field than of a new field only open to the Gospel a few months.

Of the first Bible agents who came here, one died of poisoning, and his body lay unburied beyond the permitted time, being refused a resting-place; and his companion only escaped very narrowly the same fate. To-day some of those who heard the words these Protestant missionaries spoke are freely and openly proclaiming the Gospel.

Some years ago the English Consul was not allowed to hold a religious service in his own house. To-day the native Christians themselves hold them even in the open air. Seeing the Gospel can only reach these seeking souls to any wide extent through their own people, and through printed matter, some of the missionaries in Manilla are going through Bible instruction to the men who desire it. The coldest heart would sometimes be moved in these Bible classes as God's Word, spoken by the missionary, is listened to by earnest-faced men and women (the men as yet being in the majority). At the close of a class in which intelligent interest has been shown in every conceivable way, there is sometimes a chain of short, grateful prayers to God in the native language. These Bible students are so eager to be able to take the Gospel intelligently to their own people that, if they feel they have not quite mastered the subject dealt with, they ask to have it taken up again next time.

E. M. White.

Church Extension in Hungary.

THE publication of the memoir of Rev. William Wingate brings to remembrance again the early days of the Pesth Mission. Of the history one may well say, "Tell it to the generation following." Reference is made to the quickening of the Hungarian Reformed Church. Our Mission is in close touch with that Church still, and we are deeply interested in all that concerns its extension and prosperity. I desire now to help the brethren to build to which I referred recently in the general assembly of the United Free Church of Scotland. The hill is the Schwabenberg, on the right bank of the Danube, in the immediate vicinity of Budapest, and indeed belonging to the territory of the city. The services were maintained regularly during the winter in one of the rooms of the city school-house, and at the Easter season above a hundred persons came forward to the table of the Lord. I am taking charge of the arrangements for the summer. A free site has been offered for church building, and it is estimated that £800 to £1,000 will suffice for the modest structure intended, especially if building material be brought up, as expected, free of expense for carriage. We have already obtained about £330, and would rejoice greatly to see the work completed speedily; trusting that the members of the Church, as they assemble in their own place of worship, may be themselves as "a city set on a hill" which "cannot be hid."

"THE CHURCH ON THE HILL,"

Andrew Moody, D.D.

Rudolf Quai 8, Budapest.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

TO be able to report substantial progress even in the matter of income for the year 1900—when philanthropic funds of all kinds were under the severest strain of the present generation—is one of the most satisfactory evidences of the hold which the inmates of Dr. Barnardo's Homes maintain on the sympathies of the Christian public. The Albert Hall was the scene last Saturday of the thirty-fifth annual meeting, and from the moment when the guard of honour for the guests was formed, the proceedings constituted a most interesting and varied exhibition of the many-sidedness of the work which is being carried on among the waifs not only of London but of the whole country.

After receiving a hearty greeting on taking the chair, the Duke of Argyll put into words the thoughts of many of his hearers as he congratulated them and the children on the fact that Dr. Barnardo was so far restored to health as to be able to be present, bringing up his army for their annual review. Speaking from his experiences of colonial affairs he showed a great interest in the emigration side of the work, expressing an earnest wish that he could share the prospects of the young men who were on the point of proceeding to Canada.

The annual report was presented by Rev. Canon Fleming, who announced with satisfaction that for yet another year the original principle of the institution had been maintained, and during the thirty-five years no really destitute boy or girl had been rejected. At the doors of the Homes arising from sex, creed, nationality, health, disease, misfortune, accident, or any other cause. No waiting is necessary, nor canvassing for votes, before admission.

THERE IS NO BARRIER

The National Waifs' Association has at present under its care over 5,400 boys and girls, ranging in age from babies in arms to young people on the verge of adult age. During 1900 they dealt with no fewer than 13,393 children, a record total, of whom 2,879 were fresh admissions. 7,677 children were maintained Candidates were admitted from 126 districts in the London rrea, and from 282 places outside. The admissions represented forty-eight counties at home and eight places abroad, 436 being children under five years of age.

During the year, 931 young emigrants were placed out in Canada, 592 boys and 339 girls. Up to the end of 1900, 11,591 emigrants in all have been sent from the Homes to Canada and the Colonies, of whom over 98 per cent. have succeeded in the struggle for independence, the failures being under 2 per cent. At the close of the year 2,362 children were boarded out in cottage homes throughout rural districts. A home for the deaf and dumb has been opened. Since the Homes were established in 1866 they have rescued, trained, and placed out in life 42,750 boys and girls. On an average eight new candidates are admitted every 24 hours, or 60 every week. There are now ninety-five separate homes in connection with the institutions, and eleven mission branches.

The receipts by donations for the year amounted to £148,614 19s. 9d., being an increase for the year of £1,520 14s.

The Young Helpers' League includes 713 habitations and 467 lodges, containing 25,828 companions, all of whom had paid their subscriptions for the year. The total income of the League for the twelve months amounted to £12,709 16s. 10d., being an advance of £1,180 15s. 7d. over the preceding year.

Emphasis was laid on the fact that while the great aim of bringing every child to Christ is ever kept in view, no attempt at proselytism is made in any direction.

A pleasing feature of the whole display was of it by the children who took part. Everything was done in the most natural and happy fashion, without any appearance of strain or restraint.

THE EVIDENT ENJOYMENT

The appearance of Lord Roberts was the cause of manifest satisfaction all round. and as he presented prizes to the young men and women who had a good record in keeping situations, his words of kindly encouragement were such as will be long remembered by, and have a good effect on, those who came into contact with him. The presence of Lady Roberts also added much to the attraction of the gathering, as she received the youthful purse-bearers with their gifts. It was felt to be a tribute of no ordinary kind to the value of the work that his lordship should withdraw himself for such a purpose from his official duties.

Among other speakers were the Bishop of Hereford, who earnestly called on the people of England to respond to the call for at least £150,000 a year to maintain this work; Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, who, while hopeful of the future of the British Empire, declared that if it is to continue we must have sober, industrious, and righteous men and women, such as Dr. Barnardo sends forth; the Bishop of Hull, who spoke with much feeling on the contrast between what might have been, and the spectacle before his hearers; and Bishop Hartzell (Africa) who, as an American citizen, congratulated England on such efforts as that just reported.

Children in Epping Forest.

THE Shaftesbury Retreat at Loughton, the station of the Fresh Air Fund of the Ragged School Union, was opened for the season on Monday last week, when a company of 600 children and a number of friends went down from London. Since last season an additional hall has been put up on the grounds, so that it will now be possible to accommodate at one time a day party of 1,000 children. Each hall on the estate is named after some prominent leader in the Ragged School movement.

Mr. John Kirk, the secretary, said that it was hoped that 25,000 children would visit that Retreat during the present season. The Fresh Air Fund extends its operations to provincial towns, however, so that a total of over 100,000 boys and girls will share its benefits before the end of the summer. This success is mainly due to the co-operation in collecting funds of Mr. C. Arthur Pearson. Reference was made to the objection of some persons to giving children a single day; but it was impossible to give all a fortnight at a holiday home, and while a fortnight was better than a single day, one day was better than nothing at all.

Mr. Kessell, who has had to do with the management of the fund, said that its prospects were better than they had been for some years past, the receipts to date being £850 in excess of last year. In visiting provincial towns with Mr. Kirk, he had been surprised to find how many persons had taken an interest in the movement. In all, during ten years, they had given a holiday to 800,000 children.

The Evangelical Alliance Quarterly for July contains much interesting and important matter. A sad account is given by the travelling agent of the Alliance in Russia of the continuance of cruel persecution. A letter from Portugal, from one who evidently is deeply versed in the internal affairs of that country, includes a translation of important documents relating to the power of the Jesuits and the attitude of the King with regard to them. Special prominence is given to the recent religious troubles in Ireland. (1d. Morgan & Scott.)

Drury Lane Working Girls' House.—This useful institution which has done so much for the elevation of working girls in the neighbourhood, has suffered somewhat in consequence of the removal of warehouses to enable the County Council to carry out their Holborn to Strand improvements. The number of boarders has fallen off considerably; but it is anticipated that when this region is rebuilt, trade and employment will return, and with it many of the same class of young women who have hitherto availed themselves of the advantages of the Home, Meanwhile the recreation and sewing clubs and Sunday afternoon classes are fully supported and enjoyed, and the Home is of inestimable value as an alternative to conditions dangerous in character. Communications may be addressed to the resident matron. Miss Cooke. 31. Stanhope Street, Drury Lane, W.C.

The Limerick Disturbances.

IN view of the recent occurrences in Limerick, arising out of the persecution of Dr. Long by Roman Catholics, incited by the priests, an indignation meeting was recently held in Dublin for the purpose of claiming for the Protestant minority the civil and religious liberty denied them by the Irish Administration. So eager were Protestants to enter their protest against the action of priests and magistrates that hundreds were unable to gain admission to the Round Room of the Rotunda, and an overflow meeting was held in the Pillar Room.

Sir Robt. W. Jackson was in the chair, and the Bishops of Derry, Down and Connor, and Tuam wrote regretting their inability to attend, and expressing their approval of the gathering. The chief interest of the meeting centred in the address of Dr. Long, who related a shocking story of tyranny and usurpation. Time after time the dispensary of the Irish Church Mission had been interrupted by demonstrations organized at the bidding of a priest, to protest against his practice, and one or two instances only are necessary to indicate the taken in the homes of the people. Rev. Dr. O'Riordan lost his temper with a poor woman, the wife of a respectable and hard-working labourer, when she told him that Dr. Long was attending her children who were ill. He struck her hard blows inside her own humble home with the thick end of his umbrella. Another family of Roman Catholics were turned out of their room by a priest who drew attention to them, saying they were not proper people to have in the house, and because Dr. Long had visited a sick child at the mother's request, they were forced to leave. On another occasion Father Tierney and another priest went to one of the speaker's patients, who was ill in bed with her baby four days old. The husband had not returned from work, and the children hid themselves when they saw the priests. Without invitation the visitors made their way to the room where the patient was lying, and immediately began to bully and threaten her for allowing Dr. Long to visit her. With regard to the mobs, the Royal Irish Constabulary had worked under difficult circumstances, and in reply to Dr. Long's question why they did not summon the offenders, had confessed that it was of no use, as it was IMPOSSIBLE TO OBTAIN CONVICTION.

EXTREME AND UNLAWFUL MEASURES

The speaker went on to refer to the disgraceful scenes which were witnessed when he appeared at the magistrates' court to prove his charge of assault against Father O'Leary. Since then he had been repeatedly mobbed. In his ministrations he had asked no one to come to him, and he never visited a patient without an invitation from him or his friends.

A resolution was carried condemning the conduct of Mr. Hickson, R.M., who while presiding at the Limerick Petty Sessions recommended the boycotting of Dr. Long in his profession, and the meeting pledged itself to uphold him in the medical work of the Irish Church Missions. Addresses of vigorous protest were made by Revs. J. C. Irwin, R. C. Hallowes, P. B. Johnson, G. Wade, and others.

At a meeting of the committee of the Irish Church Missions resolutions were adopted protesting against the decision of the magistrates, and the terms in which it was announced at the proceedings at Limerick Petty Sessions, in connection with the assaults upon Dr. Long, the Society's medical missionary. The committee consider that the renewed attacks on Dr. Long are the result of the unfortunate decision of the same bench in dismissing the charges brought against persons for riotous conduct.

Sailors' Welcome Home, Canning Town.—At the monthly rally of the Christian Life-Boat Crew at the "Welcome Home," on July 2, many interested friends were present, and the testimonies and addresses were much enjoyed. Miss Child gave as the text for the month: "Think on these things" (Phil. iv. 8).

Death of Canon Robinson.

THE Church of England loses an earnest evangelical clergyman by the death of Canon A. J. Robinson, rector of Birmingham, who passed away last Thursday. He was ordained by Archbishop Longley, and at the outset of his career was for five years curate of Maidstone. From 1872 to 1874 he was curate to the late Canon Hoare at Holy Trinity, Tunbridge Wells, and this period had a great influence upon his subsequent work. In 1874 Archbishop Tait gave him the vicarage of St. John's, Waterloo Road, and in 1880 he accepted from Bishop Jackson the rectory of Whitechapel, where he made his mark as a simple and earnest worker and teacher. In 1891 he became rector of Holy Trinity, Marylebone, in succession to Canon Cadman. The change from Lambeth and Whitechapel was great, but he still went on simple, whole-hearted lines. The church was restored within, and a pulpit was erected outside for open-air preaching, such as he had been used to in Whitechapel. Each member of the congregation was provided with a prayer-book and Bible, and the rector had a quiet but effective way of insisting that the audience should look out the passages of Holy Scripture to which he referred. In 1897 the trustees of the parish church of Birmingham, on the resignation of Canon Wilkinson, offered that important benefice, in the first instance, to Dr. Welldon, but it was finally accepted by Mr. Robinson, whom the Bishop made an honorary canon of Worcester in 1899. Canon Robinson was not robust in health, and he never spared himself. He will be specially missed by the younger clergy, to whom he was always a sympathetic friend.

Visiting the Blind Poor.

THE annual meeting of the Indigent Blind Visiting Society, held a few days ago, was a deeply interesting occasion. The state of affairs at the beginning of the reign of Queen Victoria was vividly recalled. "The lot of the blind was most pitiable. They were found hidden away in cellars and garrets, uncared for, unvisited, without occupation for either mind or body, and, in many cases, almost without food, clothes or bedding, in a state of dirt and degradation which was a reproach to a Christian country." But so well has the Society done its work that in 1901 over 800 persons are being systematically visited. Over 500 persons are attending the classes conducted by the helpers.

The Chairman (Mr. T. A. Denny) paid a high tribute to the manner in which Mrs. Armitage had continued to interest herself in the noble work done by her late husband for the blind. In an eloquent address, Canon Barker said the Society was doing a great work in visiting the blind and turning their minds in the direction of higher things. Rev. H. J. R. Marston followed with an address in which he brought out vividly the disadvantages under which the blind labour, at the same time bringing into view the marvellous things which had been accomplished for their benefit. Before the meeting closed, practical illustrations were given of the work of the Society.

Soldiers at Aldershot.—The honorary lady superintendent of Miss Daniell's Soldiers' Home, Aldershot (Miss Hanson) writes that although expenses have increased recently in many directions, every want has hitherto been supplied, and they "have lacked nothing." At the present time, however, new drainage works and extensive repairs have necessitated an additional expenditure of £400; and the workers feel sure that the need only requires to be made known to the Lord's people in order to be supplied The past year has been one of great encouragement. In the spring a member of the Imperial Yeomany was asked, after a meeting, concerning his hope in Christ. His answer was "Uncertain." That night he frankly and fully accepted Christ as all his salvation, and during the short time he remained showed every evidence of a new birth. "He sailed for South Africa, and within a very few weeks we saw his name in the list of deaths from enteric."

A Friend of Israel.

WE took up with peculiar interest The Life and Work of the Rev. William Wingate, Missionary to the Jews. (3s. 6d. Alfred Holness). It has been prepared by Rev. Gavin Carlyle, M.A., the biographer of Adolph Saphir, therefore by one well acquainted already with the story of Jewish missions. The subject of the volume combined signal modesty with true moral greatness; and though the pages present little more than a sketch of a beautiful life, they will be read with profound appreciation by such as knew the man and the great work in which he had a part.

William Wingate was the son of a Glasgow merchant, and born in 1808. As a young man he entered fully into what he regarded as "the innocent enjoyments of life"—he fenced, danced, rode, drove, &c. When the call of Christ reached his soul, he gave up everything which had hitherto occupied the place of pleasure. In the words of Mrs. Wingate:

> The scholarship which had gained honour and troops of friends was now devoted to the service of outcasts. The social charm which lasted to the end, worked its magic influence in the winning of souls; and the pure, true heart, ever the same, was the motive power of the missionary as of the man.

Associating himself with Christian people, he threw himself into active work in the Wynds, the very worst district of Glasgow, feeling free to visit in slums where policemen did not dare to walk alone. One day, when passing down St. Vincent Street, thinking of the various missions he assisted, it occurred to him that he did nothing for the Jews. This was the turning point in his career. Mr. Robert Wodrow, a leading member of the Church of Scotland Jewish Committee, a friend of his heart, encouraged him to give his life to mission work among the scattered nation; and with this in view business occupations were relinquished. Mr. Wingate was thirty-three years of age when he went to Berlin to acquire German and study Hebrew.

The second chapter tells the story of the Pesth Mission. Here we are on familiar ground; it is refreshing to read of the inquiry in which R. Murray McCheyne, Drs. Keith and Black, and Andrew A. Bonar took part, more than refreshing to recall the Divine guidance that directed the travellers to Pesth, and secured the influence and support of the good Archduchess Marie. There, in 1841, the Church of Scotland established its Mission to the Jews; and in 1843 the mission passed to the Free Church, and was placed under the care of Rev. Robert Smith and Mr. Wingate. During the previous two years Rev. Dr. Duncan had maintained remarkable intercourse, on the one hand with Jews, on the other with Roman Catholics, using the Hebrew and Latin languages to much purpose in the attendant discussions.

The work in 1843 began in a most hopeful manner. Fifty years later Dr. Smith wrote:—

> A communion season was held on the first of January, which happened on a Sabbath. We met in an upper room at night and in secret for fear of the Jews, and to escape the eye of an intolerant Government. From the moment that the service began, the place where we were assembled seemed to be filled with a mysterious presence. And, indeed, the risen Lord had entered by the closed doors, and appeared in the midst of his disciples as of old in Jerusalem. Deep silence fell on the little company as they realised his nearness, a silence broken only at intervals by the suppressed sob of some bursting heart. We remembered his words: "Again, a little while, and ye shall see Me," and "because I go to the Father." We felt that, in fulfilment of his promise, He had come among us, to dispense with his own hand the memorials of his dying love.

From early morning till late at night the one absorbing interest and labour was to guide, counsel, and instruct such as were inquiring as to the way of salvation. The best part of Saturday night was spent in prayer that God would bless the preaching of his Word on the Sabbath. The Jewish community, consisting at the time of about 14,000 souls, was deeply moved, and the influence spread into distant parts of the country. Here comes the story and conversion of the Saphir family. With the father were conjoined his constant companion, "his little Benjamin" (so well-known in after years as Dr. Adolph Saphir), his wife also, three daughters, and an elder son Philip, then a medical student, and afterwards founder of the Pesth Mission School. Well might Franz Delitzsch, long afterwards, in playful allusion to the name of the family, say that the foundation of the Pesth Mission was laid in sapphires.

Mr. Wingate was in the thick of this great movement; and had the joy of seeing Gospel ministers awakened to a new sense of duty in presence of the manifestations of the regenerating Spirit. Subsequent chapters describe the wider work of the Mission in Hungary, and the measures taken to train evangelists and colporteurs. It is a great pleasure to read the racy and terse notes on work included in the journal left by Mr. Wingate. We make a brief extract:

> September 17, 1842.—Rev. Mr. Schwartz and I appeared before the Stadt Hauptmann (Lord Mayor)—Mr. Schwartz accused of preaching for conversion of souls!!! I, examined as to my object in being here, felt in perfect peace. Nine Jews at once visited Mr. Schwartz—rich Jews afraid to call on him, because they had it reported to them that he would baptize them instantly.
>
> Monday, May 15, 1843.—Related by Adolph [Saphir]: Yesterday, calling on a young Jewess, he found her reading a book, called "The Secrets." He said, "I know a secret of more importance." She was anxious to hear what it was, when he opened up to her our ruined state, exposed to the wrath and curse of God, and showed her the only city of refuge, Christ Jesus the Lord. He then prayed with her and left her. She said: "We (neighbours) have remarked a great change of late in your family. You are all so happy now.' Adolph said: "It is because we are reconciled to God through the blood of his Son, and have the peace of God in our consciences."

The book goes on to tell of war and revolution, with the expulsion of the missionaries in 1852. The correspondence of Mr. Wingate is full of tender interest. Till he passed away in December, 1899, he sympathized with all efforts for the evangelization of Israel. The work at Buda-Pesth is continued under the direction of Dr. Andrew Moody.

There are several portraits and illustrations. The list of converts is deeply interesting, including the names of many men who have since earned world-wide reputation. There is also an outline history of the Hungarian Protestant Church.

Christian Union in South London.

ON Sunday last the usual summer demonstration of the South London Christian Union and London Free Church Councils was held on Peckham Rye. Most of the ministers, and nearly all the prominent workers in the various missions, took part in the proceedings, and it was felt to be a time of great rejoicing, and of true Christian unity and fellowship.

Quite early in the morning two or three hundred friends met for prayer in the open air. Everything tended to make this hour of waiting upon God a great blessing.

About two o'clock the friends gathered in Rye Lane, and walked in procession to "the Rye," several well-known clergymen being at the head of this goodly company of Christian men and women. A suitable platform had been prepared, and every facility given by the officials of the London County Council so as to secure the orderly conduct of the meeting. The sight of the vast congregation gathered around on the open sward was most impressive, and made one think of the days when Wesley, Whitefield, Spurgeon, and others addressed such multitudes.

Powerful and appropriate addresses were delivered by Revs. J. W. Ewing, Martyn Lobb, Morrison Cumming, Stephens, and Mr. Bewley Weaver. The thrilling, tearful, final Gospel appeal of this evangelist will not be easily forgotten by those who heard it. It was felt that God used it to touch the hearts of many.

Many of the most active Christian gentlemen in the neighbourhood were present, including Messrs. C. Goddard Clarke, J.P., H. Cook (Nunhead Christian Band), Kingsbury, Alfred Holness, Hardwick (the secretary of the Union), and others. Revs. J. H. Knight, Frank Smith, and other ministers also took part in the meeting.

It is the earnest desire of the workers in connection with the South London Christian Union that the same spirit of unity and brotherly fellowship in Gospel testimony might be manifested everywhere amongst ministers and other Christian workers.

The Late Dr. A. E. Lovitt.

DEAR SIR,—Allow me to add a little incident to the article you give this week concerning the late Dr. A. E. Lovitt.

Some few years since, on the evening of a first Sunday in the month, I was giving the right hand of fellowship to a number of fresh members at the East London Tabernacle.

Our church secretary remarked to me just before doing so: "When you give the right hand to that young London hospital student you will be giving the hand to Number 6,000." This was his number on the church roll, the numbers being carried on consecutively from the formation of the church.

When it came to his turn I happened to remark that this brother made the sixth thousand received into Church fellowship. Spontaneously the whole assembly, of about 2,000, rose and sang the doxology. The sight of that young medical student standing up and grasping my hand as the great gathering sang their note of praise comes vividly before me as I write. I have often thought of it since.

How little did any of us dream that he was to be the first martyr member of that church, and so shortly afterwards. The whole incident now seems to me to be prophetic. Without knowing it, we were praising God for the first member who would win the martyr crown.

That young medical student was dear Dr. Lovitt.—Yours faithfully, Archibald G. Brown.

Tredegar, West Norwood, S.E.

Young People.

All communications referring to this department must be addressed to Uncle Tom, Office of The Christian, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C.

* I want to interest my* elder "Young People" every week in what Mr. Meyer writes on the Christian Endeavour Topic. Parents will also find the S.S. Lesson Notes suggestive and helpful for Sunday talks with their young folk. See next page.

Five B's.

LITTLE Christians are doing five things.

1. They are Believing in Christ.

For fifty years an old lady had suffered from blindness. She had never seen her children or her grandchildren during that time. She had lived in the dark. Gradually she became accustomed to her blindness, and for many years she had ceased even to wish her sight back. Then they told her of a clever surgeon, who thought he could cure her.

"I don't believe it," she said.

"Do try," begged all her relations.

She tremblingly consented. To-day, after fifty years of blindness, she is seeing the leaves, the meadows, the blue sky, but above all her dear ones.

The Lord Jesus Christ has provided a power which can open the eyes, cure the heart, strengthen the knees, unseal the lips, and open the hands, so that we may see Him, love Him, walk in his ways, tell his praises, and support his cause.

2. They are Bearing the Cross of Jesus.

In Holywell old church a bell is kept which had a strange use in the olden days. The church stood some distance from the town, so they sent a man through the streets, round about whose neck this bell was hung by a strap. At every step it sounded.

People laughed. Many pointed their fingers and jeered. Some even called names after the man. Nevertheless they came to church.

We must confess Jesus before men. Our words and deeds should be like beautiful music, and then others will want to love and serve Jesus Christ too. Many people are far away from Jesus. We, big bells and little bells, must sound his praises, and call them to Him.

Of course some will laugh at us, but ring on. You may even be called names, but ring on. Only be sure yours is a clear, true, cheerful note, and ring on, ring on, ring on.

3. They are Building the Sign of Jesus.

In his travels through the Sudan, Dr. Felkin had a slave-boy, named Suleiman Capsune, as his personal servant. Upon this boy's cheeks there were his tribal marks, so that everyone could see that he came from Dara-land.

The "name" of Christ "shall be in their foreheads" who enter heaven. Name means "character." They shall be like Christ. That must begin here and begin with the heart; it will then show in the face. You will soon show in your face the sign-mark of Jesus. Read, too, Deut. vi. 8. If your heart belongs to Jesus, you will obey his commandments, and that will be doing what this verse means.

A little deaf and dumb girl was brought into a home in South India. She was weak from famine and only lived a few months. In that time they taught her to express herself on her fingers, and better still, they taught her that "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." When she was dying she signed to the nurse.

"What is it, dear?"

"'God is Love,'" telegraphed the little deaf and dumb girl.

Then she asked them to take away her red jacket and give her a white one.

"I shall have a white one up there," she said on her fingers.

The red robe of "Christ's righteousness" is bound round the child of God now as a Sign to heaven and hell that that "blood-bought" child is safe. The white robe will be worn in heaven as a Sign that the child of God is purified and made meet for heaven by the blood of the Lamb.

4. They are Basking in the Smile of Jesus.

When a sunny day comes your dog will go out and lie in the sunshine on the lawn, and the cat will come under the warm rays, and smooth her fur, and look perfectly happy. They know by instinct that a sun-bath means health, life, and beauty to them.

When you trust Jesus you begin to bask in the sunshine of his smile. That means life in your soul, health of body, mind, and soul, and beauty of heart and face.

Come into the sunshine. Do not stay in the cold. The warm rays of the Sun of Righteousness give a happiness that can be found nowhere else.

5. They are Beginning Heaven with Jesus.

We do not wait until we die for heaven. If you have given your heart to Jesus, heaven has commenced within you. There is much more happiness in store for you, but heaven has already begun in the little Christian's heart. Herbert Dudley Lampen.

"The Christian" Bible Searcher.

THIS WEEK'S BIBLE SEARCHER (No. 286).

Hidden Text.

Find and complete the following:—

1. Have peace one with another (Mark v.-x.).
2. Abide in Me and I in you (John xiii.-xvi.).
3. And not to leave the other undone (Matt. xx.-xxv.).
4. How long shall I be with you (Mark v.-x.).
5. I will pray the Father for you (John xii.-xvii.).
6. Receive one of such children in my name (Mark v.-x.).
7. In Me ye might have peace (John xii.-xvii.).
8. I and my Father are one (John v.-x.).
9. The water that I shall give him (John i.-v.).
10. Hearken unto Me every one of you (Mark v.-x.).
11. He that is least among you all (Luke v.-x.).
12. I know not what thou sayest (Matt. xxii.-xxvii.).
13. And as he was walking in the temple (Mark x.-xv.).
14. Ye shall see the Son of man ascend (John v.-x.).
15. The world may know that I love the Father (John x.-xv.).
16. The good Shepherd giveth his life (John v.-x.).
17. I will give for the life of the world (John v.-x.).
18. The Father is in Me and I in Him (John v.-x.).
19. Peter answereth and saith unto Him (Mark v.-x.).
20. I will go before you into Galilee (Matt. xxv.-xxx.).

From each of the above take one word to form the hidden text spoken by Jesus (John).

[Children under ten do any 5; under thirteen, any 10; under seventeen, any 15.]

A star * is given to those under fifteen who find the hidden text.

ANSWER TO LAST SEARCHER (285).

Bible Clock.

I. Strength (Psa. xxviii. 8).
II. With strength (Psa. xviii. 2).
III. Glory and strength (Psa. xxix. 1).
IV. Thou art my strength (Psa. xxxi. 4).
V. The Lord is my strength (Psa. xxviii. 7).
VI. Thou hast girded me with strength (Psa. xviii. 39).
VII. The King shall joy in thy strength (Psa. xxi. 1).
VIII. The Lord is the strength of my life (Psa. xxvii. 1).
IX. My God, my strength, in whom I will trust (Psa. xviii. 2).
X. O Lord, O my strength, haste Thee to help me (Psa. xxii. 19).
XI. The Lord will give strength . . . the Lord will bless his people (Psa. xxix. 11).
XII. Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast Thou ordained strength (Psa. viii. 2).

No. 285—Correct answers (first list) received from:—

A—John Allan, R. and Ernest Aldwinckle, Olive Andrews*.

B—Alison and Monica Bailey, Mary Bungey, Gwendoline and Barbara Bourne, Evelyn Barstow, Gordon and May Bligh, Marion Boyle, Queenie Boswell, Ada Bratt, Robert Bushby, Ella Berryman, Mabel Baker, Clarence Bass, Herbert Braddon*, Emily Bridgewater.

C—Hannah Chapman, Josephine and Elma* Cheal, Mabel Campe, Lydia Clearv, Kittie Cope*, Ida Cullen*, Ida and Mabel Cole, Elsie Collings, Ruth Collis, Emmie and Margaret Cecil.

D—Pologhia Daws, Ralph* and Dorothy* Daintree, Willie Dowsett, Stanley Drew*, Tom Dunn*.

E—Mabel and Hilda Edwards.

F—Winifred Fooks, Muriel Foster, Harry Flashman, Mary Freeman.

G—Constance Gabbett.

H—Hilda, Mary and Elizabeth Hooper, Violet Hatch, Dorothy Havergal-Shaw, Doris and Agnes Higham, Hetty Hill, Mabel, Doris, Kathleen and Harry Hodgkinson, Elsie* and Dorothy* Hanson, Ina Hemmel*, Beatrice Hastings, Annie Horstcraft, Kathleen and Dorothy Heckford, Dorothy, Ince and Ruth Hunt.

I—Elsie Irvine, Nellie Irving*.

J—Gertrude and Emily Jones.

K—Martha Kidman*, Gladys King.

L—Cecilia Lichtenstein*, May and Sidney Law, Constance Long, Beatrice Le Mesurier.

M—Lewis*, Arthur, Grace and Nellie Morice, Barbara Maconchy, Charlie and Dorothy McMullin, F. Messenger, Muriel, Sidney, Geoffrey and Winifred Martin, Harvey Moore, Tom McGlone*, Winnie and Doris* Martin, Edith Margetts, Amy Munday, Philip Martin.

N—Blanche Norcock, Gerald and Hilda Nicholls, Nellie and Lyddy Nicholas, Emily Norris, V. and Eleanor Noel, Edith Nash.

P—Kathleen Pasley*, Dora Phillimore, Evelyn Primrose-Pechey*, M. Pibel, Leslie Partridge, Leonard, Walter and Winnie Picknell, Lizzie Porter.

Q—F. Quance.

R—Alice and Hilda Reid, Aileen and Marjory Roberts, Amelia Rowden.

S—Cicely* and Constance Sherbrooke, Constance and Hilda Schaeffer, Betty Stocks*, Amy Simmons, Marjorie Sherbrooke, Frances Stileman, Whately Smith, Flora Shadbolt, Stanley and David Soltau, Horace Small.

T—Bertha Tranter, Frank Tomkins, Marion Tarry, Dudley Toye*.

W—Ellen Williams, Stephen Wilson, Ruth Warren, Fanny Wheeler, Florence Wilde, Annie and Sarah Wood, Freda Watts*, Agatha Ward, Greta Watson.

Y—G. Young.

FOREIGN LIST.

No. 265—Georgina Tollner (S. Africa). No. 277—Mattie (S. Africa). No. 278—Mattie*, Georgina Tollner*, Flo, Cuckoo and Minnie Lister, Nellie Mostert, Henry Luckhoff (S. Africa). No. 280—Rotha, Lottie, Ivan and Eric St. George (Canada). No. 281—Dora Wallace* (Canada). No. 283—Ina, Nettie, Katie* and Will Thomson (Bulgaria), Phyllis Boyd (Malta).

Personal.

Edward Newell, Olive Andrews, Gladys King, Martha Kidman.—I am glad to welcome you as "Searchers," and trust you will be as diligent as many of your "cousins."

T. Johnson.—Thank you for your note. I am glad you are beginning the Searcher again. I hope you will be successful in your examination.

Omitted from Honours List—Elsie Hanson, Leonard Browne.

Uncle Tom.

East London Tabernacle Orphans.

A GARDEN party was held in the grounds of Harley House, Bow, on Thursday last in aid of the East London Tabernacle Orphan Homes. The weather was all that could be desired, and a large company assembled, Pastor Archibald G. Brown presiding. A preliminary devotional service was followed by an interesting exhibition by boys from the Stockwell Orphanages, and a much-appreciated musical programme was provided. An evening meeting was held at 7 o'clock, when Pastor Archibald Brown again presided, and explained the inception of the work, and the joy it had afforded him for some seventeen years to provide for the temporal, and minister to the spiritual, needs of the children committed to his care. Though he had left the church and the neighbourhood, that interest was still maintained. He saw many present who were his spiritual children in Christ, and if, through the happy bond that linked them together, they had some affection for himself, he would ask no better proof of it than they could show by assisting the committee to provide for these little ones. Other addresses were given by Mr. R. C. Morgan, Mr. Henry Varley, Rev. E. H. Ellis (of North Adelaide), and Mr. George Nokes. If friends will help, the committee desire to increase the number of inmates. Communications may be addressed to Pastor Brown, at Idmiston Road, West Norwood.

Christian Students' Conference.

THE ninth annual conference of students is being arranged by the British College Christian Union, to be held at Matlock Bank, Derbyshire, July 23-August 1. Among the speakers and guests expected to be present are Rev. H. E. Fox (Church Missionary Society), Rev. H. E. Grey (principal of Wycliffe Hall, Oxford), Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson (London Missionary Society), Rev. G. A. Johnston Ross (London), Rev. William Watson (Birkenhead), and Rev. J. Scott Lidgett (Bermondsey Settlement).

Among the subjects to be taken up are, "The Home Ministry in Relation to Missions"; "The Duty of the Ministry on Social Questions"; "The Watchword as a Spiritual Force"; "The Call to Foreign Service"; "Social Problems and How to Understand Them"; and "The Place of Christianity in Politics."

From the returns sent in it is believed that the Conference will be at least as largely attended as any of its predecessors. Theological students are expected in unusual numbers, and, as they will have the advantage of the presence of a number of leaders in college and missionary circles, advantage will be taken of the opportunity presented for special discussion of their relation to the movement. Several former secretaries of the movement are expected—including Messrs. Walter Millar, Crayden Edmunds, J. H. Oldham, and Dr. J. R. Williamson.

The first meeting each day will be of a devotional character, at the mid-day gathering matters affecting the control and management of Christian Unions will be discussed, and a series of valuable and instructive addresses will be given in the evenings.

"Cosy Corner," Hailsham.—This little resting place has been open five years, and many tired and weary ones, Christian workers, missionaries, nurses, &c., have found renewed health and strength after a stay there. The cottage is given rent free, with groceries, firing and light. It has been kept up by Miss Rose Benn and occasional kind helpers. As she is now very seriously ill, it would be a great cheer to her in her weakness if some kind friends were secured who would contribute towards the support of "Cosy Corner" (now engaged up to October).

Christian Endeavour Topic.

SUNDAY, July 14.

Individual Work for Christ (Acts viii. 26-40).

WHAT a contrast there was between the great revival scenes of Samaria, and that lonely and thinly-populated tract of country which lay between Jerusalem and Gaza, the southernmost city of Palestine. We must be equally ready to deal with individuals as with crowds. The one or two whom we can deal with in a quiet talk are quite as important in God's sight as the vast audiences that gather in a city congregation. These private talks often have greater results. It is impossible, for instance, to estimate the far-reaching results of this chamberlain's conversion. I have often found, also, that a private conversation will suggest the public address. The line of argument you pursue with one will be equally cogent when addressed to many.

The Angel of the Lord will still whisper his message into the obedient and attentive ear; and whatsoever He says, let us do. It was impressed, for instance, on the heart of a godly man, that he should deliver a Gospel appeal in a certain spot. It turned out to be in the heart of a dense and apparently unfrequented forest. There was not a soul within sight. But he acted on his deep conviction, stood up where four glades met, delivered his message as though a great congregation were present, and returned to his home. Only after years had elapsed did he learn that a troop of robbers was gathered within the sound of his voice waiting to waylay a party, and that the leader had been converted by the unexpected voice.

But in the case of this chamberlain, evidently a statesman of some repute from the distant island-city of Meröe, there had been a good deal of previous preparation. He had lost faith in idols, and become a humble worshipper of the one God. He was not ashamed to confess himself a proselyte of Judaism, and worship in the Temple; he was a diligent student of the Hebrew Scriptures, and beguiled the monotony of his return by reading them. The guidance of the Divine Spirit was evident in that, at this very moment, when the God-sent messenger was at hand, he had reached the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah, than which there could have been no better text for an evangelist to preach from. There is no chance in this world. Happy is the man who sees God's hand in the fall of a sparrow, in the selection of a chapter. If we were to live more absolutely on God's plan, we should be surprised at the many coincidences into which we should find ourselves fitted, as a key to the lock. How many inquirers are passing us every day in their chariots, waiting for some one to guide them, answer their questions, and bring them into the full light of the Gospel?

He preached unto him Jesus from that prophecy. The testimony to Jesus is the spirit of prophecy. From beginning to end Jesus is the theme of Scripture. I like the testimony of an old preacher, who said that as all roads lead to London, so there is a way from every text to the Lord Jesus. Evidently Philip told in detail the story of the Crucifixion, Resurrection, and the forty days, and had just reached the point where the Master gave his closing commission about baptism into the Name of the Triune God. At this moment the chariot came near a pool of water, and, with a sudden impulse, the eunuch proposed that he should be baptized. The test-question addressed to him by Philip is thought to be somewhat doubtful. Some early authorities omit it. But in any case it embodies the practice of the early Church. This was the usual formulary, which was addressed to primitive believers. And to be able to answer this one question, as the eunuch answered it, is a sufficient warrant for outward union with the people of God.

Philip was mysteriously caught away when this mission was fulfilled, and we find him next amid the scenes of family life. It is not good to lean on our teachers too much, else we shall be removed from them, or they from us. Sometimes a single word or touch is all the soul needs from man, afterwards God becomes Teacher. F. B. M.

C.E. NOTES.

From China comes the following statement, showing the heroic mettle of Chinese Endeavourers:—"During the troubles the little C.E. Society out in the county town of Sin-z met constantly, in spite of the officials' endeavours to shut them up."

* * *

The Christian Endeavour Society formed among the Boer prisoners on the island of St. Helena has just celebrated its first anniversary, at which some striking reports were given. Beginning in May of last year with nine members, it now includes nearly 600, and quite a large number of committees.

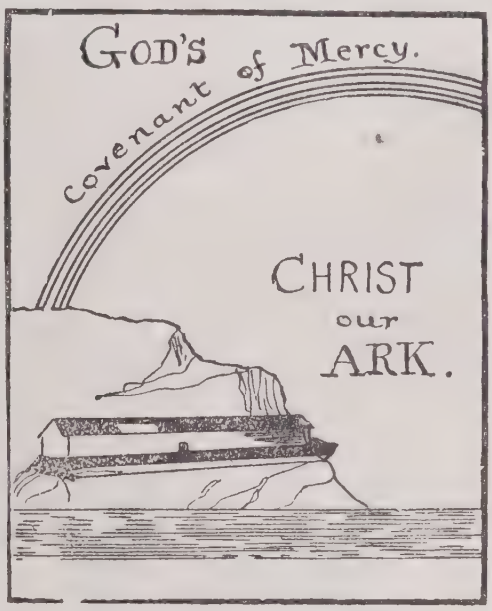
* * *

The members of the Emmanuel Church C.E. Society, Tunbridge Wells, invited fifty of London's poorest children to spend the day on their beautiful Common. Dinner was given to them on the Common, and tea in the Emmanuel Schoolroom. When leaving, each child was given a bag containing a meat pie, cake, &c., and a bunch of flowers.

International S.S. Lesson.

July 21, 1901.

Noah Saved in the Ark (Gen. viii. 1-22).
Golden Text—Gen. vi. 8



Connective Story.

BETWEEN our last lesson and this we have many years of Bible story. We have to remember that the Bible is not the history of the whole world, but only of those people who have to do with God's gradual revelation of his will. We have in Gen. iv. 1-15 the beginning of sacrifices which God must have taught Adam to offer; the beginning of death. Cain's descendants lived without God; the evil one was their master, and they were lawless and wicked (16-24). The children of Seth were called the "sons of God" (26); but in the course of time they made friends of the wicked people, and soon became bad themselves, until only one man was left who really loved God: and the sin was so dreadful that God could bear with it no longer (Job xxii. 15-17).

In those days people had very long lives. Adam lived till Methuselah was 243 years old, and Lamech (Noah's father) fifty-six. Methuselah lived until one year before the flood, so he could tell Noah what Adam had told him.

Noah.

The name means rest or comfort. He is described as "righteous," "perfect," because he walked with God (vi. 7-9). His daily life spoke of God, and he preached against the prevailing wickedness (2 Peter ii. 5). He exercised faith and obedience. Our Lord Jesus spoke of Noah (Matt. xxiv. 37-37; Luke xvii. 26, 27); he is also mentioned in Isa. liv. 9; Ezek. xiv. 14; Heb. xi. 7; 1 Peter iii. 20. Noah lived for 350 years after the flood.

The Flood.

An account of the depravity into which man had sunk (vi. 5). God destroyed the whole race with a flood of water, Noah and his family excepted. Every known country has traditions of this flood at the present day, some of them very like our Bible story. The deluge extended over the whole of the inhabited part of the earth. It prevailed 150 days; then it began to dry up and the ark rested on the top of the mountains of Ararat. Noah was in the ark a year and ten days. (Read the lesson chapter.) This flood teaches us God's hatred of sin, and that sinners must be punished sooner or later (Prov. xi. 21).

The Ark.

This was a large wooden building, erected in a boat, so that it would float. It was three storeys high, and made with rooms; the door was in the side, and a window along the top. It was made entirely according to God's direction. A "cubit" is the length from the elbow to the tip of the middle finger of a man. The ark was 547ft. long, 91ft. broad, 54ft. high. More than twice as long as our largest "man-of-war." (Compare it with some well-known building). It took more than 100 years to build, and all the while men took no heed but to scoff! It is a type of Christ, in many ways the divinely planned and only refuge.

Noah's Sacrifice (20).

First mention of an altar. The sacrifice of animals pointed to the need of a substitute to bear the punishment of sin—the innocent for the guilty. It meant, "If I sin, either I or someone else must bear the punishment, death." It showed Noah's faith and obedience and thankfulness, and God was pleased. Thus only can God be pleased.

God's Promise (22).

It has never failed, and never will. God cannot be untrue (Titus i. 2; Heb. vi. 18; 2 Cor. i. 20). A covenant is an agreement between two parties, with a sign to enforce its remembrance.

Practical Points.

What do we feel about sin?
Am I safe in the Ark, Christ Jesus?
How do we show our gratitude for God's goodness?

Scottish Notes.

A FRIEND of the Orphan Homes has arranged with Mr. Quarrier for the young people (1,300 in number) to visit the Glasgow Exhibition in daily parties of fifty, spread over five or six weeks.

One of our most interesting but most unostentatious foreign mission enterprises is the Lady Missionaries' Training Home, Burnbank Gardens, Glasgow, supported and directed by Miss Forrester-Paton, of Alloa, and superintended by Miss Ada Camp. On Wednesday evening, June 26, six of the students bade farewell to the scene of their three years' training in practical education—dispensing medicine, attending to the wants temporal and spiritual of the sick, slum district visiting, &c.

Referring to the planting of "Drumclog Memorial Church" in a rural area about twelve miles by twenty, where there has hitherto been no place of worship, a writer in Life and Work says the attendances have been extremely gratifying, and beyond the most sanguine expectations of the promoters. Attention is called to the need of more outlying churches in many country parishes where the long distances to be traversed often practically prevent the Sabbath from being at the same time a day of rest and one of public worship.

A report presented last week shows that the United Free Presbytery of Edinburgh has now under its supervision 168 Sunday schools and thirty children's churches, making nearly 200 institutions for the direct religious instruction of young people, in addition to guilds and societies which communicate religious instruction less directly. In these institutions there was a staff of 2,498 teachers, not including the unscheduled staff of monitors in children's churches; and the number of children last year was 36,192. These figures represented, the convener (Rev. G. M. Reith) said, an enormous amount of quiet, steady, unobtrusive work in laying a solid foundation for the religious life of the coming generation. It was agreed to take into consideration, at a special meeting to be held for the purpose, the whole question of the religious instruction of the young, with special reference to the decrease in attendance at Sabbath schools during recent years.

Children's Scripture Union—Portions for week ending July 20.

Sun. July 14	Acts	xxi. 27-40		Thurs. July 18	Acts	xxiii. 12-35
Mon. „ 15	„	xxii. 1-16		Fri., „ 19	„	xxiv. 1-16
Tues. „ 16	„	xxii. 17-30		Sat., „ 20	„	xxiv. 17-27
Wed. „ 17	„	xxiii. 1-17

Christian Cabmen's Association. — The North London branch of the Christian Cabmen's Association was reopened on Wednesday of last week under promising circumstances, Mr. Thomas Gent (who has laboured as missionary among the men for thirty years) presiding. One driver testified that although much remained to be done, a good work had been accomplished. He knew he was expressing the sentiments of his fellow-drivers when he thanked God and the London City Mission that for so very many years there had been men of God going in and out among them. They knew that God cared for cabmen, and that was a big thing to know; but that did not prevent a craving for a little bit of human love and interest; this their missionaries supplied. It was a real joy to the Christian men, as well as a real benefit to those "out of the way," to be running against a missionary every now and then. All Christian drivers, and perhaps a few who were far from being Christians, said, "God bless the missionaries, and the good people who are the means of sending them." Several other drivers took part in the meeting. Quite a number were enrolled as members of the branch and great hopes are entertained as to its prospective usefulness.

Evangelistic.

The Open-Air Mission.

A SERIES of meetings has been held at Newcastle-on-Tyne, during the past festival week on Tyneside, by the Open-Air Mission. A morning prayer-meeting in the Y.M.C.A. building was conducted by Mr. F. Cockrem. During the Temperance Festival on the Town Moor, and also at Gosforth Park race course, the evangelists conducted meetings, at which large crowds of people gathered. The Gospel message was received with attention by many, and some listeners subsequently asked for the prayers of God's people. The evening meetings, held in the Bigg Market, also attracted large assemblies. Mr. Barry Wake and other friends took part. On the Friday evening Mr. Gerald Coultas preached in the slums. The missioners were well supported by local friends. A large quantity of Gospel literature was distributed during the meetings.

Mrs. Baeyertz at Great Wakering.

The sixteen days' mission, conducted by Mrs. Baeyertz, the Jewish evangelist, in the Congregational Church, Great Wakering, Essex, has been a season of great blessing. Large congregations assembled every night of the mission, and on several occasions the church was packed. But, best of all, there were decisions for Christ at every service, for from the very commencement there was remarkable power attending the Word. More than a hundred persons passed through the inquiry room. Parents have rejoiced that their prayers have been answered in their sons and daughters being found among the seekers. Family altars have been reared, while members of the Bible class, and young people of our Sunday school, have been led to Christ. The afternoon Bible readings were largely attended, and were a source of much blessing to God's children. Mrs. Baeyertz, with fulness of truth and felicity of exposition, set forth the wealth of blessing that is the heritage of believers. Not a few were helped to enter the abundant life to their great blessedness and God's glory. A pleasing feature in these gatherings, both Bible readings and the Gospel meetings, was the forgetfulness of sectarian differences and the sweet fellowship of saints. "To God be the glory, great things He hath done."

William Robertson, Pastor.

At Henley, during the recent regatta, Mr. Wm. Day stood with his "Gospel banner" in a prominent position, and the texts upon it were read by many pleasure seekers. Mr. Day also distributed a large quantity of Gospel literature.

Mr. William Forbes, who has been preaching in Brighton, had a luncheon meeting on Monday last for young persons engaged at one of the local theatres. The evangelist has recently been able to assist in some cases of distress among theatrical women.

A mission was recently conducted in the Free Methodist Church, Seaham Harbour (Rev. H. Kellett) by Messrs. Birkett and Lewis, assisted by the mission band of the Sunderland Y.M.C.A. There were many cases of decision, and as a result the services were continued for a week longer than had been originally arranged.

During June Mr. Henry Thorne conducted services at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse, E. His visit has been much enjoyed by the people of God, and the Gospel message, by the power of the Holy Spirit, has been productive of fruit in the lives of several, inasmuch as they have been turned "from darkness to light."

Walter Notman, Superintendent.

The Leeds United Working Men's Gospel Temperance League has just concluded a helpful mission, conducted by Mr. Bob Johnson, the converted minstrel and banjoist. The meetings extended over two Lord's Days, and were held in front of the Town Hall and on the famous Woodhouse Moor, the popular gathering ground for great demonstrations. Thousands of people listened to the earnest words of the missioner, and many pledges were taken.

The Gospel Temperance campaign in South Wales' which is being carried on by Mr. Tennyson Smith under the auspices of the Free Churches, is proving very fruitful. At Maesteg and other places very many persons signed the pledge. Rev. L. Ton Evans, who has taken part in the mission, said at a recent meeting that the spiritual results of the campaign are highly encouraging, for numbers of those who signed the pledge were also led to the Saviour, and have become church members.

Mr. J. P. Huddleston, of the Devon Evangelistic Mission Van, has again undertaken a services of Gospel services in Devonshire villages. The Truth has been faithfully proclaimed, and Christian people have manifested much interest and taken earnest part in the work. Recently, Doccombe, Chagford, and Yeoford Junction have been visited, and it is hoped to conduct services at Morchard Bishop and Lapford. Mr. Huddleston's address is care of Mr. Dawe, 10-12, The Arcade, Okehampton.

Tent Work.

The London Tent Campaign.

The work in the tents is proceeding amid many signs of Divine blessing. The work at Clapton concluded with a praise meeting conducted by Mr. Leonard Weaver. Mr. A. E. Pett, describing it, writes that there were many thanksgivings for answered prayer, among them being one for a mother and father converted, another for a mother and all her children, and a third for a whole family brought to Christ. Five scholars in one class, too, had found the Lord, and numbers of the workers also offered praise for the joy of leading others to Jesus. "It was indeed a sight to be remembered to see a poor drunkard praying for power over his besetting sin, and a few yards away a fashionably-dressed Ritualist seeking the light. The Lord hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad."

The Notting Hill tent was opened last Lord's Day by Messrs. J. B. Anderson and R. S. Bradbrook. A large crowd assembled in the evening, and many decisions were recorded. The thorough organization of the work reflects great credit on the local committee.

Mr. Robert S. Bradbrook, who has taken a prominent part in the Campaign at several tents, was born in 1857. As a boy he was a regular attendant at the Sunday school, and a singer in the choir, at St. Bartholomew, Cambridge Heath. Always of an adventurous turn of mind, he secured a berth on a small coasting vessel sailing from London, thus beginning some six years' nautical experience. As a merchant sailor and in other capacities, he visited many parts of the world, and his voyagings supply a wealth of incident for his lecture, entitled "My Perilous Adventures on Sea and Land."

MR. R. S. BRADBROOK.

From Photograph by Mr. Andrew W. Dron, Brondesbury.

Through the influence of the young lady who afterwards became his wife, he was persuaded to relinquish the sea for employment ashore, and having married, he was induced by his wife to attend the services of Trinity Chapel, Hackney, where, under the faithful ministry of Rev. John Vaughan, he sought and found the Saviour, in the early part of 1879. Shortly after this he became a Sunday-school teacher, and, growing in grace, he commenced singing and speaking in the open air, and visiting the sick in the infirmaries, where his gift of song brought comfort to sad hearts; he also conducted children's meetings, and became the secretary of a young men's Bible class.

Removing to the south of London he became attached to Clarendon Chapel, Camberwell, where he was quickly in harness, first as a teacher, then as secretary, and ultimately as superintendent of the school. Mr. Bradbrook devoted the whole of his spare time to the furtherance of God's work, conducting the Band of Hope and Christian Endeavour Society (which he formed), young people's meetings, and engaging in open-air preaching and singing.

In 1892 he removed to Penge, where he was led to join the Primitive Methodist Church (of which he is a member), where he soon became known as an acceptable preacher, Gospel singer, and lecturer. The teachers and officials requested his acceptance of the superintendency of the school. Finding there was no week night meeting, especially for young men and women, he also organized a C.E. Society, which prospered, and was the means of introducing the movement in several other churches. Mr. Bradbrook himself formed eight or nine societies in various parts of London. He has been vice-president of the South London C.E. Union, and a member of the Executive of the London Council.

Mr. Bradbrook now devotes all his time to evangelistic work, being engaged all last summer in the "London Tent Campaign." He was one of the missioners of the Free Church Simultaneous Mission, both for London and the provinces; and the services which he conducted at Sunningdale and at Slough were greatly owned of God. At Alfreton, also, his work was fruitful. Several striking cases of conversion were recorded, and the missioner's words on the curse of strong drink were the means of blessing, particularly to careless Christians. Mr. Bradbrook is again serving the "London Tent Campaign," labouring in conjunction with Mr. J. Bennett Anderson. In the work of organization Mr. Bradbrook has rendered valuable service as the representative of the Central Committee to the local workers.

Canning Town is perhaps the most difficult neighbourhood yet opened, but there seems to be every indication that the Spirit of God is working among the people. Last Lord's Day the tent was well filled in the evening with many of the people of the non-Church-going class. Messrs. Mayo and J. T. Vine, who were in charge, were much encouraged. Mr. Vine's word was with power, and quite a number were weeping like children, seeking the Lord. The scene at the close of the address was remarkable. The people knelt in the sawdust, seeking the blessing for which their hearts hungered. The evangelists are full of hope for the meetings this week.

The closing meetings at the Brixton tent were taken by Mr. Henry Varley. On Sunday night the place was crowded. Mr. Varley took as his texts Rom. vi. 1-12, 22, 23, and spoke with power on the nature of sin. At the close of the meeting, when the invitation was given for those who wished to accept Christ to stand, several did so. Quite a number were dealt with at the close of the meeting, some of the workers remaining in the tent till 11 o'clock. The mission in this district has been very fruitful.

Mr. Charles Inglis laboured last week at Shepherd's Bush. His addresses were listened to by large companies of people who assembled night after night. At each service some were led to seek Christ. The workers have been much encouraged by the many touching testimonies which have been given by friends who sought salvation at the Shepherd's Bush tent last year. Mr. F. A. George, the hon. local secretary, who supplies these particulars, adds that the sound character of the results referred to inspires hope for the present campaign.

Messrs. G. C. Tullar and I. H. Meredith, both of New York, have now commenced work at Shepherd's Bush. Mr. Tullar is known in New York as "The Sunshine Evangelist." His early life was one of hardship and privation; he spent some of his early years in the large cities, much of the time living among newsboys and bootblacks, having no benefits of education and religious training. He was converted at the age of nineteen, and entered at once upon religious work. Mr. Meredith was born in 1872, and was converted at the age of thirteen; he entered upon evangelistic work as a Gospel singer at the age of nineteen, and is also well known in America as a hymn writer. These two friends have been associated as mission workers for a number of years past in the United States.

At Hoe Street, Walthamstow, one of the large tents was opened on Saturday last. A gathering of Christians from most of the surrounding churches and mission halls assembled for prayer and conference. Messrs. Leonard Weaver and William Grove are in charge of the work this week. On Sunday there were large gatherings both afternoon and evening; the Word was with power and many rose desiring prayer. There is promise of a time of deep blessing in this district.

At the Forest Gate and Upton Park tent, on Tuesday of last week, quite a thousand people assembled, says Mr. J. Kennaby, in spite of the heavy rain. Mr. Henry Varley took the service, and at the close many seekers were counselled and prayed with. On Saturday last Rev. David Gardiner, from Ceylon, was in charge, and, after a heart-searching time, several surrended to Christ. On Sunday the Weaver Brothers had a glorious time. Mr. Bewley Weaver gave a searching address in the morning on Rom. xiii. 11, and in the afternoon his brother drew hopeful lessons from the life of Samson. The evening gathering was a solemn occasion. Mr. Frank Weaver sang with pathos, and his brother preached from Heb. xi. 3. Many were deeply touched, and a number of persons rose to confess Christ, while many interesting cases were dealt with in the inquiry room.

The outlook is particularly hopeful at Islington, where a large and influential committee has been formed, including representatives of many evangelical churches and missions. A tent 175 feet long, and seventy-five wide is to be erected, accommodating at least 3,000 people, and the mission is to commence on Saturday, August 3. For the following Monday (Bank Holiday), an all-day conference is being arranged. The tent is to be put up at the Priory, on the site where the great "Moody" Mission was held. Mr. Leonard Weaver is to conduct the meetings.

Tents are now erected in the following districts: Woolwich, Woolwich Common; Shepherd's Bush Green (close to Shepherd's Bush Hotel); Canning

(Continued on page 26.)

The Christian.

☞ To avoid delay it is requested that all letters relating to business matters should be addressed to the firm, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and not to its individual members. Letters of a personal nature should in every case be so marked.

Communications for The Christian should be addressed to the Editor, 12, Paternoster Buildings, London, E.C. All Advertisements should be sent to Messrs. John Haddon and Co., Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.

☞ The Publishers request that all orders for The Christian by post, and remittances for same, be addressed to "The Christian" Postal Department, Bouverie House, Salisbury Square, London, E.C.

Cheques and Post Orders to be made payable to Messrs John Haddon and Co. at that address. (For Subscription rates, see Page 1 of Cover.) Postcard or stamped envelope should be enclosed if receipt is desired.

Notes & Comments

The War in South Africa. There is a steadily-growing volume of prayer, with the war in South Africa as its burden. To God, "the Author of peace and lover of concord," we do well to cry, that peace and concord may be speedily given. During recent months many have learned for the first time the sorrows which enter the home in times of international strife. Politics take account of the causes, processes, and external results of war; love grieves over the wounded and the dead, is afflicted by the pain and privation endured on both sides of the conflict. Hence the urgency of prayer at the present time, when so many are in mourning. In many circles, Sunday next, July 21, will be specially observed as a day of supplication in this behalf. We hope that very many will unite in prayer, privately, socially, and publicly, for the earnestly-desired conclusion of the war, and for peace on a permanent basis—to the glory of God and the good of men.

Lazy Christians. Some friends are anxious that we should admonish the lazy Christians who abound in all churches. Sometimes an appeal is made at meetings asking any young men or women to rise to their feet as an expression of their readiness to go to the foreign field, if the way should be providentially opened. Immediately a good proportion of the youths and maidens rise; but if invited to undertake some much-needed work at home there is no affirmative response.

An Illustration. A young lady in New York declared her anxious desire to be sent as a missionary to China. Asked what she was doing among the Chinese in New York City, she replied that she did not want to evangelize the Chinese in her own city, but in China.

Unappropriated Blessings. A highly-valued friend of ours, herself an unappropriated blessing—i.e., an unmarried lady—is moved to indignation and to tears by the unwise ways of others in the same position. Our friend has during many years appropriated blessings to herself as a much-appreciated nurse of the sick and suffering. Her most recent sphere has been among the wounded, British and Boers alike, from the battlefields of South Africa. How many capable Christian women there are, from thirty-five to fifty-five (some with sufficient means for independent support), who might appropriate to themselves a sphere of usefulness in which they would experience "the good we all may do while the days are going by!" Multitudes who are now as useless as barren fig-trees might reap a rich harvest of souls before they die, or are caught up to meet the Lord in the air, if they would at once "arise and go."

Work at Home. They need not all go abroad. It is well that they should first be proved and approved at home. There are thousands of boys and girls in our towns and cities drifting to ruin. The orphan homes, large and small, save a sample of them, enough to show what might be done, but the bulk become mere human wreckage, the guilt of which lies at our own doors.

The Foreign Harvest Field. A lady of over fifty years, an earnest Y.W.C.A. worker, being released from home ties by the death of relatives, has gone to India at her own charges, having a small income equal to her needs. She is enjoying a new and richly blessed experience in Zenana work, and among the orphans made by the latest famine. Her letters are full of joy. She has far more pleasure than those who make pleasure their first object. Who will go and do likewise? But let beginners begin at home, and gain experience for the work abroad.

Spiritualism. A large class of people in this country are evidently imposed upon by the pretensions of Spiritualists, whose latest method of propaganda is continually to occupy the columns of daily newspapers with correspondence upon the subject. In several widely-circulated papers a controversy is at present proceeding, and the sum total of the arguments employed by the Spiritualists is that in the "manifestations" given at séances and elsewhere we have convincing proof of another life, whilst in the revelations made through mediums we have authentic information concerning the character of that life. In view of all that has transpired during the last few years it is a little surprising that men are still willing to regard with favour these pretensions. The editor of one paper in whose columns a correspondence anent this subject is taking place, says somewhat pertinently and bluntly:—

> That the dead rap at tables, write on slates, throw flowers, bang tambourines, ring bells, and knock furniture over, seems to me a very low ideal of spirit life.

This is the view of a practical, worldly man, and it really raises the whole question. For what have these wonderful "manifestations" really accomplished? What absolute good have they done? What reliable information have they imparted?

The Most Serious Consideration. To the Christian, however, the subject assumes a much more serious aspect. For this modern sorcery is absolutely forbidden by Holy Scripture, and those who practise it, little as may be the result of their work, fall under the condemnation of God. Modern Spiritualism is a practical denial of the veracity of our Divine Lord, who declared that if the Word of God failed to convince men of the truth, apparitions of the departed would be useless in convincing them. When once men forsake the light of the Word of God they expose themselves to every kind of will-o'-the-wisp, whose guidance always ends in the bog of negation or despair. We may be certain that, in so severely reprehending attempts to penetrate the mystery of the other world, God has acted in our own highest interests by screening from us that which, if we knew it at present too well, might inflict the deepest injury upon us. When the people hunger for the true Word of God, they will speedily turn from the forbidden but enticing and poisonous food which Spiritualism offers.

Guarding the Deposit. In an able article in the current number of The Expositor, Rev. David Smith, M.A., furnishes a scholarly statement of the manner in which the divine word of Reconciliation, and the historic facts of the Gospels, were preserved, and handed on unaltered and unimpaired. The paper is, moreover, valuable, because it directs attention to the warning in 1 Tim. vi. 20, 21, possibly overlooked by some preachers of to-day. Timothy was not merely to "guard the Deposit," he was also to "turn away from the profane babblings and oppositions of the knowledge falsely named, which certain professing missed the mark as regards the Faith." The windy vanities of the shallow-minded, and the metaphysical disputations of the philosophical, alike were to be disregarded. As Mr. Smith points out, Paul did not essay the refutation of those wranglers, and indeed why should he have done, seeing they were so busy refuting one another? So Timothy was to stand aloof, and to "guard the Deposit."

One-Sidedness. The will of God for each of his children is a perfectly developed character. Beginning with the heart, which must be cleansed and regenerated, the Holy Spirit would penetrate each part of our complex being with his power and love, and complete in us a work worthy of Himself. St. Paul prayed that the Thessalonians might be preserved blameless in spirit, soul, and body, and the prayer comprises a positive as well as a negative work. Yet, it is unhappily true that many of us are spoiled by reason of one-sidedness. Power in one part of our nature, and weakness in another part, means that there abides in us a perpetual hindrance to freedom and full growth. Thus many Churches seem to think that the cultivation of gymnastics amongst the young men is sufficient reason for abandoning the prayer meetings; others, providing for the latter, forget that the body also is the Lord's, and needs its due amount of attention. The man and woman whose whole nature, all round, is fulfilling the functions assigned to it by God, must certainly accomplish more enduring good than those who are one-sided, however good that side may be.

The Force of Personality. Much in Christian work depends upon the character and personality of the worker. The sword may be of the finest temper and capable of great execution, but the force of its stroke depends upon the muscle of the arm that wields it, and the precision of the judgment which moves the arm. There can be no doubt of the fact that God does count the character of the worker as an important item in his service. It has pleased Him to save men through men, and the message of truth may be spoiled or rendered attractive according to the disposition of him who delivers it.

Tabulating Results. All who carefully read current religious literature must be impressed with the practice which has become so common of exactly tabulating the results of Christian work. Statistics are often of great value, inasmuch as they act upon dispirited souls like a healthy tonic. On the other hand, they may, in certain cases, do more harm than good by emphasizing what is partial as if it were complete. We have every reason to be wary in tabulating the results of Christian work. A verbal profession of faith in Christ may not be followed by true discipleship. History is emphatic upon this point. We need only recall Simon Magus, Demas, Ananias, and Judas Iscariot. An esteemed Evangelist, whose renown is in all the Churches, was once asked how many persons had been converted during his mission. He made the grave reply, "So many inquirers have been dealt with, for which we thank God; but as to how many converts there have been, that is known alone to God, and He has not informed me of the number." We have always to remember that appearances are not always realities, and further, that some of the best work that is being done for God defies all computation.

The Two Classes of Criminals. Dr. Robert Anderson throws out a pregnant warning in the current Nineteenth Century against the tendency to treat all criminals alike, which is the bane of our English methods of justice. We do not, he says, "diagnose" cases of crime intelligently, but act like a quack doctor who has one remedy for all diseases. Dr. Anderson would draw a vital distinction between criminals who are "utterly weak" and those that are "utterly wicked," and isolate the former in "asylum prisons," where those who have given proof that they cannot be trusted with liberty are to be kept permanently, but not under the terribly severe conditions of penal servitude. As to the "utterly wicked" he would deal more stringently, shutting those up permanently who had proved themselves incorrigible, thus practically stamping out systematic and organized crime. Dr. Anderson's experience as a criminologist entitles his views to respectful consideration. They are, we understand, cordially shared by Justice Wills and other judges.

School Boards v. Crime. How far the absurd prejudice against the Welsh nation as lacking the quality of the highest honour is due to the old "nursery rhyme," "Taffy was a Welshman, Taffy was a thief," it would be difficult to say; but Justice Grantham at least rebutted the accusation with emphasis in charging a grand jury at the Montgomeryshire Assizes, pointing out that there is no county in England where there is so little crime as in the Principality, the immunity of Montgomeryshire from all kinds of illegal offences being "one of the most remarkable in history." We mention this by way of showing that the High Church contention, that "Hooliganism" is largely the result of "irreligious" School Board education, can scarcely hold water, in view of the fact that that system is almost universal in Wales, and that Nonconformity is largely responsible for the religious education of the Welsh people. Crimes of violence and dishonesty must come from other roots than these.

The Unowned Pauper. After a perusal of what has been designated the Greenwich Burial Scandal, there is indeed little, if any, room left for surprise that the poor should have an almost instinctive dislike of the workhouse. It is painful to find it admitted that the bodies of paupers had been almost indiscriminately huddled into coffins bearing the names of others. Much worse, however, is it to learn that from one workhouse last year twenty-six bodies had been "sent to the School of Anatomy." A statement, seemingly intended to be reassuring, was indeed added that only "unclaimed bodies" would be so disposed of in future, but the assurance is hardly of a kind to comfort those aged and friendless men and women who have been forced to seek the shelter of the workhouse. It goes without saying that even the pauper is entitled at least to Christian burial.

"The Unseen Universe." By the death of Prof. P. G. Tait, a noteworthy Christian scientist has passed away. In collaboration with Prof. Balfour Stewart, he wrote a celebrated book, called "The Unseen Universe," which showed how the facts of the physical universe require the hypothesis of a spiritual universe to balance them. This book, some twenty-five years ago, filled a large place in stemming the tide of materialism, which was then setting in strongly. Its unquestionable scientific accuracy, and its uncompromising religious tone, made a deep impression, and it has never been answered by the materialists, being still quoted as the highest authority on the subject with which it deals. There is, indeed, no scientific authority of any eminence who preaches materialism. That hard and barren cult "has had its day and ceased to be." Would that practical materialism had followed in the same way!

Rome and Carnal Weapons. It is indeed seldom that the advocates and apologists of Rome volunteer an admission that all is not well with them. A statement of the kind is made, however, in the recently-issued annual report of the Catholic Union. The compilers state that at the present time, in Great Britain, "Catholics are regarded with more disfavour than they have been for some time past." Two causes are put forward in explanation of this condition of things. One, the alleged influence upon the English mind of the anti-Catholic attitude of Continental journals "identified with the Catholic cause," and the other, "the violent invectives showered upon England by the Catholic prints in question." The Union wishes readers to discern that the animosity against England is political rather than theological; but this is what to a great extent Protestants have already done. It is a simple matter of history that Rome has ever been ready to exchange the argument for the sword and the martyr's fire. Our national records are full of pages narrating her attempts to enslave by means of statecraft and the secular arm. But even if this were not so, it is too early to forget the correspondence of the President of the Union, the Duke of Norfolk, with Cardinal Rampollo, as to the scurrilous attacks upon England in the Pope's subsidised journal, the Osservatore Romano, and his ineffectual personal protest at the Vatican. His Grace's prophecy was simply disregarded, it has now come to pass.

The Decay of French Catholicism. The Bishop of Annecy has decided to give up the annual procession of the Fête Dieu this year in consequence of the menacing opposition offered to it during the last few years. The significance of this course can be measured only by drawing a contrast. A generation ago the Fête Dieu was the great event of the year in every town and village. The army, civil authorities, heads of colleges and schools, representatives of trade and other societies, used to be conspicuous in its ranks; business and traffic were always stopped till the procession was over. The surrender of this procession marks an epoch in the steadily-waning power of the Papacy in France. Matters have recently been moving fast, and are clearly coming to a crisis. A nation cannot live without religion, and as the Pope's cause seems inevitably doomed, the need for more active propagandism on lines that are suited to the conditions of the case is urgent and imperative.

Another Cry from India. It is to be hoped that there will be a wide distribution in pamphlet form of the lecture recently delivered by Professor Romesh Dutt, one of the members of the "Indian Famine Union," to which Association reference was made in a recent issue. Unhappily there is much ignorance respecting the direct and indirect causes of the misery which from time to time culminate in one of the periodical famines which devastate India. Professor Dutt's facts and figures are well calculated to instruct the public mind. In showing unmistakably that some of the chief factors are economic, he adds to the gravity of the charges which have been made against the Administration. There can, unfortunately, be no extenuation of the dread fact that during the last half-century over 15,000,000 of our subjects in India have died of starvation and from diseases following in the wake of hunger. Christian philanthropy has not been behindhand in alleviating the sufferings; but it remains for the public to insist upon the adoption by the Government of wiser and more statesmanlike methods of dealing with a population burdened by a heavy land tax, and other oppressive imposts.

Religion and Amusement. Dr. Fairbairn, in addressing the delegates of the British Conference of the Y.M.C.A.'s of England and Ireland, made some wise remarks on the relation of religion to amusement. When he was a young minister, he pleaded earnestly that amusements should be made Christian. He was still of that opinion, but he was not sure that the modern tendency was not to make Christianity amusing. The attempt to substitute recreative amusement, or forms of play, for large and Christian questions in young men's organizations, can only result in finding the word "Ichabod" written over them. This is a hint that the leaders in such societies would do well to remember. It is growing increasingly unfashionable to have religious questions discussed, or even religious opinions uttered, in literary societies connected with the churches, while "recreative" evenings are all to the fore. This is not the way in which the sturdy manhood of the past was built up.

The Sanctified Half Hour. The halfpenny newspaper, with its condensed paragraphs of exciting, and, too often, unhealthy news, has much to answer for in developing that habit of desultory reading which has become a characteristic of our modern life. Many people now find in the daily journal their sole intellectual food. They never reach even the low level of those so-called books for leisure which, if not helpful, are not of a directly injurious tendency. Those helpful volumes which are for the sweet refreshment of mind and soul have become distasteful to them. The loss is great, for from such books we may turn calmed and strengthened after the worries and disappointments of the busy day. They are the literature of peace, and those who enter into their spirit are led further into the quiet resting-places of that divine volume which breathes to man the compassion and love of Him "who was slain, and hath redeemed us to God."

The Protestant Succession.

THERE are indications of a deep and widespread interest in the important question of the Protestant Succession. As we have already pointed out, the Protestant Succession is the fact which lies behind the Royal Declaration against Transubstantiation and other Romish dogmas. The Protestant Succession is provided for by statute. The Declaration is the means by which the Royal compliance and profession are ascertained and avowed before the world.

As sure, however, as the object of the Declaration is to secure the people against a Popish prince, so sure is it that the Romanist assault on the Declaration is no mere criticism of its terms, but a deliberate attack upon the instrument itself. From time to time the true aim of the agitators has been made clear; in the words of the Jesuit organ, Catholic Progress, written when our late noble Queen Victoria was in the midst of her reign (December, 1873): "It is a barbarous law which hinders our gracious Sovereign from embracing the faith of her glorious predecessors if she wished to do so. . . . A Catholic will make as good a Chancellor as a Protestant. So, whatever we have got, we do not rest quite satisfied." No; as we pointed out weeks ago, Rome has no intention to "rest satisfied." She seeks to govern the throne; and in view of the favour which she has secured in influential quarters, it is feared by some that God Himself must intervene, if Rome's designs are to be frustrated, and our liberties as a people are to be maintained.

AN ADDRESS TO THE KING.

The Church Association, in an address to the King, says:

Your faithful Protestant subjects warmly resent the offensive and disloyal criticisms which have been launched against this Declaration which your Majesty, in the fulfilment of your obligations as the Constitutional Monarch of a Protestant nation, felt called upon to make. They know that it is absolutely necessary for the Declaration to be as strongly worded as it is, in order to exclude any sincere Roman Catholic from ever consenting to adopt it. Mere vague general professions of protection or patronage of the Church would be quite inadequate for the purpose.

The Declaration was not in its origin, as some have represented, the offspring of violent Party strife. It was the deliberate outcome from "the long results of time," of the accumulated experience, acquired during the reigns of three successive Sovereigns, of the actual perils to the liberty of the subject, and to the Throne itself, which in fact had resulted whenever the Monarch was a concealed Romanist or had married a Roman Catholic. The great Civil War was but one of the results of the profound mutual distrust excited by persistent and concealed machinations of the agents of the court of Rome.

Our Sovereign's repudiation of distinctively Papal doctrines cannot be reasonably considered as in any way directed against the personal belief of anyone. We recognise to the full the right of our Roman Catholic fellow-subjects to the free exercise of their religion, but while respecting their liberties we also feel the necessity that the liberties of Protestants should still be safeguarded. Protestantism openly professes to give liberty to all, but the Canon Law, which is binding throughout the Church of Rome, is utterly incompatible with the principles of civil and religious freedom. Protestants look upon the Sovereign's Constitutional Declaration in Parliament as the greatest of the few remaining securities for their liberties, and any weakening of it would cause widespread alarm and apprehension among the vast majority of your Majesty's subjects.

THE "AMENDED" DECLARATION.

SIR,—The proposed changes in the Royal Declaration should be vigorously opposed, for the following reasons:—

1. The wording, as suggested, appears to me to be quite unworthy the high character of the promise that should be made by the Sovereign to guard the doctrine of Christ against the counterfeits of the same found in the Church of Rome.

2. If that Church feels herself aggrieved, much less insulted, by the words, "idolatries and superstitions," in regard to what she calls "the sacrifice of the Mass," she alone is to blame for the position. She created the situation by turning the memorial feast of Christ's dying love into an occasion for an assumption of priestly position and function which, if it were true, would mean that Christ's one and only sacrifice for sins has not been offered.

3. When I read the proposed change of words suggested by the committee, the thought instinctively rose to my mind, "Are there no wise men among you?" It would be unjust to say that such a production contains any deep conviction either of the sacredness of the truths involved, or the necessity for the throne guarding the same.

4. Who can fail to see from the lawless spirit of the recent address of Lord Halifax that he would go to any lengths in order to bring this country again under the power of Rome.

5. To me the most grievous part of the whole business is, that upon the platform of liberty, falsely so-called, our Free Church leaders, and indeed numbers of professing Christians, are playing into the hands of the most corrupt form of ecclesiasticism that the world has ever seen; the despotism of Rome never meant liberty, the history of the Latin nations of Europe being witness and proof ever since the Papacy arose.

No greater proof of the Divine judgment resting upon Britain could be than to see these favoured lands blighted and cursed with the idolatrous abominations which led the Holy Spirit to characterize the Church of Rome as "the mother of harlots." HENRY VARLEY.

A TIME FOR PRAYER.

SIR,—In the long process of Romanising our country through the Church of England, may we not see that the enemy has just been attacking the outworks; now, as if these were all driven in, the advance is made on the "Central Citadel" itself—the King's Declaration on oath. If that falls, all is over. Rome knows what a simply impregnable position we hold in the present Declaration, and wants something substituted for it, which, however good it might appear to be, will not stand the test which the present one has stood, and will stand.

May God open the eyes of the people to see the true and fearful character of Rome, and may there be no ultimate yielding to the enemy. It is a time to do as dear George Müller said on one occasion—"Pray, pray, pray." G.

Bournemouth.

SIR,—At this terrible crisis in our national history when we are being led by our rulers into the hands of our enemy, Rome, the implacable foe of truth and liberty, and when efforts made to arouse the people seem almost fruitless, is it not time for an earnest united cry to go up to God from all true believers who are awake to the danger threatening the country? It appears to me that we are in such a position as were the Israelites of old when those to whom they had shown special favour rewarded them by seeking to cast them out of their God-given possession (2 Chron. xx.). May we, realizing our own weakness as did they, humble ourselves, and may our prayers now be as real, definite, and effectual as were theirs, when, led by Jehoshaphat, they gathered together to seek the Lord and ask help of Him. "O, our God, wilt Thou not judge them, for we have no might against this great company that cometh against us, neither know we what to do, but our eyes are upon Thee."

We have, indeed, many national sins to confess and mourn over—opium and the drink traffic, as well as this wilful relapse into the darkness of Popery, and our only hope is in God; but for the removal of these things He "would be inquired of."—Yours faithfully,

A PROTESTANT.

Protestant Press Agency.—From time to time attention has been called to the work of the Protestant Press Agency, which seeks to counteract the Ritualistic and Romish propaganda in the Press. The organization has the support of Revs. Dr. Horton, Hugh Price Hughes, J. Neill, the Baron A. Porcelli, &c. Copies of newspapers containing Ritualistic and Romish matter will be welcomed by the secretary, Mr. A. Lelièvre, 2, Buckland House, Offord Road, Barnsbury.

Time to Awake!

THERE is only too good reason to believe that the present position of Roman Catholicism in the country is not appreciated by British Protestants. The majority of our people seem willing, without inquiry, to go on in the belief that matters in this respect stand where they did a generation ago; and, at least, for the present, the Church of Rome is content that this sense of security should prevail. But within its own borders there is deep satisfaction, not only at the progress during recent decades in the matter of numbers, but even more over the change which has taken place in the attitude assumed towards it by all classes of the community. The following extracts are from a recent Roman Catholic work, by Mr. Percy Fitzgerald:—

POPULAR FAVOUR RECOGNISED.

Nothing is more extraordinary or more favourable than the position of the Catholic Church and its doctrine in England at this moment. It is received and cordially accepted. There is even an amount of favour extended towards it almost beyond what is shown to other sects. It seems to be thought an interesting, almost dramatic, institution. Its services are recognised as part of the regular official routine. It is a common thing enough to see Royal personages with their suites patiently sitting out long offices for the dead, or attending marriages at our great Catholic churches. Catholic processions pass through the more retired streets of London, where banners and crosses are carried, surplices and vestments are worn, vast crowds lining the pathways and looking on with interest and curiosity.

CATHEDRAL INFLUENCE.

A year or two ago we find Dr. Temple, the Archbishop, in his charge at Canterbury (October, 1898), speaking casually of "the Blessed Virgin." This coming from the head of the English Church, and from so practical and robust a character, seemed significant enough. The tardy reparation to Our Lady is most welcome, and will surely win her favour if not a blessing. Again, there was a time within living memory when the "Three Hours' Agony," as it was called, was thought among Catholics to be a somewhat exceptional devotion, and was confined to the Jesuit churches. But who could have dreamed of such a thing as that, in the year of grace 1899, it should have been performed at the three great cathedrals—at St. Paul's, at Westminster, and at Southwark!

"THE IMPORTANT CHURCHES WILL SOON FOLLOW."

One may indeed be grateful when one thinks how even such an imperfect manifestation must help to spread through the country, in a very solemn and serious way, a deeper sense and compassionate feeling for the Passion of our Saviour. Further, once the cathedrals have taken the lead all the important churches will not be slow to follow, and indeed are following rapidly. The curious thing is that there is no surprise or vituperation—the thing is accepted as of perfect propriety and as consistent with Protestantism. And yet the principle can hardly be construed in any way save as something altogether Catholic, and leavening all it touches with Catholicity.

THE OUTCOME OF TRACTARIANISM.

The Ritualist developments of these latter times would fill the older moderate Tractarians or "Puseyites" with wonder and perhaps consternation. . . . Wherever we turn our eyes we see souvenirs of the old faith; bishops in mitres and carrying croziers; candles, crosses, and altars in St. Paul's; a statue of the Blessed Virgin at the door of the Abbey; the sacrament carried in procession and "reserved," with "censer," copes and stoles and birettas.

With these utterances in view, is it not time that the nation were awaked out of sleep on a matter so materially affecting the well-being of the people, and the place of the Church of God?

The Epistle of James.

By Rev. T. A. GURNEY, M.A., LL.B., Swanage.

IX.—The Judgment of the Tongue, and the Reward of Heavenly Wisdom (iii. 1-18).

OUR faith must be an active faith if it is to win final approval. But that activity must express itself in deeds, not by a shallow aggressiveness against others' faults, but by showing in a good life our works in meekness of wisdom. Just as James had said before, "Become ye doers of the word (i. 22), and not hearers only," so here he would add, "and not teachers only," for such teaching implies "a heavier judgment." It is noteworthy that he includes himself in the warning ("we"). He felt the danger of the spirit of that age, which loved to talk instead of practising, to discuss the minutiæ of traditionalism instead of following humbly the revealed will of God, to quarrel under the name of religion, confounding quarrelling with religious zeal.

He lived, as we have seen, under the sense of an impending judgment soon to fall upon the nation as a whole. He saw the last climax of the age of the scribes. "That inestimably precious, unorganized institution—the Order, if it may be so termed, of the Jewish prophets," as John Stuart Mill once wrote, had been succeeded, from the days of Ezra onwards, by a new order of teachers increasing in power and influence till they overshadowed the prerogative of the High Priest and grasped the reins of the Sanhedrim itself. Literalism, in contrast to spirituality, held sway over the life of Israel. And this expressed itself in the religious and political factions, in the rivalries of self-constituted teachers, which were the growing and saddening features of those last days in which he lived. It grew to a climax when, with their dread foe Titus at the gate, the city within fought under its rival leaders, John of Gischala, Simon Bar-Giora, and Eleasar, till it had all the marks of a battlefield. At such times, it is rather in the repression than the expression of the tongue that true self-mastery lies. Therefore, he says, "Do not rush into the office of teacher, my brethren, knowing that we teachers shall receive a severer judgment. As to many things we all alike stumble. If any man stumbleth not in word, the same is a perfect man, able to bridle the whole body also." About the time when James wrote these words, fanatics had led forth multitudes into the wilderness, with the promise that there they would show them semeia eleutherias, 'the signs of liberty', or freedom from the Roman yoke. James says, "No, it is in obedience to the nomos eleutherias (ii. 12), the law of liberty, that true freedom consists."

The control of the tongue is given us here as the illustration of a perfect self-mastery. It is striking to mark how this thought lies in the forefront of the Epistle. No other epistle so vividly emphasizes throughout

THE USE AND ABUSE OF THE TONGUE.

Tradition seems to paint James as a man of few words, fonder of silence than of speech, and then speaking with authority (Acts xv. 19, "My sentence is"). "The just one," as his contemporaries called him, hated noisy hypocrisy. Notice how many times he alludes to the abuse of speech:—the blaming God for temptation (i. 13); the swift utterance of words which gender to wrath and condemn others hastily (i. 19); the profession of great religiousness and party zeal with a self-deceived heart (i. 26); the unctuous, insincere adulation of the rich, coupled with supercilious contempt of the poor (ii. 3); the philanthropy of mere phrases to starving brethren (ii. 16); the claim to a faith which cannot be proven by fruit (ii. 14); the shibboleth of an orthodox creed in which even demons share (ii. 19); the blessing of God as Father whilst you curse his children (iii. 9); the lying against the truth through bitter jealousy, with false boast the while of wisdom (iii. 14); the failure to turn speech into the heaven-borne current of prayer (iv. 2); the asking in vain with evil motive (iv. 3); the idle boast of to-morrow when (see R.V. iv. 14) "ye are a vapour," vanishing like morning mist; the glorying "in our self-confident speeches" (iv. 16); the murmuring one against another with the Judge standing at the very door (v. 9). But James dwells also upon speech sanctified:—asking in faith for wisdom, nothing doubting (i. 6); glorying in spiritual privilege amid earthly poverty (i. 9, 10); like Jesus in the Temple, "both hearing . . . and asking questions," in its desire to learn (i. 19); weighing words and actions alike in view of Mercy's Grand Assize (ii. 12); sowing peace in place of party strife, and reaping righteous reward (iii. 18); confessing contrition in "godly sorrow not to be repented of" (iv. 10); submissively committing to God (iv. 15); shunning the hasty oath, but stirring up to mutual confession ("one to another," v. 16); supplicating help in sickness; praying for those afflicted (v. 13, 14), or singing psalms of praise; pleading for others with prayer, like that of Elias, "energized by the Spirit of God," or turning the wayward from sinful courses, and thus saving a soul from death (v. 19, 20).

OUR FUTURE AND ITS CONCERNS

The tongue is presented under three aspects here, which emphasize its power, its abuse, and its sanctification.

I. It is A Microcosm of Man (iii. 5). Very small (mikros), yet a world (kosmos, 6), in itself, a true index of the power or weakness behind it. "Speak that I may see thee," were the words Socrates uttered when he saw a boy with a beautiful countenance. Three illustrations clench this fact home. The bridle in the horses' mouths by which "we turn about their whole body." The "very small" paddle-rudders on the clumsy ships of the Mediterranean, whereby, in spite of rough winds, they are turned about "whither the impulse of the steersman willeth" (or, "the pressure of the steersman's hand on the tiller decides," Mayor). And the little fire kindling the great forest. "So the tongue also is a little member and boasteth great things" (5). Literally, the words read, "How small a fire kindles how large a forest."

II. A Microcosm of Hell. The words which follow are passionate in their intensity and vividness. They reflect the deep, inwrought conviction in the heart of "the just man," of the harm and ruin wrought among his fellows by

THE MISUSE OF THE GIFT OF GOD.

"What reward shall be given or done unto thee, thou false tongue?" (Psa. cxx. 3). He follows up the illustration already given:—

(a) The tongue is a fire. It not only gives expression but intensity to any passing passion, leaping like flame beyond all guidance and control. Our ideas are but in half consciousness till they find actual birth in speech. The lava within the volcano mouth has nought of the freedom for mischief wrought by the lava rolling down the mountain sides. So the tongue is like the locomotive gauge which reveals the strength of the pent-up forces within. In that very revelation there is danger both for self and others. "Xenophon would have all speeches written (Manton), to make men more serious." Those swift shafts of speech are like "sharp arrows of the mighty, like fire in juniper woods" (Stier, Psa. cxx. 3, 4). By fire from the altars of God alone can this microcosm of hell be cleansed. "Lo, this hath touched thy lips, and thine iniquity is taken away and thy sin purged" (Isa. vi. 7). The promise to Jeremiah is "I will make my words in thy mouth fire" (v. 14). The cloven "tongues like as of fire" light upon the "captains of the saintly band" (Acts ii. 3), and speech becomes the vehicle of the Eternal Spirit. "The answer of the tongue is from the Lord" still.

(b) It represents the world of iniquity. "The world of iniquity among our members is the tongue" (6), the microcosm of that evil world of prejudices, jealousies, hatreds, lusts, which is ever around us endangering the soul. "With lies it cutteth like a sharp razor." The "poison of asps" is in it. "Thou hast loved to speak all words that may do hurt, O thou false tongue." Just as all the beauties of that outer world are caught upon the retina of the eye and reflected, so with the tongue and our environment of passion and evil. That world is here viewed as "under the dominion of unrighteousness," "an opaque instead of a window for the view of God" (Mayor). How often the voice from that outer world constrains to sin. Now it urges Satan's questionings: "Yea, hath God said?"; now Delilah's seductions: "Tell me where thy great strength lieth"; now Jezebel's craft: "I will give thee the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite"; now the enemy's watchfulness: "Thou also wast with Jesus of Nazareth"; now man's betrayal of God: "We have no King but Cæsar."

LOOKING-GLASS FOR SELFISHNESS,

(c) It defileth the whole body (6). The illustration is a strange one. The expression, "the wheel of nature," is not self-evident. It probably means "the whole round of our mortal life" (Mayor), perhaps with a combination in the picture of that life in its completeness, and in its constant change and flux. But Huther translates "the wheel of birth," "the wheel which is set in motion from our birth," a poetic description of life. The tongue is the burning axle which sets aflame this revolving wheel of human life and passion. That flame is kindled from a hidden source. "Set on fire of Hell" (cf. the threefold gradation which corresponds in 15).

(d) It is restless and harmful. It cannot be tamed. It is an unstable (same word i. 8) evil, "full of deadly poison." "Blessing and cursing are in the power of the tongue." The point in the sad contrast is that all this strife of words goes so often under the name of religion. A fountain discharging from the same source sweet and bitter, or a vine bringing forth figs, could not be more self-condradictory.

III. A Microcosm of Heaven. Turn to the happier side of the picture, the sanctification of the tongue (13-18). The tongue itself is no longer mentioned because it is no longer prominent. Works, not words, mark the wisdom which cometh from above. It teaches by practice. It bears witness by holy living. It is pure, and thus "sees God" (Matt. v. 8). It is "peaceable," as belongs to the children of God (Matt. v. 9). It is filled with sweet reasonableness, not pressing its rights (epieikēs) It is docile and tractable (eupeithēs) "not rendering railing for railing." It is full of the mercy which "blesseth him thatgi ves and him that takes." It is laden with fruits, not talk. "What shall Cordelia do? Love and be silent." It is "whole-hearted" (R.V.), and without hypocrisy. It reaps a sure harvest of righteousness sown in guileless peace.

THE MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

God Manifest in His People.

Rev. H. B. MACARTNEY.

As a workman lightens himself for his labour, I must put aside some of the things which I hold in my hand. Here is my "Birthday Book," with names on one side, and personal, family, and national memoranda on the other. Under to-day's date is the name of one who was my Sunday school teacher and became Chief Justice of Victoria. In Australia the children of the gentry go to Sunday school; and I wish it were so in England. The next name is that of a bright evangelist, and his reference, John xiv. 27, connects itself with my theme of Christian holiness. For years I thought that I must keep the peace of God, until I found, from Phil. iv. 7, that the peace of God was to keep me.

The second thing that I have in my hand is a faded photograph of Queen Victoria. Its defects remind me that we are poor reproductions of the Master. Still, preachers will find it more profitable to set forth the glories of Christ than to dwell upon human shortcomings. We cannot impart the power that makes men like Christ, but we can do our best to present Him who is altogether lovely. There is a third thing in my hand—

THE BOOK.

Alas! it is far less venerated than was the written Word in the days of our Lord; and, being little read, its truths are neither understood nor believed by the many. For want of a better word, let me say that God tried the "experiment" of revealing Himself to sinners by taking the form of a Man. After four thousand years of ever-deepening darkness Christ came to be "a Light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of his people Israel." When He left this world, was the darkness to gather again? Nay! God's "experiment" was repeated by the multiplication of Christ's image in his people; and the Holy Ghost in them took the place of an absent Lord. By some preachers much is made of the fact that we are, and must be, sinners; but I would rather dwell upon the fact that we are, and must be, saints. God's provision for his people's holiness is upon a scale generous, and sufficient, and worthy of Himself. The chain of sin exists, but its links are broken. "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."

For thirty years our Lord's life, in all its relations, was one of subjection; but from his baptism with the Holy Ghost He rose against feeding the hungry, healing the sick, and casting out devils. Christ's great enemy could gain no advantage over Him; the Saviour beheld Satan as lightning fall from heaven. He who thus conquered will make us conquerors too, when we fully yield to the power of the Spirit.

THE GOD OF THIS WORLD,

Christians are to be conformed to the image of Christ; but in order to reach that eminence, the Church in England needs a new Reformation. As a colonist come to dwell among you, I am pained to see how family prayer is declining. There should be intercessors and spiritual watchmen upon earth, corresponding in their measure to our great Intercessor in glory. We make little progress in prayer until our wistful, yearning eyes actually meet his eyes. This is reality.

There seems also to be a need in this country for earlier rising to study the Scriptures. Thus we grow; and thus those who will not read the Bible may read the Master's living epistles as the men of his day could not but read Him. In order to be like our Lord we must see Him in the Word—that is the meeting place. An eminent Christian told me that the trysting place between his soul and God was found in the specific promise needed for the moment.

Speaking plainly on another point, I think the time has come when those who once wore the blue ribbon should put it on again. Were Britain's annual income to pass by in long procession, and the precious metal had power of speech would have to say, "I am for strong drink"; but only one in a thousand, "I am for heralding the name of Jesus abroad"; and only one in twenty-five thousand, "I am for multiplying copies of God's Word." And, further, these few seeds of revelation are sown in vain unless bathed in our prayers and wet with our tears (Psa. cxxvi. 6).

EVERY TENTH COIN

What of Britain's enormous wealth? As the man who is accustomed to style and luxury enters some ill-furnished dwelling, he is repeatedly asked to pardon the poverty apparent in this and that. It should be the other way; many rich Christians might well apologize for the costly but useless adornments of their home or person. We have need to learn of Him who, "though He was rich, yet for our sakes He became poor." I know that there are lovely Christian characters to be found in great mansions; all I plead for is for the grace that holds lands, houses, and possessions at the disposal of God, while we submit all that concerns us to the authority of this blessed Book.

The Communion address was delivered by Rev. D. M. McIntyre, and was based on John xiii. 36, "Thou shalt follow Me afterwards." The speakers in the evening were Rev. John Wilkinson, who dealt with Israel's place in the purposes of God; and who was delighted to observe that the thesis of the Conference brings us face to face with the doctrine of the Trinity in Unity. The work of God the Father as Creator, of God the Spirit as Revealer, and of Christ as God manifest in the flesh, meets every human need in the material, rational, and spiritual spheres. God's word, in creation, is an absolute fiat; in revelation, it is an appeal to reason; and in manifestation, an appeal to love. The manifestation of God, in grace, brings us to the Person of Christ; in government or guidance, to the Person of the Holy Ghost; and, in glory, to essential Deity.

REV. PREBENDARY WEBB-PEPLOE,

In the days of their innocence Adam and Eve, with the eye of their being (whether spiritual, mental, or bodily), looked upon, apprehended, and appreciated God in whose image man was made. Sin came into the world by the turn of man's eye from its true Centre to the tempter. Then the human eye could no longer apprehend God; and, from that time to Christ's birth, there was but incidental vision here and there, as God was pleased to manifest Himself in human form, as the Angel of the Covenant. But, as soon as there was appreciation of Deity, Godhead must withdraw; for sinful man could not bear the holy presence.

In the fulness of time, Christ appeared as God manifest in the flesh; not a passing visitation, but

AN ABIDING REALITY.

In Him we know and see that God and man may be united for ever, so as to have the same nature, home, life, and purposes. During Christ's absence, the Godhead, in its deep spiritual essence, is manifested in the Church, which is Christ's body, by the guidance and governance of the Holy Ghost.

We look for the time when the Godhead shall be manifested in glory. Christ shall be revealed from heaven, manifesting God in a spiritual body; and his saints, gathered unto Him, shall be changed into the same image. The one thing that seems to satisfy the spiritual instincts and desires of the redeemed man, is the prospect of laying his coming dominion in Christ at the feet of God, that He may be all and in all for evermore.

Under the Mulberry Tree.

Y.M.C.A. and Y.W.C.A.

A magnificent audience gathered to greet Mr. and Mrs. Oatts after their journey round the world. Mrs. Oatts laid particular stress on the wonderful openings in India among the English-speaking people. The missionaries had their hands full in caring for the spiritual wants of the native races; but there was a great need of lady workers who would take up and help in Y.W.C.A. work. In Australia and New Zealand the workers were earnest and enthusiastic; but they were all too few. Many who were working in the Mission fields bore witness to having been converted in the Y.W.C.A. Association. In a Mission school at Port Said a Syrian girl said, "I was converted and joined at Beyrout," and another said, "I was brought in in California." Wherever it was possible branches were started even as far away as Honolulu.

Mr. Oatts spoke of their having travelled 46,000 miles. He had not missed a single train or boat, nor had he disappointed one meeting, nor had he witnessed or suffered through any accident. Two months were spent in India, where there were 60,000,000 young men highly educated, but who were as easily slain by their besetting sins as men in Western lands.

There were 131 branches of the Y.M.C.A. in India. Speaking of the temptations of the English young men in Burmah, Mr. Oatts said: At home there are holy ties, the influence of others; but there the temptations are awful. An old Glasgow Y.M.C.A. man assured him that hardly one per cent. resisted the temptation to sin. How thankful should the mothers of such men be to know that there was an association there to seek to rescue young men. In Australia the great difficulty in their work was three-fold—from indifference, the desire to make money, and the love of pleasure.

No work seemed so striking a success as the Montreal Association. In Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto, leading men were found who had been blessed in Montreal.

Mrs. Cumming, of Hyderabad, pleaded for earnest, spirit-filled women to go out to India, and told how the heathen are stumbled by the lives of English people who are not converted, and emphasized the lack of Christian workers in the needy places where there were many English-speaking people.

Irish Church Missions.

A meeting was held of the Irish Church Missions, when Rev. Stanley J. Hersee spoke. "The condition of the South of Ireland," he said, "must be seen to be understood; a little paint on the outside of the windows may be put on, if it is a particular saint's day, but go inside, and you will find pigs and people, a cow and calves in an apartment with no window and no chimney, a fire burning, and the only opening a very low door, through which you must stoop to pass through. In the South the bondage of Rome is terrible; the priests make no effort to raise the people from their ignorance."

Mr. Hersee told of the work being done by the Misses Smyly, of Dublin, of the work in the fairs of Ireland, and of the sale of copies of the New Testament by the Society's agent, also of the persistent work of trained men in open-air preaching in the cities, despite opposition.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes.

The meeting in connection with the institutions under Dr. Barnardo's care was presided over by Prebendary Webb-Peploe, who spoke of the great growth of the work since its inception thirty-five years ago, the income for 1866 being £214 6s., whilst that of 1900 was £148,614. There are ninety-one different institutions in working order.

Special emphasis was laid on the fact, that whilst the work was largely philanthropic, yet the chief aim is to lead all who come under the influence of the work to the living Saviour; and there was cause for praise that many who had suffered from the effects of moral, physical, and spiritual degradation had been brought out of such position, and savingly brought in to the Kingdom of God.

Miss Bessie Code, in a singularly able and interesting address, spoke of what she had seen of the work in Canada, where she had laboured for some twelve years. She told also of the Village Home at Ilford—of some children who seemed as happy as any of our children in the West End, but who had once known the cruelty of a brutal father, and of others, alas, who have suffered so from neglect in the past, that they had only been rescued to die amidst more comfortable surroundings. Smeared by the touch of vice, how many are there "orphans of the earthly love, and heavenly!"

Canon Girdlestone followed with an address in which he told of certain things the director of this work believed in: (I.) Surroundings. Heredity accounted for a good deal, but that we could not alter, but we can alter the surroundings, and it has been proved to be stronger than the former. (II.) Industry. All had to be busy; no room at Stepney for idle hands. If not working, learning. (III.) The grace of forgetfulness. Time is a wonderful healer, and little ones soon forgot the dark past as they lived in the bright present. Turn out the darkness by letting in the light. "Let the blessed sunshine in." Turn out the evil by letting in the "Grace of God"; empty by filling. These are the right means, and they are being used in this work. (IV.) Conversion to Christ.—This is seen not only in the Edinburgh Castle Mission Church, but in every home where the girls and boys are inmates. In many ways they seek the salvation of the souls of the children, and all know that rich rewards have followed the efforts of those who were thus blessedly occupied.

Young Abstainers' Union.

Mrs. Caine told of the beginning of this Union twenty-one years ago; now there are 118 branches. Speaking of the necessity of the Union, she remarked that she had never seen a woman drunk in the United States, and contrasted it with the sad condition of many in our own land, and called upon all to help to sustain this valuable work among the young.

Rev. W. R. Mowll, of Brixton, gave an earnest and enthusiastic address. "The wearing of the blue" was the exception now, but he found it most useful, not only helping him to speak on temperance, but also to bear witness for Christ.

Ladies have said, "It does not suit my complexion;" whilst a man of great ability in Cambridge chaffed him for wearing it. The person had a good deal of colour himself, especially on one part of his face. "I wonder you wear that bit of colour in your buttonhole," he said. Mr. Mowll replied: "I may as well wear it there as on my nose." A doctor had said to him: "Your principles are right; when I want to pull a man through quick I knock off his stimulants." "Why, then, don't you preach it?" "Why? I'd lose all my patients pretty quick."

In closing, Mr. Mowll told of a man who stopped him in the city and thanked him for saving him from a madhouse. He had been present in a London church, where the preacher declared that the Lord Jesus Christ could save, and would save, any man who was enslaved by the curse of strong drink. He had been warned by his doctor, but had never been able to conquer his sin, till, learning of Christ's willingness to save, he had trusted Him, and now had complete victory over his sin.

The Paris City Mission Meeting was presided over by Mr. Seagram. Mr. W. J. Lockie told of its beginning in 1893, and ofits growth since, and Pastor Van der Beken gave encouraging report of the year's work. Some eighty-nine families had come right over from Roman Catholicism, and whole villages were inquiring after a purer religion. Great blessing had also been seen in the Sunday Schools.

The London City Mission Meeting

followed. Mr. Walter Prentice, who labours among the coalies, owes his education to Mildmay, as well as his salvation. He told how he had brought some tons of coal himself into the cellars of Mildmay. After entering on the work of a missionary, one proprietor ordered him off his premises, but, as Mr. Prentice said, "I've lived to see him alter his mind, for he now gives an annual subscription of £2 2s., and his firm gave us £10 10s. annually." Many instances of conversion were related. As evidence of the good work done by the missionary, 1,600 of the coalies subscribed and gave him a portable harmonium, which is known as the "Coalies' Baby."

Mr. S. Crozier followed. Labouring among the hundreds of men at the Beckton Gas Works, he told of the damage done by the "bookmakers," and as no one seemed able to stop these men from taking a large percentage of the labourers' earnings, he implored the authorities to make him manager for a week, or at least give him authority to act. This being agreed to, he had eight large boards painted—

"TRESPASSERS WILL BE PROSECUTED."

These he put up at different places on the works, and asked the sergeant of police to be within call about 10 a.m. the next morning. About that time a well-dressed man in light clothes was seen approaching some of the workmen. "What do you here?" asked the missionary.

"Who are you?" asked the bookie. "I'm the spiritual policeman, and the manager here. Can you read?" "Of course I can."

"Well, read that," pointing to a notice. "Sergeant, see this man off our premises, and if you see him here again, lock him up." They have not been troubled with the bookmakers since.

Having got rid of one evil, he next turned his attention to another. Every morning a man brought a cask of beer, and retailed it out to the men. The new manager (pro tem.) approached him: "Have you got a licence to sell that stuff?" "No, we don't want a licence to bring it here for the men's benefit." "Oh! is that so? Let's ask this gentleman: 'Revenue officer, this man has been selling beer without a licence; what's the right thing to do?'" Result: the man was locked up.

These city missionaries are specialists, and good work is being done by 460 such, of which these two are only samples. A wonderful case of conversion was related of a man who had been in prison twenty-seven times. The change was so real that the Inspector of Police was surprised at the man's consistency of life, and said to him: "How is it, Jem, we never see you at the police station now?" Jem replied with a fine vein of humour; "Oh, I've done with bad company now."

Meetings in the Tent.

Army Scripture Readers.

Lieut.-General the Hon. B. M. Ward presided over a meeting in connection with the Army Scripture Readers' Society, and recalled his experiences when he joined the Army fifty years ago. Then it was an exceptional thing to meet a Christian in the ranks. That day, happily, has passed, and no one can now think of the numbers of Christian officers and men without feeling how much there is which calls for thanksgiving to God. There has also been a vast improvement in the soldier's lot, and in the physical, moral, and spiritual conditions under which he lives. Some 200 officers and subordinates assemble every week for the purpose of laying the Society's work before God in prayer. Outside the barracks the ladies' efforts have borne abundant fruit, and the work of the Scripture Readers inside the barracks has been followed with equally encouraging Results. Unfortunately there are only sixty readers at present engaged, and, with the contemplated strengthening of the Army, it is desirable that their number should be largely increased.

A strong plea for sympathy for soldiers was made by Colonel Van Someren, who rejoiced that the nation, as well as Christian people in particular, are awakening to a sense of their true worth. The Army Scripture Readers' Society, he asserted, does nothing but spiritual work, making its basis the Word of God. During the last thirty years 1,000,000 British lads have passed through the ranks. We owe a great debt to the Army which cannot be repaid in a better way than in sending forth men to minister to the spiritual needs of our country's defenders. The Readers are old soldiers, who know the most effective means by which the recruits can be reached. Our soldiers are missionaries on the side of Christ or Satan.

Tidings of the ministrations of the Society's agents in South Africa were brought by Readers Wood and Ewing, who related their experiences, extending over eighteen months. Each bore warm testimony to the manliness and courage of the troops, and their willingness to listen to the Gospel, whether on deck of the transport vessel or on the veldt.

Christian Police Association.

Presiding at the meeting held in the tent on Wednesday afternoon, in the interests of the International Christian Police Association, Mr. F. A. Bevan spoke in appreciative terms of the efforts which are made both in the Metropolis and the Provinces to minister to the spiritual and temporal needs of our constabulary forces. Christian work, he considered, should be done in sections; policemen, soldiers, sailors, and railway men should be taken as such. God has wonderfuliy blessed the work among the police. The constable is subject to great temptations. His life is not an enviable one, and he is not allowed to do all he might in changing the condition of our streets.

An interesting résumé of the Association's history was given by Miss Gurney. In 1882 several policemen asked for a Bible class to be started for them. A number of classes were commenced simultaneously, and soon the need for the Association was seen. Its ministry is no longer confined to England, but unions of policemen are now to be found in America, Japan, Ceylon, and other countries, seeking to spread the Gospel among their comrades. An important feature of the work at home is the institute at Adelphi, London, which proves a boon to members of the force desiring rest and refreshment after their turns on duty. Young men coming up from the provinces to join the Metropolitan force have also found help at a time when nothing was needed more than a sympathetic hand. Passing on to speak of the children, Miss Gurney referred to the families of happy boys and girls at the two orphanages —Redhill and Southport. The policemen themselves contribute generously towards the support of the institutions, and their gifts are supplemented by the practical sympathy of friends.

A few words were added by Mr. Herbert Leng respecting the City Institute, off Leadenhall Street, which has become a centre of zealous and far-reaching activity. A number of testimonies followed from the members of the force, and inspectors, sergeants, and constables told with earnest simplicity, from the depths of their soul, of the saving and keeping power of Christ.

The Sick Poor of Central London.—A considerable increase was noted last year in the number of poor people who were aided through St. Luke's Gospel Medical Mission. The dispensary is held on the premises of Friends' Bunhill Mission. The pence charged for medicines to all persons who can afford it, and the shillings from distant patients, have again contributed a material proportion of the total expenses. The physician, Dr. Fox, writes in the annual report:—"Among the crowd who come for help to the dispensary, there are many to move our pity—many bread-winners, breaking or broken; many mothers with hungry children around them, and widows living lonesome lives. Many of our poor people rather conceal their need, ashamed that their destitution should be known. They cling to the little bit of washing or cleaning, or needlework, which brings in its few shillings weekly, and strive still to carry it on when really unfit to labour." The secretary, Miss G. Beck, 3, Glebe Place, Stoke Newington, N., will be glad to forward copies of the annual report of this Mission to friends desirous of furthering the efforts to relieve the anxiety and care of poor families in time of sickness.

Day by Day.

SUNDAY, July 21. John iv.

AT this well-head the weary children of men have met Christ in the successive centuries, and have gone away refreshed and strong. It was called "Jacob's Spring" (6-14). The word translated "well," in verses 11 and 12, rather signifies "pit." The rough masonry around the spring was probably as old as Jacob's time, and, as it lay on the direct road between Judæa and Galilee, it was much frequented. The Lord must needs go that way, because of the blessed work which had been prepared for Him by the Father.

The noon was perhaps chosen by this woman, rather than the morning or evening, because she did not care to meet the respectable women of her town, but it was an opportune occasion, which neither his weariness, nor the barrier between Jew and Gentile, nor the danger of misinterpretation, restrained the Master from using. What contrasts are here. He was weary, but He gave rest. He was thirsty, but He opened springs of living water in her soul. He was destitute of aught to draw with, but He fetched out of her heart her deepest secrets. He seemed but a weary traveller, but He was greater than Jacob. He looked a Jew, but He rose above all distinctions of nationality, and spoke to the universal heart.

During that wondrous conversation, the woman passed from aversion to curiosity, and thence to surprise, thence to desire, thence to respect, reverence, adoration, and thence to become a missionary to the whole cityful. She drank of the living water, became conscious of its uprising within her, and sought to originate similar thirst and similar supplies in others.

If we only knew the gift of God, which is offered to us in Christ—if we but knew Christ—we should not depend on the external, because we should discover the secret inner springs which He gives; we should learn to worship the Father; we should forget our water-pots in our desire to help others; we should tread between the sheaves of ripe corn; we should give Christ bread to eat which others knew not of.

MONDAY, July 22. John v.

This pool has been recently discovered. It is 155ft. long, and was surrounded with porches for the convenience of the sick. Bethesda meant House of Mercy; how striking a contrast to the saving grace of Christ. There but one at a time; here multitudes beyond count. There great difficulty in reaching the medicinal spring; here to look is to live, to desire is to receive. There the necessary assistance of a fellow-man; here the direct dealing of Christ with the soul. "Wouldest thou be made whole?" It is the initial question that Jesus puts to us all, awakening our faith and expectation; but we must be prepared to act on and use the power which Jesus offers.

Our Lord's subsequent interview with the healed man was very beautiful. He found time, as though his mind were running on his case, and He desired to put some finishing touch, to warn him against a recurrence of the sin that had brought so terrible a malady, and to reveal his own personality. The Lord never does his work by halves. He is always finding us, to carry it forward another stage.

When the Jews sought to blame the Lord for breach of the Sabbath laws, He said in effect, "You must carry your accusations back against my Father; He gave me the pattern on which I wrought; He energized in Me up to that point; it was at his direction that the deed was performed; I was only doing in the material world what I saw Him performing in the spiritual and unseen."

From this point our Lord began to reveal Himself as the cistern and emporium of Life, deposited by God within his wondrous nature for men. He can give life to souls and bodies, here and hereafter. He is the Judge of men, because with the omniscience of God He unites the sympathy and tenderness of man. The dignity of his person and mission is borne witness to by the Baptist, by his miracles, by Scripture, but more by his self-consciousness and his Resurrection. Standing in the court of human judgment, He calls witnesses; may He not be calling us? Let us tell the whole truth about Him, as we have proved it.

TUESDAY, July 23. John vi.

The miracles which John recorded were signs; each of them was a revelation of the inner glory of the Lord Jesus, and a specimen to the senses of the wonders which He was prepared to do in the spiritual realm. This story must be inserted in the synoptic Gospels at Matt. xiv. 13, Mark vi. 30, and Luke ix. 10. How constantly it has been repeated since. When we are confronted by the crowds, we are always tempted to calculate our pennyworths. Philip estimated that £7 worth of bread would not suffice. It is better far to put our meagre stores into the hands of the Master Himself. They are only barley loaves, coarse and common, and the fish are small, but in those hands, what may they not effect!

Men have accused our Lord of being a weak enthusiast playing on human feelings, but such sneers must be for ever silenced now we see the magnificent self-command with which Christ was able to temper the excitement and separate Himself from the crowds. He refused to take the kingdoms of this world from man, as He had previously refused to take them from the devil at first, and He set Himself to show that his Kingdom was not outward, but inward, and that the gift of food for the body was only a type of his far more important gift to the soul and spirit. Even the manna that lay on the desert sands was only a type of his mission to meet the hunger of the human spirit. Let us come to Him, and open our weary, yearning, famished natures. To come is to cease to hunger, to trust is to lose our thirst. Jesus suffices for Heaven. Shall He not for earth and for thee? Is not the ocean big enough for one herring and the sun for one humming bird? If you leave Him, to whom can you go?

WEDNESDAY, July 24. John vii.

Apparently our Lord did not go up to the Passover of vi. 4, but remained in Galilee for about six months, as recorded (Matt xv.-xviii). If He now went up for the Feast of Tabernacles, it was from no such motive of worldly policy as his brethren suggested, but because the Father's will indicated that his time had come. We need more of this refusal to act on the promptings of unspiritual advisers, however well meaning, and to wait till the hour and minute hand have reached the precise moment of our Father's appointment.

This discourse is one of the most remarkable and inspiring in the Gospel. The seventeenth verse tells us that obedience is the organ and law of all spiritual knowledge. The eighteenth reveals the true motive of all successful work. The thirty-seventh, sq., tell us that the One Advocate must ascend before the Other can descend, and declare to us that we need not be pitchers only, like that dipped on the last day of the Feast, into the pool of Siloam, to be emptied within an hour on the marble floor of the Temple, but may resemble channel-beds, over which rivers, and again rivers, may flow to thirsty crowds. What precious words are here! Is it wonderful that the emissaries of the Sanhedrim, the private detectives, were amazed and over-powered? It is indeed true, no man ever spake like Him.

THURSDAY, July 25. John viii.

Some of the old manuscripts do not contain the wonderful scene described in the opening verses, probably from a fear lest it might seem to condone sin. Men have always tried to steady the ark of God. But no story has done more to make us loathe and detest such sins as this. The internal evidences are strong in favour of retaining it, since we cannot imagine it being invented. Who could have forged such a portrait of Jesus? There are three ways of treating sin—Moses' way, man's way, Christ's way. He stooped down, some have said, to conceal the burning shame that covered his face, and as He lifted Himself, and men saw it there, it wrought in them horror and self-revelation, and they went out. As for the woman, she could never forget that look of offended modesty, and she went to sin no more.

In the twelfth and following verses our Lord compares Himself to the illumination of the temple and city, which was given at night by the great golden candelabra that stood in the Court of the Women close to the Treasury (20). It was supposed to commemorate the pillar of fire that guided the Israelites in the desert, and was, therefore, specially appropriate to the Feast of Tabernacles.

Ponder these marvellous words. In his human life, our Lord so emptied Himself as to be absolutely dependent on his Father. Why should we not be as much so on Him? Let us abide in his Word, that we may be his true disciples, and free with his freedom. Let us always do the things that please God, that we may be ever blessedly conscious that we are not alone. Let us see to it that we have no glory, save that which cometh from God only.

FRIDAY, July 26. John ix.

It may be that this incident took place amid the shower of stones, described in the closing verse of the previous chapter. Personal danger was not sufficient to arrest that Divine love, which saw the clouds of approaching night gathering over its path. The way in which our Lord is the Light of the world (5) is set forth in this miracle. He enlightens the world by becoming the Light of individuals.

The method of cure was possibly intended to awaken the faith of the sufferer, and because the Lord desires to teach us, which is so obvious in his miracles and life, that He designs to use ordinary means, to go so far as they may. Of course, there is a vast realm which can only be filled by his creative might, but means have their place in the Divine economy.

The trials through which this man passed gave him an assured faith and a confessed position of discipleship. The hostility of the Pharisees, which was so contrary to common sense, so evidently prompted by jealousy and vindictiveness, forced the healed man to realise the contrasted purity, glory, and moral majesty of Jesus. His eyes were opened, not only to the world of nature, but to the unseen and eternal. They cast him out. "Casting in his teeth the life-long calamity from which he had suffered, as if it were a conclusive proof that God's curse had come on him for his sins, they expelled him." But Jesus found him, as a shepherd his lost sheep; led him into a yet higher faith, whilst his enemies were confirmed in their rejection. You cannot touch Christ without being made blinder or more seeing.

SATURDAY, July 27. John x.

O Shepherd of the flock, which Thou didst purchase with thine own most precious blood, in thy love and care I find my rest. Thou art my Shepherd, and I shall not want. I have heard many voices speaking, but I knew them not. It is for thy voice that I am listening; I shall recognise it when Thou speakest; and I will follow Thee whithersoever Thou goest. Thou wilt sometimes put me forth from the quiet enclosure of the fold, but even then Thou hast something better for me, up the steep mountain-track, to where the dew-besprinkled pastures await me. By Thee I would go into rest, and out to work, and in Thee I would taste the abundant life. O good and great Shepherd, Thou lovest me; this my soul knoweth right well, for Thou didst lay down thy life for me; and when Thou seest the wolf coming, Thou wilt stand between him and me with thy rod and thy staff.

Teach me to know Thee, even as Thou knowest the Father; and give me a yearning love for thy unfolded, unshepherded sheep. Help me to go after them, to find them, and bring them back. Make me ever obedient to do the Father's commandment, though it should involve laying down my life. How safe I am in thy keeping, first in thy hand, and then the Father's; it is impossible for me to perish. Whom have I in heaven but Thee? Thou shalt guide me by thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory. F. B. M.

Coloured Girls in S. Africa.

WHEN commercial men are manifesting so much anxiety to return to Johannesburg and other parts of the Transvaal, it is satisfactory to find that Christian workers are also on the alert to take possession again of the fields from which they were driven by the war, and to accommodate themselves to the new conditions created by the events of the last two years.

Among other workers who are looking forward to a new period of service for the Master, is Miss Anna M. Coote. While resident for a period of several years at East London, she was asked to open a day school in connection with the work carried on among the natives in the district. The attendance grew till the roll included the names of sixty-four boys and girls; and at length a Sunday school was added, which soon became, for a number of the young people, the brightest spot on the location. Several helpers came forward, and much blessing was experienced. One Sabbath it was found that no fewer than eighteen of the boys and girls present had taken a definite stand as followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, and on the Monday another boy of twelve years told the teacher that he too wished to give himself to the Saviour who had died for him. The step was taken by these young people in a spirit at once intelligent and earnest; and they have realized much of the power and goodness of the Lord by being since kept true to Him and growing in grace.

Picnics in summer and Christmas-tree entertainments were never lost sight of as valuable opportunities for definite spiritual work. The scholars were trained to find their joy in the presence and service of God. At the end of one picnic, a girl of eleven was observed to be weeping bitterly. A young lady visitor, who had gone to help, on trying to console her, found that the cause of the girl's trouble was a deep sense of sin and of the need of a Saviour. After a conversation smiles took the place of tears, and the girl's face shone because the Sun of Righteousness had arisen in her heart.

The outbreak of the war brought many changes, which, however, in some cases led to the raising up of new friends. The teacher of the Bible class had married and left the district; but in the providence of God one of the European refugees—Mr. Angus Black, a member of the Presbyterian Church at Johannesburg—took charge of that department until he left to labour among the soldiers at the front. Then, after much definite waiting upon God for a successor, Mr. Herbert Luke, a member of the Baptist Church, stepped into the breach, and as native refugee children were coming into the location in increasing numbers, a special effort was organized in their behalf. Some of these had not been in touch with mission or other schools, and were very ignorant; but steps were at once taken to teach them to read.

A real love for the Word of God was instilled into all these young people, who belonged to a number of different native races. Many chapters were carefully committed to memory, and intelligent answers were readily forthcoming to questions on passages which they had studied. They were searchers after the truth for themselves; and the promise of God that his Word shall not return unto Him void was amply redeemed in their experience. Truly the entrance of his Word gave light in their experience.

Another useful work performed by Miss Coote at the East London Location was the finding of suitable situations for the girls. Ladies and housekeepers who knew the work in which Miss Coote was engaged applied to her for servants; and thus she was often able to make arrangements satisfactory alike for mistresses and maids.

As the result of experience gained, Miss Coote is now anxious to establish a training home in which native girls may be prepared for domestic service under Christian influences. A day school would be kept up, and would be the principal feeder of the training home when the children reach a suitable age. In this way they would be shielded from many of the pitfalls and snares of life until they arrive practically at womanhood.

In the past parents have often appealed to Miss Coote to take over the entire charge of children, and sometimes the circumstances were such as to make her very much wish to do so; but all such requests had to be declined for lack of suitable accommodation. The circumstances of the parents are commonly such as to oblige them to send their children while very young out to domestic service with any persons willing to take them. Untrained and untutored, they are exposed to all the temptations of life in a mixed community, and at the same time bereft of even such restraining influences as are afforded by a native family circle.

The field is open, and the supply of inmates for such a home ready to hand. If it can be founded without delay much of the work of the past which may otherwise be lost is still capable of conservation, and the good seed sown in youthful hearts may yet be brought to fruition. Too often these coloured girls have gone forth as sheep not having a shepherd; but Miss Coote believes that the hand of God is now pointing the way by which she will be able to help them on a stage further than has hitherto been possible.

MISS COOTE AND NATIVE GIRLS.

In a few cases the parents could pay a little towards the board and lodging of their daughters; but in the great majority of cases no such contribution could possibly be given, while in some the children are orphans, with no one to take an interest in their welfare at all. It is felt that a sum of £500 will be required in order to make a beginning with any prospect of success. Miss Coote may be communicated with, care of Miss Mason, Home of Rest, 10, Finchley Road, N.W.

Deacon Abraham's Orphanage.—Miss Barclay, writing from Urie House, Tranton Road, Bermondsey, says:—"One of Deacon Abraham's orphans has just come to England to learn shoe-making. Like all the young men from the Orphanage who have come to England, he bears the highest character, is industrious, independent, and eager for work. Those who have known Deacon Abraham's boys can testify that the work must be good which sends out such manly, well-trained youths, so different from many Orientals who seek our shores. The treasurer is Mr. W. Wainwright, Horeham Grange, Sussex."

On Salisbury Plain.

SINCE May 20 we have been on Salisbury Plain, our Soldiers' Home tents being pitched in the same spot as in previous years, by permission of the Secretary of State for War. Owing to the continuance of the South African war, the troops out here are not so numerous this year; but those who are here visit and value the Home. The batteries, as they arrive, are welcomed by our missionaries, who visit them in their huts, these having taken the places of the tents, and much good work is done by personal talks and individual dealing.

Our tent being quite close to the barracks or huts, the men gladly avail themselves of its privileges all day, as they have need and as they have opportunity. Every evening after duty they may be seen wending their way across, perhaps first to the refreshment tent, where they may obtain what they require at a very modest outlay; perhaps they want to read or to write a letter, meet a friend, or have a game.

The bright, happy singing in the Gospel tent adjoining attracts them, and they soon find themselves quite at home. Hymns are sung one after the other, the soldiers asking for their favourites; then a short message is given from God's Word, which we praise God He graciously and greatly blesses. Then often follows a word from a Christian soldier, who has an experience, not only of God's saving grace, but also of his keeping power—on duty, in barracks, hospital, on the march, in India, and very often in Africa; and as he tells of being protected through the many and various dangers with which this terrible campaign abounds, all hearts feel how intensely real it is, and many who are listening are set longing to know the same Saviour, Protector, and Guide for themselves.

Many precious souls have been led to Christ, and at the farewell meetings the night before the batteries leave, the testimonies of those saved during the fortnight's training have been most cheering. Many a mother's and father's heart must have been made glad through hearing that their prayers are answered, and that on this Salisbury Plain, or English veldt, the loving Shepherd has found his wandering sheep. L. Perks.

Bulford Camp, Winchester, July 8.

His Constraining Love.

2 Cor. v. 14.

'Tis the love of Christ constraining—
Love in dying, love in reigning—
O'er the winter of my soul
By his love He gained control:
To his heart must answer mine,
'Tis thy Love, O Christ, constraining;
"I have yielded unto Thine!"

'Tis the love of Christ constraining
O'er the proud soul's bitter training:
Day by day the weary crosses,
To the sad heart countless losses:
Yet my will must answer his,
"'Tis thy love, O Christ, constraining;
I have yielded even this!"

'Tis the love of Christ constraining,
Ever nobler conquests gaining;
Day by day with grace renewed,
With his panoply endued;
To his heart must answer mine,
'Tis thy love, O Christ, constraining,
"I have yielded unto Thine!"

'Tis the love of Christ constraining,
Entrance to my heart obtaining,
There He gives me perfect rest,
Dwelling as my Royal Guest;
And I answer at his call,
"'Tis thy love, O Christ, constraining:
I will yield Thee even all!" E. V. K.

"What do I Give, and Why?" is a very searching booklet from the pen of Rev. R. Middleton, of Norwich. It deals with Christian opportunity and duty, and is calculated to give helpful direction to obedient hearts. Canon Pelham writes a cordial preface. This is number 19 of the South Africa General Mission penny booklet series, and should have a large circulation. (6s. 6d. per 100, post free. Arthur Mercer, 17, Homefield Road, Wimbledon, S.W.

THE LATE

Rev. T. T. Waterman.

WE recently recorded the death of Rev. Thomas Theodore Waterman, after six months of great suffering, borne with Christian courage and resignation. A few more particulars of one who, during many years was an honoured servant of Christ, will, we are assured, be welcome to many.

Born at Bishop's Stortford in July, 1825, Mr. Waterman was the eldest son of a much-respected Bristol merchant, who during many years was senior deacon at Highbury Congregational Church, Bristol. He grew up in the knowledge and love of God, and in the simple faith of Christ. He made a public profession on April 1, 1841, and was therefore a church member for over sixty years. This date was noted year by year in his diaries as a day for renewed consecration.

From the first Mr. Waterman was an earnest worker in the Sunday School, Christian Improvement Society, and in other ways. At length he resolved upon the Christian ministry as a life vocation, and was one of the earliest students at New College, having been transferred to the new foundation from Highbury College, which he entered in 1849. He took his B.A. degree in First Class Honours at the University of London in 1852. He greatly regretted that illness prevented his taking an active part in the celebration of the New College Jubilee in November last, where he would have been welcomed as one of the oldest alumni.

In 1854 Mr. Waterman was appointed pastor of Week Street Congregational Church, Maidstone, where he had nine years of successful work, leaving in 1863 for Greenfield Congregational Church, Manningham, Bradford, Yorks, where he laboured until 1871. His was always a missionary church, and six young missionaries were sent out by him to work in the foreign field. On leaving Bradford he engaged in literary work until 1877, when he became secretary of the Christian Evidence Society in conjunction, first, with Rev. Peter Barker, of Bromley, and for the last twenty years with Rev. C. Lloyd Engström, of the Waldrons, Croydon.

In this department of ministry Mr. Waterman worked with untiring energy and devotion until prostrated by his last illness. His labour in this Society brought him in contact with every phase of English scepticism, which his wide reading, his deep religious conviction, and his uniformly courteous demeanour admirably fitted him for combating. He will be greatly missed by workers against infidelity in the byways and parks of London and the suburbs. He wrote several able pamphlets on different phases of the Christian faith and its evidences.

As a man, no less than a Christian, Mr. Waterman was held in high esteem. In the words of his friend, Rev. J. Brierley, B.A., at the funeral:—

I venture to say that it was not the logical principles that he brought forward, not the things that he had written and spoken, that were the best Christian evidence of our brother before his fellow men; but the best Christian evidence he brought before them was his own life, his own character, his own career; and as we look back upon those years, that long life, that beautifully completed whole, do we not realise that there was glorious Christian evidence—evidence of the beauty of a life that has lived by faith in the Son of God?

His colleague in the work of the Christian Evidence Society, Rev. C. Lloyd Engström, Rector of St. Mildred's, Bread Street, writes:—

A Nonconformist to the very roots of his being, he appreciated and loved the Church of England, and venerated her noblest sons. As to our Freethinking opponents, he had the kindliest feelings for many who fought against the truths which were dearer to him than life itself, for he was a man of the deepest and most unaffected piety. He entered into their difficulties, sympathized with their troubles, made excuses for their prejudices, and prayed for their conversion.

One of Mr. Waterman's most striking traits was his unfailing kindness and sympathy. All who knew him came to him in their difficulties and sorrows, and to all he gave of his best—none were sent empty away. His widow will long treasure letters from those who knew him thirty, forty, fifty years ago, telling of the good he had done to them in their early days, and showing how his example and advice and sympathy first led them to Christ. A well-known public man wrote: "Whatever I am, and whatever I have, I owe it all to Mr. Waterman. He changed all my life when I was a young man, and led me into the right way." Men who combine sweetness with light are wanted in the Christian ministry, whether they occupy a pulpit or wield a pen, whether they would warn the sinner, guide the perplexed, or comfort the saints of God.

Keswick Convention Notes.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

PREPARATIONS are going on apace for our expected great gatherings. The two tents are in process of being fitted up; the new one is to be lighted by electricity. It is a disappointment in the town that the new water supply is not completed, but to supplement the tanks on Skiddaw a temporary pipe has been laid from the Mill-beck stream with the pipes already in use, and the water is said to be as pure as the other Skiddaw water.

REV. T. T. WATERMAN.

From Photograph by the London and Provincial Photo Co., West Croydon.

It is to be hoped that rain will come before Convention begins. Visitors always deplore a downpour in the middle of the meetings; but if they only knew they would be glad, as it is really the greatest boon, clearing out the over-laden drains, and generally cleansing the streets. The year when there was no rain during Convention week the town suffered afterward by the visitation of fever. There can be no missionary gatherings in the Vicarage grounds this year, for alas! the Vicarage is closed; the new vicar is not expected until September.

Every year brings its changes, and many loved voices will be missed this time. Some have been called by the Master to higher service, and we thank God for their former ministry. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan and Dr. Harry Guinness are in distant lands; Dr. Moule and Pastor Theodore Monod cannot come; and, saddest of all, the beloved President is in such a state of health that it is impossible for him to leave his home. But Prebendary Webb Peploe, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Dr. Elder Cumming, and all the other well-known speakers are expected, with additions to their number from those who hitherto have not been heard from the Keswick platform.

Keswick is already filling up fast; but the adjacent villages afford ample accommodation for all who wish to come. There are good and cheap apartments to be had at Cockermouth, which is only half an hour's ride from Keswick.

Prayer Union.

THE following letter has been addressed by Rev. William Crosbie, M.A., LL.B., of Nottingham, to a prominent Christian minister in America, who has originated, and is promoting, an interdenominational Prayer Union in that country. The headquarters of the Union are in California, and many are entering into the holy covenant, and signs of special blessing are already appearing:—

MY DEAR BROTHER,—Permit me to thank you very warmly for the copies of the organ of the Prayer Union which you so kindly send me month by month. The paper is to me an immense spiritual enjoyment. I read it in my holiest moments, and find it a real help to the highest life of the soul. It has a mission and a message; and God is using it, and will use it more and more, for the binding of his people together in covenants of special and definite prayer for the Holy Ghost. The existence of the paper—so high-toned and spiritual—is in itself a sign and prophecy of the near approach of revival times, of "seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." God's gracious and extraordinary working has for its antecedent, invariably, a quickened, deepened, and widespread spirit of prayer, with humiliation, contrition, and confession of sin. And, there is, certainly, that prognostic, that condition-precedent, that beginning.

God has revealed to you, my brother, his purpose, and has called you into association with its fulfilment. May his hand be upon you continually and increasingly, holding, strengthening, guiding you, and furthering your great and divine enterprise!

As one who is connected with many prayer-unions in Great Britain, and who has had to do with the suggestion and origination of some of them, and who knows something, by experience, of the blessedness of fellowship in the catholic communion, of the joy and privilege of membership in the commonwealth of saints, I send, through you, my affectionate Christian greetings to the brethren in America who are joined together in similar concerts of prayer.

Though far apart, beloved brethren, separated by thousands of miles, I meet with you at the Throne of Grace constantly, at the appointed and specified times of prayer; every Saturday evening, and on the first and last days of every month, at other seasons also. And we belong to a great multitude, ever growing, who have resolved "to take no rest, and to give Him no rest until He establish and make Jerusalem a praise in the earth."

You and I, brethren, are never likely to look each other in the face, and to grasp hands, in this world; but, in the next, we shall. And what joy the prospect gives!

Oh, let us persevere in this great business of prayer! We are distinctly in the line of God's will, of his purpose, of his promises and prophecies; and He will hear and answer. Blessing will come, in due time, in his time, upon the churches of your country and ours; upon the churches of other lands also, and upon missions among the heathen. The Lord's arm will be made bare, and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God.—Ever affectionately yours in Him,

WILLIAM CROSBIE.

Ecclefechan, 237, Derby Road, Nottingham.

Sergeant Pullinger's Work Among Soldiers.—Under the direction of Sergeant George Pullinger the Guards' Mission continues to be a means through which numbers of the soldiers stationed in London are brought under the influence of the Gospel. Meetings have been regularly conducted, the guard-rooms have been visited and supplied with tracts. In the barrack rooms 2,782 men were personally interviewed during last year, and thousands of tracts, booklets, and Gospels were distributed. The strength of God's servant has not been spent for naught, but from time to time the word has been with convicting power. Sergeant Pullinger's address is 58, Hugh Street, Ebury Bridge, S.W.

Glasgow Bible Institute.

THE closing meeting of the tenth session of this Bible Training Institute for Scotland took place on Thursday evening, June 27. There was a very large attendance of friends interested in the progress of the work, and the proceedings were characterized by a gratifying spirit of enthusiasm. Lord Overtoun, who presided, was supported by the Lord Provost (Dr. Samuel Chisholm), Rev. John Smith, D.D., of Edinburgh, Mr. John Anderson (Superintendent of the Institute), Rev. John McNeill, and a number of city ministers and directors of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association, of which organization the Institute is an important agency.

In his opening remarks, Lord Overtoun said he had been present in London the previous week at a great gathering of the secretaries and conveners of the foreign missionary societies of the various denominations. While the training of workers for the evangelization of the world was being discussed, he could not help thinking that the Bible Training Institute seemed the ideal means for securing this important end. Some thought that if a man was a Christian he was fit for anything. But no workman could do his work without training, and the Christian needed to be trained to wield the sword of the Spirit. This was the aim of the Institute, where a large number of students were instructed, not only in the Word of God, but in practical methods of Christian work. His lordship then submitted the following interesting particulars regarding the students who have passed through the Institute, and the up to the close of the session :—The total numbers enrolled since the commencement of the work in November, 1892, are: Resident students, 301; non-resident students, 166; evening class members, 2,453. Of the 301 resident students, 186 came from 26 different counties in Scotland; 77 from 25 English counties; 19 from various parts of Ireland; 3 from the British colonies; 2 from India; and 12 from various European countries. Their church connection was as follows: 82 Free Church, 53 Baptist, 35 United Presbyterian, 26 Church of Scotland, 23 Church of England, 18 Methodist, 12 Congregational, 10 Irish Presbyterian, 7 English Presbyterian, 4 Church of Ireland, 4 Church of Sweden, 3 Moravian, 4 Lutheran, 2 Colonial Presbyterian, and 20 from undenominational missions, Christian Brethren, &c. For the session 1900-1, 83 students were enrolled. During the session 10 left to enter on Christian work, 2 to enter college, and 3 returned to their former occupations, leaving 68 on the books at the end of the session, of whom 27 have completed their course and 41 return for further study. When the students who have now left reach their destinations, there will be over 110 representatives in different parts of the mission field. Groups of Bible Training Institute graduates are being formed in various countries, viz., 36 in China, 8 in India, 14 in Africa, 13 in Canada, 5 in Australasia, &c. Nearly 100 former students are now occupying important positions at home as evangelists and missionaries in connection with the various churches, and a number who have returned to business are doing good service in their respective congregations.

NATURE AND EXTENT OF THE WORK

DURING THE PAST SESSION

the students have conducted 1,261 meetings, with an aggregate attendance of 134,559 persons, of whom 2,817 were personally dealt with. The aggregate for the ten sessions the Institute has been open, is 12,462 meetings, with an attendance of 1,345,208, and 26,435 persons dealt with. In addition to ordinary Gospel meetings and special missions, Bible classes have been regularly conducted at Barlinnie and Duke Street prisons, for which the thanks of H.M. Commissioners for Prisons has been received. Regular services have also been held at the Night Asylum, and regular visitation has been carried on at several of the police courts.

Rev. Dr. John Smith, of Edinburgh, in the course of a weighty address, referred to the marked success which had already attended the work of the Institute, and said he was convinced that it had before it a great future. At intervals in history there had been great tidal waves that had raised society to new levels. These movements had been all religious—the Apostolic Age, the Reformation, the Wesleyan Revival. They were preceded and accompanied by a marvellous freshening of interest in the Word of God, not merely as history, philosophy, or poetry, but as a testimony to God, the living God. In these days there were signs that of the Reformation and the Wesleyan Revival, which did so much for the national life, had spent themselves. Among the many ominous social features were the falling back to material ideals, contentment with the seen, desire for wealth and ease, the terrible paralysis of social aims by the huge moral evils of drink, gambling, and vice. The study of these and other signs of exhaustion led him to long for and to expect a new day of faith, and a new tidal wave of spiritual power that would freshen the life of the nation and make humanity fairer. This, he believed, would be preceded and followed by increased interest in the Word of God—an interest that could be quickened and maintained by an institution where men and women are trained to know this Book, and whence they go forth to teach and preach it, and to extend its influence in the world. In conclusion, Dr. Smith said he had the greatest faith in the Bible Training Institute, and rejoiced in its success.

THE GREAT SPIRITUAL FORCES

Lord Provost Chisholm said his presence there was a proof that the civic authorities recognised the value of the work carried on by the Institute. He spoke of the influence it was exerting, not only on the students themselves, but on the city, and throughout the world. It was most important that men and women should be trained both in the knowledge and the application of the grand old Book, which was no chance product of the ages, but grew under the guidance of Him who meant it to be his own message. The Bible was an instrument for a distinct and definite purpose. It was a weapon of offence, and its best certificate was found in its intelligent use. Prove it, he said, by putting it to its right use. The transformations which it accomplished proved

MORE THAN VOLUMES OF EVIDENCES.

If the condition of things that confronted us in our great cities was to be set right, the Bible was the instrument to do it. The remedy, the new life, must come through it. He was grateful to God that such an institution as the Bible Training Institute was in their midst, and expressed the fervent hope that the work so well done would be carried on with increased fruitfulness.

After the presentation of diplomas, and parting words by out-going students, Rev. John McNeill referred to the valuable help he had received from the students in connection with his open-air services at the Exhibition; and went on to say that the experience of this Mission had convinced him of the vast importance of open-air work. He suggested that the presbyteries should take it up.

There is an increasing demand for the services of the Institute students. All who completed their term last session have already been offered engagements, and it has been impossible to supply several additional openings for which the services of students have been asked.

Mr. Henry Thorne's Mission.—The twelfth annual report of the evangelistic missions conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne is a record of fruitful and extensive labour. During the year with which the report deals, Mr. Thorne conducted Gospel missions in forty-eight towns and villages in England and Wales. Nearly 600 meetings were held, and thousands of men, women, and children heard from the lips of the evangelist the story of redeeming love. Few, if any, of the missions were without immediate results, and young and old have sought the kingdom together. The lucid Bible readings, and the unstrained appeals of this servant of God, have been used of the Spirit for the edification of saints and the winning of sinners into the service of Christ. Mr. Thorne's address is 31, Beverley Road, Anerley, London, S.E.

Chingford Cottage Homes.

MISS STEER'S Samaritan work among the fallen and suffering of East London has a necessary sequel in her Cottage Homes at Chingford, where thousands of unhappy children, rescued from the gravest moral peril, have been sheltered, and trained with Christian care and wisdom for useful positions in life.

The Homes comprise a long row of neat and comfortable dwellings at Higham Park, a pleasant suburb adjacent to Chingford, on the fringe of Epping Forest. Here the pale, haggard, preternaturally "knowing" look of the slum child gives place to a healthy, that speaks volumes for the ability and devotion of the Home "mothers" and the teaching staff.

BRIGHT, AND MODEST APPEARANCE,

The anniversary festival at Chingford is always anticipated with interest by the friends and supporters of the institutions; and that held on Saturday last proved no exception to the delightful rule. The celebrations commenced with a series of musical drills in the playground, the children going through the exercises with military precision. Adjourning to the spacious wood and iron building which has lately been erected in the rear of the grounds, the large company of friends were further entertained with recitations and part songs; but, admirable as the musical programme was, the chief feature of the afternoon, so far as the spectators were concerned, was the beautiful spirit of homeliness and contentment. The care with which Scripture knowledge is inculcated was shown by the ease and correctness with which a number of passages, some of them of considerable length, were given from memory by several of the young people.

The next item of the afternoon was the distribution of prizes, and before proceeding to announce this, Mr. R. C. Morgan, who presided, took the opportunity of congratulating Miss Steer and her helpers on the evident prosperity which attended their efforts on behalf of the children. It is often a good thing to have a "hobby;" and to give one's life to of the slums is a glorious "hobby" indeed, and this might well be borne in mind by many ladies whose abilities run to waste because these powers are "unappropriated blessings." After all, the happy band of children who had sung and spoken so well were but a sample of the great bulk running wild in the streets. Mr. Morgan looked forward to the day when not only the sample, but the bulk, shall be gathered in, to be trained and educated under such helpful conditions as obtain under Miss Steer's direction at Chingford.

SUCCOUR THE NEEDY LITTLE ONES

The prizes for Bible knowledge were next distributed by Rev. S. Cummins, who kindly undertakes the weekly instruction of a class for Scripture study, and those for needlework and improvement in scholarship by Mrs. R. C. Morgan, who also addressed some encouraging words to her young hearers.

Mr. E. C. Straker, who followed, explained that four of the cottages are the property of the Mission, and that it is proposed to purchase two others also. Miss Steer has the care, at Chingford, and in connection with the "Bridge of Hope" in East London, of over 250 children; and in view of these and other heavy responsibilities, Mr. Straker made an earnest appeal for the increased co-operation and support of Christian people. So ended an instructive gathering which had afforded many an object-lesson in the spiritual, moral, and physical education of rescued children.

Old Ford Mission.—The thirty-fifth annual report of this useful organization, the headquarters of which is at Farnan Hall, Tredegar Road, E., tells of a variety of religious and philanthropic operations carried on with good results. Preaching services, prayer meetings, and a late Gospel meeting on Lord's Days for the benefit of those who cannot leave early enough to attend services at the usual hour are regularly conducted. Benevolent work among the sick poor has also been undertaken, and a number of deserving cases have been permanently benefited.

Billingsgate Christian Mission

THE vicinity of Billingsgate Market is a district which has important claims upon the attention of Christian workers. During the greater part of the day it is thronged by fish or fruit porters, and the ever-changing crowd, so characteristic of Thames side, of expectant men on the lookout for occasional employment. There is, in addition, a resident population of poor people. In the centre of and immediately facing the great fish market, stand the lofty premises of the Billingsgate Christian Mission, an organization well known among all classes for the earnestness with which its workers proclaim the Gospel, and for the skilful treatment by the resident nurse of injuries received by the market porters in the pursuit of their arduous avocation.

THIS BUSY NEIGHBOURHOOD,

The friends who gathered at the annual gathering in the large hall of the Mission on Thursday last found much encouragement in the story of progress that was unfolded. Mr. A. Walters, the secretary, showed that the work has been carried on with a studious avoidance of the sensational element, but with a determination to present the truths of the Gospel clearly and simply. The speaker refrained from adducing statistics, but it was evident from his brief review that a great amount of good work has been accomplished.

The promptitude with which relief is afforded to the injured was brought out by Dr. Stansfeld, who went on to speak in high terms of the ability with which wounds are dressed by Miss Warburton, who is ready at all hours to succour the injured. A sample case given was that of a man whose thumb was in a desperate condition, and it was feared amputation would be necessary. After a week's treatment it was thought possible to save it, and very soon the sufferer was back in the market, showing the healed thumb to all.

Some stirring words followed from Canon R. B. Girdlestone, who said that the Mission exists

TO BRING MEN TO CHRIST.

We need not go outside Billingsgate to find modern miracles—men who have been brought out of darkness into light. The speaker gave earnest and stimulating counsels to Christian workers, pleading with them to regard their powers and possessions as a sacred trust from God.

Among other speakers were Mr. J. H. Brunton, who gave a fervent address on the evangelistic side of the operations; Mr. Frank A. Bevan, who, speaking from the chair, referred to the cordiality manifested towards the Mission by both salesmen and porters; and Mr. W. H. Williamson (hon. treasurer), who showed that while a sum of £325 has been paid off the loan account, there still remains a debt of £2,300.

"Friendly Mission," Portsmouth.

AN earnest work has, for about ten years, been carried on by Mr. C. C. Comber and Mr. G. Rider (working men in H.M. dockyard gunwharf), assisted by a band of active workers, at the Friendly Mission, Old Portsmouth town. The Mission has hitherto been conducted in a hired room in East Street, which has been let over their heads. The erection of a Mission Hall and premises is now to be proceeded with, the total cost being estimated at about £400, of which £97 has been contributed. A site has been purchased. This old-fashioned, historical, and compact part of Portsmouth, has been much neglected with its rough, semi-nautical, and drinking population in its poorer streets. The mission includes in its operations the usual departments of religious work, and much good is done by visitation in the common lodging-houses which abound in the district. Gospel services are also held in many of these houses.

Several well-known gentlemen are familiar with the work and advocate its cause; among them being Rev. John Kemp (Victoria Road Baptist Church), Capt. B. H. Key (superintendent of Bethesda Town Mission), and Rev. H. Lindsay Young (vicar of St. John's, Portsea). The property is to be placed in the hands of responsible trustees. Mr. Comber's address is Fernlee, Campbell Road, Southsea.

Some Recent Conventions.

KINGSWOOD.

IN answer to many prayers, the blessing of God was manifest abundantly at the Convention at Kingswood, which lasted three days. Earnest and deeply practical were the addresses delivered, while the opportunities for mutual intercourse between speakers and hearers concerning spiritual difficulties were warmly appreciated. Those who attended the gatherings were drawn into closer fellowship with Christ, and returned to their varied spheres with a fuller consciousness of the possibilities of the Christian's life, through the power of the indwelling Spirit.

GLOUCESTER.

The five-days' Convention at Gloucester, held recently, proved a time of great spiritual refreshing to the hundreds who attended Raikes' Hall. Powerful addresses were given by Canon Head (Clifton), Dr. McKilliam, John Wilkinson, George Soltau, J. B. Figgis, and others. The meeting devoted to the claims of the foreign field will be memorable for the fervent appeal made for new workers by Dr. Hunter (India), and Mr. Spencer Walton. Several young men and women responded to the call for consecrated service abroad.

WANDSBEK.

The Lord blessed the Wandsbek Convention richly. From near and far, from Schleswig Holstein, Hanover, and also from Denmark, Christians gathered for fellowship and deepening of spiritual life. Many of our visitors arrived on Whit-Monday in order to take part in the Conference of the Christian Endeavourers. In the afternoon meeting, Pastor Körper considered the question "How can we become people filled with the Spirit?" The meetings reached their highest point in the consecration meeting conducted by Pastor Paul.

In the evening the Convention opened with a prayer meeting. The general subject, "The Way to Blessedness," was considered during Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday, by Rev. F. S. Webster (London), Pastors Körper, Frank, Dupree, Bähren, Blecker, Dolman, Count Bernstorff, and others. The Convention began each morning with a prayer meeting at 9.30. The motto given on the first day, "What is for all is also for thee," was a means of blessing to many of God's children.

On Wednesday morning Mr. Webster delivered an address on John i. 12, "Sonship is only for those who have accepted Christ." Pastor Körper spoke on 2 Cor. xiii. 5, "Examine yourselves whether ye be in the faith; whoever will enter on the way must be in union with Christ." Pastor Paul said the way to blessedness is the manifestation of Jesus. "Don't long, like the Israelites, after the fleshpots of Egypt. Don't be afraid of any son of Anak. How long will you go on talking about your difficulties?"

In the afternoon Mr. Webster spoke on Heb. xi. 16. Is God your God? Is God called your God? Have you won a new name for God? Count Bernstorff and Pastor Dolman spoke about guidance. The latter referred to some of the many promises on this subject, and gave three necessary conditions on our part. (1) St. Luke xi. 34: "A single eye;" (2) St. John v. 30: "I can of mine own self do nothing;" (3) Isa. l. 4: "An awakened ear."

One of the most helpful addresses was given on Thursday morning by Mr. Webster on Joshua vi. 2, "I have given into thy hand Jericho." Pastor Paul, taking up the same subject, referred to Rev. iii. 7, and said Jesus has the key of our Jericho. The general in Jericho said, "No one shall go out;" Jesus says, "No one shall shut." Pastor Körper added remarks about obeying the Word. What use is the Word if it be not enlightened by God's Spirit? In order to grow, a continued manifestation of Jesus is necessary.

The conference was followed by a week of Bible readings and mission services.

D. H. D.

MUSSOORIE.

The ninth Convention for the Deepening of the Spiritual Life has just been held in Mussoorie, North-West Provinces. Upon these lovely hill-tops, more than 6,000 feet above sea-level, many weary workers and others gather year by year for physical and spiritual refreshment; and this year, in a very special sense, all nature seemed in perfect harmony with the high object for which between 200 and 300 of God's people gathered at his feet, to wait upon Him for new life and power.

One sad side to the Convention was the absence of our dear friend and brother Dr. Condon, who was confined to a bed of sickness, but who, as the "beloved physician," was ever in our prayers. To many, the days of the Convention were days of heaven upon earth, days of real spiritual refreshment in the midst of this dry and thirsty land. Cut off, as so many Christians are, from home and friends, and that high level of spiritual life which we find in England and other Christian lands, it is all important that times such as these should be set apart.

The Convention took place on June 4 to 6, and was preceded by a week of prayer, when between fifty and sixty people gathered daily in the Y.M.C.A. hall to seek the Divine blessing on the meetings. The Convention meetings were held morning and evening in the Municipal Hall, and, as already intimated, they were well attended. The chair throughout was occupied by Rev. J. Lamb, of Calcutta. The speakers included Revs. Dr. Lucas, Lyon, Forrest, and Morrison, Mr. K. C. Bannerji, and Miss Hewlett, of Amritzar. The theme of all the addresses was the "Person and Work of the Holy Spirit."

A marked spirit of unity and love prevailed throughout the gatherings. With one accord God's people met to hear what He had to say. Two characteristics of the addresses were the exaltation of Jesus only as our wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption; and the very close adherence to the teaching of Holy Scripture on these great truths. Already testimony has been borne of blessing received, and we believe that great results will be seen in the lives of many more when they go to their distant homes and spheres of work in the plains below, led by God's good Spirit to make all things according to the pattern shown to them in the mount.

H. Bennett, C.M.S., Hon. Sec.

Redhill Police Orphanage.

GOOD progress is being made by Miss Gurney and her devoted band of workers, of the International Police Christian Association, with the new Orphanage at Redhill. At the annual meeting, held on the Orphanage premises on July 5, a large and enthusiastic audience listened with evident interest and satisfaction to the addresses in support of the work, which were delivered by the Marquis of Northampton, the Chief Constables of Surrey and Northampton, Mr. D. C. Apperly, and other friends, who recognised the need for the institution, and the skill and sympathy of the management.

On the same day the foundation stone of a new wing was laid by the Countess of Chichester. The additions will consist of a large dining hall for the whole of the children, with separate entrances for the boys and girls. There will also be a large room for the boys, while the upper floor will be devoted to large and airy dormitories for also boys, reached by a new staircase, and having bath rooms and lavatories provided.

The expense of maintaining, the institution, as well as of making the needed additions, is, of course, considerable, but the police in various parts of England are making strenuous efforts to meet it. At the same time, in the words of the Mayor of Reigate, "as the result of exposure to weather, or of ruffianly attack, the lives of many policemen are sacrificed, and it is for the public to remember the needs of the orphaned children of those who have fallen in the execution of public duty."

The Indian Famine.

OUR readers will be interested and encouraged to know that, through their timely help and the co-operation of some well-known firms, we have shipped to Bombay, per the s.s. City of Perth (freight free, by kindness of Messrs. George Smith and Sons, of Glasgow), a consignment of food and clothing for the benefit of the destitute who, as our pages have repeatedly shown, are still suffering from the

RAVAGES OF FAMINE.

The goods include: Sixty cases of Nestlé's Condensed Milk, and twenty-eight cases of the same firm's Milk Food, Messrs. Nestlé meeting one-half of the cost; seventy-five cases (each containing sixteen 1lb tins) of Midlothian Oat-Flour Food, from Messrs. A. and R. Scott, Limited, of Glasgow, the value of which is £41 5s., and for which Messrs. Scott are charging only £20; and 100 pieces of unbleached calico, representing a total of 12,500 yards. The consignments will be received in Bombay duty free, and forwarded to missionaries in the neediest districts. By arrangement with Lord Curzon they will be conveyed on the State Railway, carriage free.

Writing from Poona under date June 6, Rev. Dennis Osborne says: "I am intensely grateful for the evidence which The Christian affords of the quiet but steady continuance of interest in India on the part of the British public." Proceeding, Mr. Osborne adds that a number of missionary friends who are caring for the distressed make earnest appeals for help. For example, Rev. Dr. Felt, of Narsingpur, C.P., wrote: "I badly need money to enable me to get tools, &c., for the workshops in connection with the school. We took in a number of boys during the famine, and it is absolutely necessary that we should get more tools for them, as we are not able to do justice to them at present."

The Balaghat Mission to the Gonds at Baihir is practically cut off from the outside world during the rainy season when, writes Mr. John Lampard, "we have to lay in a stock of food for four months. Doing this has swallowed up our available resources, leaving us without sufficient to continue the building. We have just moved the children into their new Home, which seems to be most suitable in every respect. We are having evidences of God's blessing upon our efforts to train the children for Christ, and confidently expect a substantial advancement of his kingdom here in days to come, as the result of having taken these sorrow-stricken little ones under our care."

"With 500,000 persons on Government relief," writes Rev. Albert Norton, of the Christian Boys' Home, Dhond, Poona, "there is evidence of in Bombay Presidency and some adjoining sections. Recently some food grains have gone up 20 per cent. in price in this section, probably owing to the uncertain feeling as to whether the commencing monsoon will be normal or defective. After the severe suffering of the past two famines, it needs no words to show that the condition of the poor cultivators and labourers who remain in the devastated provinces is very wretched."

MUCH SUFFERING STILL CONTINUING

Rev. James Smith, of the American Marathi Mission, who is at present in England, writes: "I have a list of 3,300 orphans cared for by the Mission. Among the first 208 names there are only five who are ten years and upwards. There are several under six months, while there are hundreds under five years.

"Now, it is manifest that these infants cannot earn their living, nor can they be taught an industry for years. Only thirty-four out of the 3,300 are assured of support. I expect to return to Ahmednagar from furlough in another month, but in the meantime shall be glad to assign individual orphans to anyone who feels that he or she owes a debt to these 'little ones.' £3 a year will cover all expenses. The Mission is well equipped with industrial and other schools, and the Industrial Missions Aid Society follow up the schools with their factories, and offer regular employment at good wages."

Priests of Rome Set Free.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

IT was three years ago in the catacombs of Rome! Our Trappist guide, in his brown habit, torch in hand, was leading us through the winding passages and into the gloomy chambers of the dead, which once resounded with the Christian's song of praise.

Permitted to break his vow of silence while showing visitors over the catacombs, his conversation revealed the darkness which reigned within, and his disbelief in the most sacred rites of his Church. My heart was lifted up in prayer for him. Would to God he had faith even like the flickering torch which he held!

And what of the rest of Rome's priests in like error and darkness? Again the oft-breathed desire went up that a refuge might be founded, in which such of them as are sincerely convinced of the truth might be received.

Little did I dream of the conflict which was going on in the soul of one of these very Trappist monks whom I passed by as I left the catacombs. For two full years he had been seeking after rest and freedom. But the conflict had to become hotter, and the anguish greater, until, in a marvellous manner, God revealed to him the only refuge for the soul—Jesus Himself—and opened for him a way of escape,

A few days ago I met him—a free man—the light of Heaven on his face, and the joy of Christ in his heart!

Praise God, my other prayer, too, was answered! A year later, in the city of Rome itself, by the providence of God and the gifts of Christian friends, for priests seeking the light and liberty of the Gospel. During the past two years Rome's fetters have been here struck off one and another of her prisoners, and some have resolved to give up their lives to preaching the glad news of salvation by grace.

A HOME WAS OPENED

The work is a difficult one. These men have much to learn, and much to unlearn. Deceptive habits of thought, formed by early training and Romish casuistry, have to be shaken off. Above all, a thorough knowledge of the Word of God is required, and, by it, to get right views of sin, and also of salvation through our Lord Jesus Christ. Though at times there have been disappointments, on the whole the results have been satisfactory and encouraging.

Owing to the number of candidates for reception, and the necessity for developing the work, the Home was moved last March to larger and more airy quarters. At present there are not funds enough to meet the needs of the priests applying for admission, but "the Lord will provide." The Home is under the direction of a committee of pastors representing the various evangelical churches in Rome.

Further information can be given by the hon. sec. and treasurer for Italy, Rev. Dr. W. Burt, 38, Via Firenze, Rome; and by Miss Ward, hon. sec. and treasurer for England, Gottesruhe, Montalt Road, Woodford Green, Essex.

Seamen at Smyrna.

THE twenty-second annual report of the Smyrna Rest gives details of the agencies through which seamen visiting the port have been brought under Christian influence. Steamers coming to the port—English, German, Dutch, French, &c., have been visited regularly, and Gospel portions and other reading matter have been distributed to appreciative sailors of many nationalities. The Rest being in a conspicuous position, it is not only visible from the sea by all coming into port, but is a constant witness for Christ in the midst of the drinking and dancing saloons on the quay. Thousands pass in front of it every day, and can see the texts and mottoes with which it is decorated, while seamen and those on land find it a place of physical rest and spiritual blessing. Communications may be addressed to M. Constantine, Sailors' Rest, Smyrna.

Letters to the Editor.

The Genteel Poor.

DEAR SIR,—In your issue of the 4th inst. a feeling reference was made to the need and the difficulty of helping a class whom you term "the genteel poor," who from gentle birth and superior education suffer more keenly when, perhaps in advanced years and no longer able to earn, they are overtaken by poverty caused by the faults of others.

The United Kingdom Beneficent Association is exactly fitted to deal with such cases. With the tact and consideration so necessary, this Society supplies both to candidates during the inevitable waiting time, and also to annuitants who have already been granted the income of from £20 to £25 per annum, warm clothing, friendly sympathy to the lonely, comforts in sickness, and even a nurse when dying.

All this without distinction of creed to those who are found to be in real need of it. Is not this a Christ-like work which ought to be well supported? Through much of the work of the society being done by volunteers, its funds are administered with the utmost economy possible. The secretary is Mr. Ernest Squire, U.K.B.A. Offices, 7, Arundel Street, Strand.—Yours, dear sir,

One of the Non-District Secretaries.

The Word "Protestant."

SIR,—Referring to a recent paragraph on Protestantism, I should like to point out that if the real meaning of the word is remembered the error of holding Protestantism to be a mere negation would be avoided.

The derivation of the word from pro, "for," and testis, "a witness," shows the meaning of Protestant to be "a witness for." But for what? In our courts we require witnesses to swear, to speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and one that does otherwise is not a true or real, but a false witness. Thus we are justified in adding to the meaning of the word Protestant "the truth," and the proper and true meaning of the word comes out as "a witness for the truth."

In John xviii. 37 we read, "Jesus answered, To this end was I born, and for this cause came I into the world, that I should bear witness unto the truth." There is no difference between "bearing witness unto the truth" and "witnessing for the truth," so every true Christian (follower of Christ) is a Protestant, every true Protestant is a Christian, and no one can be a true Christian without being a Protestant, which also involves obeying the last command our Lord uttered on earth (Acts i. 8).—Yours truly,

Geo. Rivington, Captain R.N.

Combe Down, near Bath, 1901.

Public-house Reform.

SIR,—I was pained to read your paragraph in approval of Lord Grey's ideas, which, to my mind, spell "Satan casting out Satan." His plan simply multiplies liquor shops, and failure will result in the futile attempt to get people to take temperance drink in lieu of alcoholic. Brewers will smile, knowing well that in due course these additional houses will fall into their hands. They also know that the miserable measure introduced by the Government won't hurt them. My experience of the past fifty years convinces me that no legislation apart from prohibition, by the nation as a whole, or by localities in particular, will in the least frighten the liquor party. They fight, of course, against everything which might affect their interests, however small, but the only thing they really dread is the Local Veto.

The temperance party, if only united in demanding this power, would succeed in getting it quite as easily, I think, as in obtaining any other measure. Bills dealing with side issues of the trade are always loaded with conditions, or exceptions, rendering them almost useless, whereas if publicans knew that the people around them possessed the power to stop their trade I imagine it would put them on their best behaviour in all parts of the kingdom, and immediately check a large amount of drinking. Hundreds of districts are ready to carry Local Veto.—Yours, &c.,

London. W. Peters.

Madrid.—Miss Ellen J. Leake, Calle Lagasca 97, Piso 30, Izqda., Madrid, continues her evangelistic and educational work with encouraging results. In a recent communication she writes: "A girl came to see me about two months ago in great trouble. She said she prayed much to the Virgin to send her relief. She was pointed to the only Mediator, and is very happy, and assured that God will, in his own time, set her quite free from all that oppresses her. A family also have given up praying to the Virgin and saints, and now only believe in one God, and are so pleased to receive the books I lend them. Others, too, are interested. I should be very glad if I could take a larger house for the meetings, and a school, as well as employ a teacher. There is much poverty here."

London Factory Girls.

WE have spent many days in the country with our factory girls, but anything like the enjoyment of Saturday week, alike for workers and girls, we have never experienced. The wonderment that such an entertainment could be given for "gals like we is" was most touching, and their appreciation and perfect enjoyment were delightful.

A friend, who has a beautiful place in the country, and esteems it a privilege to lend it to the Lord for his work, invited as many girls as we cared to bring, but only those who had attended the "Evening Home" regularly were allowed to go. Two van-loads of girls—in charge of our Deaconesses—left Lisson Grove shortly after nine o'clock, arriving at their destination about noon.

Shortly after arrival, ladies and girls sat down to a pic-nic dinner provided by us; and after a ramble in the woods they were invited to come to the front of the house, where everything was in readiness. As they looked at the tables—the snow white table-cloth, silver tea spoons, silver teapots and tea-urns, thinly cut meat sandwiches, thin bread and butter, rich cake, large dishes of strawberries and jugs of cream—they were simply overawed! "We ain't agoin' to sit down 'ere; this ain't for us, there must be some mistake." When told to take their places, they sat for a minute then said: "The gentleman couldn't never 'ave known it was gals like w'at we is, and servants to wait on us!"

GAZING IN WONDERMENT,

After tea short addresses were given, the kind host speaking feelingly to the girls. Their behaviour all the time was remarkable—a gentleman present, who remembered them in old days, was struck with the change.

God has blessed the work among our factory girls. For some time they seemed so hardened, showing evident dislike of the Bible and of anything spiritual. Therefore some of our Deaconesses determined to meet for prayer (besides our regular Saturday evening prayer meeting) every morning between seven and eight o'clock, and it was not long before the answer was given. Before separating for a short Easter rest the girls were invited to tea, and instead of the usual amusements, which were actually down in the programme drawn up by the Deaconess-in-charge, they asked for hymns. The presence of God was so manifest that the lady superintendent of our Deaconess House (one deeply taught of God) felt constrained to give them a simple Gospel talk, after which the writer followed. The evening was turned into a real factory girls' inquiry meeting, and no games were thought of.

Although scattered in different parts, the Deaconess-in-charge asked that at a given hour on Easter Monday, each worker should unite with her in prayer for the factory girls. The answer was given; not long after the classes were resumed one girl after another decided for Christ, and we have now a band of

SEVEN CHRISTIAN FACTORY GIRLS.

These girls go to church on Sunday morning with the Deaconess-in-charge (to whom they are devotedly attached); two of them were Roman Catholics, and the others had never been within a church door. One girl used to wear a very bright red dress, but, after her conversion, she would not wear it again. Of her own accord she put it away, and bought a more suitable one for church. The change is very evident; she gave much trouble in the classes, using very bad language, and she was one of the roughest and wildest of the girls. "Such were some of you; but ye are washed."

We have had also a delightful work of grace in the Training Home, and a class especially for Christians is taken weekly by the lady superintendent of the Deaconess House. Funds are very urgently needed. The account of the work for this year is now published, and may be had of the secretary (6d., post free).

(Miss) MEREDITH BROWN,
Hon. Resident Superintendent.
Shaftesbury Institute, Lisson Grove, N.W.

Dr. Barnardo's Emigrants.

LOOKING a little greyer, perhaps, but still possessed with indomitable vigour, Dr. Barnardo was the recipient of many congratulations on his restoration to health, at the noon prayer meeting at Aldersgate Street Y.M.C.A. on Monday last.

The occasion was the farewell of another contingent of the many youthful emigrants who have been transferred, through the doctor's efforts, from the squalid and miserable surroundings of slum life at home to healthful conditions and careers bristling with opportunities for manly development in the great farming districts of the Canadian North-West.

As is usual on these occasions, some 200 of the boys occupied the front part of the hall. Their demeanour, and the apt and intelligent way in which they answered questions put to them by some of the speakers, spoke well for the skill of the Stepney Causeway management. Mr. HOWARD WILLIAMS, Chairman of the Council of the Homes presided. He was able to speak, as the outcome of recent personal inspection, of the valuable results accruing from the emigration of the lads. While in Canada, Mr. Williams conversed with people in all grades of society, who spoke of the young voyagers in terms of the highest respect. Mr. Williams reminded his hearers that, according to ungainsayable statistics, the number of failures amounts to less than two per cent. of the whole.

Dr. BARNARDO explained that the party about to sail includes 340 boys, and will swell the grand total of young fellows who have thus been enabled to start life under such encouraging conditions, to 12,400. The speaker illustrated the advances in usefulness and position made by some of his boys, by the case of Mr. E. J. Page, a member of the New Zealand Legislature. That gentleman has been acceptably prominent in the enthusiastic public welcome given to T.R.H. the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York by the Colony, and at a subsequent dinner, when he was the subject of the good wishes of his fellow-colonists, he told how, years ago, he was "sent out by Dr. Barnardo."

Mr. W. R. LANE followed with some stimulating counsel to the boys, founded on the words, "My Saviour." Of the latter word, Mr. Lane took the component letters, and described our Lord as Seeking, Almighty, Victorious, Interceding, Only, Universal, and Received or Rejected. The speaker concluded with a solemn invitation to his young hearers so to seek the Lord Jesus Christ early, that each might be able to call Him "My Saviour." After Mr. Lane's address the meeting ended with prayer, Mr. R. C. MORGAN commending the party, both in their journeyings, and in all the affairs of life, to the sheltering care of the Almighty.

South American Evangelical Mission.—Friends of the South American Evangelical Mission Union of British Prayer Circles will be interested to learn that the headquarters at Mount Pleasant, Liverpool, have been vacated for more extensive accommodation, which had become indispensable. The address of the new premises, which comprise a mission home and office, is 23, Overton Street, Edgehill, Liverpool.

Union Hall Mission, Kilburn.—The numerous evangelistic agencies which centre in the Union Hall Mission, West Kilburn, continue to be a means whereby many are brought under the influence of the Gospel. With untiring energy the workers have laboured in their various spheres, often being gladdened by tidings of conversions, and the increase of numbers of those attending the services, at both the Union Hall in Edgware Road and the Hope Hall, Kilburn Lane. The work among young people is also encouraging. Many have given evidence of a change of life, and are associating themselves with the Church. At Kenmont Hall and Shaftesbury Hall, belonging to the Mission, and which are worked by local Christians, vigorous efforts are being made to extend their useful activities in the service of the Gospel. Copies of the annual report will be gladly forwarded by the treasurer, Mr. Wm. Holmes, 156, Alexandra Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.

A New Sailors' Rest.

